The Story of Saba'.

The Story of Tubba‘ Abū Karīb Tubbān As‘ād, king of Yemen, with the people of Medina; how he wished to raid the Holy Sanctuary at Mecca. Then he dignified and venerated it and covered it with cloth; thus he was the first to do so.

Usurpation of the throne of Yemen by Lakhmī Dhū Shanāṣir.

AN ACCOUNT OF HOW RULE IN YEMEN PASSED FROM HİMYAR AND WAS TRANSFERRED TO THE BLACK ABYSSINIANS.

AN ACCOUNT OF HOW ABRAHA AL-ASHRAM REBELLED AGAINST, FOUGHT, AND KILLED ARYĀṬ, AND SO ASSUMED POWER OVER YEMEN.

AN ACCOUNT OF HOW ABRAHA ATTACKED MECCA WITH ELEPHANTS TO PUT THE KĀ‘BA TO WASTE AND HOW GOD QUICKLY DESTROYED HIM.

AN ACCOUNT OF HOW PERSIAN RULE IN YEMEN ENDED.

The Story of al-Sāṭirūn, King of al-Ḥadhr.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE TAWĀPIF KINGS.

The Story of Khuzā‘a and an account of ʿAmr b. Luḥayy and the worship of idols in Arab lands.

AN ACCOUNT OF ʿADNĀN, FOREBEAR OF THE ARABS OF THE HİJĀZ FROM WHOM THE LINE GOES DOWN TO THE PROPHET (SÀAS).

AN ACCOUNT OF THE GENEALOGICAL ORIGINS OF THE ARABS OF HİJĀZ UP TO ʿADNĀN.
AN ACCOUNT OF QURAYSH REGARDING THEIR GENEALOGY, ETYMOLOGY, AND MERIT. THEY ARE THE TRIBE OF AL-NA`DR B. KINĀNA.

AN ACCOUNT OF QUSAYY B. KILĀB AND OF HIS PART IN REGAINING GUARDIANSHIP OVER THE KA`BA FOR QURAYSH BY TAKING IT FROM KHUZĀ`A. HOW QURAYSH GATHERED TOGETHER AT THE HOLY PLACE WHICH GOD SECURED FOR THE WORSHIPPERS, AFTER HAVING LIVED SCATTERED AND FRAGMENTED IN THE MOUNTAINS AND HOLLOWS.

AN ACCOUNT OF A VARIETY OF EVENTS THAT OCCURRED IN THE JĀHILIYYA. SECTION: INFORMATION ABOUT A GROUP OF MEN FAMOUS IN THE JĀHILIYYA.

AN ACCOUNT OF KHĀLID B. SINĀN THE ‘ABSITE WHO LIVED IN THE INTER-PROPHET PERIOD AND WHO SOME ALLEGE WAS A PROPHET. BUT GOD KNOWS BEST.

AN ACCOUNT OF HĀTIM AL-ṬĀĪ, A GOOD AND GENEROUS MAN OF THE JĀHILIYYA PERIOD.

AN ACCOUNT OF SOME MATTERS RELATING TO ‘ABD ALLĀH B. JUDĀN.

AN ACCOUNT OF IMRŪ’ AL-QAYS B. HUJR AL-KINDĪ, AUTHOR OF ONE OF THE MU`ALLAQAT ODES.

Some information about Umayya b. Abī al-Salt al-Thaqafī; he was a pre-Islamic poet who lived on to the time of Islam.

Baḥīra the Monk.

AN ACCOUNT OF QUS B. SĀ’IDA AL-ĪYĀDI.

AN ACCOUNT OF ZAYD B. ‘AMR B. NUFAYL, GOD BE PLEASED WITH HIM.

AN ACCOUNT OF SOME OF THE EVENTS THAT OCCURRED IN THE TIME OF THE FATRA, INCLUDING THE BUILDING OF THE KA`BA.

AN ACCOUNT OF KĀB B. LUQAYY.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE RE-DIGGING OF THE WELL ZAMZAM BY ‘ABD AL-MUṬṬALIB B. HĀSHIM, ITS WHEREABOUTS HAVING BEEN LOST FROM THE PERIOD WHEN JURHUM FILLED AND LEVELLED IT, UP TO HIS OWN TIME.

AN ACCOUNT OF ‘ABD AL-MUṬṬALIB’S VOW TO SACRIFICE ONE OF HIS SONS.

AN ACCOUNT OF ‘ABD AL-MUṬṬALIB’S MARRIAGE OF HIS SON ‘ABD ALLĀH TO AMINA BINT WAHB AL-ZUHRIYYA.
THE BOOK OF THE LIFE OF THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS). 130

AN ACCOUNT OF HIS LIFE STORY, HIS BATTLES AND RAIDS, THE DELEGATIONS TO HIM, AND HIS NATURAL QUALITIES, HIS VIRTUES, AND THE FEATURES DISTINGUISHING HIM. 130

Chapter: An Account of his noble ancestry and the excellence of his high lineage. 130

Chapter on the Birth of the Messenger of God (SAAS). 141

A Description of his noble birth (SAAS). 145

SECTION: ON THE SIGNS THAT OCCURRED ON THE NIGHT OF THE BIRTH OF THE PROPHET (SAAS). 151

AN ACCOUNT OF THE REARING AND SUCKLING OF THE PROPHET (SAAS). 160

AN ACCOUNT OF THE SUCKLING OF THE PROPHET (SAAS) BY HALIMA, daughter of ABU DHA'AYB OF THE SA'D TRIBE, AND OF THE SIGNS OF THE PROPHET HOOD AND OF BLESSEDNESS APPARENT ON HIM. 161

SECTION: THE JOURNEY OF THE PROPHET (SAAS), WITH HIS UNCLE ABU TALIB AWAY TO SYRIA AND ON WHAT TRANSPRIRED WITH THE MONK BAHIRA. 174

The Story of BAHIRA. 179

SECTION: ON THE EARLY UPBRINGING AND RAISING OF THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) AND HOW GOD CARED FOR HIM AND PROTECTED HIM; HOW HE HAD BEEN AN ORPHAN AND GOD GAVE HIM A HOME, AND DESTITUTE AND GOD ENRICHED HIM. 180

AN ACCOUNT OF HOW THE PROPHET (SAAS) WITNESSED THE WAR KNOWN AS AL-FIJAR, THE SACRILEGIOUS WAR. 183

Chapter: How the Messenger of God (SAAS) witnessed the pact of al-fudul. 185

SECTION: ON THE MARRIAGE OF THE PROPHET (SAAS) TO KHADIJA, DAUGHTER OF KHUWAYLID B. ASAD B. 'ABD AL-'UZZA B. QUSAYY. 189

SECTION: ON QURAYSH HAVING REBUILT THE KA'BA FIVE YEARS BEFORE THE COMING OF THE PROPHET HOOD. 195

THE BOOK OF THE APOSTLESHIP OF THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) AND AN ACCOUNT OF SOME OF THE PREDICTIVE SIGNS THEREOF. 207

AN ACCOUNT OF CERTAIN STRANGE EVENTS RELATING THERETO. 223

The Story of 'Amr b. Murra al-Juhani. 227

The Story of Sayf b. Dhū Yazan the Himyarite and his foretelling the coming of the ummi Prophet. 241
Chapter on the cries of the spirits, consisting of what words of inspiration the spirits gave to the tongues of soothsayers, and which were to be heard by the idols.

Chapter on the manner of the beginning of the revelation to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and an account of the first revelation to him from the glorious Qur'ān.

A Discussion of the age of the Prophet (SAAS) at the time of his receiving the mission and the date thereof.

SECTION: ON PREVENTING THE DEMONS AND EVIL SPIRITS FROM EAVESDROPPING WHEN THE QUR'ĀN WAS REVEALED, SO THAT NONE OF THEM WOULD ACQUIRE ANY OF IT, EVEN SO MUCH AS A SYLLABLE, AND DELIVER IT THROUGH THE SPEECH OF HIS HUMAN ASSOCIATES, WHICH WOULD HAVE LED TO COMPLICATIONS AND CONFUSION OF THE TRUTH.

SECTION: ON THE MANNER IN WHICH THE REVELATION CAME TO THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS).

SECTION: CONCERNING THE FIRST PERSONS TO ACCEPT ISLAM; ALSO REFERENCE TO THOSE OF THE COMPANIONS AND OTHERS WHO WERE EARLY IN BECOMING MUSLIMS.

AN ACCOUNT OF HOW Ḥamza, son of Ābd al-Mūṭṭalib, God be pleased with him, the uncle of the Prophet (SAAS), accepted Islam.

AN ACCOUNT OF HOW Ābu Dharr, God be pleased with him, came to accept Islam.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE ACCEPTANCE OF ISLAM BY Ḍimād.

Chapter: God's command to his Messenger (SAAS) to announce his mission publicly.

The Story of al-Irāshi, the man from Irāsh.

SECTION: ON THE UNITING OF THE QURAYSH CHIEFS AGAINST THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) AND HIS COMPANIONS, AND THEIR MEETING WITH HIS UNCLE Ābu Ṭālib who was protecting and aiding him; their pressure upon Ābu Ṭālib to deliver him to them, and how he resisted them in that objective, through the aid and strength of God.

SECTION: CONCERNING THEIR USE OF EXCESSIVE VIOLENCE AGAINST INDIVIDUAL, POWERLESS MUSLIMS.

SECTION: CONCERNING THE OBJECTIONS PRESENTED BY THE POLYTHEISTS TO THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS); HOW THEY TROUBLED HIM WITH THEIR ASKING OF HIM VARIOUS KINDS OF SIGNS AND MIRACLES, AND HOW THIS WAS DUE TO THEIR OBSTINACY RATHER THAN TO THEIR SEEKING GUIDANCE.

Chapter: The argumentation of the polytheists against the Messenger of God (SAAS) and the cogent arguments that refuted them; how within themselves they recognized the truth, even though they expressed disagreement out of stubbornness, envy, malice and denial.

The interrelationship and interaction of human cultures and civilizations has made the contributions of each the common heritage of men in all ages and all places. Early Muslim scholars were able to communicate with their Western counterparts through contacts made during the Crusades; at Muslim universities and centres of learning in Muslim Spain (al-Andalus, or Andalusia) and Sicily to which many European students went for education; and at the universities and centres of learning in Europe itself (such as Salerno, Padua, Montpellier, Paris, and Oxford), where Islamic works were taught in Latin translations. Among the Muslim scholars well-known in the centres of learning throughout the world were al-Rāzī (Rhazes), Ibn Sinā (Avicenna), Ibn Rushd (Averroes), al Khwārizmī and Ibn Khaldūn. Muslim scholars such as these and others produced original works in many fields. Many of them possessed encyclopaedic knowledge and distinguished themselves in many disparate fields of knowledge.

In view of this, the Center for Muslim Contribution to Civilization was established in order to acquaint non-Muslims with the contributions Islam has given to human civilization as a whole. The Great Books of Islamic Civilization Project attempts to cover the first 800 years of Islam, or what may be called Islam’s Classical Period. This project aims at making available in English a wide selection of works representative of Islamic civilization in all its diversity. It is made up of translations of original Arabic works that were produced in the formative centuries of Islam, and is meant to serve the needs of a potentially large readership. Not only the specialist and scholar, but the non-specialist with an interest in Islam and its cultural heritage will be able to benefit from the series. Together, the works should serve as a rich source for the study of the early periods of Islamic thought.

In selecting the books for the series, the Center took into account all major areas of Islamic intellectual pursuit that could be represented. Thus the series includes works not only on better-known subjects such as law, theology, jurisprudence, history and politics, but also on subjects such as literature, medicine, astronomy, optics and geography. The specific criteria used to select individual books were these: that a book should give a faithful and comprehensive account of its field; and that it should be an authoritative source. The reader thus has at his disposal virtually a whole library of informative and enlightening works.

Each book in the series has been translated by a qualified scholar and reviewed by another expert. While the style of one translation will naturally differ from another, the translators have endeavoured, to the extent it was possible, to make the works accessible to the common reader. As a rule, the use of footnotes has been kept to a minimum, though a more extensive use of them was necessitated in some cases.

This series is presented in the hope that it will contribute to a greater understanding in the West of the cultural and intellectual heritage of Islam and will therefore provide an important means towards greater understanding of today’s world.

May God Help Us!

ABOUT THIS SERIES

This series of Arabic works, made available in English translation, represents an outstanding selection of important Islamic studies in a variety of fields of knowledge. The works selected for inclusion in this series meet specific criteria. They are recognized by Muslim scholars as being early and important in their fields, as works whose importance is broadly recognized by international scholars, and as having had a genuinely significant impact on the development of human culture.

Readers will therefore see that this series includes a variety of works in the purely Islamic sciences, such as Qur’án, hadith, theology, prophetic traditions (sunna), and jurisprudence (fiqh). Also represented will be books by Muslim scientists on medicine, astronomy, geography, physics, chemistry, horticulture, and other fields.

The work of translating these texts has been entrusted to a group of professors in the Islamic and Western worlds who are recognized authorities in their fields. It has been deemed appropriate, in order to ensure accuracy and fluency, that two persons, one with Arabic as his mother tongue and another with English as his mother tongue, should participate together in the translation and revision of each text.

This series is distinguished from other similar intercultural projects by its distinctive objectives and methodology. These works will fill a genuine gap in the library of human thought. They will prove extremely useful to all those with an interest in Islamic culture, its interaction with Western thought, and its impact on culture throughout the world. They will, it is hoped, fulfil an important rôle in enhancing world understanding at a time when there is such evident and urgent need for the development of peaceful coexistence.

This series is published by the Center for Muslim Contribution to Civilization, which serves as a research centre under the patronage of H.H. Sheikh Hamad bin Khalifa al-Thani, Amir of Qatar. It is directed by a Board of Trustees chaired by H.E. Sheikh Muhammad bin Hamad al-Thani, the former Minister of Education of Qatar. The Board is comprised of a group of prominent scholars. These include H.E. Dr Abul-Wafa al-Taftazani*, Deputy Rector of Cairo University, and Dr Yusuf al-Qaradhawi, Director of the Sira and Sunna Research Center. At its inception the Center was directed by the late Dr Mohammad Ibrahim Kazim, former Rector of Qatar University, who established its initial objectives.

The Center was until recently directed by Dr Kamal Nagi, the Foreign Cultural Relations Advisor of the Ministry of Education of Qatar. He was assisted by a

INTRODUCTION

The work at hand in its original Arabic is, in a sense, the product of two minds: the author himself, Abū al-Fidāʾ Imād al-Dīn Ismāʿīl b. ʿUmar b. Kathīr,1 and, to a lesser extent, its editor, Muṣṭafā ʿAbd al-Wāḥid. In his introduction to the Arabic, ʿAbd al-Wāḥid points out that this work is in fact the culmination of a search for a biography of the Prophet Muhammad to which Ibn Kathīr makes reference in his celebrated exegesis of the Qurʾān. There is, however, no extant copy of any such independent biographical study traceable to Ibn Kathīr. That such a study did exist is questionable, notwithstanding Ibn Kathīr’s own allusion thereto. Given the unavailability of this particular work, ʿAbd al-Wāḥid offers the theory that the biography in question is none other than that which appears in Ibn Kathīr’s chief work, his opus on history, the al-Bidāya wa al-Nihāya.2 He argues that the sīra section of the latter work is so comprehensive in its analysis of the life and times of the Prophet Muhammad as to almost obviate the need for any independent study of the same topic. The biography at hand, therefore, is the same as found in the al-Bidāya. Nevertheless, ʿAbd al-Wāḥid must be commended for the not inconsiderable task of editing and publishing this particular section as an independent unit, and appropriately titling it al-Sīra al-Nabawīya li Ibn Kathīr.

Ibn Kathīr, whose ancestors are said to have been from Iraq, was himself born around the year 1313 CE/700 AH in the Boesra district of eastern Damascus. He died 74 years later, shortly after suffering a total loss of vision. He counts as his tutors such illustrious personages as the eminent historian Shams al-Dīn al-Dhahabī, the Maliki jurist Abū Musā al-Qarāfī, and the celebrated Damascene polemicist and jurist Ibn Taymiyya al-Harrānī.

Ibn Kathīr’s was an era of the great political and social upheavals that posed many challenges to the Muslim world at large, and in particular, to its scholars. What with the scourge of the Tartars threatening the very existence of Islam as a socio-political entity from the outside and the sectarian and ethnic strife created by the Mamluk revolution doing much the same from within, Ibn Kathīr and his Curtis, Authoritative Interpretation of Classical Islamic Tafsīr: Critical Analysis of Ibn Kathīr’s Tafsīr al-Qurʾān al-ʿAzīm (unpublished dissertation, Ann Arbor: University of Michigan, 1989) (21), classical bibliographers have cited Ibn Kathīr’s name in more than one way. Al-Dhahabī for instance, in the supplement to his bibliography, Dhayl Tadhkīrat al-Huffāz, gives Ibn Kathīr’s name as Ismāʿīl b. ʿUmar b. Kathīr b. ʿAbd b. Kathīr b. Zār. Other versions have been given, however, such as appear in al-Zirikli’s al-ʿAṣlām (1: 320) and ʿAbd al-Ridā Kāhñā’s Muṣṣam al-Muʿallīfīn (1: 28).

2. According to C. Brockelman in his Geschichte der Arabischen Literatur ii. 49, this historical work of Ibn Kathīr is itself based on al-Bīrūnī’s chronicle. For more information see also, Ibn Ḥadjar al-Asqalānī, al-Durar al-Kāmina (Cod. Vienna, no. 1172).

Ibn Kathir, true to the pre- eminent tendencies of the academic milieu within which he functioned, brings to his study of the Prophet of Islam the method of the muḥaddith, the scholar of ḥadīth traditions, more assiduously than he does that of the traditional historian. In doing so, however, he has, I believe, substantially succeeded in combining two of the three sources available for the pursuit of the historical Muḥammad: the ḥadīth literature and the sīra; the Qurʿān, being the third such source, features less prominently, if not altogether rarely, in his study. Given the very extensive usage of ḥadīth material in this particular work, a word about the classical nature of such material and its contemporaneous validity would be appropriate at this point.

Early historical studies of Muslim society and culture, as A. A. Duri points out, “followed broadly two lines that were distinct from each other – that of ḥadīth, and that of the tribes (i.e. the ayyām anecdotes as narrated by the akhbārīs and the ruwāt), which is in a sense a continuation of pre-Islamic activities. “These two lines”, he explains, “reflect the two major currents in early Islamic society – the Islamic and the tribal lines which influenced all aspects of life.”⁴ According to Muslim tradition, the learning and transmission of the sayings and actions of Muḥammad, his tacit approvals and disapprovals of the actions of others, and his general behaviour had religious significance second only to that of the Qurʿān. To that end Muslim scholars began the collection of such data as was related to the Prophet and his era even while he was still alive. At first, the system of oral retention was popular, but by the middle of the first century of the Muslim era, written compilations of ḥadīth traditions began to appear. By the end of the third quarter of that century, “a pattern was fixed for the learning and teaching of the ḥadīth which flourished in the second and third centuries.”⁵ A system of sorts for verifying the authenticity of such prophetic traditions was allegedly extant from the earliest of times – albeit in a rather rudimentary manner. That system, however, was neither systematized nor rigorously applied until the advent of the civil wars (jīţa), whereupon sources were no longer regarded, prima facie, as trustworthy, but were instead increasingly scrutinized to establish authenticity. Thus evolved the elaborate 伊斯兰 system where every ḥadīth was scrutinized from two perspectives: the text (matn) containing the information transmitted as such, and the chain of transmitters (sanad) giving the names of all those responsible for transmitting such information from the Prophet himself.

⁴. Professor Duri’s article is in large measure an elucidation of what he calls “the tribal type of history”. See in this regard ‘The Iraq School of History to the Ninth Century’, in Historians of the Middle East, ed. B. Lewis and P. M. Holt (Oxford University Press, 1962).

As indicated earlier, Ibn Kathīr’s method in this particular work is more that of the ḥadīth scholars than it is of the historian; al-Bukhārī, Muslim and more so, al-Baḥaqqī, Ḍā’īd b. Ḥanbal, and Abū Nu’aym thus feature more promi-nently as sources for his biography than do historians such as Ibn Ishaq, Ibn Ḥishām or Tabari. But, as Abd al-Wahid rightly points out, Ibn Kathīr, on occasion, is not averse to using some rather obscure historical works, some even that are no longer extant: the rare historical tractate of Masa b. Uqba, and the al-Rawād al-Anf of al-Suhayli are examples thereof.

True to tradition, if not quite on the same scale as, for instance, Ibn Ḥishām, are Ibn Kathīr’s copious citations of poetry, almost all of which seem to have been taken from Muḥammad b. Ishaq’s biography of the Prophet. The poems deal with a variety of themes and styles: there is, for instance, the unmistakable sarcasm of Ka’āb b. Zuhayr as reflected in his lampooning of the Prophet, followed by his subsequent retraction and apology as in the much celebrated poem, Bānū Suʻād; there is also the occasional celebration of pre-Islamic Arabian chivalry, as in the haunting ode of Abū al-Bakhtārī b. Ḥishām, when he speaks so movingly of his virtual self-immolation for the love of a friend. Then, of course, there are the evocative panegyrics of Ḥassān b. Thābit in defence of Islam, its Prophet, and his Companions.

Ibn Kathīr, oddly enough for someone who has plumbed the depths of ḥadīth methodology, frequently paraphrases, not just the many references to scholars such as Ibn Ishaq, but also, at times, the very ḥadīth material he so often quotes.
He thus takes almost the same liberties with such material as he does with works on history, and the reader, particularly of the Arabic text, sometimes searches in vain for all but the gist of the traditions that he ascribes to, say, the sahīh of Bukhārī or that of Muslim. Abd al-Wahid offers two possible reasons for this anomaly; the one I believe to be somewhat more plausible than the other. It may well be, he suggests, that Ibn Kathīr was simply quoting from memory, seeing no need for any further textual verification, or it may also be that he is, in fact, using sources unavailable to us today. This latter hypothesis is, I believe, somewhat disingenuous for it requires, amongst other things, that Ibn Kathīr possessed not one, but an entire set of ḥadīth works unique to his library alone!
The text itself suffers from a singular lack of the literary cadence that makes the historical works of al-Ṭabari, for instance, more of a pleasure to read. This seems to result from Ibn Kathir’s efforts to present an authentic description of the life and times of the Prophet of Islam, and to submit such data as is found in the popular biographical works to the scrutiny of hadith literature. The flow of his text is, without question, a casualty of this exercise. But, as has been pointed out by a scholar of the Bible, “If we read biblical narrative (or in this case the sira material) as a story, we abandon its historical truth. If we read it as literature, we will often find literary art in it, but this art takes us further from truth.” Not that the method of Ibn Kathir is altogether without its redeeming features: it certainly provides useful information to scholars, particularly those of the traditional schools, who would prefer to have the classical sources for sira studies close at hand.

The contents of works such as Ibn Kathir’s sira are today regarded by many scholars of Islam as largely proto-historical, focusing, that is, on an era whose source documentation falls short of contemporary historiographical standards. It is, some say, the stuff of myth and legend, entwined in places with real historical data. For modern historians of Islam and the Middle East such as Maxime Rodinson, Patricia Crone et al., sira material contains, in the first instance, virtually “nothing of which we can say for certain that it incontestably dates back to the time of the Prophet.” And so, “when doing research about the life and work of the Prophet Muhammad”, Rudi Paret warns, “we on principle distrust the traditional statement and explanation of facts given by later generations, in so far as they cannot be verified by internal evidence or in some other way.”

In addition, the work at hand may be seen by some to be no more than the product of one who had a variety of interests in the topic: one who was, at one and the same time, a historian, a scribe of “sacred biography”, and also a devotee; the results of an endeavour such as Ibn Kathir’s, therefore, risk being perceived as less than the product of dispassionate scholarship.

This critical approach to Islamic historiography emerged gradually in the 18th and 19th centuries. It was, understandably, only a matter of time before Albert Schweitzer’s “quest of the historical Christ” would be appropriated by scholars of Islamic history in their search of the demythologized Muḥammad; after all, this kind of appropriation of the analytical tools indigenous to studies of Christianity for the unravelling of the Islamic historical experience has become almost a convention in Islamic and Middle Eastern studies. Yet the entire process is, I believe, fraught with questionable hypotheses, broad generalizations and a certain disregard for the spatio-temporal factors that shape ostensibly similar events. The application of New Testament heuristic tools such as Form and Redaction criticism to the corpus of information pertaining to the sīra seems to betray a casual disregard for the Sitz im Leben of that very corpus. The life and work of Jesus is clearly different from that of Muḥammad; the former’s mission — if it can be described as such — is, for example, singularly devoid of the political and socio-economic objectives that informed that of the latter. It is, therefore, hardly surprising, as F. E. Peters in his recent article “The Quest of the Historical Muhammad” points out, that “even though a great deal of effort has been invested in research into the life and times of Muḥammad, the results do not seem at all comparable to those achieved in research on Jesus, and the reasons are not at all clear.”

Ever since Gustav Weil presented his Mohammad der Prophet, sein Leben und seine Lehre in 1843, scholars have endeavoured to unravel the historical Muḥammad using a variety of tools and strategems. Initially the material offered by Muslim historians such as Ibn Iṣḥāq, Ibn Ḥishām and more importantly, al-Ṭabarī was used almost unquestioningly by Christian scholars who, as Holt characterizes them, belonged mainly to “holy orders”. Their primary purpose, it would seem, was to provide a spirited defence of Christian theology and dogma against the claims of Islam and its adherents. The polemics that ensued were, in the main, reflective of the attitude that there was “not any rational inducement in all (that Muslims) believe or practice; insomuch that common sense must be discarded in order to embrace their system.” As for Muḥammad, he was for many in that era “so coarse and barbarous an imposter, that there is not a man, who does not or cannot perceive plainly his cheat and corruption.” Humphrey Prideaux, the 17th-century lecturer in Hebrew at Oxford, captured rather succinctly the disposition of scholars vis-à-vis the study of Muḥammad, in the rather long-winded title of his work, The true nature of imposture fully display’d in the life of Mahomet. With a discourse annex’d for the vindication of Christianity from this charge. Offered to the consideration of the Deists of the present age. Later Simon Ockley, the somewhat less acerbic and brusque vicar of Swavesey in Cambridgeshire, authored The History of the Saracens, a “much more solid contribution to historical knowledge” as Holt puts it, but one that none the less did “not fail to follow common form by stigmatizing Muḥammad in his first line, as ‘the great Imposter’ and then describing the Arab conquests as ‘that grievous calamity’.” The liberalism that swept across Europe in the 18th century helped create a relatively less hostile attitude among European scholars towards Islam and its leader. We thus find during that era scholars such as Henri de Boulainvillier emerging. Boulainvillier, his theological affinities notwithstanding, assumed a decidedly more conciliatory tone in his biography of Muḥammad, La vie de Mahomet. For him, Christianity is undoubtedly superior to Islam but he is, none the less, quite charitable in his evaluation of his subject, and says: “With respect to the essential doctrines of religion, all that (Muhammad) has laid down is true; but he has not laid down all that is true; and that is the whole difference between our religion and his.”

The quest itself began in earnest in the writings of the Belgian Jesuit, Henri Lammens. Whereas Theodor Noeldeke, prior to him, had largely failed in his attempts to unravel “the historical person of Muhammad”, Lammens plodded on, and succeeded to some extent, in demonstrating “the possibility of the critical analysis of the sira”. Lammens’ efforts, however, were directed, not at a biographical study of Muhammad per se, but rather on the search for the secret of his personal appeal and the rapid expansion of his message. “Muhammad to him, was a historical problem as well as a symbol of Islam’s obstinacy and insensitiveness to the missionary influence.”

Lammens also happened to be among the first to argue, with some conviction, that the hadith traditions as well as the sira material on the Prophet are, on the whole, fictitious. This inaugurated a new perspective on Islamic history: the emphasis shifted from a critique of the actors in that history to the questioning of the source material itself.

In the 19th century, the Hungarian scholar Ignaz Goldziher concluded that much of the hadith material was but a “pious fraud . . . invoked by every group (in early Islam) for every idea it evolved; . . . through solid chains (isnad) of tradition, all such matters acquired an unbroken tie to the ‘Companions’ who had heard those pronouncements and statutes from the Prophet or had seen him act in pertinent ways.”18 Later Professor J. Schacht further explored the foregoing hypotheses by subjecting the isnād of a few legal traditions to an exhaustive scrutiny. He concluded that “hardly any of these traditions, as far as matters of religious law are concerned, can be considered authentic; they were put into circulation . . . from the first half of the second century onwards.”19 From this others were quick to extrapolate that even the biographical material is fraudulent. Crone thus states: “that the bulk of the sīra . . . consists of second century hadiths has not been disputed by any historian, and this point may be taken as conceded.”20

Not all Western scholars, however were as eager to jettison the classical material. W. M. Watt, writing in his Muhammad at Mecca, is clearly more reluctant than Crone, for example, to reject out of hand all such material, simply on the strength of Schacht’s conclusion. He thus maintains that “In the legal sphere there may have been some sheer invention of traditions, it would seem. But in the historical sphere, in so far as the two may be separated, and apart from some exceptional cases, the nearest to such invention in the best early historians appears to be a ‘tendential shaping’ of the material . . .”21

It must be remembered, however, that traditional Muslim scholars display little awareness of the foregoing conundrum. The classical methodology of hadith criticism as practised by early Muslim scholars, with its close scrutiny of the isnād and the mutān of prophetic traditions, has, in the main, not been discredited, or even questioned, by Muslim scholars. If anything, that methodology has today been given a new lease of life by scholars such as Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī, who, for example, regard the re-evaluation of the early sources as integral to what they call the Islamic renaissance (al-Nahḍa al-Islamiyya). Such a renaissance, Albānī argues, will fall far short of its goals, without a thoroughgoing purge of what remains of the spurious material that had crept into hadith and sīra works during the turbulent epoch of early Islamic history.22 He thus set himself the task of appraising scholars and the Muslim laity alike to those traditions that were deemed spurious by the regimen of classical hadith studies. His findings, which were first published under the title “al-Ahādith al-Da‘ifah wa al-Maudū‘ah” in a weekly column in the magazine al-Tamāddun al-Islami, now comprise a multi-volume work, appropriately titled Silsilah al-Ahādith al-Da‘ifah wa al-Maudū‘ah.23

23. Ibid., 6.
Clearly not all contemporary scholars are as eager as Schacht et al. to ring the death knell on hadith literature as a tool for unravelling early Islamic history. Azami for one, in his studies on early hadith literature has attempted to show that hadith literature is indeed the richest source for the investigation of that era, for it provides, among other things, material for the understanding of the legal, cultural and religious ideas of those early centuries. He maintains that the theories of Margoliouth, Goldziher and more recently, Schacht can no longer be incontestably accepted given the recent discoveries of manuscripts or research. According to him

"In the period referred to, works on the biography of the Prophet and on other historical topics were in a very advanced stage. We find that work on the biography of the Prophet was begun by the Companions. 'Abd Allah b. 'Amr b. al-'As recorded many historical events. It is possible still to trace his work in the hadith narrated by 'Amr b. Shu'ab (d. 118 AH) as he utilized his great grandfather 'Abd Allah b. 'Amr's books. Urwah (d. 93 AH) in his biography of the Prophet names his authority and most probably he had obtained the information in writing. There are works mentioned here and there on a single topic of the Sirah, e.g. Memorandum on the Servants of the Prophet, a book on the ambassadors of the Prophet to different rulers and chieftains with their negotiations. There are references to the collections of the Prophet's letters in a very early period." 24

But it is, in fact, these very sources that Azami cites that have, through the use of contemporary literary and hermeneutical tools, been relegated to no more than "the rubble of early Muslim history". For Patricia Crone therefore, the "inertia" of material such as appears heretofore "comes across very strongly in modern scholarship on the first two centuries of Islam." 25 "The bulk of it", she argues, "has an alarming tendency to degenerate into mere rearrangements of the same old canon - Muslim chronicles in modern languages and graced with modern titles." 26

Others, such as Juynboll, have strived to arrive at the inevitable solution intermédiaire, "a conceivable position that could be taken between the two points of view represented respectively by Muslim and Western scholarship." 27 For him therefore, the hadith traditions "taken as a whole" do provide a fairly reliable rendition of early Islamic history, and "a judiciously and cautiously formulated overall view of what all those early reports . . . collectively point to, may in all likelihood be taken to be not very far from the truth of 'what really happened'." 28

Finally, the true value of this particular work probably resides outside the context of the foregoing academic debate, for as Gadamer explains in Truth and Method, "The meaning of a literary work is never exhausted by the intentions of its author; as the work passes from one cultural or historical context to another, new meanings may be culled from it which were perhaps never anticipated by its author or contemporary audience."

TRANSLATOR’S PREFACE

As has often been observed, translation is impossible, since the associations and emotive content of words in one language and culture differ from those of all others. Attempts at translation, therefore, inevitably represent strivings for compromise. While accuracy and precision are prime objectives, the ultimately necessary requirements for clarity and comprehension in the host language may require simplification or even omission from the original text. The dilemmas inherent in these conflicting objectives are at times irreconcilable, and this is particularly true when one is dealing, as here, with languages and cultures so far removed as ancient Arabic and modern English. This translation, composed in everyday, contemporary English, gives no impression of the ubiquitous rarities, oddities and archaisms of vocabulary and syntax that make the original extremely challenging to comprehend. It is hoped, of course, that the innumerable compromises that this translation represents will be accepted as good-faith attempts to convey the spirit and purpose of the original in a form that readers of English will not find impossibly daunting.

In some instances Ibn Kathir repeats anecdotal ahadith with differing chains of authority that are almost identical in content; often, as will be seen, the accounts differ in only very few of their words and these are typically vocabulary rarities. While such variations between accounts may seem of scant interest to the Western reader, they have nevertheless been left complete and intact in this translation. Including them in full, as in the original work, gives a strong impression of the care with which these anecdotes have been handed down and the impression of their likely authenticity is therefore enhanced. This seems especially the case where the discrepancies involve vocabulary rarities that are synonymous. It seems that it would be just such words that would have been subjected to dispute, change or loss from memory.

Ibn Kathir’s objective was to appear authoritative and discriminating in his choices of inclusion and discussion of specific ahadith; to him the listing of all the names of his authorities and his comments on their reputations was an essential component of this lectures. The give-and-take of oral lecturing — of which this work is essentially a record — would have enabled immediate verbal clarification. Our English text, in contrast, has to stand by itself, and to present an inherent and visible logic and clarity; it must also give some impression of the reliability of the Arabic text that is indicated by its complexity, and by the care with which the names of quoted sources are given and at times evaluated.

have been included in full, since their identities were of prime importance for the initial ‘readership’ of this work as well as to students and researchers today. However, the exact nature and relative value of the means of transmission from authority to authority and the suggestions implied of Ibn Kathir’s preference for certain sources over others, have not been conveyed with exactitude, since common English vocabulary is unable to convey some of the subtleties of the Arabic technical terms employed for this purpose. The essential completeness of the original text in this translation does, however, enable serious students of early Islamic materials to bring their own differentiation to bear by their knowledge of the reputations of the persons quoted.

Certain words common in this text – such as Ḥabī and surat – change in their form in Arabic to accord with basic grammatical rules. Here, however, to avoid confusion for those readers who do not know Arabic, they have been left in the form in which they are most commonly met. Initial hamza, moreover, has been omitted. Since early Arabic manuscripts, like the Arabic printed version of this text, are devoid of quotation marks, the identity of the narrator is sometimes unclear. Similarly, it is occasionally difficult to discern whether comments at the end of an account are those of the transmitting authority or of Ibn Kathir himself. Footnotes referring to these and similar textual difficulties have been kept to a minimum, while brief parenthetical explanatory comments have sometimes been inserted to aid the general reader.

Discriminating and knowledgeable readers and reviewers will no doubt find discrepancies and perhaps inaccuracies in this lengthy and demanding text, especially in the extensive poems quoted. For these the translator – and his reviewers, text editors and typesetters – apologize. But since this work offers intimate details not elsewhere available in English about Arabian history and the inspiration and leadership of Islam in its earliest formative period, it would seem unsatisfactory to leave it in a language and form accessible only to a small coterie of scholars. The evident religious historical and philosophical interest of this text suggests that all those associated with its production may properly take refuge and find consolation from criticism in the knowledge that ‘to err is human’. To attempt the impossible, moreover, while perhaps foolhardy, is surely more laudable than to make no attempt at all.

In the name of God, the most Benefcent, the most Merciful

It has been said that all Arabs trace their origins to Ishmael, the son of Abraham; upon them both be peace, salutation, and homage. However, what is well known to be true is that the 'arab al-'Ariba (the original Arabs) came before Ishmael. Among them were the peoples of Ād, Thamūd, Ṭasm, Jabīt, Umaym, Jurhum, and the Āmalqīt, as well as others known only to God. Also, these peoples both came before and were contemporaries of al-Khalīl. Yet the 'arab al-musta'riba (the Arabized Arabs), the Arabs of the Hijāz, were descendants of Ishmael, son of Abraham; upon both of them be peace.

The Arabs of the Yemen, the Ḥimyar, are well known to have been from Qāṭīn, whose name was Muhzam, as Ibn Mākūlā said. It has been stated that they were a group of four brothers; Qāṭīn, Qāhir, Muqīt, and Fālīgh. Qāṭīn was the son of Hūd; it is also said that he was Hūd, or that Hūd was his brother or one of his offspring. Qāṭīn is also said to have descended from Ishmael, as Ibn Ishāq and others relate it. One authority stated that Qāṭīn was the son of al-Hamaysa, son of Taymūn, son of Qaydhar, son of Nabīt, son of Ishmael. And there are other genealogies tracing him back to Ishmael; but God knows best.

Al-Bukhārī treats this in his chapter on tracing the ancestry of Yemen back to Ishmael. He states that Musaddad related to him, quoting Yahyā, from Yazīd b. Abī Ubayy, and also Salama — God be pleased with him — as follows, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went out and confronted a group from Aslam who were fighting one another with swords. He said to one of the two sides, ‘Combat, O sons of Ishmael, I am with the so-and-so tribe.’ So they stopped fighting. ‘What’s wrong with you?’ he asked. ‘But how can we combat if you are with the so-and-so tribe?’ they replied. ‘Go on, combat,’ he insisted, ‘I’m with all of you.’”

Al-Bukhārī alone gives this tradition. In one of his versions the tradition goes, “Combat, O sons of Ishmael. Your forebear was a skilled marksman. Combat; I’m with Ibn al-Adra.” And when they stopped fighting, he said, “Go on, combat; I’m with all of you.”

Al-Bukhārī states, “And Aslam b. Afsā b. Ḥāritha b. ‘Amr b. ‘Amir is from the tribe of Khuzā‘a.” He means the following: that Khuzā‘a was one group of those who were split off from the tribes of Saba’ when God sent on them the flood of al-‘Aram, as will be explained later. And the Aws and the Khazraj tribes were from Saba' also. The Prophet (SAAS) had said to them, "Combat, O sons of Ishmael." By so saying he was pointing out that they were from Ishmael's line of ancestry. Others interpret his words as meaning the entire Arab race, though that interpretation is far-fetched, since it contradicts without proof the apparent meaning. But the overwhelming view is that the Qahtâni Arabs, whether they were from Yemen or somewhere else, were not from the line of Ishmael.

Most consider that all the Arabs are divided into two strains, those of Qahtân and those of 'Adnân. Those of Qahtân consist of two peoples: Saba' and Ḥadramawt. Those of 'Adnân are also from two peoples: Rabî'a and Muđar, the two sons of Nizar b. Ma'ad b. 'Adnân. A fifth people, the Qudā'a, are the object of dispute. One theory asserts that they are from 'Adnân; Ibn 'Abd al-Barr reports that the majority so believes. This theory is related from Ibn 'Abbâs, Ibn 'Umar, and Jubayr b. Muţîm. It is also preferred by al-Zubayr b. Bakkâr, his uncle Muş'ab al-Zubayrî, and Ibn Hîshâm. According to Ibn 'Abd al-Barr and others, the name "Qudâ'a son of Ma'ad" appeared in a hadîth but this is incorrect.

In addition it is said that Qudâ'a continued to trace the ancestry back to 'Adnân, both before and after the coming of Islam. But by the time of Khâlid b. Yazid b. Muqâwiya, some of them being maternal uncles of his, they were tracing back to Qahtân. In that regard A'shâ b. Tha'lâba composed the following verses:

"Inform Qudâ'a in the letter that but for the vicars of God's people, they would not have been embraced (into Islam).

Qudâ'a has said, 'We are among the fortune blessed.'

And only God knows if they have been honest and spoken true.

They claimed a father who never had their mother;

They may know, but they are fearful (to tell the truth)."

Abû 'Amr al-Suhaylî has also mentioned unique Arab poetry which reproaches Qudâ'a for attributing their descent to Yemen. But God knows best.

The second theory is that Qudâ'a has descended from Qahtân; Ibn Ishâq, al-Kalbi, and a number of other genealogists subscribe to this view.

Ibn Ishâq gave his genealogy as being Qudâ'a b. Malik, b. Ḥimyar, b. Saba', b. Yashjub, b. Ya'rub, b. Qahtân.

A certain poet of theirs, 'Amr b. Murra, a Companion of the Prophet to whom two hadîths are attributed, composed the verses:

"O caller, summon us and rejoice;

Be of Qudâ'a, stand not aloof in shame.

We descend from the noble and handsome"

2. A play on Yemen, pronounced "yaman" in Arabic, a word meaning "success", "happiness", "luck".
Qudā'a, son of Malik, son of Himyar.
The line is well-known and fault-free,
Engraved in the stone beneath the pulpit.”

One genealogist gave the line as follows: Qudā'a b. Malik, b. 'Amr, b. Murra, b. Zayd, b. Himyar.

Ibn Lahi'a stated, on the authority of Ma'rūf b. Suwayd from Abū 'Ushaba Muḥammad b. Mūsā, from Uqba b. 'Āmir, that the last-mentioned said, “I asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) whether we were descended from Ma‘ad. He replied that we were not. So I asked who we were. He replied, ‘You are descended from Qudā'a b. Malik b. Himyar.’”

Abū Umar b. 'Abd al-Barr said the following: “People do not dispute that Juhayna b. Zayd b. Aswad b. 'Amr b. 'Imān b. al-'Āraf b. Qudā'a is the tribe of Uqba b. 'Āmir al-Juḥani. Accordingly, Qudā'a would be in Yemen in the tribe of Himyar b. Saba'.”

Some genealogists combine these ancestries, as in the report of al-Zubayr b. Bakkār and others to the effect that Qudā'a was a woman of the Jurhum who was married to Malik b. Himyar, from whom she gave birth to Qudā'a. Then, she married Ma‘ad b. 'Adna', while her son was still small; some even claim that she was pregnant with Qudā'a prior to her marriage (to Ma‘ad). Thus, Qudā'a was ascribed descent from his mother’s husband, as was frequently the custom in such cases. But God knows best.

Muḥammad b. Sallām of Basra, the skilled genealogist, said, “The Arabs came from three strains: 'Adnān, Qaḥṭān, and Qudā'a.” When he was asked who were the more numerous, the descendants of 'Adnān or those of Qaḥṭān, he replied, “It depends on Qudā'a; if they related to Yemen, then Qaḥṭāns are more numerous; if to Aden, then 'Adnāns are more.”

All this points to Qudā’a’s inconsistency in relating their descent. However, if the aforementioned hadith from Ibn Lahi’a is true, then it proves their being from Qaḥṭān. But God knows best. And God Almighty did state: “O people, we have created you from a male and a female and made you into nations and tribes, that you may know one another. Truly, in God’s sight it is the most pious of you who are the most noble” (sūrat al-Hujūrāt, XLIX, v.13).

Genealogists indicate that their taxonomy has the following order: shu‘ūb (peoples); qabā'il (tribes); 'amsār (tribal confederations); buṭān (sub-tribes); afkhāḏāt (small divisions of a tribe); fasā’il (extended kinsfolk); and 'ashā'īr (extended families). And the last refers to those closest to a man, and there are no more terms thereafter.

Let us begin with mention of the Qaḥṭān, then the Arabs of the Ḥijāz who are the 'Adnān, and discussion of the jāhilīyya era (before Islam, that is) as a way of leading up to the biography of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). All this if it be the will of God, in whom there is trust.
Al-Bukhārī stated, in his chapter, An Account of Qahtān, as follows: “ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. ʿAbd Allāh told us, quoting Sulaymān b. Bilāl, from Thawr b. Zayd, from Abū al-Ghayth, from Abū Hurayra, that the Prophet (S.A.W.) said, ‘Judgement Day will not come until a man from the Qahtān goes forth driving the people before him with his stick.’ Muslim also relates it in that way, from Qutayba, from al-Darāwardī, from Thawr b. Zayd.”

Al-Suhayli said that Qahtān was the first to whom were spoken the phrases abayta al-laʿna3 (i.e. “you have scorned the malediction”) and anʿim sabāḥan (i.e. “have a happy morning!”).

The Imam Ahmad said, “Abū d-Mughira related to us, from Jarīr, and Rāshid b. Saʿd al-Muqraʿī told me, from Abū Hayy, from Dhū Fajar, that the Messenger of God (S.A.W.) said, ‘This status once belonged to Ḥimyar, but God withdrew it from them and placed it with Quraysh and ww, yy, ʿayn, ww, dāl, alif hamza, lām, yā, hā, mīm.’ ʿAbd Allāh said, “This was in a document of my father, and as he related it to us he spoke it out directly as meaning the words, wa sayaʾādu ilayhim, meaning ‘it will return to them.’”

The Story of Sabaʿ.

God Almighty said, “For Sabaʿ there was indeed a sign in their dwelling-place: two gardens, on the right hand and on the left. ‘Eat of the bounty from your Lord, and render Him thanks.’ Good was the country, and forgiving the Lord. But they turned away, so We sent down upon them the torrent of al-Lārim, and changed their gardens into ones of bitter fruit, tamarisks, and a few lote trees. Thus We punished them for their disbelief, and is it not the disbelievers alone whom We punish? And We placed between them and the villages We had blessed other settlements, easily seen, well spaced for journeying, (saying) ‘Travel in them in safety by day and night.’ They responded, ‘O God, extend the distances between our travel stops.’ They harmed themselves, and We made of them tales to be told and scattered them asunder. In that there are signs for all who are truly patient and thankful” (sūr ah Sabaʿ, XXXIV, v.15–19).

The genealogists, including Muḥammad b. Ishāq, give the name as Sabaʿ ʿAbd Shams b. Yashjub b. Yaʿrub b. Qahtān; they say that he was the first of the Arabs who sabaʿ and that that was why he was called Sabaʿ. He was also called al-Raʾīsh (“the philanthropist”), because he gave to the people from his own wealth.

3. A salutation made to kings in the pre-Islamic era, meaning “your deeds are too impeccable to deserve malediction, O king.”

4. The word lends itself to various interpretations. Thus A. Guillaume, in his translation of Ibn Ishāq’s The Life of Muḥammad (Oxford, 1955, p.4) renders it “to take captives”. Dictionaries give other meanings that might also fit this context. For example, in E. W. Lane’s Arabic-English Lexicon we find sabaʿ as “to renege on an oath” or “to imply God’s abandonment of a person”.

Al-Suhayli said, “It is related that he was the first person to be crowned.”

Some stated that he was a Muslim and that he wrote verses predicting the advent of the Messenger of God (SAAS). In that poetry are the lines:

“He will control after us a mighty domain,
A prophet who will give not licence to evil.
After him, other kings from among them will hold sway Ruling all men, with no dishonour nor disgrace.
After them, rulers of ours will control
And our kingdom will be fragmented.
After Qahtān a prophet will rule,
Pious, humble, the very best of mankind.
He will be named Aḩmad, and I wish
I could be given to live a year after his coming
To support him and award him my aid
With all fully-armed warriors and all marksmen.
When he appears, become his helpers and let Him who meets him pass on my greeting.”

Ibn Dihya related this in his book al-Tanwīr fi Mawlid al-Bashir al-Nadhir (Illuminating the Birth of the Messenger, the Herald).

Imām Aḩmad stated that Abū ‘Abd al-Rahmān related to him, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. Lahī’a, on the authority of ‘Abd Allāh b. Hubayra al-Sabāʾī, from ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Wa’la, that the last-named said that he heard ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abbās say that a man once asked the Prophet (SAAS) who or what Sabāʾ might signify, whether a man, a woman, or a territory. He replied, “Certainly he was a man who gave birth to ten children. Six of them dwelled in Yemen and four in Syria. Those in Yemen were Madḥij, Kiuda, the Ḍzār, the Ash‘āris, Anmār, and Ḫimyar, all Arabs; in Syria they were Lakhm, Judhām, ‘Āmila, and Ghasān.”

We related in our Taṣfīr (Exegesis) that it was Farwa b. Musayk al-Ghuṭayfī who asked about that; also therein we analysed the lines of transmission and the phraseology of this tradition. And all praise be to God!

What is meant here is that Sabāʾ encompasses all these tribes. Among them there used to be [kings] in the lands of Yemen called the tabāḥqa; tubbaʾ in the singular. Their kings would wear crowns during their reign, as also did the Chosroes, the kings of the Persians. The Arabs used to apply the word tubbaʾ to each king who rules Yemen, along with al-Shahr and Ḥadramawt, just as they applied qaṣār to kings ruling Syria and the peninsula, kisrā to those ruling Persia, farūn to Egypt’s rulers, al-najāshi to those over Abyssinia, and baṭlaymūs to India’s kings. Balqīs was one of the Ḫimyarite rulers of Yemen. They used to be in a state of great felicity, with abundant prosperity and a plenitude of local fruits and produce. However, they lived in rectitude, propriety, and right guidance. But when they replaced God’s blessings by disbelief, these kings brought their people to ruin.

Muḥammad b. Ishaq stated from Wahb b. Munabbīh, “God sent to them 13 prophets.” And al-Suddī claimed that he sent 12,000 prophets to them! But God knows best.

What is implied here is that they deviated from the true guidance into error and bowed down to the sun apart from God. That was so in the time of Baḥṣīs and beforehand as well, continuing up to when God sent the flood of al-ʿArim upon them. As the Almighty said, “But they turned away, so We sent down upon them the torrent of al-ʿArim, and changed their gardens into ones of bitter fruit, tamarisks, and a few lote trees. Thus We punished them for their disbelief, and is it not the disbelievers alone whom We punish?” (ṣūrat Sābāʾ, XXXIV, v.16–17).

A number of former and contemporary scholars on the Qurʾān commentaries and others have related that the Maʿrīb dam was constructed where waters flowed between two mountains; in ancient times they built an extremely strong dam there so that the water-level reached these mountain tops. On those mountains they planted many fields and orchards with elegant and highly productive trees. It is said that Sābāʾ b. Yaʿrīb built it and that it was fed by 70 valleys with 30 outlets for the water from it. But he died before it was completed and so Himyar finished it after him. It was one farsakh long and one farsakh wide. People lived there in great felicity, prosperity, and ease. So much so, that Qaṭāda and others related that the orchards gave fruit of such quantity and ripeness that a woman could fill a large basket on her head from the fruit dropping in it as she passed below. It is said that there were no fleas or dangerous beasts there; the climate being wholesome and the land excellent, as the Almighty stated, “For Sābāʾ there was indeed a sign in their dwelling-place; two gardens, one on the right hand and one on the left. ‘Eat from the bounty of your Lord, and render Him thanks—a fair land and a much-forgiving Lord’” (ṣūrat Sābāʾ, XXXIV, v.15). And He also stated, “And so your Lord proclaimed: ‘If you give thanks, I give you increase thereof; but if you show ingratitude, then is my punishment severe indeed’” (ṣūrat Ibrāhīm, XIV, v.7).

Then they worshipped other than God and were discontent with His bounty; after He had made their travel stages close together, made good their orchards, and secured their roads, they asked Him to extend their travel stages, to make their journeys difficult and tiresome, and to replace good by evil. They did just like the Israelites when they requested that He exchange manna and quails for vegetables, cucumbers, garlic, lentils, and onions. And so they nullified that great blessing and common good by despoiling the land and scattering the people, then, as the Almighty said, “they turned away and so We sent down upon them the torrent of al-ʿArim” (ṣūrat Sābāʾ, XXXIV, v.16).

6. Parasang, an ancient Persian measure of length, equal to about 3½ miles.
More than one source related that God dispatched rodents against the base of the dam, that is, large rats, or, it is said, moles; and when people knew of this, they set up nets. But, it having been so decreed, these efforts did no good and their precautions were useless. When the destruction at the base was well advanced, the dam fell and collapsed and the water flowed out. Thus the streams and rivers were cut off; all those fruits were lost and all the produce and trees perished. Afterwards they were replaced with inferior trees and fruits, as All-powerful and Almighty God has stated, “and we changed their gardens into ones of khāmt and athl (bitter fruit and tamarisks)” (ṣūrat Sābā’, XXXIV, v.16).

Ibn ‘Abbās, Mujāhid, and others stated that khāmt is the arāk tree which gives a fruit known as the barir, whereas the athl is the farfāq, the tamarisk, or some such similar tree that produces wood without fruit. The Qur’ān verse continues, “and a few lote-trees”. This refers to the fact that when the nabaq, the “Christ’s thorn” tree, gives fruit it does so in very small quantity despite the profuseness of its thorns. The proportion of its fruit is similar, then, to what the proverb implies, “like the meat of a scrawny camel high on a rock-strewn mountain”, not an easy path to be climbed, nor a nice fat meal to be attained. This, then, is why the Almighty states, “Thus We punished them for their disbelief, and is it not the disbelievers alone whom We punish?”

That is, He only metes out such severe punishment to those who disbelieve in Him, give the lie to His messengers, disobey His commands, and defile His sanctuaries.

The Almighty also said, “We made of them tales to be told and scattered them asunder.” In fact, when their wealth was gone and their lands were in ruin, they were forced to depart. So they scattered into the lower areas and into the higher reaches of the country, in all directions, ayyī Ṣābā’ (in disarray that is) as the common idiom goes. Some of them settled in Ḥijāz, the Khuzā’i tribe among them; they migrated to the suburbs of Mecca, with the consequences that we will relate later. Others went to what is now Medina, being the first to settle there. They were later joined by three tribes of Jews: Banū Qaymuqṣ, Banū Qurayṣa, and Banū al-Naḍīr. These made a pact with the tribes of Aws and Khazraj and stayed with them, as we will relate. Other groups from Sābā’ moved to Syria and it was later they who became Christian; these were the Ghassān, Āmilā, Bahrā’, Lakhm, Judhām, Taḥūk, Taḥlib, and others.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated that Abū ‘Ubayda told him that al-ʿAšā b. Qays b. Ṭhaʾlabah, also known as Maymūn b. Qays, spoke the verses:

“In that there is a moral for those who seek morals,
Marble, built for them by Ḥimyar,
Which did not budge when the raging billows came.
Its water irrigated the crops and the vines
Far and wide, since it was decreed
Then they were scattered and could not Give drink to a child when just weaned."

Muḥammad b. Išḥāq, in his biography of the Prophet (SAAS), indicated that the first man to leave Yemen before the flooding of al-‘Arim was ʿAmr b. ʿAmir of the Lakhm tribe. Lakhm was the son of ʿAdī b. al-Ḥārīth b. Murra b. Udad b. Zayd b. Hamaysaʿ b. ʿAmr b. ʿArib b. Yashjub b. Zayd b. Kahlān b. Sabaʿ. Lakhm’s genealogy has also been given as Lakhm b. ʿAdī b. ʿAmr b. Sabaʿ, as Ibn Hishām states.

According to Ibn Išḥāq, "The reason for his departure from Yemen was, as Abū Zayd al-ansārī related to me, that he saw rodents burrowing into the Maʿrib dam which held back the water which they distributed over their land as they pleased. He realized that the dam would not last, and so he decided to emigrate from Yemen. So he tricked his people, as follows. He ordered his youngest son to stand up to him and strike him back if he should berate and strike him. His son did as he was told and ʿAmr then said, 'I will not remain in a land where my youngest son has slapped my face.' So some of Yemen’s tribal leaders said, 'Let’s take advantage of ʿAmr’s anger and buy up his properties.' Then ʿAmr moved with his sons and grandsons. The Azd tribe then stated that they would not remain behind after ʿAmr; so they sold their properties and left with him. They journeyed until they reached the land of ʿAkk, crossing to and fro across their territory. So ʿAkk attacked them, their battles favouring first one side, then the other. On this fighting, ʿAbbas b. Mirdās spoke the following verses:

Ghassān until they were completely expelled.’

‘ʿAmr’s people therefore disengaged from them and dispersed in different directions. The family of Jafna b. ʿAmr b. ʿĀmir went to Syria, while the Aws and the Khazraj settled in Yathrib and Khuzāʿa went to Marra.7 The Azd al-Sarāt went to al-Sarāt, the Azd Ummān to Ummān. Then God dispatched the torrent down upon the dam and destroyed it, concerning which event God revealed these verses in the Qurʾān.” Something close to this account was also related from al-Saddī.

According to Muḥammad b. Išḥāq in this account, ʿAmr b. ʿĀmir was a soothsayer. Others say that his wife, Ṭarīfā daughter of al-Khayr, the Ḥimyarite woman, was a soothsayer and that she told him of the imminent doom of their country. Apparently they saw proof of that in the rats being given control over their dam, and that was why they acted as they did. God alone knows best.

7. Known as marr al-Zahrān, on the road to Mecca.
I have given a lengthy account of 'Amr's story, from 'Ikrima, as related by Ibn Abī Ḥātim, in my Tafsir (Exegesis).

Division

Not all of Saba' left Yemen when they were afflicted with the torrent of al-'Arīm; the majority of them remained. The people of Ma'rib, who had the dam, moved into different parts of the country. That is the gist of the previously mentioned hadith coming down from Ibn 'Abbas to the effect that all the tribes of Saba' did not leave Yemen, but four went to Syria while six remained. These were Madhējī, Kinda, Anmār, and the Ash'arīs. Anmār was the father of Khath'am, Bajila, and Ḥīmyar; so these were the six tribes from Saba' who remained in Yemen. They continued retaining the rights of power and the tabābā'ī kingship until the king of Abyssinia took that position from them through the army he sent under his two generals Abraha and Aryāt. The Abyssinian rule lasted some 70 years until Sayf b. Dhū Yazan the Ḥīmyarite regained control, and that was a short time before the birth of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). This we will recount in detail shortly, God willing, and upon Him is all trust and dependence.

Later the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent 'Aḥī and Khālid b. al-Walid to the people of Yemen, then he sent Abū Mūsā al-Ash'arī and Mu'ādh b. Jabal. They were calling people to worship God and making clear to them matters of doctrine. After that al-Aswād al-Anṣāf gained control over Yemen and he expelled the deputies of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). When al-Aswād was killed, the power of Islam became firmly established over Yemen, during the rule of Abū Bakr “the trusting”, God be pleased with him.

The Story of Rābi'a b. Naṣr b. Ābu Ḥarīthah b. 'Amr b. Āmir.

The man referred to in the above heading was of the Lakhm tribe; this is what Ibn Ishaq related. Al-Suhaylī stated that the genealogists of Yemen give his name as Naṣr b. Rābi'a; but he was really Rābi'a b. Naṣr b. al-Ḥārīth b. Namāra b. Lakhm. Al-Zubayr b. Bakkar gave his genealogy as Rābi'a b. Naṣr b. Mālik b. Sha'wadh b. Mālik b. Ājam b. 'Amr b. Namāra b. Lakhm. Lakhm was the brother of Judhām; he was named Lakhm because he had lakhmed his brother on the cheek, i.e. he had struck him there. The brother bit his hand in return so jadhaming it; hence he was called Judhām.

Rābi'a was one of the *tubba*₃ kings of Ḥīmyar, and about him is told the tale of his contacts with the two soothsayers Shiqq and Ṣatīḥ, and how they warned him of the coming of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

Ṣatīḥ was named Rābi' b. Rābi'a b. Mas'ud b. Māzin b. Dhī' b. 'Adī b. Māzin Ghassān. Shiqq was the son of Ṣa'b b. Yashkur b. Ruhm b. Afrak b. Qays b.
'Abqar b. Anmār b. Nizār. Some say that Anmār was the son of Irāsh b. Liḥyān b. ʿAmr b. al-Ghawth b. Nābit b. Mālik b. Zayd b. Kaḥlān b. Sābā'. It is said that Saṭīḥ had no limbs but was like a waterskin, with his face in his chest. When he got angry he would puff up and sit. Shiqq was one-half a man. And it is said that Khālid b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Qasrī was of his progeny. According to al-Suḥaylī both Shiqq and Saṭīḥ were born on the same day when Ṭarīfa, daughter of al-Khayr, the Ḥīmyarite woman, died. It is said that she spat into the mouth of each of them, each therefore inheriting the gift of divination from her. She was the wife of ʿAmr b. ʿAmr, previously mentioned. But God knows best.

Muḥammad Ibn Išāq said that Rabīʿa b. Naṣr was king of Yemen and of the true line of the tubbaʿ kings. He saw a vision that awed and terrified him. So he gathered every single soothsayer, magician, bird prognosticator, and star foreteller in his kingdom and told them, “I have seen visions that amazed and scared me. Tell me what they were and how to interpret them.” They replied, “Relate them to us and we will interpret them.” He responded, “If I do tell you what they were I won’t feel secure with your explanation; the only one capable of interpreting them will be someone who knows what they were before I tell them.”

One of the wise men then suggested, “If that is what the king wants, then he should send for Shiqq and Saṭīḥ. No one is more knowledgeable than they; they will tell him what he asked for.”

So the king sent for them, and Saṭīḥ arrived before Shiqq. Their conversation went as follows:

The king: “I have seen visions that amazed and scared me; tell me what they were, and if you are right you will interpret them correctly.”

Saṭīḥ: “I will do so. You saw fire emerge from the darkness, fall on low ground, and consume every living being with a skull.”

The king: “You’ve not made a single error, Saṭīḥ. So how do you interpret them?”

Saṭīḥ: “I swear by all the snakes between the two stony plains, that the Abyssinians will descend upon your land and will surely reign over all between Abyan and Jurash.”

The king: “That, Saṭīḥ, angers and hurts me greatly; will that occur in my time or later?”

Saṭīḥ: “Later, by your father I swear, some time later, after more than 60 or 70 years have passed.”

The king: “And will their dominion endure or be cut short?”

Saṭīḥ: “It will be cut down to some 70 years, and then they will be killed and expelled in flight.”

The king: “Who will then follow, after their killing and expulsion?”

Saṭīḥ: “Iram Dḥu Yazan will follow, emerging from Aden to fight them, and he will not leave one of them in Yemen.”
The king: “And will his era endure or be cut short?”

Satîth: “It will be cut short.”

The king: “Who will do this?”

Satîth: “A prophet, pure, to whom revelation comes from the All-high.”

The king: “And from where will this prophet come?”

Satîth: “He will descend from Ghalib b. Fihr b. Malik b. al-Nadr. And the rule will be with his people till the end of time.”

The king: “Does time end?”

Satîth: “Yes, on that day when the first and the last shall all be assembled and the good will be happy, the evil mortified.”

The king: “Is this really true, what you’re telling me?”

Satîth: “Yes, by the twilight, the dark of night, and the spreading dawn, what I told you really is the truth.”

Then Shiqq arrived and the king spoke to him as he had to Satîth but hid from him what he had foreseen to establish whether they would be in agreement or not. Shiqq told him, “You saw fire emerge from the dark, fall down between a meadow and a hillock, and eat up every breathing creature there.”

When Shiqq said this, the king knew that they were in agreement and saying one and the same thing, except for Satîth’s words being “fall on low ground and consume every living being with a skull”, while Shiqq’s were “between a meadow and a hillock and eat up every breathing creature there”. So the king told him he had it right and asked his interpretation.

Shiqq: “I swear by all the men who live between two stony plains that the blacks will descend upon your land, oppress all your young, and reign over all between Abyan and Najran.”

The king: “By your father, Shiqq, that angers and hurts me greatly; will that occur during or after my reign?”

Shiqq: “No, it will be in a later period. And then a great man will emerge to save your people and inflict on your enemies all disgrace.”

The king: “And who will this great saviour be?”

Shiqq: “A young man who is guilt-free and faultless and will emerge from the line of Dhū Yazan.”

The king: “And will his reign last long?”

Shiqq: “No, it will be brought short by a messenger dispatched, who will bring truth and justice, and come from a people of religion and virtue in whom power shall reside until the Day of Separation.”

The king: “What is the Day of Separation?”

Shiqq: “A day when the pious shall be rewarded, when calls shall be made from the heavens that the living and the dead shall hear, and men shall be gathered to the appointed place. Then the pious shall receive victory and rewards.”
The king: “Is it really true what you predict?”

Shiqq: “Yes, by the Lord of the heavens and the earth and of all high and low between them both, what I have informed you is all true and doubt-free.”

Ibn Ishāq stated that the soothsayers’ prediction had great impact on Rabī’a b. Naṣr and so he provisioned all his family and relatives for departure to Iraq. He wrote for them to a Persian king called Sabūr b. Khurzād who settled them in al-Ḥira. According to Ibn Ishāq, the progeny of Rabī’a b. Naṣr included al-Nuʿmān b. al-Mundhir, son of al-Nuʿmān b. al-Mundhir b. ʿAmr b. ʿAdī b. Rabī’a b. Naṣr. This al-Nuʿmān was viceroy over al-Ḥira for the Persian kings; and the Arabs used to send delegations to him and gave him praise. This, then, is what Muḥammad b. Ishaq said about al-Nuʿmān b. al-Mundhir being of the line of Rabī’a b. Naṣr, according to most people. Ibn Ishāq related that when the sword of al-Nuʿmān b. al-Mundhir was brought to the Commander of the Faithful, ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, he asked Jubayr b. Muṭṣim from whom it had come. He replied, “From the remains of Qanāṣ b. Maʿṣd b. ʿAdnān.” Ibn Ishāq commented that it was unclear who that person was.

The Story of Ṭubbāʿ Abū Karib Tubbān Asʿad, king of Yemen, with the people of Medina; how he wished to raid the Holy Sanctuary at Mecca. Then he dignified and venerated it and covered it with cloth; thus he was the first to do so.

According to Ibn Ishāq, Tubbān Asʿad Abū Karib was he who went to Medina and led two Jewish rabbis to Yemen and refurbished and covered with cloth the holy sanctuary. His reign preceded that of Rabī’a b. Naṣr. He had routed his return journey from a campaign in the east through Medina. First he had passed there without bothering its inhabitants and left among them a son of his who was treacherously killed. He advanced against it, determined to destroy it, wipe out its people, and cut down its date-palms. So this clan of the anṣār joined up against him, their leader being 'Amr b. Talla, the brother of Banū al-Najjār and also one of Banū 'Amr b. Mādhūl. Mādhūl's name was 'Āmir b. Mālik b. al-Najjār, and al-Najjār's name was Taym Allāh b. Tha'laba b. 'Amr b. al-Khazraj b. Hārith b. Tha'laba b. 'Amr b. 'Āmir.

Ibn Hishām stated that 'Amr b. Talla was 'Amr b. Mu'āwiya b. 'Amr b. 'Āmir b. Mālik b. al-Najjār, that Talla was his mother and that she was the daughter of 'Āmir b. Zurayq al-Khazrajīyya.

Ibn Ishaq's account proceeds: "A certain man of Bana 'Adi b. al-Najjar, called Ahar, attacked and killed one of the followers of Tuhhāc whom he found cutting down date clusters off one of his date-loaded palm trees, saying, 'Dates belong only to those who pollinate them.' This added to Tubbāc's animosity towards them and fighting broke out.

"The ānṣār claimed that they would fight against him by day and host him by night; their saying this surprised Tubbāc who would say, 'Our people, by God, are certainly generous!'"

Ibn Ishaq related about the ānṣār that Tubbāc's anger was directed only against the Jews and that they, the ānṣār, protected them from him. Al-Suhaylī stated that Tubbāc only came to give victory to the ānṣār, his cousins, against the Jews who had taken up residence with them in Medina on certain conditions that they had not kept, and because they were behaving arrogantly. God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq's account relates that while Tuhhāc was engaged in this fighting against them, two Jewish rabbis came to him; they were both deeply learned men from Banū Qurayṣa. When they heard how he intended to destroy the city and its inhabitants, they told him, "O king, do not do this. Unless you adopt a different course from that you intend, you will be prevented from accomplishing it, and we will not be able to save you from swift retribution." Tubbāc asked why this was so, and they replied, "This is where a prophet will migrate; he will go forth from this holy sanctuary from Quraysh in times to come and this shall be his home and his abode."

So Tubbāc changed his plan; he recognized the learning they had and was intrigued by what he had heard from them. He therefore departed from Medina and adopted the rabbis' religion. According to Ibn Ishaq, Tubbāc and his people had idols whom they worshipped.

Tubbāc then set off towards Mecca on his way to Yemen. When he arrived between Usfān and Amaj he was approached by some men of the tribe of Hudhayl b. Mudrika b. Ilyās b. Muḍar b. Nīzār b. Ma'ād b. 'Adnān. They asked him, "O king, may we lead you to an ancient treasury overlooked by kings before yourself, in which there are pearls, chrysolite, sapphires, gold, and silver?"

"Certainly you may," he replied. They said, "It is a building in Mecca whose people worship it and offer prayers there."
Actually the Hudhaylis sought to destroy him by this, since they knew that any king wanting this or being disrespectful there would perish.

After agreeing to their suggestion Tubba' sent word to the two rabbis asking their advice. They replied, "Those people wished only your death and the destruction of your army. We know of no other building than that in the land that God Almighty and Glorious has taken for Himself. If you do as they suggest, you will perish, as will all those with you."

Tubba' asked what he should do when he approached the building and they said he should do the same as those who lived there, that he should circumambulate it and venerate and honour it, shaving his head and acting with humility before it until he left it.

The king then asked, "What is it that prevents you both from doing the same?" They replied, "It certainly is the house of our father Abraham, on whom be peace, and it is as we told you, but the people there have created a barrier between us and it by the idols they have set up about it and the blood they shed there. They are unclean and polytheists." This was the gist of their words.

Tubba' saw the good of their advice and the truth of their words and so he summoned the men from Hudhayl, cut off their hands and feet, and continued to Mecca. There he performed the circumambulation of the building, made sacrifice, and shaved his head. He remained in Mecca for six days, so they say, providing sacrificial feasts for its people and giving them honey to drink. In a dream he was shown that he should cover the building, so he clothed it with palm fronds. Then, in another dream, he was shown that he should clothe it in something better, so he dressed it with a Yemeni tribal fabric. Again he had a vision that he should clothe it even better, so he covered it with fine sheets and striped cloth. People claim that Tubba' was thus the first to clothe the building. He ordered its guardians from the Jurhum tribe to clean it thoroughly and to prevent any blood, dead bodies, or menstruating women from coming close to it. He also made for it a door and a key.

On this subject Subay'a, daughter of al-Ahabb, spoke the following verses for her son Khalid b. 'Abd Manaf b. Ka'b b. Sa'd b. Taym b. Murra b. Ka'b b. Lu'ayy b. Ghalib, telling him to avoid sinning in Mecca and reminding him what Tubba' had done there:

"O my son, in Mecca neither do wrong to the young nor to the old. Preserve its sanctity, my son, and let not conceit confuse you. Whoever sins in Mecca, my son, meets extreme disaster. His face, my son, shall be beaten, his cheeks consumed by fire. I have tested this there, my son, and found those harming it perish. God made it secure, though no towers are built in its courtyards. God made its birds inviolate and also the white-footed crows on Mt. Thabir. Tubba' raided it, but dressed its buildings with new, smooth cloth.
My God humbled his power there, so he made proper sacrifice, Walking barefoot towards it, in its courtyard,
And offering two thousand camels,
Well-feeding its people the flesh of Mahry camels and cattle,
Giving them strained honey and barley-water to drink.
And God destroyed the army of the elephants, casting rocks amongst them, Ending their rule in far distant lands, in Persia and Khazir.
So hear when this is told, and understand how things ended.”

Ibn Ishāq continued: “Thereafter Tubbaʿ left for Yemen, taking his armed men and the two rabbis with him. On his arrival he asked his people to adopt the religion he had embraced, but they refused until it should be put to the test of fire as was the custom in Yemen.”

He went on: “I was told by Abū Malik b. Thaʿlabab. Abū Malik al-Quraṣṭhat he heard Ibrahim b. Muhammad b. Talḥa b. Ubayd Allah say that when Tubbaʿ reached the outskirts of Yemen, Himyar intercepted him and denied him entry. They told him, ‘You shall not enter our land; you have abandoned our faith.’ So Tubbaʿ called on them to embrace his new religion, proclaiming it to be better than theirs. They asked whether he would agree to put the issue between them to the test of the fire, and he agreed.”

He continued: “There was in Yemen, as Yemenis assert, a fire they would employ to adjudicate differences; it would consume wrongdoers but not harm the innocent. And so Tubbaʿ’s people and the two rabbis walked to the fire site. His people took their idols and carried their sacrificial offerings, while the rabbis wore their sacred books around their necks. They all sat near the spot from which the fire would emerge. When it raged towards them they drew away and avoided it. The onlookers berated them and ordered them to endure it, and they did so until it enveloped them and consumed their idols and sacred objects and those men of Himyar who carried them. But the two rabbis emerged safe, with their holy books around their necks, unharmed though their foreheads were sweating. Thereupon the Himyarites adopted their religion; and this was how Judaism began in Yemen.”

Ibn Ishāq continued to report that one authority told him that the two rabbis and the men of Himyar approached the fire only seeking to force it back, for it was said that truth lay with him who could do this. The Himyarites approached the fire bearing their idols to force it back, but it closed on them seeking to consume them. So they drew away and were not able to force it back. Later the two rabbis approached it and began reciting the Torah. The fire withdrew from them and so they forced it back to where it emerged. Thereupon the Himyarites adopted their religion. But God knows best which report is true.

Ibn Ishāq went on: “They had a temple called Rām which they venerated and where they made sacrifice; there they received oracular messages while engaged in their polytheistic practices. The two rabbis told Tubbaʿ, ‘It is just a devil who is deceiving the people that way; let us deal with him.’ Tubbaʿ agreed and the rabbis, so the Yemenis say, forced out from it a black dog which they killed. Then they destroyed that temple; and its ruins — so I have been told — still to this day bear traces of the blood shed on it.”

In our new Tafsir (Exegesis) of the Qurʾān we have told of the tradition coming from the Prophet (SAAS) wherein he said, “Do not curse Tubbaʿ; he had become a Muslim.”

Al-Suhayli stated that Muʿammar related from Humām b. Munabbih from Abū Hurayra that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “Do not curse Asʿad the Himyarite; it was he who first clothed the kaʿba.” According to al-Suhayli, Tubbaʿ spoke the following verses when the two rabbis told him about the Messenger of God (SAAS):

> “I do testify that Ahmad is a messenger from God, guiltless his soul,
> If only my life were extended up to his, I would have been a helper, a cousin to him,
> I would have fought his enemies with the sword and cleared all cares from his breast.”

These verses continued to be handed down and memorised among the ansār; they were with Abū Ayyūb al-ansārī, may God be pleased with him and bless him. Al-Suhayli stated that Ibn Abī al-Dunyā indicated in his Kitāb al-Qubūr (Book of Graves) that a grave was dug up at Ṣanʿā in which two females were found and along with them a silver tablet on which was written in gold, “This is the grave of Lamis and Ḥubba, two daughters of Tubbaʿ, who died declaring, ‘There is no God but God alone and without peer,’ and before them the righteous had died saying the same.”

Later, rule passed to Hassān b. Tubbān Asʿad, and he was the brother of al-Yamāma al-Zarqāʾ who was crucified on the gate of the city of Jaw, which from that day on was named al-Yamāma.

Ibn Ishaq continued that when Tubbaʿ’s son Hassān b. Abī Karib Tubbān Asʿad became king, he set out with the people of Yemen, wishing to subdue the lands of the Arabs and the Persians. But by the time they were somewhere in Iraq, the Himyarites and the Yemenites disliked going further with him and wanted to return to their own countries and families. So they spoke to a brother of Hassān named ʿAmr, who was there with him in the army, as follows: “Kill your brother Hassān and we will make you king over us and you can take us back home.” He said he would, and there was agreement about this except in the case of Dhu Ruʿayn the Himyarite. He urged ʿAmr against this, but ʿAmr disagreed. So Dhu Ruʿayn composed a poem containing the following two verses:
“Whoever would exchange insomnia for sleep? Happy he who sleeps in peace. Though Ḥimyar has betrayed in treachery, Dhū Ruʿāyn has God’s forgiveness.”

This poem he then entrusted to ʿAmr. When the latter did kill his brother Ḥassān and returned to Yemen, he was deprived of sleep and suffered insomnia. When he asked physicians, astrologists, soothsayers, and diviners what was wrong, they told him, “No one has ever killed his brother or relative unjustly without losing his sleep and suffering insomnia.” Thereupon he set about killing all those who had encouraged him to murder his brother. Finally, he came to Dhū Ruʿāyn who told him, “I have cause for you to spare me.” When ʿAmr asked why, he drew attention to the document he had entrusted to him. ʿAmr then took out the verses, read them and realized that Dhū Ruʿāyn had advised him well. ʿAmr perished and Ḥimyar’s state fell into disorder and disarray.

USURPATION OF THE THRONE OF YEMEN BY LAKHNIʿA DHŪ SHANĀTĪR.

He ruled there for 27 years.

Ibn Iṣḥāq continued that a Ḥimyarite not of the royal lines then took control of Yemen, a man called Lakhniʿa Yantūf Dhū Shanātīr. He murdered the most prominent Yemenites and abused the country’s royal families. He was, moreover, a most depraved man, behaving as had the people of Lot. He would send for a royal prince and attack him in an upper chamber he had constructed for that purpose; this was to prevent the prince from ruling after him. Eventually he would look down from his high chamber to his guards and soldiers below and place a tooth-cleaning stick in his mouth to show them that he had finished with the prince.

One day he sent for Zurʿa Dḥū Nuwaṣ b. Tubbān Asʿād, the brother of Ḥassān, who had been a small boy when Ḥassān was murdered. He had grown up to be a fine, intelligent, and handsome young man. When a messenger came to fetch him he realized what was in store for him, so he hid a thin metal blade between his foot and sandal. When they were alone and Lakhniʿa attacked him, Dḥū Nuwaṣ fought back and stabbed and killed him. Then he cut off his head and placed it in the window out of which Lakhniʿa had looked below. Having placed a tooth-cleaning stick in his mouth he then went outside. The guards called to him, “Hey there, Dḥū Nuwaṣ, fresh and moist, or all dried out?” He told them in reply to ask the head of “Hell-bent” there in the window, and they saw that Lakhniʿa’s head had been cut off. They then caught up with Dḥū Nuwaṣ and implored him to be their king now that he had spared them from the evil tyrant.

So they made him king, and Ḥimyar and the tribes of Yemen united under him. He was the last of the kings of Ḥimyar. He took the name Yūsuf and ruled for an extended period.
In Najrān there were still some remnants of followers of the religion of Jesus, son of Mary, on whom be peace. They were people of goodness and virtue and their leader’s name was ʿAbd Allah b. al-Thāmir.

Ibn ʿIshaq then related how the people of Najrān adopted Christianity due to the influence of a man named Faymiyūn, a Christian from Syria. He was a man whose prayers were answered and was accompanied by a man named Ṣāliḥ. They spent each Sunday in prayer, while Faymiyūn worked the rest of the week as a builder. He said prayers for the sick, the crippled, and the disabled, and their ills would be cured. Eventually he and his friend were taken prisoner by bedouins and were sold in Najrān. The man who bought Faymiyūn was astonished to see that when he began his prayers in the house at night it would fill with light.

The people of Najrān worshipped a tall palm tree, bowing down before it and festooning it with their wives’ jewellery. Faymiyūn said to his master, “If I were to say a prayer to God against this tree and it were destroyed, would you recognize that your religion is false?” His master agreed that he would, and gathered all the people from Najrān together. Faymiyūn then went into his prayer-room and asked God to destroy the tree. So God sent a storm that tore it up by the roots and threw it flat on the ground. Thereupon the people of Najrān adopted Christianity and he encouraged them to follow the Gospel until they were overtaken by the same events that affected the Christians all over the world.

That was how Christianity came to Najrān in the Arab lands.

Then Ibn ʿIshaq related the story of ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Thāmir when he adopted Christianity at the hands of Faymiyūn and how Dhū Nuwās killed him and his companions and dug the ukhdūd, the trench, for them. According to Ibn Hishām that ukhdūd was a long trench in the ground like a ditch. Dhū Nuwās kindled fires in it and burned these people with them; he also killed many others, to the total of almost 20,000, as is examined at length in the study of sūrat al-Burāj (LXXXV) in our Tafrīr (Exegesis) of the Qurān. And all praise be to God!

An Account of how rule in Yemen passed from Himyar and was transferred to the black Abyssinians.

The aforementioned events support the predictions of the two soothsayers, Shiqq and Sāṭḥ. Only one of the people of Najrān survived; his name was Daws Dhū Thaʿlabān and he escaped on his horse in the desert and could not be caught. He continued travelling until he reached Caesar, the emperor of Byzantium. Since the emperor was also a Christian, as he was, he told him what Dhū Nuwās and his troops had done and asked his aid. The emperor replied that Daws’ land was very far, but that he would write a message to the king of Abyssinia who was also of the same religion and whose country was closer at hand. The emperor then wrote such a message asking him to provide help and to seek revenge for Daws.

So Daws took Caesar’s letter to the Negus who dispatched 70,000 troops from Abyssinia under the leadership of one of his officers named Aryāt, along with another named Abraha al-Ashram. Aryāt crossed over the sea and reached the shores of Yemen, accompanied by Daws. Dhū Nuwās came out to meet him with his forces made up from Himyar and the Yemeni tribes under his control. When they engaged, Dhū Nuwās and his men were defeated. When he realized that disaster had befallen himself and his people, Dhū Nuwās turned his horse to the sea and beat it until it entered the water and took him through the shallows and out to the depths of the sea where he perished. Aryāt entered Yemen and took control there. At this point Ibn Ishāq records several poems by the Arabs detailing these strange events. These poems are in fine, eloquent, vivid, and elegant language, but we omit them here to avoid boring or wearying the reader. And God is our helper.

An Account of how Abraha al-Ashram rebelled against, fought, and killed Aryāt, and so assumed power over Yemen.

Ibn Ishāq stated: “Aryāt remained in control over Yemen for some years but eventually Abraha challenged him and the Abyssinian forces split into two sides. One side moved to attack the other, but when the armies approached for battle, Abraha sent a message to Aryāt suggesting that he was wrong to pit the Abyssinians against one another to the ultimate damage of all, and that they should meet alone in battle, all forces then combining under the authority of the one victorious. To this Aryāt responded with agreement.

“Abraha, a short, stocky man and a devout Christian, then went out to fight Aryāt who was tall, handsome, powerfully built, and bore a javelin. Behind Abraha was a slave named ʿAtwada protecting his rear. Aryāt struck out, aiming at the top of Abraha’s head, but his javelin hit him on the forehead and slit his eyebrow, eye, nose, and lip; that was why he was known as al-Ashram, i.e. the cleft-face. Then ʿAtwada advanced from behind Abraha and attacked and killed Aryāt. The forces of Aryāt went over to Abraha and all Abyssinians in Yemen united under him. Abraha then paid over the blood price for Aryāt’s death.

“When this news reached the Negus, who had dispatched them both to Yemen, he was furious at Abraha, for he had attacked and killed his commander without orders from himself. Then the Negus swore an oath that he would give

10. The title given to the ruler of Abyssinia (now Ethiopia).
Abraha no respite until he had trodden his land and cut off his locks. So Abraha shaved his head and filled a leather bag with Yemeni soil which he sent to the Negus with a message saying, ‘O king, Aryāt was merely your slave as I am. We differed about your command; everyone owes you obedience. But I was stronger, more effective, and more skilful than he was in managing Abyssinian affairs. I shaved my head completely when I heard of the king’s oath and have sent to him a bag of my country’s soil so that he may tread it underfoot and so keep his oath.’ This message pleased the Negus when he received it, and he sent him a message that Abraha should remain in Yemen until further orders. And so it was that Abraha did remain in Yemen.”

An Account of why Abraha attacked Mecca with elephants to put the ka'ba to waste and how God quickly destroyed him.

As God Almighty stated in the Qur'ān, “Have you not seen how God dealt with those who had elephants? Did he not defeat their scheme, sending flocks of birds which cast upon them stones of baked clay, rendering them like digested chaff?” (sūrat al-Fil, CV, v.1–5).

It was said, according to al-Ṭabari, that the first person to tame an elephant was Iffīdūn b. Ṭāhfiyān, who killed al-Daḥḥāk. It was also he who first saddled horses. The first person to domesticate and ride a horse, though, was Fāṭhamūrath, who was the third of the world’s kings. It was also said that Ishmael, son of Abraham, upon both of whom be peace, was the first to ride a horse, and it is likely that he was the first Arab to ride. But God knows best.

Some say that, in spite of their size, elephants are scared of cats. Some army commanders brought cats into the pitch of battle when fighting the Indians, and so the elephants ran away.

Ibn Ishaq continued: “Later Abraha built al-Qullays church in Ṣan‘ā‘, the like of which had never at that time been seen on earth before. He wrote to the Negus saying, ‘I built a church for you the like of which was never built for any king before you, and I will not cease striving until I divert to it the Arabs’ pilgrimage.’”

Al-Suḥayli stated that Abraha sought to humiliate the people of Yemen by building this ugly church, humbling them in a variety of ways. He invariably amputated the hand of any labourer who arrived for work after dawn. He began to transfer to it, from the Balqis palace, marble, stone, and splendid furnishings. In it he erected crosses of gold and silver and pulpits made of ivory and ebony. Al-Qullays was built very tall indeed and its spaciousness was amazing. When eventually Abraha died and the Abyssinians dispersed, spirits would inflict evil on anyone daring to take any of its building materials or furnishings. This was because the building was undertaken in the name of two idols, Ku'ayb and his wife. The height of each of these was 60 cubits. Consequently the Yemenis left the church alone. It remained just as it had been up till the time of al-Saffah, the first of the 'Abbasid caliphs. He sent there a group of men of determination, judgement, and knowledge who demolished it stone by stone; and today its remains are completely effaced.

Ibn Ishāq continued: "When the Arabs learned of and talked about Abraha's message to the Negus, a certain intercalator of the Kināna tribe became enraged; the intercalators were the ones who would postpone a sacred month in Mecca, during which warfare would have been forbidden, when they wanted to make war. This is referred to in the Qurʾān: 'The practice of postponing (the sacred month) is merely further disbelief' (ṣūrat al-Bārāʾ, IX, v.37).

Ibn Ishāq went on: "This Kinanite then travelled to the al-Qullays church and squatted down there, that is he defecated without anyone seeing, then left and returned home. When Abraha was informed of this he demanded to know who had done such a thing. He was told: 'It was one of the people of that bayt (building) in Mecca to which the Arabs made pilgrimage. When he heard of what you said of your intention to change the Arabs' pilgrimage to this church of yours, he became angry and so defiled it, thereby indicating that it was unworthy of being a place of pilgrimage.'

"Abraha was enraged at this and he swore that he would go to the ka'ba and destroy it. And so he ordered his Abyssinian troops to equip themselves and make ready, and then he set forth with his elephant. The Arabs were highly anxious and alarmed when they heard of this and considered it their duty to do battle with him, when they learned he wanted to destroy the ka'ba, God's sacred edifice. A member of the Yemeni nobility named Dhū Nafr summoned his people and those Arabs who would support him to do battle with Abraha and prevent his destruction of the ka'ba. Some did respond and they engaged in battle. Dhū Nafr and his supporters were vanquished and he himself was taken prisoner and brought before Abraha. When about to be killed, Dhū Nafr suggested to Abraha that he might well be more useful to him alive than dead. So Abraha kept him prisoner, in chains; he was a clement person.

"Abraha continued ahead to meet further adversaries and in the area of Khath'am came up against Nufayl b. Ḥabīb al-Khath'ami with his two allied tribes of Shahrān and Nāhis, along with other Arab supporting tribes. They did battle, Abraha won, and took Nufayl prisoner. When Abraha was about to execute him, Nufayl pleaded for his life and offered to be his guide in the Arab territory, guaranteeing that the tribes under him would be obedient to Abraha. So Abraha kept him prisoner, in chains; he was a clement person.

"Reaching Ṭaʾīf, Abraha was met by Masʿūd b. Muʿāṭṭib b. Ṭalib b. ʿAmr b. Saʿd b. ʿAwf b. Thaqif along with the warriors of Thaqif. They addressed Abraha, saying, 'O king, we are your slaves, fully obedient to you; we have no dispute with you and this temple of ours is not the one you want.' By this they meant the temple devoted to the goddess al-Lat. 'What you want is the building in Mecca; we will send guides to take you there.' So Abraha passed them by unmolested.

Ibn Ishāq went on, "The temple of al-Lat was one they had there in al-Ṭāʾif that they venerated almost as was the kaʾba.

"So Thaqīf sent with Abraha Abū Righāl as guide to Mecca. They travelled as far as al-Mughammis where they made a stop. It was there that Abū Righāl died and thereafter the Arabs stoned his grave; his grave is the one at al-Mughammis that people still stone. In the story of Thamūd, Abū Righāl was one of their men who would seek refuge at the sanctuary but was struck and killed by a stone as he left it. Once the Messenger of God (SAAS) said to his Companions, 'And the proof is that he was buried with two branches of gold.' When his grave was disinterred, they did find them. He was said to be known as Abū Thaqīf."

The connection between this and Ibn Ishāq's account is that the name of this latter Abū Righāl was the same as that of his ancestor and that the people stoned his grave just as they did that of the former. But God knows best. Jarir spoke the verse: "When al-Farazdaq dies, then may people stone his grave like they stoned Abū Righāl's."11

It seems evident that he was the second.

Ibn Ishāq continued: "When Abraha made a halt at al-Mughammis he sent on ahead to Mecca one of his Abyssinian men named al-Aswād b. Maqṣūd with some cavalry. He brought to him the possessions of the people of Tiḥāma, from Quraysh and others; this included 200 camels belonging to ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib b. Ḥāshim who was at that time the leader and elder of Quraysh. As a result, Quraysh, Kināna, and Hudhayl, and all those venerating the kaʾba decided to do battle with Abraha but abandoned this idea when they learned they had insufficient power to match him."

Abraha then sent Ḥūnāṭa the Ḥimyarite to Mecca with the following order: "Find the leader and the most noble of these people. Then tell him that the king says, 'I have not come to war upon you, but only to destroy that building (the kaʾba). If you do not engage in warfare to prevent our access to it, then I shall have no need for your blood.' If he does not want war, bring him to me with you."

When Ḥūnāṭa entered Mecca he asked after the leader of Quraysh. He was directed to ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib b. Ḥāshim and so passed on Abraha's message to him. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib replied, "By God, we do not want war with him and have not the power for it; this house is God's sacred house and that of His true follower Abraham, upon whom be peace." He was saying in effect, "If God does 11. Jarir and al-Farazdaq, who lived during the seventh to eighth centuries AD, are remembered chiefly for their satiric verses aimed at one another.

protect it from Abraha, then it is because it is His holy sanctuary and His house. If he abandons it to him, then, by God, there's no way for us to defend it."

 Hunāṭa then told ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib that he must accompany him to Abraha in accord with his orders.

 So ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib set off along with some of his sons. Arriving at Abraha’s encampment, he asked to see Dhū Nafr, who was a friend of his. When he met Dhū Nafr, still in confinement, he asked him whether he had any solution to their predicament. Dhū Nafr replied, “How can a man have a solution when he is a king’s prisoner and is expecting to be killed at any time? I have no advice to give you, except to say that Unays, the elephant keeper, is a friend of mine. I will send him a message strongly commending you and ask him to seek permission for you to address the king. Speak to him as you see fit, and Unays will intercede on your behalf as well as he can.”

 ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib agreed and Dhū Nafr sent Unays the following message: “ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib is lord of Quraysh and custodian of the well of Mecca; he feeds both men in the plains and wild animals on the mountains. The king seized 200 of his camels. So seek permission for him to see the king and intercede for him as best you can.” Unays responded that he would.

 Unays then spoke to Abraha, saying, “O king, here at your door seeking audience is the lord of Quraysh and keeper of the well of Mecca; he feeds both men in the plains and the wild beasts in the mountains. Allow him in to see you to discuss a matter with you.” Abraha let him in.

 ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib was the most dignified, handsome, and impressive of men. When Abraha saw him, he wanted to honour him by not making him sit below himself. But he did not want the Abyssinians to see him sitting next to himself on the throne. So Abraha descended, sat down on a carpet, and had ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib take his place beside him. He then told his interpreter to ask why he had come and he did so. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib replied, “What I want is for the king to return the 200 camels he took from me as compensation.”

 Hearing this, the king told his translator to reply as follows: “You impressed me when I saw you, but you displeased me when you spoke. You want to talk to me about 200 camels I took from you in compensation, but not about the building which is your religion and your ancestors’ religion that I have come to destroy?”

 ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib replied, “I am the owner of the camels; the building has its own master who will protect it.”

 Abraha replied, “He won’t protect it from me.”

 “Then it’s between you and Him,” ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib said.

 And so Abraha returned his camels to ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib.

 12. The reference is to zamzam, the holy well in Mecca.

These men offered Abraha one-third of the produce of Tihmā if he would withdraw and not destroy the building. But Abraha refused their offer. And God alone knows whether or not that happened.

When they left Abraha, 'Abd al-Mu<r;llib went to report to Quraysh and told them to retreat from Mecca to defensive positions in the mountains. Then 'Abd al-Mudib took hold of the metal door knocker of the kā‘ba and stood there with a group of men from Quraysh praying to God and asking His help against Abraha and his troops. As he stood holding the kā‘ba door knocker, ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib recited the verses:

“O God, Your worshippers protect their homes, so protect Your building,
Let not their cross and their power vanquish Yours tomorrow
If You should leave them free with our qibla,13 then that is what You will.”

Ibn Hishām said that these were what he found to be the authentic verses of this poem.

Ibn Ishāq reported that ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib then released the kā‘ba door-knocker and went off, along with his men of Quraysh, to the mountain peaks, taking up defensive positions and waiting for whatever Abraha might do.

Next morning Abraha prepared to enter Mecca, readying his elephant and equipping his troops. The elephant’s name was Mahmūd. When they directed the elephant towards Mecca, Nufayl b. Ḥabib came close to it, took its ear and told it, “Kneel down, then go back to where you came from. Here you are in God’s holy land.” Then he released the elephant’s ear and it knelt.

According to al-Suhaylī this means that the elephant fell to the ground, since it is not in the nature of elephants to kneel; although it has been said that some elephants do kneel like camels. God knows best.

Nufayl b. Ḥabib hurried off into the mountains. Abraha’s troops beat the elephant to make it stand up, struck its head with axes, and stuck hooks into its hide until it bled. But it refused to stand. Then they turned it to face towards Yemen, and it got up and moved in a hurry. When they directed it towards Syria and then towards the east it did the same. But when they turned it towards Mecca it knelt again.

Then God sent against them birds from the sea like swifts and crows, each one of which carried three stones, one in its beak and one in each claw. The stones were like chickpeas and lentils. Every soldier hit died, but not all were struck.

13. The qibla is the direction, usually indicated by a decorated niche in the wall of a mosque, to which Muslims turn in prayer, towards the kā‘ba, that is.
So they retreated in haste along the road by which they had come, calling out for Nufayl b. Ḥabib to lead them on the way back to Yemen. About this situation Nufayl spoke these verses:

"Greetings to you from us, O Rudayna. How much we have gladdened our eyes this morning! Rudayna, had but you seen, but may you see not, what we saw at Mt. Muḥassab. Then you would have forgiven and praised me, and not felt ill will at what passed between us.

I praised God to see the birds, and feared that a stone be cast upon me. While all called out for Nufayl, as though I owed the Abyssinians some debt."

Ibn Ishaq continued, "So down they scrambled by any path, dying randomly where they went. Abraha was struck on his body and they carried him away as his fingers dropped off one by one. As they fell pus and blood emerged. When they got him to Ṣanʿa he was like a baby bird. He finally died when his heart burst from his chest. Or so they say."

Ibn Ishaq went on to relate that Yaʿqūb b. Utba told him that it was reported that measles and smallpox were seen for the first time in Arab lands that year. Also that that was the first year bitter plants were observed there: the African rue, the colocynth, and the Asclepias gigantea.

Ibn Ishaq commented that when God sent Muhammad (ṢAAS) one of the actions he enumerated as God’s grace and bounties upon Quraysh was His having repelled the Abyssinians and saved Quraysh for posterity. And so God spoke in the Qur’an, “Have you not seen how God dealt with those who had elephants? Did he not defeat their scheme, sending flocks of birds which cast upon them hard stones of baked clay, rendering them like digested chaff?” (sūrat al-Fil, CV, v.1–5).

At this point both Ibn Ishaq and Ibn Hishām go into interpretations of this chapter and the one that follows it. I have dealt with this in my Tafsir (Exegesis) in all sufficiency, God be willing, and to Him is due all praise and credit.

Ibn Hishām stated that the word al-ʿabābil, flocks, means groups; the Arabs used no singular form for this noun that we know. He also stated that regarding the word al-stijjil, i.e. “hard”, Yūnūs the grammarian and Abū Ubayda told him that the Arabs used it to mean “very solid”. Some commentators claim that the latter is really two Persian words made into one by the Arabs, they being sanj and jill. The first of these means “stone”, the second “clay”, so the combination word would indicate something made of both of these. The word ʿaṣaf in the Qurʾān passage quoted above means vegetation foliage that has not been chewed. Al-Kisāʾi said that he had heard from a grammarian that the singular of the word al-ʿabābil is ʿibbīl.

Many early authorities interpreted this word al-\textit{ab\textbar}bil to mean birds that follow one another hither and thither in groups.

According to Ibn ʿAbbās they had beaks like those of birds but paws like those of dogs.

Ikrima said that their heads were like those of lions which emerged at them from the sea and that these were green.

Ubayd b. ʿUmayr said that they were black sea-birds bearing stones in their beaks and claws.

According to Ibn ʿAbbās they were similar in form to the griffins of North Africa. He also maintained that the smallest stones they had were like human heads, some as big as camels. That is what Yūnus b. Bukayr said on the authority of Ibn Ṣāḥib. It is also said they were small – but God knows best.

Ibn Abī Ḥātim said that he was told, by Ābu Zūrā, Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Ābu Shāyba, and Ābu Muʿāwiyah, from al-ʿAṣmāṣ, Abū Sufyān, and Ubayd b. ʿUmayr, that when God wished to destroy those with the elephant He sent upon them birds like swifts that were raised up from the sea. Each bird carried three stones, two in its claws and one in its beak. He said the birds came, lined up over their heads, screeched, and dropped what was in their claws and beaks. Each stone that fell on a man’s head exited through his behind and each stone that fell on one side of a man exited from the other. God also sent a fierce gale which struck the stones and increased their velocity. And so they were all killed.

But, as Ibn Ṣāḥib has stated above, not all were struck by the stones. Some did return to Yemen to tell their people of the disaster that befell them. And it was also said that Abrahā, God curse him, went back, his fingers dropping off one by one, and that when he reached Yemen his chest burst open and he died.

Ibn Ṣāḥib related that ʿAbd Allāh b. Ābu Bakr told him, on the authority of Āmra, that ʿAṭiṣha\textsuperscript{15} said, “I saw the elephant’s keeper and guide in Mecca, both blind and crippled, begging for food.” As mentioned above, the keeper’s name was Unays, though no name was given for its guide. But God knows best.

Al-Naqqāṣ stated in his Qurān exegesis that a torrent bore away their bodies into the sea. Al-Suhaylī said that the events of the elephant occurred on the first day of Muharrām, year 886 of the era of Dhu al-Qarnayn (Alexander the Great).

And I add that it was the same year that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was born, as is generally known. It is also said, however, that these events preceded his birth by some years, as we will report, God willing, and in Him we trust.

Here Ibn Ṣāḥib mentions the poetry recited by the Arabs on this great occasion on which God rendered His sacred house victorious, wishing it to be honoured, respected, purified, and dignified through the mission of Muḥammad (ṢAAS) and through the true religion He legislated to him. One of the elements of this religion, indeed one of its pillars, is prayer, the direction of which would be towards this sanctified ka'ba. What God did then to the elephant's army was not a victory for Quraysh over the Abyssinian Christians; the Abyssinians were at that time closer to it (i.e. to victory from God) than the polytheist Quraysh. The victory belonged to the sacred house and served to set the foundation and pave the way for the mission of Muhammad (SAAS).

Included in this poetry are the verses of 'Abd Allāh b. al-Zibā'ra al-Sahmi:

“They fled in terror from Mecca's interior, its sanctuary undisturbed for ages past; Sirius had created no nights inviolate since not even one of the mightiest of men could ever aspire to attack it.

Ask the Abyssinian prince what he saw of it; he who has knowledge of it shall inform the ignorant.

Sixty thousand men did not return to their land, even their sick did not live after their homecoming.

‘Ād and Jurhum were there before them, but God held it high above all men.”

Abū Qays b. al-Aslat al-ansāri al-Madani also spoke verses on the subject:

“God's work it was the day of the Abyssinians' elephant; many times did they urge it on, but it didn't budge;
Their hooks were under its sides and they slashed its trunk until it tore.
They used a knife instead of a whip; when they aimed it at its back it was badly wounded.
So it turned and ran away, and those there did fail for their evil.
God sent a gale down upon them, overwhelming them as if they were dwarves.
Their priests urged fortitude but they screamed like bleating sheep.”

Abū al-Šalt Rabī'a b. Abū Rabī'a Wahīb b. ‘Allāj al-Thaqafi spoke the following verses, though Ibn Hishām attributed them to Umayyya b. Abū al-Šalt:

“Our Lord's signs are manifestly clear, only disbelievers doubting them.
He created night and day and all clear, its reckoning determined.
Then a merciful Lord makes clear the day with a sun of spreading rays.
He kept the elephant at al-Mughammis until it crawled as though hamstrung.
Kneeling down like a camel, and still, as if it were carved out of a rock from the mountain.
Around it heroes from among the kings of Kinda, eagle-like lords in wars.
They left it, then all fled in fright, each with a broken leg.
All religions except Abraham's al-Hanifa are null in God's sight on Judgement Day.”

Abū Qays b. al-Aslat said also:

“Arise and pray to your God, cleansing yourself at the pillars of His house between the rugged mountains.
From it you had a certain calamity on the day of Abū Yaksūm [Abraha, tr.], leader of the phalanxes:
His elite walks on the plain, his troops on their camels at the mountain heights. When you received victory from the Owner of the Throne, hosts of angels repelled them, casting soil and stones. Quickly they turned in flight; and of the Abyssinians all who returned were injured.”

Also among such verses is the one of ‘Ubayd Allah b. Qays al-Ruqayyāt extolling the greatness of the ka‘ba and its protection through the destruction of those wishing it harm:

“Split-face (Abraha) attacked it, coming with his elephant, but his army turned back, defeated. Birds rained stones down upon them until he was like a man being stoned. Whoever attacks that place returns with his armies defeated, humiliated.”

Ibn Ishāq and others related that upon the demise of Abraha, his son Yaksūm assumed power, followed by the latter’s brother Masrūq b. Abraha. He was the last of their kings and it was from him that Sayf b. Dhū Yazan of Ḥimyar wrested the kingship with the aid of troops he brought from Chosroe Anūshirwan, as we shall relate. The events with the elephant occurred in the month of Muharram, in the year 886 in the era of Dhū al-Qarnayn, Alexander son of Phillip, the Macedonian, after whom the Greeks count their calendar.

Abraha and his two sons having died and Abyssinian rule over Yemen having ended, al-Qullays, the temple Abraha had built, in his ignorance and stupidity, as a substitute for the Arab pilgrimage, was abandoned and left unattended. He had constructed over it two wooden idols, Ku‘ayb and his wife, each one 60 cubits high. These idols were invested by spirits, and consequently anyone chancing to take anything from the temple building or its furnishings would come to harm. This continued to be the case until the time of al-Saffah, the first of the ‘Abbāsid caliphs. When he was told about it and all its marble and furnishings that Abraha had brought from the Balqis castle in Yemen, he sent people to disassemble it stone by stone and to take away all its contents. That is how al-Suhayli related it; God knows best.

An Account of the reversion of the kingship from the Abyssinians to Sayf b. Dhū Yazan the Ḥimyarite, just as the two soothsayers had predicted to Rabi‘a b. Naṣr, the Lakhmite.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq, God have mercy on him, said that when Abraha died, his son Yaksūm b. Abraha became king over the Abyssinians. Abraha’s agnomen was Abū Yaksūm, i.e. the father of Yaksūm. Then, when Yaksūm died his brother Masrūq b. Abraha became the Abyssinian king over Yemen.

He made his way to the Byzantine emperor and complained to him of the state of affairs in Yemen, asking him to oust the Abyssinians and appoint him governor there. He suggested the emperor send from Byzantium whatever troops he thought necessary for this purpose and so himself would become king of Yemen. The emperor declined.

So Sayf went to al-Nu‘mān b. al-Mundhir, who was Chosroe’s vice-regent over al-Ḥira and the neighbouring territories in Iraq, and complained to him about the Abyssinians. Al-Nu‘mān responded that every year he sent an official delegation to Chosroe, and invited Sayf to stay with him until then. Sayf agreed.

Sayf later did accompany al-Nu‘mān, who took him in to see Chosroe, seated in the chamber where his crown was kept. His crown was like a large grain bucket and was, so they say, set with rubies, chrysolites, pearls, gold, and silver, suspended by a gold chain from the dome of his audience chamber. His neck did not bear the crown; he was kept hidden by a cloth until he sat down there. Then he would put his head into his crown. When he was thus positioned on his throne, the cloth would be removed. All who saw him for the first time would kneel down in awe of him.

When Sayf entered he bowed his head down low, and the king commented, “It is really stupid to come in through such a tall doorway and bow one’s head down so low!”

When this remark was transmitted to Sayf, he responded that he had only done this out of his preoccupying distress that overwhelmed all else. He then went on to say, “O king, crows have taken charge of our country!”

“What crows?” Chosroe asked, “the ones from Abyssinia or from Sind?”

“From Abyssinia. I’ve come to ask your help; and you shall have kingship over all our land.”

Chosroe replied, “Your country is far away, and its riches meagre. I’m not going to embroil an army from Persia in Arabia. I don’t need that.”

He then presented Sayf with 10,000 pure-minted dirhams and a robe of honour. Having received these, Sayf went outside and began distributing the money to people. When the emperor heard of this he wondered why, and so sent for him and asked him why he was throwing away a king’s gift to people.

Sayf replied, “What else am I to do with your gift? Are not the mountains of my country made of gold and silver?”
He said this to arouse Chosroe's interest. So Chosroe then assembled his advisers and asked their counsel about Sayf and his mission. They reminded him of the presence in his gaols of prisoners he had condemned to death and suggested he send them with Sayf. For if they were killed that was what Chosroe had intended for them anyway, and if they triumphed his own domain would be expanded.

Chosroe therefore sent off with Sayf eight hundred men from his prisons and placed them under the command of a man named Wahriz, an elder of the highest repute and ancestry. They set sail in eight ships, of which two sank; so six ships eventually arrived on the coast of Aden.

Sayf gathered together all his own men he could to help Wahriz, saying, "My leg is with yours till we all die or all triumph." Wahriz replied that that was fair.

Masrūq b. Abraha then came out with his troops to meet them in battle. Wahriz sent his own son out to do combat and test their mettle. Wahriz's son was slain; this increased the anger and hatred the father had for them.

When the enemy troops were positioned on the battlefield, Wahriz asked his men to indicate which was their king. They pointed to a man on an elephant with a crown and wearing a ruby between his eyes. He saw him and told them not to attack him.

For some time nothing was done. Then Wahriz asked what the Abyssinian leader was doing now. They told him he was now on a horse. Again Wahriz told them not to attack him, and for long they waited. Eventually Wahriz asked after the king and was told he was now on a mule. "So", Wahriz commented, "on an ass's filly, is he? He has humbled himself and his domain. I'll take a shot at him.

If you see his companions not moving, then stay still till I give you further orders, for I will have missed the man. But if you see his people crowding around him and not advancing, I shall have hit him. In that case, you advance at them."

With that he braced his bowstring; they say his bow was so stiff only he could brace it. He then had his eyebrows tied back and let the arrow fly. He split the ruby between the king's eyes and the arrow pierced right through his head and emerged from its back. He was knocked off his mount, and the Abyssinians milled around him in confusion. The Persians charged and the Abyssinians were defeated, being killed or fleeing in all directions.

Wahriz advanced to enter Šan‘ā. When he reached its gateway he insisted that his banner could never enter in a lowered position, and that they should therefore demolish the gate. This was done and he went inside with his banner held high. Sayf b. Dhu Yazan then said:

"People thought the two kingdoms had united. If some had really believed it, then the matter would be serious and grave. We killed the general Masrūq and spilt blood on the sandhills."
The new general, Wahriz, the people’s general, swore an oath
Not to drink wine before taking prisoners and booty.”

Arabs from Ḥijāz and elsewhere came in delegations to Sayf, praising him and congratulating him that the kingship had gone to him. Quraysh sent such a delegation and its number included ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib b. Hashim. Sayf gave him the glad tidings of the coming of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and informed him of what he knew about him. Details of this will be given hereafter in the chapter related to the predictions of his coming.

According to Ibn Iṣḥāq, Abū al-Ṣalt b. Rabi‘a al-Thaqafi spoke the following verses. However, Ibn Hishām attributed them to Umayya b. Abij al-Ṣalt.

“Let vengeance seekers be like Ibn Dhī Yazan, who took to the sea and for ages sought a way to his enemies, Going to Caesar when his journey seemed right, but finding there none of what he sought.
Then he turned after ten years to Chosroe, disregarding his life and the cost
Until he came bringing a band of free men; how quickly you sped!
What a fine group of men; I never saw their like before.
Persian braves, mighty warriors, archers, like lions raising their cubs in the forests,
Their bows shooting arrows like howdah poles, swiftly dispatching their enemies.
You sent lions against black dogs, their prey defeated and lost in the land
So drink up, enjoy your crown, and settle at the top of Ghumdān’s palace as your permanent home.
Those were fine deeds. They were not two pails of milk mixed with water and later turning to urine!”

It is said that Ghumdān mentioned here was a palace in Yemen built by Ya‘rub b. Qaḥṭān; it was owned after him by Wāʿila b. Himyar b. Saba’. It was reputed to be 20 storeys high. God knows best.

Ibn Iṣḥāq relates that ‘Adi b. Zayd al-Ḥīrī, of the Banū Tamīm, spoke these verses, “What after Ṣan‘ā‘? There lived governors of abundant gifts.

Its builders raised it high to the scattering clouds, its chambers musk-scented.
Guarded by the mountains against the enemy hordes, its heights unscalable.
The hooting of owls pleasingly answered at night by the flute players.
Fate led there the army of free men, their knights in procession,
Crossing the desert on mules bearing death, accompanied by their foals,
Until the princes saw them from the castle heights, their divisions armour-clad,
The day they shouted at the barbarians and al-Yakṣīm, ‘Damn all who flee!’
A day long remembered, when a prosperous way of life ended which had been secure,
A day when the one was replaced by the many, so times change, many the marvels,
After the Tubba‘ kings came noblemen whose satraps held quiet sway there.”
According to Ibn Hishām this is what Saṭīḥ meant when he said, “Iram Dhū Yazan will follow, emerging from Aden to fight them, and he will leave not one of them in Yemen.” This is also what Shiqq meant by saying, “a young man, guilt-free and faultless, who will emerge from the line of Dhū Yazan.”

Ibn Ishāq’s account states, “So Wahriz and the Persians stayed in Yemen. And the ābna' who live in Yemen today are descendants of these Persian troops.”

The rule of the Abyssinians in Yemen, lasting between Aryāt’s arrival and the death of Masmūq b. Abraha at the hands of the Persians and the removal of the Abyssinians, was 72 years. Their dominion was passed through four rulers, Aryāt, then Abraha, then Yaksūm b. Abraha, and finally Masrūq b. Abraha.

An Account of how Persian rule in Yemen ended.

Ibn Hishām’s account states that eventually Wahriz died and Chosroe appointed his son al-Marzubān b. Wahriz over Yemen; when he died, Chosroe appointed the latter’s son al-Taynujan. Later Chosroe exiled al-Taynujan from Yemen and appointed Bādhān to the rule; it was during his reign that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was appointed to his mission.

Ibn Hishām also relates that he was informed, on the authority of al-Zuhri, that the latter said that Chosroe wrote the following to Bādhān, “I am told that a man from Quraysh has appeared in Mecca claiming to be a prophet. Travel to him and seek his repentance. If he repents, well and good. If he does not, send me his head!”

Bādhān sent Chosroe’s message to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who replied, “God has promised me that Chosroe will be killed on such and such a day and month.” When this response was brought to Bādhān he came to a halt and waited, saying, “If indeed he be a Prophet, it will occur as he said.” And God did kill Chosroe on the day foreseen by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

According to Ibn Hishām he died at the hands of his son Shirawayh. Others state that his sons joined forces to kill him.

This Chosroe was by name Abrawīz b. Hurmuz b. Anushirwān b. Qabbādh. It was he who defeated the Byzantines, as referred to in the Almighty’s words in the Qurān, “A.L.M. The Romans have been defeated in the closest land” (ṣūrat al-Rām, XXX, v.1–3). This will be explained later.

According to al-Suhayli his death occurred the night of Tuesday, the tenth of Jumādā al-Ūlā, of the year 9 AH. What happened, it is thought, though God alone knows, is that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) wrote to Chosroe inviting him to accept Islam, he became enraged, tore up the letter and then wrote his own instructions to his governor in Yemen.

16. The word in Arabic means “sons”. Originally it was used in this context to refer to the offspring of the Persians who accompanied Sayf b. Dhū Yazan to Yemen. Then the term became more loosely used to refer to those whose mothers were not from the same race as their fathers.

Some accounts report that the Messenger of God (SAAS) replied to Badhm's emissary with the words, “This night my Lord has killed your lord.” And it was as he said, Chosroe being killed that very same night by his sons as a result of his having changed from justice to tyranny. Having deposed him they appointed his son Shirawayh in his place. But he only lived on for six months or less after he had murdered his father.

Khalid b. Ḥiqq al-Shaybānī spoke the following verses on this:

“And there was Chosroe, sliced up by his sons with swords as if he were meat.
One day fate did bring him to term; is there not a term for every pregnant mother?”

Al-Zuhrī added that when news of Chosroe’s death reached Badha, he sent word to the Messenger of God (SAAS) of the acceptance of Islam by himself and the Persians along with him. His Persian envoys asked, “To whom do we belong, Messenger of God?” He replied, “You are from us and to us, the people of the House.” According to al-Zuhrī, that was why the Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke the words, “Salman is of us, the people of the House.”

It seems that this was after the emigration of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Medina. He therefore sent his commanders to Yemen to inform people of what was good and to call upon them to believe in God, the Almighty and Glorious. First he dispatched Khalid b. al-Walid and ʿAlī b. Abū Taib; later Abū Mūsā al-Ashʿarī and Muʿādh b. Jabal followed them, and Yemen and its people accepted Islam.

Badhm died and his son Shahr b. Badhm ruled after him. It was he whom al-Aswad al-ʿAnsī killed after al-Aswad had pretended prophecy and taken Shahr’s wife, as we will report, and expelled from Yemen the deputies of the Messenger of God (SAAS). When al-Aswad was killed the authority of Islam returned.

Ibn Hishām stated that it was he whom ʿAṣī had meant by his words, “A Prophet pure to whom revelation comes from the All-high.” He was also meant by Shiqq when he said that Persian rule would be “brought short by a messenger dispatched, who will bring forth truth and justice among a people of religion and virtue, in whom power shall reside until the Day of Separation.”

Ibn Ishaq states also that there was, so they claim, a stone inscription in Yemen, from the Book of Psalms, dating from ancient times which read, “Who rules Dhamār? Himyar the Good. Who rules Dhamār? The evil Abyssinians. Who rules Dhamār? The free Persians. Who rules Dhamār? Quraysh the merchants.”
A poet's words on this subject are recorded by al-Masciidi as follows, "When Dhamar was named, it was asked, 'To whom do you belong?' ‘To Himyar the good’, came the reply. Asked to whom next, the reply came, ‘To the Abyssinians most vile.’ ‘To whom next?’ it was asked, and ‘To the free Persians’ came the reply. ‘To whom next?’ it was asked, and ‘To the merchants of Quraysh,’ came the reply.”

It is said that these verses quoted by Muhammad b. Ishq were found inscribed at the grave of Hud, upon whom be peace, when the wind exposed his tomb in Yemen. That was shortly before the time of Balqis, in the days of Malik b. Dhul Manar, brother of ‘Amr Dhul Adhar b. Dhul al-Manar. It is said also that it was inscribed on Hud’s tomb and that those were his own words.

It is al-Suhayli who related this; God knows best.

The Story of al-Satirun, King of al-Hadr

His story was related at this point by ‘Abd al-Malik b. Hisham because of what certain scholars of genealogy had stated in connection with al-Nu’man b. al-Mundhir, mentioned above. They related that when Sayf b. Dhul Yazan went to al-Nu’man and asked him for help in regaining control over Yemen, it was stated that al-Nu’man had descended from al-Satirun, king of al-Hadr.

We earlier stated from Ibn Ishq that al-Nu’man b. al-Mundhir was of the line of Rabi’a b. Nasr, and that it was reported from Jubayr b. Mu’im that he was a descendant of Qanaq b. Ma’ad b. ‘Adnan. These are, then, three statements on his genealogy, and Ibn Hisham went on to tell about the king of al-Hadr.

Al-Hadr was a great fortress built by that king, whose name was al-Satirun, on the banks of the Euphrates. It was positioned high up and built tall and very spacious, its accommodations being like those of a large town. It was extremely well fortified and decorated in the utmost luxury, splendour, and good taste; it received taxes from all the surrounding areas.

Others said that he was of the al-Jarâmiqa, one of the Tawâif kings whom he used to lead when they gathered to make war against one of their enemies. His fortress was between the Tigris and the Euphrates.

Ibn Hisham went on to state that Chosroe Sabur Dhul al-Aktâf attacked al-Satirun, king of al-Hadr.

Someone other than Ibn Hisham stated that the one who attacked the king of al-Hadr was Sabur b. Ardashir b. Babik, the first of the Sassanian kings, who humiliated the Tawāqif kings and returned control to the Chosroes. Sābūr Dhū al-Aktāf, this authority claims, came a long time afterwards. God knows best. That information comes from al-Suhayli.

Ibn Hishām’s account continues, “And Sābūr besieged al-Ḥaḍr for two years.” Others say four years.

His reason for doing this was that al-Saṭīrūn had attacked Sābūr’s territory during the latter’s absence in Iraq. The daughter of al-Saṭīrūn, whose name was al-Nadīra, looked down and saw Sābūr dressed in silk garments and wearing a gold crown studded with topaz, emeralds and pearls; and he was handsome. So she secretly sent him a message asking if he would marry her if she opened the fortress gate for him. He replied that he would.

That evening al-Saṭīrūn drank wine till he was drunk; he was always drunk when he went to bed. Then she took the fortress keys from beneath his head and gave them to a servant of hers who opened the gates. Another account states that she directed Sābūr’s people to a wide water channel through which they entered al-Ḥaḍr. Yet another version has her telling them of a spell over the fortress; they knew it would not be conquered until a grey pigeon was taken, its feet dyed with the menstrual fluid of a blue-eyed virgin, and then released. If it dropped on the walls of the fortress the spell would be removed and the gates would open. Sābūr did this, and the gates did come open.

So Sābūr went inside, killed al-Saṭīrūn, confiscated al-Ḥaḍr and then destroyed it. Then he took al-Nadīra away with him and married her. While sleeping at night in bed, she began tossing and turning and could not sleep. Sābūr had candles brought and they searched her bed, in which they discovered one myrtle leaf. Sābūr asked her if that was what had kept her awake, and she replied that it was.

Sābūr asked her how her father had treated her. She answered, “He furnished me with silk brocade, dressed me in silk, gave me the choicest food17 to eat and wine to drink.”

Sābūr commented, “And then you treated him the way you did! You’d do the same to me quicker!”

Then he tied her tresses to the tail of a horse and it galloped away until she was killed.

Aʾšā Bani Qays b. Thaqlaba composed these verses about this:

“Consider al-Ḥaḍr and its people’s ease; but do blessings last forever? Shāḥbūr kept his troops there two years, striking it with their adzes. And when he gave prayer to his Lord, and repented, He took no revenge. Did his Lord provide him extra power, and was there ever the like of his castle?”

17. In the original the text reads, “gave me brain as food to eat”. Cooked brain was considered a delicacy.
He had appealed to his people, ‘Come to your task; it is set;
Die nobly with your swords; I see death is ordained for those so fated.’ ”

Also ‘Adi b. Zayd spoke the following verses in this regard, “Al-Ḥaḍr was afflicted from above by a dreadful, terrible, huge calamity

Due to a maiden who did not protect her father when he was delirious and off his guard;
She gave him much evening wine, undiluted, which he drank abundantly. And wine deludes, its imbiber never quenched.
That night she surrendered her people, believing the (enemy’s) chief would marry her,
But next morning the bride’s reward was blood running in streams,
Al-Ḥaḍr was ruined and confiscated; her chamber was fired and its contents burned.”

‘Adi b. Zayd also recited the verses,

“O malicious blamer of fate, are you guilt-free and perfect?
Or has time promised you a solid pledge to be ever safe? Indeed you are stupid and conceited.
Or whom did you see fate made immortal, and who had a watchful guard lest he be harmed?
Where now is Caesar Anūshirwān, the king of kings, or where Sābūr before him?
The noble Banū Ḩabīr, kings of Byzantium, not one of them remains remembered.
And al-Ḥaḍr’s lord, built by him, with both the Tigris and the al-Khabūr rivers made to flow to it,
Of marble built and plaster adorned, with birds nesting in its heights, Unsuspecting of misfortune, yet all state now gone, its gates deserted.
Remember the lord of al-Khawarnaq,\(^\text{18}\) who set forth one day, though right guidance requires thought.
His wealth and properties delighted him, the sea was his command, and his palace al-Sadr, Yet his heart was converted and he said, ‘What joy for the living to death progressing,
Then becoming like leaves dried and tossed by the wind and breezes?’”

The man referred to in the verses above as the ‘lord of al-Khawarnaq’ was a king of by-gone days who had been warned by a learned man of his time about his conduct and practices. The king had exceeded his bounds, become arrogant and self-willed, and followed his own instincts unbridled. The learned man warned him by reference to the kings and states that had preceded him, how they had gone without a trace, and that nothing he took from others would not be transmitted from him in turn to those following him. This advice had impact and influence on him, and he was converted, giving thought to both his present and past and to the constraints of the grave. So he repented, returned to the faith and changed his ways. He abdicated, dressed himself as a mendicant, went off into the wilderness and the desert, and enjoyed solitude, shunning that pursuit of the senses and disobedience to the Lord of the Heavens followed by most people.

His story was told in extensive detail by the Sheikh and Imām Muwaffaq b. Qudāma al-Maqdisi, may the Almighty have mercy on him, in his book Al-Tawwāḥūn (The Repentants). Similarly, the ḥāfiẓ Abū al-Qāsim al-Suhaylī reported it, thoroughly documented, in his book Al-Rawḍ al-Unuf (The Virgin Meadows) which is clearly written and well organized.

An Account of the Tawāʾif kings.

Regarding the ruler of al-Ḥadr, Sāṭirūn, he was, as previously explained, considered a precursor to the rest of the Tawāʾif ('factions') kings. He lived at the time of Alexander, son of Phillip of Macedonia, the Greek. This came about when Alexander defeated the king of the Persians, Darius son of Darius. Alexander subjugated Darius's kingdom, destroyed his land, arrested the best of his people, expropriated his produce, scattered the Persians to the winds, and determined that they should never thereafter join together and unite their forces.

So he began appointing a separate king over each group of people in any given area, Arabs and non-Arabs alike. Thereafter each of these kings would protect his own area, preserve his own allotment, and exploit his own region. When one king died, he would be succeeded by his son or by some other one of his people. This system prevailed for about 500 years.

Eventually, in the time of Ardashir b. Bābik of Banū Sasan b. Bahman b. Asfandiyār b. Yashtāsib b. Lahrāsib, their kingdom returned to its former condition. Ardashir took over, rejoined the petty kingdoms altogether in one, and ended the rule of the Tawāʾif kings; so not a trace of them remained.

Ardashir delayed besieging the oldest-established, greatest, and most powerful of these kinglets, the ruler of al-Ḥadr, since he was their leader and precursor. When Ardashir died, his son Sabūr turned his attention to al-Ḥadr and besieged it until he conquered it, as told above. And God, all Glorious and Almighty, knows best.
An Account of the sons of Ishmael who were the Arabs of Hijaz, and of events of the jahiliyya period up to the time of the Mission.

We have already, in a previous work, given an account of Ishmael, upon whom be peace, along with the Prophets. It tells of how his father Abraham, upon whom be blessings and peace, bore him away with his wife Hajar and made them to dwell in the Mecca valley between the mountains of Fârân, an unpleasant and desolate place. Ishmael was still unweaned at the time. Then Abraham went away and left them there, God having commanded him to do so. Ishmael's mother had nothing except a leather bag containing dates and a skin-bottle with water in it. When that was exhausted, God made the well zamzam flow for Hajar, it being a tasty sustenance for the hungry and a cure for the sick, as is related in the long hadith of Ibn 'Abbâs recorded by al-Bukhârî, God have mercy on him.

Later, Jurhum, who were a group of the original Arabs who were descended from the ancient Arab tribes, settled near Hajar in Mecca, with no right to the water except for their own drinking and use. Hajar felt comfortable and secure with them.

Abraham, peace be upon him, kept an eye on them all the time; it is said he would ride his horse, al-Bûrâq, on his journeys to and from Jerusalem.

Later, when the boy became a youth and he would busy himself with his father, the issue of making sacrifice arose, the sacrifice being in reality Ishmael.

When Ishmael grew up, he married a woman from Jurhum, then left her and married another, the daughter of Muđâd b. 'Amr al-Jurhumî. She bore him 12 sons whose names have been mentioned before. These were: Nâbit, Qaydhar, Adhbul, Mîsha, Mîsmâ', Mâshî, Dimmâ, Adhâr, Yaṭţîr, Nabsh, Tîmâ, and Qaydhumâ. These are as given by Muhammad b. Ishâq and others using written sources. He also had one daughter whose name was Nasma; it was she he married to his nephew al-Âţîb b. Ishâq b. Abraham. From her were born to him al-Rûm and Fâris, and also al-Ashbân, in one of the two accounts.

The Arabs of Hijaz, with all their different tribes, are traced in their genealogy to Ishmael's two sons Nâbit and Qaydhar. After Ishmael, the governor and ruler-in-chief of Mecca and the custodian of the temple and of the well zamzam was Nâbit, cousin through his mother to the Jurhumites.

Later the Jurhumites gained control over al-bayt (the ka'ba), being jealous of their relatives, and ruled in Mecca and the areas around it for a long time in place of Ishmael's line. The first to gain control after Nâbit was Muđâd b. 'Amr b. Sa'd b. al-Raqîb b. 'Aybar b. Nâbit b. Jurhum.

Jurhum was the son of Qahen. His line was also given as Jurhum b. Yaqfun b. 'Aybar b. Shalikh b. Arafkhshud b. Sam b. Nuh al-Jurhumi. The Jurhumites settled in the heights of Mecca, at al-Qu'ayqiqan.

Al-Samayda', leader of Qatirra', had settled with his people in the lower part of Mecca. The Jurhumites and Qatirra', charged a tax on all who passed by them on their ways to Mecca.

Ultimately warfare broke out between the tribes of Jurhum and Qatirra'. Al-Samayda' was killed, and full power over Mecca and al-bayt thus were gained by Mudad. The descendants of Ishmael did not contend with him despite their large numbers, respected position, and the diversity of their locations throughout Mecca and its surroundings; this was due to their family ties to them and to the majesty of the sacred bayt.

After Mudad, power went to his son al-Harith and then to his son, 'Amr.

Later Jurhum acted wrongfully in Mecca and corruption there spread. People came to disrespect the sacred mosque. It is even said that one of their men, named Isaf b. Baghi, and a woman named Na'ila, daughter of Wa'il, met inside the ka'ba and that he committed fornication with her. And so God turned them into two rocks which the people set up near the temple as a warning to others. After a great deal of time had passed, these two rocks became the object of worship aside from God, during the period of Khuzaa'. This will be further explained later. These became two idols set on high and named Isaf and Na'ila.

When the misdeeds of Jurhum in the sacred land grew worse, Khuzaa', who had settled near the sanctuary, arose against them. They, Khuzaa', were of the line of 'Amr b. 'Amir who had left Yemen because of what he expected would occur with the 'Arim torrent, as we have related above. It is also said that Khuzaa' traced their descent to Ishmael's sons. God knows best.

Anyway, Khuzaa' did join together to fight Jurhum and they engaged in battle; the descendants of Ishmael sided with neither party.

Khuzaa', being the tribe of Bakr b. Abd Manan and Ghubshan, gained victory and ousted them from the ka'ba.

'Amr b. al-Harith b. Mudad al-Jurhumi, their leader, made off with the ka'ba's two gazelles, made of gold, the cornerstone, the 'black stone' that is, as well as decorated swords and other items, and buried them all in the well zamzam, which he filled with earth. Then he and his people moved out, back to Yemen.

On this subject 'Amr b. al-Harith b. Mudad composed the following:

"Her tears flowing and her eyes red and sore, in grief she said
'Its as though between al-Hajun and al-Saf there has never been a friend, and no evening pleasure in Mecca.'

So I told her, my heart made to flutter as though by a bird between my ribs:
‘Yes indeed; we were its people but changing times and evil misfortunes destroyed us.

We were custodians of the ka‘ba after Nābit, circling it around, our fine state clear.

We took charge of the temple after Nābit with dignity, the wealthy gaining no favour with us.

We had power and prestige, so be proud of our reign, no tribe there more proud than us.

Did you not marry a woman to Ishmael, the finest man I knew, so his descendants are from us, and we are his relatives.’

So what if the world turn against us? Life has its turns and tribulations

It was the king, the almighty ruler, who used his power to oust us; thus, O people, do the fates decree.

If the carefree sleep and I not rest, then I say, ‘O enthroned one, why did Suhayl and ‘Amir die?’

In exchange for them I got faces I dislike, tribes including Ḥimyar and Ṭuḥabir.

We were despised, after having been in delight, passing years thus biting us.

Tears flowed from eyes weeping for a land with a secure and sacred place and shrines, Weeping for a place whose pigeons are left unharmed, living safe there, and sparrows too.

In it wild animals are safe and may leave it without fear – they would never be attacked.”

According to Ibn Ishaq, ‘Amr b. al-Ḥārith b. Muṭāḍ also spoke as follows addressing Banū Bakr and Ghubshān who came to power after themselves in Mecca:

“0 people, move along; your end is that one day you will not be able to move.

Urge on your mounts, release their reins before your death, and do with us what you will do.

We were people as you were; fate changed us; you will become as we became.”

Ibn Hisbām stated that these verses were the ones he found to be genuine. And a certain authority on poetry told me that these verses are the first poems spoken by the Arabs and that they were discovered inscribed on rocks in Yemen, their author’s name not being given.

Al-Suhaylī recorded companion verses to this poetry, telling along with them a strange tale and peculiar chants. He said that Abū al-Walīd al-Azraqi, in his book Fadā’il Mecca (The Virtues of Mecca), added to the above-mentioned verses by ‘Amr b. al-Ḥārith b. Muṭāḍ the following:

“Fate has turned against us and destroyed us through injustice there, our people plundering others.

Ask about the deeds of others before you, so that the path of disgrace be made clear.

Once before you we were kings over people, living resident in God’s sanctuary.”
The Story of Khuza‘a and an account of ‘Amr b. Luhayy and the worship of idols in Arab lands.

According to Ibn Ishaq, Ghubshān of Khuza‘a governed the ka‘ba instead of Banū Bakr b. ‘Abd Manāt; the first of these new rulers was ‘Amr b. al-Ḥārith the Ghubshānī. At that time Quraysh were migrants, living in small settlements and little encampments scattered about among their people, Banū Kināna.

Khuza‘a were so-named because they takhazzā‘ū, separated, from the men of ‘Amr b. ‘Amir when they came from Yemen on their way to Syria. Khuza‘a stopped in Marr al-Dhahrān and settled there.

On this subject ‘Awn b. Ayyūb al-Anṣārī and thereafter al-Khazrajī spoke the following verses:

“When we went down into the vale of Marr Khuza‘a ‘separated’ from us into small groups of people;
They occupied every valley of Tihāmā, seeking protection by their solid spears and sharp-pointed swords.”

Abū al-Mutahhir Ismā‘īl b. Rāf‘ al-Anṣārī al-Awṣī said:

“When we went down to the vale of Mecca Khuza‘a gave praise to the house of the intolerant eater
Taking residence in small villages and riding off in separate groups to all settlements in high land and low.
They ousted Jurhum from the vale of Mecca, wrapping themselves in strong-backed Khuza‘a pride.”

So Khuza‘a took control of the ka‘ba, inheriting that rule by primogeniture until the last of them, Ḥulayl b. Ḥubshiyya b. Salūl b. Ka‘b b. ‘Amr b. Rabī‘a al-Khuza‘ī. It was his daughter Ḥubbā who got married to Quṣayy b. Kilāb; to him were born his four sons ‘Abd al-Dār, ‘Abd Manāf, ‘Abd al-Uzza, and ‘Abd. Eventually he gained control over the ka‘ba, as I will later explain in detail if God Almighty wills it, and in Him is all trust.

Khuza‘a continued controlling the temple some 300 years; some say 500, and God knows best. Their period of rule was damned, because it was during their period that idols were first worshipped in Ḥijāz.

This came about because of their leader ‘Amr b. Luhayy, God curse him; it was he who first influenced them towards idol worship. He was a man of enormous wealth. They say he gouged out the eyes of 20 camels to show that he owned 20,000 of them.

It was a custom among the Arabs that anyone who came to own 1,000 camels should gouge out the eyes of one of them. By doing this he would avert the evil eye of malicious envy from them. Al-Azraqī was one of those who related this practice.
According to al-Suhayli, in the time of al-\(\text{ḥajj}\), the pilgrimage, he probably sacrificed 10,000 animals and awarded 10,000 sacerdotal garments per year. He would feed the Arabs, preparing for them food of dates mixed with butter and honey, and give them barley wine to drink. They say that his word and deed were like law among them, due to his generosity, and to the high regard and deep respect they held for him.

Ibn Hishām states that a learned man told him that 'Amr b. Luhayy once left Mecca for Syria on business and reached Ma'āb in the Balqā' region. There at that time lived the 'Amdiq, the sons of 'Imāq or, as some say, 'Imliq b. Lāwadh b. Šām b. Nūh. 'Amr witnessed them worshipping idols, so he asked them why. They replied that if they asked the idols for rain it came, or for victory they won it.

'Amr then asked them to give him an idol he could take to Arab lands where it could be worshipped, and they gave him one named Hubal. This he brought to Mecca and set on a pedestal and ordered the people to worship and venerate it.

According to Ibn Ishāq, people claimed that the first to worship idols were of the tribe of Ishmael. They did so because as they started to travel outside Mecca, having felt constrained and overcrowded there and seeking living-space elsewhere, they would always carry with them a stone from the sanctuary to venerate the shrine. Wherever they settled they would put down the stone and circumambulate it as they would the ka'ba. Eventually they took to worshipping any stone that pleased or inspired them, thus reverting to pagan ways and neglecting the religion they had followed.

In the \textit{saḥīḥ} collection we find a statement from Abu Raja' al-'Uṭāridi as follows: "In the pre-Islamic period, if we found no rock then we would gather up a pile of dirt, bring a goat, milk it on to the pile, and then circumambulate it."

Ibn Ishāq’s narration goes on: "And they substituted another religion for that of Abraham and Ishmael, upon both of whom be peace, worshipping idols and following the false ways of the people before them."

Nevertheless they did maintain some of the practices of the era of Abraham, upon whom be peace. These included venerating the ka'ba, circumambulating it, going there for pilgrimage and visitation, mounting the hills of 'Arafāt and Muzdalifa, making sacrifice and invoking God's name at both pilgrimage and visitation and at the same time introducing innovations.

The tribes of Kināna and Quraysh would make the cry, "\textit{Labbayka, Allāhu ma'ṣūlīn, labbayka!} At your service, O God, at your service! At your service; you have no partner except one who is yours. You rule him, he rules not."

They would affirm His unity in their invocation and then include reference to their idols as well while asserting that He had power over them. God Almighty stated to Muḥammad (ṢAAS), "Most of them do not believe in God without associating others" \((\text{sūrat Yūsuf, XII, v.106})\). This meant, "they do not state My unity out of knowledge of My right unless they also ascribe to me some associate of My own creation.

Al-Suhayli and others state that the first to utter this prayer was ʿAmr b. Luḥayy and that Satan appeared before him as an old man and taught him that. ʿAmr would listen as he recited it, then say as he had. And the Arabs followed his lead in so reciting.

And it is established in al-Bukhāri’s sahih collection that the Messenger of God (ṣaas) would say “Qadi. Qadi”, when he heard people recite the words, “At your service, O God, you have no partner.” That meant: “Enough right there!”

Al-Bukhāri stated that Ishaq b. Ibrahim related to him, quoting Yahyā b. ʿAbd, quoting Israʾīl, from Abū Ḥāfis, from Abū Hurayra, that the Prophet (ṣaas) said, “The first person to set slaves free and also to worship idols was Abū Khuzzāʾ ʿAmr b. ʿAmir and I have seen him dragging his intestines in hell-fire.”

Aḥmad (sic) is unique in giving the account thus.

This account necessitates that ʿAmr b. Luḥayy was Abū Khuzzāʾ, all the tribe being traced back to him, as some genealogists maintain, according to Ibn Ishaq and others. Had we been left with only that one account, then it would be plain as it stands, even to be considered documentary. But other accounts exist which contradict it in some ways.

Al-Bukhāri stated that Abū al-Yamān told him that Shuʿayb told him from al-Zuhri that the latter heard al-Musayyab say, “Al-ḥāhira is the camel that is not milked by anyone, since its milk is left for the idols; and al-sāʾiba is the camel that does not carry anything since it is set aside for their gods.”

Abū Hurayra stated that the Prophet (ṣaas) said, “I saw ʿAmr b. ʿAmir al-Khuzaʿī dragging his insides in hell-fire; he was the first person who set loose the al-sāʾiba camels.”

Al-Bukhāri also relates it thus, and Muslim too, from a tradition from ʿAbd al-Wahhab b. Kisan, from al-Zuhri, from Suʿd and back to Abū Hurayra.

Then al-Bukhāri states that Ibn al-Hāḍ passed it on from al-Zuhri.

According to al-Ḥakim, al-Bukhāri meant that Ibn al-Hāḍd recounted it from ʿAbd al-Wahhab b. Bukht from al-Zuhri. That is what he stated.

Aḥmad related it from ʿAmr b. Salama al-Khuzaʿī, from al-Layth b. Saʿd, from Yazid b. al-Hāḍ, from al-Zuhri, from Saʿd back to Abū Hurayra, who said that he heard the Messenger of God (ṣaas) state: “I saw ʿAmr b. ʿAmir dragging his insides in hell-fire; it was he who first let loose the sawdāʾib (pl. of sāʾiba) and who ḥāhara, set aside the milk of, the ḥāhira camels.”

ʿAbd al-Wahhab b. Bukht was mentioned by neither of these authorities, though he was by al-Ḥakim. God knows best.

Aḥmad also said that ʿAbd al-Razzzq related to him, quoting Maʿmar, from al-Zuhri, from Abū Hurayra who said that the Messenger of God (ṣaas) said:
"I saw 'Amr b. 'Amir al-Khuza'i dragging his insides in hell-fire, and it was he who first let loose the sawâ'ib."

This tradition, as given, is missing a link of transmission. The correct chain would be to include al-Zuhri as having received it from Sa'id, as above.

Use in this tradition and the previous one of the term al-Khuzâ'i in the name indicates that he was not the founder of the tribe but rather named after it. Also the use in the narration of the term Abū Khuza'a, the father of Khuza'a, as further above, is a slip of the pen by the traditionalist for Akhū Khuza'a, brother of Khuza'a, or an indication that he was given the nickname Abū Khuza'a. Use of this last term could not be intended as informing us that he was father of the whole Khuza'a tribe; God knows best.

Muhammad b. Ishaq said that Muhammad b. Ibrâhim b. al-Hârith al-Taymi related to him that Abū Ṣâliḥ al-Sammān told him that he heard Abū Hurayra say that he heard the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) say to Aktham b. al-Jawn al-Khuza'i: "O Aktham, I saw 'Amr b. Luḥayy b. Qama'a b. Khindif dragging his insides in hell-fire and I never saw two men more alike than you and he." Aktham replied, "Maybe this resemblance to him is harmful to me, O Messenger of God?" He answered, "No; you are a believer while he is a disbeliever. It was he who first changed the religion of Ishmael, who set up idols, who set aside al-bahira camels' milk for the idols, established certain animals as free from burden-bearing, disallowed sacrifice of the male of twin goats, or considered certain stallion camels free from work."20 There are no traditions to this effect in the "books," i.e. the canon.21

Ibn Jarir related this same tradition in similar words from Hannâd b. Ṣâda, from Muḥammad b. 'Amr, from Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra, back to the Prophet (ṢAAS). And this tradition too is not in the "books".

Al-Bukhâri said that Muḥammad b. Abū Ya'qûb Abū 'Abd Allâh al-Kirmâni related to him that Ḥassân b. Ibrâhîm told him, quoting Yûnûs from al-Zuhri, from Ḩurâwa that 'A'îsha said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, "I saw hell with its denizens beating one another and I saw 'Amr dragging along his insides; it was he who first set loose the al-sâ'iba camels." Al-Bukhârî alone reported this hadîth.

What is meant here is that 'Amr b. Luḥayy, God curse him, introduced certain innovations into the religion by which he changed the religion of Abraham. The Arabs imitated him in adopting these and thus strayed far off, in ways that were deplorable and atrocious.

Almighty God had expressed disapproval of these things in various verses of His unassailable Qur'ân. The Almighty stated: "And do not speak lies with what your tongues describe, saying: ‘This is lawful’, and, ‘this is unlawful’, thus falsely attributing lies to God” (ṣūrat al-Nāhî, XVI, v.116). The Almighty also said, “God has not ordained the bahîra, the sâ'îba, the wasîla, or the hâmî. But it is those who disbelieve who falsely attribute lies to God. Yet most of them do not understand” (ṣūrat al-Mâ‘îda, V, v.103).

21. He is referring to the canonical sources of law based on authenticated traditions.

I have elsewhere elaborated on all this and shown how the earlier authorities differed among themselves in explaining that. Those who wish may find it there; and to God all praise and goodwill.

The Almighty also said, “And they set aside for what they know not a portion of what We have provided for them. By God, you will surely be questioned about what you have been falsely attributing” (ṣūrat al-Nāhî, XVI, v.56).

The Almighty stated as well, “And they set aside for God a portion of the crops and livestock He bestowed on them and said, ‘This is for God!’ by their assertion, and, ‘This is for our associate gods!’ So that which is for their associates does not reach God, while what was God’s does reach their associates! Evil is what they judge. Likewise, these associates have deemed appropriate for many of the polytheists the killing of their children; this is to destroy them and distort their religion. Had God not wished, they would not have done so. So ignore them and what they invent. They said: ‘These are animals and produce that are sacrosanct. None but whom we say shall taste them.’ This they claim, and, ‘These are animals whose backs are sacrosanct.’ And, ‘These are animals over whom God’s name shall not be invoked.’ These are falsehoods attributed to God and He will punish them for their inventions. And they said, ‘What is within the wombs of these animals is specifically for our menfolk and forbidden for our wives’, whereas if it be stillborn then they are all partners in it. God will punish them for their characterizations. He is wise, all-knowing. Lost are those who killed their children foolishly and without knowledge, and who proscribed what God has endowed them with, attributing falsehood to God. They had gone astray, and they were not rightly guided” (ṣūrat al-‘An‘ām, VI, v.136–40).

In his saḥîh collection, al-Bukhârî stated, in his chapter entitled: “The Arabs before Islam” that Abû al-Nu‘mân and Abû ʿAwâna both related to him on the authority of Abû Bishr, from Sa‘îd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbâs who said: “If it please you to know the ignorance of the Arabs before Islam, then read those verses coming after verse 130 in ṣūrat al-‘An‘ām: ‘Lost are those who killed their children foolishly and without knowledge and who proscribed what God has endowed them with, attributing falsehood to God. They had gone astray, and they were not rightly guided’” (VI, v.140).

We have given explanation for this verse and how they used to innovate with foolish and immoral laws, which their leader ʿAmr b. Luḥayy, God damn him, had thought gave some benefit and kindness to animals. In this he was a liar and a cheat.

Yet despite this folly and error, those silly and ignorant people did follow his lead. In fact they followed him into errors even more grievous and serious than these, namely in worshipping idols along with God the Almighty and Glorious.

They thus brought changes into the true religion and straight path God had sent down to Abraham, His true companion, which is worship of God alone without associate, and proscription of polytheism.

They changed the ceremonies of the pilgrimage and the tenets of the religion without knowledge or proof or directives either strong or weak. In this they behaved similarly to those of the polytheist peoples who had preceded them.

They were like the people of Noah. These were those who first associated others with God and who worshipped idols. For this reason God sent Noah to them. He was the first messenger sent to turn people from worship of idols, as we learn from Noah’s story in the Qur’an: “And they said: ‘Do not abandon your gods; do not forsake Wadd, Suwāṣ, Yaghūth, Ya’qūq, and Nasr’; many did they lead astray. Give evil-doers increase of nothing but their error!” (sūrat Nūh, LXXI, v.23–4).

Ibn ‘Abbās said that these were persons of virtue from among Noah’s people; when they died people would attend their graves and eventually came to worship them. We have previously given enough information about their worship practices\(^{23}\) to obviate need for its repetition here.

According to Ibn Ishaq and others, having made these changes to the religion of Ishmael, the Arabs continued having idols. Banū Kalb b. Wabra b. Taghlīb b. Ḥulwān b. Ḥimrān b. al-Ḥāf b. Qudā’a had an idol named Wadd. It was set up in Dūmat al-Jandal. At a place called Ruhāṭ there was Suwāṣ, idol of the Banū Hudhayl b. I’yās b. Mudrika b. Māḍar. Yaghūth was the idol for Banū An‘ām from Ṭayyīp, and for the people of Jurash from Madhhij. It was set up at Jurash. Also there was Ya’qūq in the land of Hamdān in Yemen, used by Banū Khaywān, a tribe of Hamdān. In the land of Ḥimyar was Naṣr, belonging to a tribe called Dhū al-Kulā’.

Ibn Ishaq goes on to report that Khawlān had in their land an idol called ‘Amm Anas. They would, it is said, set aside part of their crops and livestock for division between it and God. Whatever of God’s portion came into the share of ‘Amm Anas they would leave for the latter, while if any set aside for ‘Amm Anas went into the portion set aside for God, they would retrieve it for ‘Amm Anas. It was about them that God revealed, “And they set aside for God a portion of the crops and livestock which He had bestowed upon them” (sūrat al-Anṣām, VI, v.136).

Banū Milkan b. Kināna b. Khuzayma b. Mudrika had an idol named Sa'd, a tall rock in open desert in their territory. One of their men took a herd of his camels to stand near by there to receive the idol's blessing, so they say. But when the camels, which were for meat and not riding, saw the idol stained with the blood of sacrifices, they shied away and scattered in all directions. Their owner became enraged and picked up a rock and threw it at the idol, saying, “May God not bless you; you caused my camels to flee from me!” Then he went off to find them and round them up. When he had done so, he spoke the verses:

Is Sa'd anything but a stone in the desert offering no prayer for anyone, whether misled or rightly guided.”

Ibn Ishaq went on to report that Daws had an idol belonging to Amr b. Ḥumama al-Dawsi. Moreover Quraysh had emplaced an idol over a well inside the ka'ba whose name was Hubal. As previously stated, Ibn Hisbām reported it to have been the first idol set up by Amr b. Luḥayy, God curse him.

Ibn Ishaq goes on to state that they adopted Isāf and Nā'ila as gods, emplaced near zamzam, where they would make sacrifice to them. He reports that they were a man and a woman who had sexual intercourse in the ka'ba, and so God transformed them into two rocks.

Ibn Ishaq went on to state that 'Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr b. Muḥammad b. Amr b. Hazm reported that Amra quoted Ḥā'isha as saying, “We always heard that Isāf and Nā'ila were a man and a woman of Jurhum who fornicated in the ka'ba, so God, Almighty and Glorious, turned them both into stone.” God knows best.

And it has also been said that God did not postpone their punishment until they had fornicated there, but that He transformed them before the deed and that thereafter they were set up on the mountains of al-Ṣafā and al-Marwa. When it was the time of Amr b. Luḥayy, he placed them both at zamzam and people began circumambulating them.

On this subject Abū Ṭalib spoke the verse:

“Where the Ash'arūn kneel their mounts, where the streams flow from Isāf and Nā'ila.”

Al-Waqīdī reported that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered the destruction of Nā'ila, the day he conquered Mecca, there emerged from it a black woman with grey hair tearing at her face, lamenting and wailing loudly.

Al-Suhaylī has said that Ajā and Sulmā, which are two mountains in Hijāz, were in fact named after a man named Ajā b. 'Abd al-Ḥayy who fornicated with Sulmā, daughter of Ḥām, and that they were both turned into idols in these mountains that were named after them. He also said that between Ajā and Sulmā Ṭayyī had an idol named Qals.

Ibn Ishaq \'s account goes on to say that the people of each house had an idol they would worship there and that if a man were to journey he would touch the idol before mounting. This was also what he would begin by doing upon his return before he went inside to his family. When God sent Muhammad (SAAS) with the message of the unity of God, Quraysh said, \"He has made the gods into one god! How very strange!\"

Ibn Ishaq went on to relate that along with the ka\'ba the Arabs venerated tawāghit. These were buildings they honoured in much the same way as they did the ka\'ba. They had custodians and priests, and offerings would be made to them just as to the ka\'ba, along with the rituals of circumambulation and blood sacrifice. But they still recognized the precedence of the ka\'ba over them because it was the building and mosque of Abraham, God\'s true companion, peace be upon him.

Quraysh and the Banū Kināna had an idol named al-\'Uzza at Nakhla and Banū Shaybān of Sulaym were its custodians and priests; they were allies of Banū Hashim. Khālid b. al-Walīd destroyed it when he conquered them, as we shall relate.

Al-Lat was the idol for Thaqīf at al-Ṭārif and its custodians and priests were Banū Mu\'attīb from Thaqīf. Abū Sufyān and al-Mughīra b. Shu\'ba destroyed it after the people of al-Ṭārif accepted Islam, as we shall relate later.

Manāt was the idol of the tribes of al-Aws and al-Khazraj and the people of Medina who shared their religion in the coastal region, towards al-Mushallāl in Qudayd. Abū Sufyān destroyed it also. Some say it was ʿAlī b. Abī Ṭalīb who did it, as we will relate.

Dhū al-Khalāṣa was an idol of Daws, Khathām, and Bajila and the Arabs in their territory of Tabālā. It was called \"the southern (Yemeni) ka\'ba\", while the one in Mecca was known as the \"northern (Syria, Shāmi) ka\'ba\". Jarīr b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Bajī destroyed it, as we will explain.

Qals was an idol of Ṭayyī and those two nearby mountains, meaning Ajā and Sulmā, famous mountains referred to above.

Rūmā was a temple of Himyar and the people of Yemen, as above related in the story of Tūbba\'t, one of the kings of Himyar, and the story of the two rabbis when they destroyed it and killed a black dog that came from it.

Rūdā was a temple of Banū Rabīʿa b. Kaš b. Saʿd Ibn Zayd Manāt b. Tamīm. About it al-Mustawghīr Kaš b. Rabīʿa b. Kaš spoke the verse:

\"I struck Rūdā so violently I left it a ruin in a black plain.
And ʿAbd Allāh helped in destroying it, and with the like of ʿAbd Allāh sins are obliterated.\"
It is said that this al-Mustawghir lived for 330 years, he being the longest-lived of all Muṭar. It was he who spoke the lines:

"I have wearied of life and its length; I have lived for years in their hundreds; One century was followed by two more, adding up the years from all the many months. Is what is left anything but like what we spent? Days and nights pass and urge us on."

According to Ibn Hishām these lines should be attributed to Zuhayr b. Janāb b. Hubal.

Al-Suhayli stated that the persons who lived longer than two or three hundred years include this Zuhayr, ʿUbayd b. Shariyya, Daghfal b. Ḥanẓala al-Nassāba, al-Rabiʿ b. ʿAbd al-Fazārī, Dhu al-ʿIsāba al-ʿAdwānī and Naṣr b. Dihmān b. Ashjaʿ b. Rayth b. Ghaṭfān. The hair of this last-mentioned blackened after it had turned white, and his back became straight after having been crooked.

Ibn Ishaq's account continues, indicating that Dhu al-ʿAbāṣīt was an idol of Bakr and Taghlīb, the two sons of Wāʿil, and Iyād at Sandād. Concerning it Aṣḥāb of Banū Qays b. Thaqāb spoke the verse:

"Between al-Khawarnaq, al-Sadīr, Bāriq, and the temple with battlements at Sandād."

The first part of this poem is as follows:

"I have learned, even if I lived longer, that one's path is that followed by the ancients. What can I hope after the Al Muḥarriq have left their homes and after Iyād too? They settled at Anqara, where Tigris water flowed to them, coming from the lofty mountains, The land of al-Khawarnaq, al-Sadīr, and Bāriq, and the house of temples of Sindād. The winds stormed over the sites of their dwellings, as though their time were predestined, And I see that pleasure and all things enjoyed turn to decay and end."

According to al-Suhayli, al-Khawarnaq was a palace built by al-Nuʿmān the Elder for ʿAṣḥāb so that he could have his children there in it with him. It was designed by a man named Sinammar over 20 years. No finer building than it had ever been seen. Al-Nuʿmān feared that Sinammar might build a similar one for others, so he cast him down from its heights and killed him. A poet therefore spoke the following lines about him:

"He recompensed me, may God give him His worst punishment, as Sinammar was recompensed, and he was guiltless."
Except his striving on the building for twenty years with the best bricks, saffron and ceramics.

And when the building was complete and it towered like a mountain or a difficult height

He threw down Sinammār on to the top of his head; that being, by God, one of the most ignominious acts ever done."

Al-Suhayli stated that al-Jāḥiz recited it in his Kitāb al-Ḥayawān (Book of Animals). The word al-Sinammār is one of the names of the moon. What is implied here is that all such houses were destroyed when Islam came. The Messenger of God (SAAS) dispatched troops of his men to each of these palaces to destroy them, and he sent to those idols men who broke them to pieces. Ultimately nothing remained to rival the ka'ba, and God was worshipped alone and without associate. All this will be explained in detail in its place, if God Almighty wills it, and in Him there is trust.

An Account of 'Adnān, Forebear of the Arabs of the Ḥijāz from whom the line goes down to the Prophet (SAAS).

There is no question of 'Adnān being of the line of Ishmael, son of Abraham, upon both of whom be peace. What dispute there is relates to the number of forebears there were from 'Adnān to Ishmael according to the various sources.

At one end of the spectrum, there is the extreme view that considers there to have been forty; this is the view of Christians and Jews who adopted it from the writings of Rakhiyā, the clerk of Armiyā (Jeremy) b. Ḥalqiyyā, as we will relate.

Some authorities maintain there were thirty, others twenty, yet more fifteen, ten, nine, or seven.

It has been said that the lowest estimate given is for four, according to the account given by Mūsā b. Ya'qūb, on the authority of 'Abd Allāh b. Wahb b. Zumā' al-Zuma'ī from his aunt, and then from Umm Salama who stated that the Prophet (SAAS) said that the line was: "Ma'ād b. 'Adnān b. Adad b. Zand b. al-Yarā b. A'rāq al-Tharā".

According to Umm Salama this Zanad was al-Hamaysa', al-Yarā was Nābit, while A'rāq al-Tharā was Ishmael. This was implied because he was Abraham's son; for Abraham was not consumed by hell-fire, since fire does not consume moist earth, the meaning of al-tharā.

Al-Dāraqṯāni stated that he knew of no "Zand" except the one in this tradition, and Zand b. al-Jawn, who was Abū Dalāma the poet.

Abū al-Qāsim al-Suhayli and other Imāms stated that the time lapse between 'Adnān and Ishmael was too great for there to have been only four, ten, or even twenty generations between them. That, they said, was because the age of Ma‘ad son of ‘Adnān was twelve at the time of Bukhtunāṣṣar (Nebuchadnezzar).

Abū Ja‘far al-Ṭabarī and others related that Almighty God sent a revelation at that time to Armiyā b. Ḥalqiyya’ telling him to go to Bukhtunāṣṣar to inform him that God had given him rule over the Arabs. And God commanded Armiyā to carry with him Ma‘ad b. ‘Adnān on the horse al-Buraq so that they would not bear him any rancour saying, “For I shall draw forth from his loins a noble Prophet by whom I shall seal the prophets.”

Armiyā did that, bearing Ma‘ad on al-Buraq to the land of Syria where he grew up among the Jews who remained there following the destruction of the temple at Jerusalem. There he married a woman named Ma‘ṣna, daughter of Jawshin of Banū Dibb b. Jurhum, before returning to his own land. He returned after unrest had quietened down and accord prevailed in the Arabian peninsula. Rakhiyya, Armiyā’s scribe, wrote his master’s genealogy down in a document he had there which was to go into Armiyā’s library; and he similarly preserved the genealogy of Ma‘ad. But God knows best.

And this is why Malik, God bless him, did not enthuse over the attempt at tracing genealogy back to before ‘Adnān.

Al-Suhaylī commented further, “We have merely discussed tracing back these lines to accord with the school of thought of those scholars who favour and do not disapprove of it, men such as Ibn Iṣḥāq, al-Bukhārī, al-Zubayr b. Bakkr, al-Ṭabarī, and others.”

As for Malik, God have mercy on him, he expressed disapproval when asked about someone tracing his descent back to Adam and commented: “Whence comes to him knowledge of that?” When he was asked about tracing back to Ishmael, he expressed similar disapproval, asking, “Who could provide such information?” Malik also disliked tracing the genealogy of the prophets, such as saying, “Abraham son of so-and-so”. Al-Mu‘ayyītī stated this in his book.

Al-Suhaylī commented also that Malik’s viewpoint was analogous to what was related of Urwa b. al-Zubayr who is reported to have said, “We have found no one who knows the line between ‘Adnān and Ishmael.”

It is reported that Ibn ʿAbbās said, “Between ‘Adnān and Ishmael there were 30 ancestors who are unknown.”

Ibn ʿAbbās is also reputed to have said when he traced back lines of descent as far as ‘Adnān: “The genealogists have lied. Twice or thrice.” And that (skepticism)24 is even more characteristic of Ibn Mas‘ūd, whose (attitude) was like that of Ibn ʿAbbās.

Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb stated, “We carry back the genealogy only as far as ‘Adnān.”

24. Translator’s interpretation.
Abū Ḥanīfah b. Abī Ḥanīfah stated in his book Al-Anba' fi Ma'rifat Qabā'il al-Rawāh (Facts Concerning Knowledge of the Tribes of the Transmitters) that Ibn Lahi'a related from Abū al-Aswad that he heard Urwa b. al-Zubayr say, “We never found anyone who knew genealogy back past Ādān, nor past Qāḥṭān, unless they were using conjecture.”

Abū al-Aswad stated that he had heard Abū Bakr Sulaymān b. Abū Khaythama, one of the very most knowledgeable men of the poetry and the genealogy of Quraysh, say, “We never knew anyone with information going back beyond Ma'ad b. Ādān, whether relating to poetry or other knowledge.”

Abū Ḥanīfah said that there was a group of the predecessors including ʿAbd Allāh b. Mas'ūd, ʿAmr b. Maymūn al-Azdi, and Muḥammad b. Ka'b al-Quradhi who, when they recited the verse from the Qurʾān “and those after them whom no one but God knows” (sūrat Ibrāhīm, XIV, v.9) would comment, “The genealogists lied.”

Abū Ḥanīfah, God have mercy on him, stated, “We hold the meaning of this to differ from their interpretation. What is implied is that regarding those who claim to enumerate Adam’s descendants, no one knows them except God who created them. But as for the lines of descent of the Arabs, the scholars conversant with their history and genealogy were aware of and learned by heart about the people and the major tribes, differing in some details of that.”

Abū Ḥanīfah continued to state that the leading scholars regarding the genealogy of Ādān gave his descent as: “Ādān b. Udd b. Muqawwim b. Naḥūr b. Tayraḥ b. Ya'rub b. Yashjub b. Nābit b. Ishmael b. Abraham, peace be upon the latter two mentioned.” And this is how Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq b. Yasār gave it in the Prophet’s biography.

Ibn Hīšām stated, “Ādān is said to be the son of Udd”, meaning that he was Ādān b. Udd b. Udd.

Thereafter Abū Ḥanīfah listed the remainder of the lineage back to Adam.

As for the genealogies of the other Arab tribes back to Ādān, these are preserved and well known and no two people conflict about them.

The genealogy of the Prophet (SAAS) back to Ādān is incontestably clear, as evident as the break of day. A verbatim ḥadīth marfūṭ has been reported to support that. We will give it in the appropriate place, after discussion of the Arab tribes and reporting their genealogies and how these were accurately arranged into the lines of lofty and noble descent. All this, if God Almighty wills it, and in Him we trust and depend; there is no power and no strength except in God the Powerful, the Wise.

25. This term denotes a tradition that is traceable in ascending order of authorities back to the Prophet Muḥammad. See Glossary.
Nothing could be finer than the verses stating the Prophet’s genealogy by Imām Abū al-‘Abbās ‘Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad al-‘Nāshir in the famous poem ascribed to him as follows:

“I praised the Messenger of God, seeking by praising him a plenitude of the best of rewards for myself;
I praised a man beyond praise, unique in his qualities, far beyond others far or near,
A Prophet whose light shone high in places east, his gifts apparent to the people of places west.
The prophets brought him to us before his coming, news of him spreading on all sides.
The foretelling divines began calling his name, using it to fend off the impact of misleading ideas.
Idols were given voice declaring to God their innocence of those who told the untruths.
They spoke in clear words to the unbelievers, ‘A prophet has come to you from Lu‘ayy b. Ghalīb.’
And evil spirits wanted to eavesdrop but shooting stars scattered them from their seats.
He led us to where we would never have found our way, so lengthy was our blindness to clear philosophies.
He brought evidences showing that they were signs from one Almighty in reward and punishment
One of which was the splitting of the moon in two, mountain tops then being covered as if by a turban by the moonbeams.
And another was the rising of water springs between his fingertips while no wells or pools were near.
By it he quenched the thirst of a large crowd; and the water flowed into rivulets in all directions, down to the plain land.
And a well brimmed over at his arrow’s touch, one before too dry for a single drinker’s palate.
And the udder flowed to his palm’s rub, which before when squeezed for liquid had no teat to respond to a milkman’s touch.
And there was eloquent utterance from the hand of a fortune-teller about plans of an enemy bent on attack.
And his being told of matters before their being, and of the after-effects to come when these did arise.
And from those signs there was revelation he brought, one that is expedient, to come with a multitude of wonders.
Thought could not conceive of it, and so the like of which no eloquent man could articulate, nor did it occur to the mind of any preacher.
It encompassed all knowledge, embraced all wisdom, eluding the aim of the scheming and deceitful.

26. The reference is to the revelation of the Qurān.
He brought it to us, not through a trickster's tales, a scribe's pages, or an author's description.

Revelation comes to him sometimes to answer a questioner, to respond to a solution seeker, or in the exhortation of someone who is conversing;

For the bringing of proofs, the imposition of laws, the telling of narration, or the interpretation of purpose;

For the quotation of proverbs, the proving of a case, the revealing of some disbeliever, or the suspension of a liar;

In the meeting of some assembly, in the thick of some battle, or as difficult, puzzling problems occur.

So, it came down in different ways, with straight-out meaning and flowing varieties.

Its verses confirm each other, as if their meanings were scrutinized by a watchful eye.

And the inability of man to achieve such as we have described is well known by the many who attempted (to imitate it).

For father he had 'Abd Allah, the most noble of fathers, inheriting from him the most noble of qualities.

And from Shayba, be he praised, in whom Quraysh had pride above all others of honour and high station;

He who by whose face clouds were sought to bring rain, and whose views were followed in troubled times.

And from Hashim, who built his lofty, honourable repute through brave exploits and his gracious generosity.

And 'Abd Manaf, who taught his people not to exceed the bounds of their ambitions, and how to control their desires.

And Quasyayy, whose nobility of line is at such a level as to be beyond anyone's reach;

Through him God assembled the tribes after they had been split apart by the greed of thieving hands.

And Kilab attained a fortress in the peaks of glory, beyond the reach of all, near and far alike.

And Murra, whose firmness of resolve was not dissolved by the disgrace of any fool or the evil of any sinner.

And Ka'b, whose glory was too high for any seeker of fame to follow his footsteps; and who reached the highest rank with the least of efforts.

And Lu'ayy who wiped out his enemies; thus he subdued the supercilious, the haughty, and the most victorious.

And in Ghalib was such courage that he refused for his people to be overcome by any mighty one, and repelled from them every violent enemy.

And Fihr had in Quraysh an oratory to rely upon when conflicts erupted.

And Malik was always the best of maliks (lords), the most honourable of companions, the most honourable of masters.

And al-Nadr had such elevation as to outstrip all, right on up to meet the gleaming light of the stars.
By my life, Kināna displayed even before him qualities too fine for any conqueror to attain.

And before him Khuzayma established in his honour an ancient heritage from honoured kin.

And Mudrika, no man ever yudrik (achieved) the like of what he had. He was most virtuous and most high, beyond mere base pursuits.

And Ilyās, for him al-ya's (despair) was dictated for his enemies even before the squadrons met in battle.

And for Mu'ādar the total glory had always been his whenever mounted warriors had met in battle.

And Nizār achieved among his people a leadership position, so lofty as to outstrip the gaze of anyone staring hard to see.

And Ma'ad was an 'udda (instrument) for his allies when they feared the plots of their warring foe.

And 'Ahdān is still, if his virtue be assessed, unique and above all peer or companion.

And for Udd, virtue tu'adda (was discharged) emanating from his self-resolve and an inheritance passed down from grand, wise chieftains.

And in Udad there was calm judgement adorned with sagacity, for calm judgement gains from a frowning of eyebrows.27

And Hamaysa continued to reach ever-new heights, and follow after the desired far-reaching aspirations.

And Nāt, who came from the family tree of glory had built up his lofty refuge on the towering mountains.

And Qaydār was accorded the generosity of Hātim, the wisdom of Luqmān and the determination of Hājib.

These were progeny of Ishmael, true to his vows, a man whose level of greatness could never be exceeded by others.

And God's "companion" (Abraham) who was the most noble of men ever to walk or ride upon earth.

And Tārih, whose lasting reputation for generosity had made apparent his laudable deeds.

And Nāhūr, the nahhār (butcher) of his enemies had many memorable accomplishments those accounting cannot enumerate.

And Ashra, a forest lion in battle, cutting a person to shreds with his sharp weapons.

And Arghū, a deputy to be trusted in warfare, tenacious against a mean-spirited antagonist.

And Fālīgh is not left behind his people in virtue, nor does he pass beneath them in rank.

And Shālikh and Arfakhshidh and Sām, had qualities so great as to protect them from any detractor or accuser.

And Nuh (Noah) still retains high regard with God, who counts him among good men, well-chosen.

27. The frowning eyebrows imply deep thought or sagacity.
And Lamk, his father, stood out among the finest, brave against the mailclad warrior.

And before Lamk there was yet Mutawashlikh, who drove away his enemies with tough spears.

And Idris the prophet was one with status with God beyond compare with that of any ambition.

And Yārīd was a man great among his people’s leaders, scornful of the base, clear and precise in his purpose.

And Mihlayl had understanding of virtues from which all unpleasant defects had been refined away.

And Qaynān of old acquired the glory of his people, gaining the summit of prestige by the stride of his riding camels.

And Anūsh devoted himself to glory and deemed it far above base desires.

And Shith stuck to principle, a man of virtue and nobility, free of mean faults.

All of these gained from Adam’s light and from his stem gathered the fruits of goodness.

And the Messenger of God was the most noble ever born; he emerged from the line of all these fine, distinguished individuals.

His male forebears matched his female ancestors, all clear of any taint of disgrace.

May there be upon him the peace of God on every day that dawn gives us light and at every sunset too.”

Thus did Sheikh Abū ʿUmar b. Ṣāḥib al-Barr present to us this ode, as did also our Sheikh Abū al-Ḥajjāj al-Mizzi, the ḥāfiẓ, in his edition of the poetry of Abū ʿAbbās ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad al-Nāshī, known as Ibn Sharshir.

His origins were from al-Anbār. He went to Baghdad and then travelled to Egypt, where he stayed until he died in the year 293 AH. He was a Muʿtazilī theologian, and Sheikh Abū al-Ḥasan al-ʿAshʿarī wrote about him in his text al-Maqālāt, in his discussion of the Muṣṭazīla.

He was an accomplished poet, to the degree that his mastery was such that he would invent verses that reversed those of others, and composed poetry to challenge other poets, devising oratorical phrases and rhetorical flourishes they could not match. Consequently some accused him of insanity and delirium.

Al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī referred to him as having composed an ode in monorhyme that totalled some 4,000 verses. Al-Najīm quoted these and recorded his death, as stated above.

I comment that this ode gives evidence of his virtue, eloquence, knowledge, understanding, fine memory, diction, and masterly poetic skills. These verses on the noble lineage of the Prophet (SAAS) are precious jewels from his great repertoire of poetry. God bless him and reward him for all his activities.
An Account of the genealogical origins of the Arabs of Hijāz up to ‘Adnān.

These matters are due to ‘Adnān having had two sons, Maṣ‘ad and ‘Akk.

According to al-Suḥaylī, ‘Adnān also had a son named al-Ḥārith, and another named al-Madhhab. It is also stated that some include al-Dahḥāk among his sons. However, al-Dahḥāk is also said to have been a son of Maṣ‘ad, not ‘Adnān. It is also believed that ‘Adnān, for whom the city of Aden is named, and similarly Abyan, were named after sons of ‘Adnān. That is what al-Ṭabarī related.

‘Akk married into the Ash‘arī tribe and lived in their territory in Yemen. Their language became unified and some of the people of Yemen claimed them as their own. They give his line as ‘Akk b. ‘Adnān b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Āzd b. Yaghṭūth; others give the line as ‘Akk b. ‘Adnān b. al-Dhayb b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Āsad. Al-Rayth is also given as an alternative to al-Dhayb. What is true is what we have stated, that they are of the line of ‘Adnān. ʿAbbas b. Mirdās spoke the verse:

“ʿAkk b. ‘Adnān, who toyed with Ghassān until they were totally driven away.”

As for Maṣ‘ad, he had four sons: Nizār, Qudā‘a, Qanāṣ, and Iyād. Qudā‘a was Maṣ‘ad’s first-born who was commonly known by the surname of Abū Qudā‘a (father of Qudā‘a). We have earlier given a different genealogy for Qudā‘a, but it is this one that is considered correct by Ibn Isḥāq and others. And God knows best.

As for Qanāṣ, it is said that his line died out, except that al-Nuṣrān b. al-Mundhir who was Chosroes’s governor at al-Ḥira was one of his descendants, according to a number of past authorities. Another view is that he was from Himyar, as we have indicated earlier. God knows best.

As for Nizār, to him were born Rabi‘a, Muṣṭar, and Anmār. Ibn Hishām indicated that Iyād was also the son of Nizār, as was spoken in the following verse:

He stated that Iyād and Muṣṭar were full brothers, their mother being Sawda, daughter of ‘Akk b. ‘Adnān. And the mother of Rabi‘a and Anmār was Shuqayqa, daughter of ‘Akk b. ‘Adnān. Her name was also given as Jum‘a, daughter of ‘Akk b. ‘Adnān.

According to Ibn Isḥāq, Anmār was the father of Khathām and Bajila, of the tribe of Jarīr b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Bajali. He added that they went to Yemen and stayed there.

They say that Muḍar was the first to use chants with camels. That is because he had a fine voice and because one day he fell off his mount and dislocated his arm. In pain he shouted, “Wāyadayāh! Wāyadayāh!” (“Oh, my hands, my hands!”) and at that the camels stretched out their necks listening.

According to Ibn Ishaq, Muḍar b. Nizār had two sons, Ilyās and ‘Aylān. To Ilyās were born Mudrika, Ṭabikha and Qama’a; their mother was Khindif, daughter of ʿImrān b. al-Ḥāf b. Qudā’a.

Ibn Ishaq stated that Mudrika’s real name was ʿAmir, and that of Ṭabikha was ʿAmr. One day they went hunting and while they were cooking their catch, their camels ran off. ʿAmir chased after them and caught them, while his brother sat cooking. When they returned to their father and related this to him, he commented to ʿAmir, “You are Mudrika” (the catcher), while to ʿAmr he said, “You are Ṭabikha” (the cook). As for Qama’a, the genealogists of Muḍar claim that Khuza’a was a son of ʿAmr b. Luḥayy b. Qama’a b. Ilyās.

In my view it is obvious that he was a descendant of theirs and not of their father, and that they were of Ḥimyar, previously mentioned. God knows best.

Ibn Ishāq said that Mudrika gave birth to Khuzayma and Hudhayl, and that their mother was a woman from Qudā’a tribe. To Khuzayma were born Kināna, Asad, Asada, and al-Ḥūn.

Kināna gave birth to al-Ḥāḍir, Malik, ʿAbd Manāt, and Milkān. Abū Jaʿfar al-Ṭabarī added to these four ʿAmir, al-Ḥārith, al-Ḥāḍir, Ghanam, Saʿd, ʿAwf, Jarwal, al-Jarāl, and Ghazwān.

An Account of Quraysh regarding their genealogy, etymology, and merit. They are the tribe of al-Ḥāḍir b. Kināna.

According to Ibn Ishāq, the mother of al-Ḥāḍir was Barra, daughter of Murr b. Udd b. Ṭabikha (Ibn Hishām adds that Ṭabikha was the son of Ilyās b. Muḍar), while the rest of his sons were of a different mother. Ibn Hishām disagrees with Ibn Ishāq, having Barra daughter of Murr as the mother of al-Ḥāḍir, Malik, and Milkān. The mother of ʿAbd Manāt was Hāla, daughter of Suwayd b. al-Ghiṭrīf from Azd of Shantāʾa.

Ibn Hishām stated that al-Ḥāḍir was Quraysh; anyone born in his line is a Qurayshite, anyone not so born is not. He also said that some state that Fihr b. Malik was Quraysh, those of his line therefore being Qurayshite; those not of his line were non-Qurayshite.

These two statements have been handed down by more than one expert genealogist, such as Sheikh Abū ʿUmar b. ʿAbd al-Ḥarr and al-Zubayr b. Bakkār, Musʿab, and others.
According to Abū Ubayd and Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr, the majority’s view is that Quraysh derived from al-Nadr b. Kināna, based on a ḥadīth of al-Ash‘ath b. Qays. And it is this authority who was an important source for Hishām b. Muḥammad b. al-Sā‘ib al-Kalbī and Abū Ubayda Ma‘mār b. al-Muthannā; he is a prime resource for the doctrine of al-Shāfi‘ī, may God bless him.

Abū ʿUmar, moreover, chose ʿAbbās b. Malik as the originator of Quraysh, insisting that anyone today having descent from Quraysh stems from ʿAbbās b. Malik. He then related the choice made in his statement to the authority of al-Zubayr b. Bakkār, Muṣṣab al-Zubayrī and ʿAlī b. Kaysān, saying, “They are the source for this, al-Zubayr b. Bakkār having stated, ‘The genealogists of Quraysh and others are agreed that Quraysh branched off only from ʿAbbās b. Malik.’ The genealogists of Quraysh whom I have consulted consider those of his line to be Qurayshites, whereas those prior to him in their line are thought not from Quraysh.”

Abū ʿUmar then effectively substantiated this view and defended it by pointing out that he and those of similar views were those most knowledgeable of the genealogy and history of their own people.

Al-Bukhārī related from the tradition of Kulayb b. Waʿil as follows: “I said to the nursemaid (meaning Zaynab, daughter of Abūl Salama) of the Prophet (SAAS) ‘Tell me about the Prophet (SAAS). Was he from Mudār?’ She replied, ‘From whom else but from Mudār of Bana al-Nadr b. Kināna?’”

Al-Ṭabarānī said, “We were told by Ibrāhīm b. Nāʿīla al-Asbahānī, by Ismāʿīl b. ʿAmr al-Bajalī, and by al-Ḥasan b. Ṣaḍīq from his father, from al-Jashīsh al-Kindī who said, ‘A group of people from Kinda tribe came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, “You are from us,” claiming kinship with him. But he responded, “No, we’re Bana al-Nadr b. Kināna; we neither contradict our mother nor refute our father.”’”

Imām Abū ʿUthmān Saʿīd b. Yaḥyā b. Saʿīd said, “We were told by my father and by al-Kalbī on the authority of Abū Ṣaʿīd from Ibn ʿAbbās that the latter said, ‘A man from Kinda, called al-Jashīsh, came to the Prophet (SAAS) and said, “O Messenger of God, we claim ʿAbd Manāf as one of us.” The Prophet (SAAS), turned away from him. The man came back with the same comment and again was ignored. Once more he said the same. Then the Prophet (SAAS) stated, “We are from Banū al-Nadr b. Kināna. We neither contradict our mother nor refute our father.”’”

Al-Ash‘ath commented (probably to al-Jashīsh, tr.) “Shouldn’t you have stayed silent after the first time?”

This response refuted their claim, and from the tongue of his Prophet (SAAS). And this is strange also from this viewpoint; al-Kalbī, moreover, is a weak authority. But God knows best.

Imām Ahmad said that Bāz and ʿAffān related to him as follows: “We were both told by Ḥammād b. Salama that ʿUqayl b. Abū Ṭalḥa said (ʿAffān gave his name as ‘Uqayl b. Ṭalḥa al-Salmi) on the authority of Muslim b. al-Haysam from al-Ash’ath b. Qays, that the latter said that he came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) in a delegation from Kinda. (‘Affān added the words ‘who did not consider me their best man’) and said to him, ‘O Messenger of God, we claim you to be one of us.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘We are Banū al-Naḍr b. Ḳiṇāna; we neither contradict our mother nor refute our father.’"

Al-Ash’ath b. Qays commented, “By God, I never hear anyone denying that Quraysh is from al-Naḍr b. Ḳiṇāna without whipping him to the limit.”

And thus was this related by Ibn Māja along various lines of transmission from Ḥammad b. Salama.

This line of tradition is truly fine and is authoritative in this matter. No attention is due thereafter to any opposing view. But God knows best. All praise and credit belong to God.

Jarīr b. ʿAṭīyya al-Tamīmi spoke the following verses in praising Ḥishām b. ʿAbd al-Malik b. Marwān:

“The mother who gave birth to Quraysh was not one as to cause doubt as to ancestry, nor was she barren;

And no stud was of more noble stock than your father, nor was there ever an uncle more fine than Tamīm.”

Ibn Hishām stated: “Here is meant the mother of al-Naḍr b. Ḳiṇāna, who was Barra daughter of Murr, sister of Tamīm b. Murr.”

The derivation of the word Quraysh is said to come from the word al-taqrarrush, which means to join together after dispersal. This relates to the period of Quraysh b. Kilāb when they were dispersed and he brought them together at the holy sanctuary, as we shall explain. Ḥudhāfa b. Ghānim al-ʿAdawi spoke the verse:

“Your father was Qūṣayy, known as ‘the gatherer’; through him God gathered together the tribes from Fihr.”

Some say that Qūṣayy was known as Quraysh. The word meant “gathering together”; al-taqrarrush meant al-tajammu’ or “joining together”, as Abī Khalda al-Yashkuri said: “Brothers who gathered (qarrasha) upon us faults, in our recent era and also ancient . . .”

It is also said that Quraysh were so named from al-taqrarrush, a word meaning business and trading. This was related by Ibn Hishām, God have mercy on him.

Al-Jawhari said, “al-garsh means ‘earning’ and ‘accumulating’ and the verbal form is garrasha in the past tense, yaqrushu in the present tense.” Al-Farrā’ stated that it was from this word that Quraysh was named, they being a tribe and their originator al-Naḍr b. Kināna. All his descendants are Qurayshite back as far as Kināna’s son, but not before him.

Some say the word stems from the idea of *al-taḍīf*ḥ, i.e. “search”. Ḥishām b. al-Kalbī stated that al-Naḍr b. Kināna was named “Quraysh” because he would “yaqrīṣ” for what people lacked or needed, providing that with his own wealth. Al-taqrīṣ means *al-taḍīf*ḥ and his sons would *yaqrīṣ*ūnā, i.e. “search out” pilgrims in need and donate to them what they needed to return home. And so they were named “Quraysh” because of their engaging in this qaṛsh.

Al-Hārith b. Ḥillīzā made a verse to the effect that *al-taqrīr*ush meant *al-taḍīf*ḥ:

“O you who speaks and ‘searches’ (*al-maqrīṣ*ū) for us with ‘Amr, is he allowed to live?”

It was al-Zubayr b. Bakkār who related that verse.

Quraysh was also said to be a diminutive form of qaṛsh, a sea animal. A poet once said:

“Quraysh are those that inhabit the sea; for them the Quraysh were named ‘Quraysh’.”

Al-Bayhaqī said that Abū Naṣr b. Qatāda informed him that Abū al-Ḥasan ‘Aṭī b. Ḥassān al-Mālinī, quoting Muḥammad b. al-Ḥasan b. al-Khalīl al-Nisawī, related that Abū Kurayb told them from Waqī’ b. al-Jarrāh, on the authority of Hishām b. Urwa on the authority of his father from Abū Rakāna al-‘Āmīrī that Mu‘awiya asked Ibn ‘Abbās, “Why were Quraysh so named?” He replied, “After a sea creature, the biggest of all, that is called al-qaṛsh. It never passes by anything, lean or fat, without eating it.” “So recite me some verse about that,” Mu‘awiya asked, and Ibn ‘Abbās spoke the verses of al-Jumahi as follows:

“Quraysh are those that inhabit the sea; for them the Quraysh were named Quraysh, They eat all, lean or fat, not leaving a feather of any two-winged thing. Thus in the land the tribe of Quraysh eats up the land ravenously. Theirs is at the end of time a prophet; among them will he plenty of wounded and dead.”

It is also said they were named after Quraysh b. al-Hārith b. Yakhlūd b. al-Naḍr b. Kināna. He was the guide and the storeskeeper of Banū al-Naḍr. The Arabs would say, “The caravan of Quraysh” has come, instead of the “caravan of Banū al-Naḍr”. They also say that it was his son Badr b. Quraysh who dug the well attributed to him where the great battle occurred on the day of al-Furqān (“proof”, i.e. the battle of Badr) when the two armies met. God knows best.

The relative adjective derived from Quraysh is qaṛashi or qurayshi. Al-Jawhari said, “And the latter is the standard.”
A poet spoke the verse,

"Every Qurayshite (qurayshi) who is honourable, quick to fill demands for generosity and honour." 28

Muslim related in his sahih collection from a tradition of Abū 'Amr and al-Awza'î that Shaddād Abū 'Ammār related to him that Wāthila b. al-Asqa'ī told him that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "God chose Kīnāna from among the sons of Isma'īl, Quraysh from Kīınā, Ḥāshim from Quraysh and myself from the descendants of Ḥāshim."

Abū 'Amr b. 'Abd al-Barr said, "Banū 'Abd al-Mu'ttalib are known as the fāṣila, the family, of the Messenger of God (SAAS); Banū Ḥāshim was his fakhīd, his tribal subsection; Banū 'Abd Manāf was his baṭn, his tribal subdivision; Quraysh was his ʿimzra, his mini-tribe; Banū Kīnāna was his qabila, his tribal confederation; and Muḍar was his sha'b, his people. May God's blessings and peace be upon him always till the Day of Judgement."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Al-Nādar b. Kīnāna gave birth to Mālik and Yakhlud." To these Ibn Hishām added "al-Ṣalt". The mother of them all was the daughter of Sa'd b. al-Ẓarib al-Adwānī.

Kuthayyir b. 'Abd al-Ra'āmīn, who is Kuthayyir 'Azza, one of the Banū Mula'yī b. 'Amr of Khuzā'ī, spoke the verses:

"Is my father not al-Ṣalt, my brothers not the finest among the noblemen of Banū al-Naḍr?
You see on us as on them the same kerchiefs of mixed weave and the same Ḥadramī waist-wrappers
So if you are not of Banū al-Naḍr, then leave the green thorn trees at the ends of the high valleys."

Ibn Hishām said that Banū Mula'yī b. 'Amr were descendants of al-Ṣalt b. al-Naḍr.

According to Ibn Ishaq, Ghalīb b. Fihr had sons named Lu'ayy b. Ghalīb and Taym b. Ghalīb who were known as the Banū al-Adam. Their mother was Salmā, daughter of 'Amr al-Khuza'ī.

Ibn Hishām states there was another son, Qays b. Ghalīb, whose mother was Salmā, daughter of Ka'b b. 'Amr al-Khuza'ī and that she was the mother of Lu'ayy and Taym.

28. Several lines of abstruse poetry illustrating Arabic grammatical concepts have been omitted from the English translation.
According to Ibn Ishäq, Lu'ayy b. Ghalib had four sons: Ka'b, Āmir, Sama, and Āwf.

Ibn Hishäm said he was also reputed to have had another son, al-Ḥārith, and that they made up the Jusham b. al-Ḥārith among Hizzān of Rabī'a. And another son was Sa'd b. Lu'ayy who came to be the bunāna among Shaybān b. Thaqāla. Bunāna was a nursemaid for them. There was also Khuzayma b. Lu'ayy who formed the Ā'idha among Shaybān b. Thaqāla.

Then Ibn Ishäq gives the story of Sama b. Lu'ayy and how he went to Umnān and lived there. That was due to a quarrel between himself and his brother Āmir. Āmir made him afraid and so he fled to Umnān, dying there as a stranger. What happened was that while he was grazing his camel a snake bit its lip making it fall on its side. Then the snake bit and killed Sama. It is said that he wrote these verses with his finger on the ground:

“Eyes, weep for Sama b. Lu'ayy, the snake has clung to Sama.
None such as Sama b. Lu'ayy have I seen, found a dead victim of a camel.
Send a messenger to Āmir and Ka'b that my soul yearns for them.
Though my home is in Umnān I am a Ghälibi who emigrated but not from poverty.
Perhaps the glass you have poured, Ibn Lu'ayy, fearing death, has not really been poured.
You aimed to repel death, O Ibn Lu'ayy, but no one so intending has power over death,
And many a silent, plodding camel you’ve left prostrate after long, intense exercise.”

And Ibn Hishäm said that he heard that a son of Sama went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and introduced himself as descended from Sama b. Lu'ayy. The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him, “The poet?” One of his Companions then said, “O Messenger of God, you seem to be referring to his line of verse, ‘Perhaps the glass you’ve poured, Ibn Lu'ayy, fearing death, has not really been poured.’

And he answered, “Yes indeed.”

Al-Suhaylī recorded from others that Sama had no children. Al-Zubayr said, “Sama b. Lu'ayy had Ghalib, al-Nabit, and al-Ḥārith.” Others maintained that he had descendants in Iraq who hated ʿAlī. Among them was ʿAlī b. al-Jaʿad, who used to revile his father for having named him ʿAlī. Among the descendants of Sama b. Lu'ayy was Muḥammad b. ʿAr'ara b. al-Yazīd, who was the sheikh of al-Bukhārī.

Ibn Ishäq said, “They claim that Āwf b. Lu'ayy travelled with a caravan from Quraysh and to the territory of Ghaṭafān b. Sa'd b. Qays b. ʿAylān. There he was delayed so the rest of his people left him behind and went off. Then Thaqāla b.
Sa'd, he being his brother by the genealogy of Banu Dhubyān, came along, detained him, arranged his marriage, and treated him like an intimate and a brother. His relationship became widely known among Banu Dhubyān.

They say it was Tha'labā who said to 'Awf the following verse when he was delayed and left behind:

"O Ibn Lu'ayy, tether your camel with me; your people have left you and you ought not to be left."

Ibn Iṣḥāq continued to indicate that either Muḥammad b. Ja'far b. al-Zubayr, or Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Ḥusayn told him that ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb had said, "If I were to claim an attachment to any Arab tribe or that they had a relationship to us, it would be to Banu Murra b. ʿAwf. We know kindred men among them and also how they treated that man." By this he meant ʿAwf b. Lu'ayy.

He went on to relate that a man he did not distrust had told him that ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb said to some men of Banu Murra: "If you want to trace back your genealogy to your kindfolk, then trace it to ʿAwf."

Ibn Iṣḥāq added that these people were nobles of Ghatafan, their leaders and élite, with good reputation locally and in all of Ghatafan and Qays, and that they did maintain their own genealogy. If their ancestry were referred to by others, they would say, "We neither deny nor disown it. That is the ancestry we prefer." Then they would recite their verses recalling their relationship to Lu'ayy.

Ibn Iṣḥāq said that they practised the system of basl. This entailed the practice among the Arabs of considering eight months of their year as sacrosanct. The Arabs would recognize that and allow them safe-conduct in those months and they would allow them the same. Rabī'a and Muḍar, however, to my knowledge only considered four months a year as sacred, these being Dhū al-Qa'da, Dhū al-Ḥijja, al-Muḥarram; and concerning the fourth, Rajab, they differed. Muḍar considered that it fell between Jumāda and Sha'bān, while Rabī'a maintained it came between Sha'bān and Shawwal.

It has been established in both of the saḥīḥ collections, on the authority of Abī Bakrah, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated in his khaṭbat al-wadā', farewell address, "Time has revolved in its own fashion since the day God created the heavens and the earth, the year consisting of twelve months, four of which are sacred. Three of these are contiguous: Dhū al-Qa'da, Dhū al-Ḥijja, and al-Muḥarram, and there is also Muḍar's month of Rajab which comes between Jumāda and Sha'bān." Thus by saying this he expressed preference for the view of Muḍar and not for that of Rabī'a.

God the Almighty and Glorious stated in the Qurʾān, "With God the months number twelve, so ordained by God, (since) the day he created the heavens and the earth; of these four are sacred" (sūrat al-Tawba, IX, v.36).
This constitutes a reply to Bann 'Awf b. Lu'ayy for their considering the sacred months eight in number. In so doing they added to God's decree, introducing therein something which was not part thereof.

His statement in the hadith that "three are contiguous [months]" is a disapproval of the attitude of the al-nasr people who delayed the sacred month, making it Safar, rather than al-Muharram. Also, the phrase therein "Mudar's month of Rajab" is a refutation of Rabī'a's view.

Ibn Ishāq stated that Ka'b b. Lu'ayy had three sons, Murra, ʿAdi and Huṣayṣ. Murra also had three, named Kilāb, Taym and Yaqaza, from three mothers.

Kilāb gave birth to two sons, Quṣayy and Zuhra; the mother of both was Fāṭima, daughter of Sa'd b. Sayal, one of the al-Jadara of Ju'thumat al-Asad from the Yemen, who were allies of Bann al-Dīl b. Bakr b. ʿAbd Manāt b. Kināna. Of her father a poet spoke the verse:

"We have never seen any person, of all the people we have known, like Sa'd b. Sayal
A knight who combats with both his right hand and left; if his foe stood down from battle he would dismount
A knight luring horsemen to destruction like a kestrel with partridges."

According to al-Suhayli, Sayal's full name was Khayr b. Jamāla and he was the first person who had swords plated with gold and silver.

Ibn Ishāq stated that they were known as the "al-Jadara" because ʿĀmir b. ʿAmr b. Khuzayma b. Juṯumma had married the daughter of al-Ḥārith b. Muḥād the Jurhumite. The Jurhm were at that time guardians of the House of God and built a jidār, a wall, around the ka'ba; ʿĀmir was therefore named al-Jādir and his descendants al-Jadara.

An Account of Quṣayy b. Kilāb and of his part in regaining guardianship over the ka'ba for Quraysh by taking it from Khuzā'ā.

How Quraysh gathered together at the holy place which God secured for the worshippers, after having lived scattered and fragmented in the mountains and hollows.

What happened was that when his father died, Quṣayy's mother was married to Ḥubba b. ʿAbd Manāt and he took her and her son to his own country. Later, when he grew up, Quṣayy came to Mecca and married ʿHubbā, daughter of the chief of Khuzā'ā, Ḥulayl b. Ḥulshiyya.

Regarding Khuzā'ā, they say that Ḥulayl entrusted guardianship over the holy House to Quṣayy because of the large family Quṣayy had with his daughter. Ḥulayl told him, "You have more right to it than I do."
Ibn Ishaq stated that this account was heard only from Khuzā'ī. He said that others claim that he sought the assistance of his maternal brothers, their leader being Rizāh b. Rabī', and of the tribes of Kināna and Qudā'a and of some men in the Mecca region from Quraysh and others. And so he ousted them (Khuzā'ī) from the House of God and he himself assumed control over it.

This all occurred because the prerogative of the pilgrims' ījāza\(^29\) was held by the Sūfā. They were the tribe of al-Ghawth b. Murr b. Ṭābil b. Ilyās b. Muḍar. People did not throw their stones (Jimār) until they (the Sūfā) had done so, nor did they leave Mīnā before the Sūfā did; these prerogatives remained theirs until they died out.

Then Bani Sa'd b. Zayd Manāt b. Tamīm inherited these rights from them by kinship. The first of them was Ṣafwān b. al-Ḥārith b. Shijīn b. ʿUṯārid b. ʿAfw b. Ka'b b. Sa'd b. Zayd Manāt b. Tamīm. This power resided in his people until the rise of Islam in the time of the last of them, who was Karib b. Ṣafwān.

The ījāza, the descent from al-Muzdalīfā\(^30\) was the prerogative of 'Adwān until the coming of Islam in the time of the last of them, who was Abū Sayyāra ʿAmla b. al-Aʿzal. His name was said to have been al-ʿAṣ, while al-Aʿzal's name was Khalīd. He used to give people the permission while seated on a one-eyed ass he had, for 40 years moving forth on it at that station. He was the first person to establish the bloodwit at 100 camels, as well as the first to say the phrase, "Mt. Thābir shines so that we may ride forth."

That is what al-Suhaylī related.

And there was ʿAmīr b. al-Qarīb al-ʿAdwānī. In the case of all conflicts arising among the Arabs, they would come to him for adjudication and accept whatever he decided. On one occasion they asked him to resolve the matter of inheritance to a hermaphrodite. He lay awake all night reflecting on how to adjudicate this and when a slave-girl of his, Sukhayla by name, who used to pasture his sheep, saw him thus, she enquired of him, "What is wrong with you, poor thing, that you spend the night awake?" So he told her, in case she might be of help. And she replied, "Judge by where from urination comes." He commented, "Sukhayla, you've shown the way well, by God." And that was how he did decide.

Al-Suhaylī pointed out that reaching a decision by such logic constituted use of al-īstīdāl bi al-ʿamārāt wa al-ʿalāmāt, "inference from signs and indications", a method with a basis in the law. God stated in the Qurān: "And they brought his shirt with false blood upon it" (ṣūrat Yūsuf, XII, v.18) since it bore no signs of a wolf's fangs. God also stated, "If his shirt has been torn from the front, she has told the truth and he is a liar, whereas if the shirt has been torn from behind, then she lied and he is truthful” (sūrat Yūsuf, XII, v.26-7). And in the ḥadith, there are the words, “Wait for her; if she delivers it (the baby) as comely, light-brown, and with curly locks, then indeed it is (the child) of him whom she was accused of being with.”

Ibn Ishāq went on to state that al-nāṣr, the postponement of sacred months, was decided by the time of Fuqaym b. ‘Adi b. ‘Amir b. Tha‘laba b. al-Ḥarīth b. Mālik b. Kināna b. Khuzayma b. Mudrika b. Iyās b. Muṣṭar. He reported that the first of the Arabs to intercalate the months was al-Qalāmmas, who was Ḥudhayfa b. ‘Abd b. Fuqaym b. ‘Adi. After him came his son ‘Abbād, and then Qalā‘ b. ‘Abbād, followed by Umayya b. Qala‘ and ‘Awf b. Umayya. The last of them was Ābū Thumāmah Junāda b. ‘Awf b. Qalā‘ b. ‘Abbād b. Ḥudhayfa, the last named being al-Qalāmmas. Islam arose during Ābū Thamāmah’s time.

When the Arabs had completed the pilgrimage they would gather around him and he would address them, specifying which months were sacred. If he wanted to establish a free period, he would declare al-Muḥarram free and substitute Safar for it to accord with the number of months God had made sacred. He would state, “O God, I have made free the first of the al-Safar months, and postponed the others till next year.” And the Arabs would follow him in that. On this matter the following verses were spoken by ‘Umayr b. Qays, one of Bānū Firās b. Ghanm b. Mālik b. Kināna; ‘Umayr was also known as Jadhīl al-Ṭīfān:

“Ma‘ād have learned that my people are noble, that they have noble forebears. Which people have escaped our retribution and which have we not bridled? Are we not those who intercalate for Ma‘ād, deciding which free months shall be made sacred?”

Qūṣayy was lord and master over his people, obeyed and revered. Eventually he gathered Quraysh together from their various locations in the Arabian peninsula and gained the help of the Arab tribes that obeyed him in making war on Kuḥṣā‘a, in removing them from the House of God, and in handing over its guardianship to himself. They engaged in many battles with much bloodshed and then agreed upon arbitration. They appointed as arbitrator Ya‘mur b. ‘Awf b. Ka‘b b. ‘Amir b. Layth b. Bakr b. ‘Abd Manāt b. Kināna who decreed that Qūṣayy was more fit for guardianship over the House than Kuḥṣā‘a was. He ruled that all losses inflicted on Qūṣayy by Kuḥṣā‘a and Bānū Bakr were an issue that should be “crushed underfoot”, and that what losses Kuḥṣā‘a and Bānū Bakr had received from Quraysh, Kināna, and Quda‘a should be compensated by bloodwit payment. His decision meant that Qūṣayy should be given free access to Mecca and the ka‘ba. Thereat Ya‘mur was nicknamed al-Shадhdhakh, “the crusher”.

Ibn Ishāq further related that Qusayy thus gained guardianship over the House and control over Mecca. He brought together to Mecca his people from their dwellings and acted as king over them and over all the Meccans as well; and they treated him as king. However, he confirmed the Arabs in their prior practices, considering that to be a duty incumbent upon himself that he ought not change. He thus confirmed Ṣafwān, ʿAdwān, al-nassāʿ, “the intercalators”, and Murra b. ʿAwp in their previous practices, until Islam came and God destroyed all of that.

Qusayy was the first of Banū Kaʿb who took the kingship and was obeyed as such by his people. He had rights of the ḥijāba, the saqāya, the riṣāda, the nadwa, and the liwa. Thus he controlled all of Mecca’s honours. He divided up Mecca among his people into quarters and he settled each family of Quraysh into their dwellings there.

And so I say, that thus right was done to those worthy of it, justice returning after having left. Quraysh settled in their dwellings, ended the aims and aspirations of Khuzāʾa, and regained their ancient and venerable house. Nevertheless, they kept what Khuzāʾa had instituted, including the worship of idols, setting them up around the kaʿba, making sacrifice to them, praying near them, and beseeching help and fortune from them.

Qusayy settled the Quraysh tribes in the plains and also in the heights of Mecca and they were henceforth known respectively as the “plains Quraysh” and the “highland Quraysh”.

Qusayy b. Kilāb enjoyed total authority, including being guardian and keeper of the kaʿba and the awarde of battle banners. He also constructed a building to prevent violence and resolve disputes; this he named the dār al-nadwa, the assembly house. When a conflict became serious the chiefs of each of the tribes would meet, take counsel there, and decide the issue. All contracts and marriage agreements would be made there. And that was also the only place where a girl would first wear the dara, the sleeved chemise, when she reached the age to do so.

The door to this building was facing the masjid al-ḥarām, the holy mosque. Later it became owned by Ḥakīm b. Ḥizām, after belonging to Banū ʿAbd al-Dār. He sold it, during the reign of Muʿāwiya, for 100,000 dirhams. Muʿāwiya criticized him for having done so, saying, “You’ve sold your people’s honour for 100,000.”

But Ḥakīm replied, “But today nobility is measured by one’s piety. I bought it, by God, before Islam for a skinful of wine and now here I’ve sold it for 100,000. And I swear that the money will go to charity in God’s cause, so which of us had been cheated?” This was related by al-Dārquṭnī in the Asmāʾ Rijāl al-Muwāṭṭaʾ (Identities of the Men in the Muwaṭṭaʾ) (of Malik b. Anas).

31. These terms refer, respectively, to the guardianship of the temple, the provision of water for the pilgrims, the provision of food for them, the presiding over their assemblies, and the issuance of the banners carried by them.
He had the prerogative of providing drink for the pilgrims; they drank only from his cisterns. At that time, in Mecca the holy well, zamzam, was obliterated, as it had been since the time of Jurhum. People had forgotten about it because of its great antiquity and they could not locate its whereabouts. According to al-Waqidi, Qusaayy was the first person to institute lighting a fire at al-Muzdalifa to guide people coming there from ‘Arafat.

The word al-risāda means providing food for the pilgrims during the pilgrimage season until they leave to return to their own countries.

Ibn Ishaq went on to relate that Qusaayy had imposed this risāda on his people, having said, “O People of Quraysh, you are God’s neighbours and the inhabitants of Mecca and of the holy places. The pilgrims are God’s guests and visitors to His House. They have full right to hospitality. So provide food and drink for them during the pilgrimage days, until they depart from you.” And so they did. Each year they would set aside a portion of their wealth as a tribute they would pay him. He would use it to provide food for the people during the days they were at Minā. This practice was followed at his command during al-jāhiliyya, the pre-Islamic period, and it has passed on thereafter up to the present. It is the food the sultan provides for people at Minā each year until the pilgrimage ends.

My own comment is to add that this practice ended after the time of Ibn Ishaq. It was then ordered that a portion of the bayt al-mal, the general treasury, be spent to transport food and drink for wayfarers arriving for the pilgrimage. This was a good policy for reasons too many to mention. But duty dictates that this expense should come directly from the treasury as a priority; most appropriately, it should come from the masses of the dhimma, the protected non-Muslims, since they do not make pilgrimage to the ancient House. It is stated in the hadith sayings, “Regarding him who is able to make the pilgrimage but does not do so, let him die, if he wishes, a Jew or a Christian.”

One of their poets said in praise of Qusaayy and his honour among his people.

“Qusaayy was known, I swear it, as the ‘gatherer’; through him God gathered together the tribes of Fīhhr.

They filled the plain with glory and power and drove from us the satanic Banū Bakr.”

Ibn Ishaq related that when Qusaayy had finished his war, his brother Rizāh b. Rabī‘a left for his own country accompanied by his three paternal brothers, who were Ḥunn, Mahmūd, and Julhuma by name. And Rizāh spoke the following verses in responding to Qusaayy:

“When an envoy came from Qusaayy saying, ‘Respond to your friend’,

We arose to him leading our fine horses, leaving aside the slow and overweight.

We travelled with them by night till dawn, sheltering by day to survive.
They were speedy as sand-grouse to the water, as we answered Quṣāy’s messenger. We gathered men from al-SIRR\textsuperscript{32} and the two Ashmadhs,\textsuperscript{33} collecting tribesmen from each village.

What a band of horse that night, over a thousand, running free and fast. When they passed by ʿAsjar and took the quick route from Mustanākḥ, Skirting the edge of Wariqān and passing by al-ʿArj and a tribe encamped, Overstepping the pasture, not tasting it, racing on, night-long, from Marr, Keeping the colts near their dams to minimize their neighing. When reaching Mecca, we destroyed the men tribe after tribe, Switching them with our sword-blades, rendering them witless from all sides Crushing them beneath our horses’ hooves, as does the strong and mighty to the lowly.

We killed Khuzāʿa in their own home, and Bakr group by group. We banished them from the Sovereign’s land, so that they would never settle good land again, We captured them in irons and quenched our vengeance thirst from all their tribes.”

According to Ibn Ishaq, when Rizāḥ returned home, God gave him increase. He also gave Hunn increase; they constitute the two tribes of ʿUdhrā to this day. Again according to Ibn Ishaq, Quṣāyy b. Kilāb said in that regard,

“I am the son of Banū Luʿayy, the defenders; my home is in Mecca, there was I raised, And on to the plains, as Maʿad learned; with its lush pastures I was really content. I would not have conquered it, had the sons of Qaydhar and al-ʿNābit not settled there. Rizāḥ was my supporter and by him I came supreme; I fear no evil for as long as I shall live.”

According to al-Umawi, citing al-Ashram from Abī Ubayda, from Muḥammad b. Ḥafṣ, Rizāḥ only arrived after Quṣāyy had expelled Khuzāʿa. God knows best.

Section.

When Quṣāyy grew old he entrusted all the prerogatives he had enjoyed – leadership of Quraysh and its honour of governing the provision of food and drink for the pilgrims, guardianship of the House, the issuance of banners, and the summoning of assemblies – to his son ʿAbd al-ʿDār, who was his oldest.

He only entrusted him with all these prerogatives because the rest of his brothers, ʿAbd Manāf, ʿAbd Shams, and ʿAbd had become noblemen during their father’s rule and had attained great power and prestige. Thus Quṣayy wished for ʿAbd al-Dār to be equal to them in prestige and so gave him alone these powers. ʿAbd al-Dār’s brothers did not dispute his action. But when they all had passed away their sons came into conflict about this and said, “Quṣayy only entrusted ʿAbd al-Dār with all that to equalize him with his brothers; we are entitled to what our fathers were due.”

ʿAbd al-Dār’s family replied, “This is a matter that Quṣayy decided in our favour, and we have the greater right.”

And so a great dispute arose among them; and Quraysh split into two factions, one giving allegiance and alliance to the family of ʿAbd al-Dār, the other to the family of ʿAbd Manāf with whom they made a formal pact. Upon making the oath they placed their hands into a deep dish containing perfume. Then they went and wiped their hands on the corners of the kaʿba. This was thereafter known as the “Treaty of the Perfumed”.

On the ʿAbd Manāf side there were the Quraysh tribes of Banū Asad b. ʿAbd al-ʿUzza b. Quṣayy, Banū Zuhra, Banū Taym, and Banū al-Ḥārith b. Fihr. On the side of ʿAbd al-Dār’s descendants were Banū Makḥzūm, Banū Sahm, Banū Jumāḥ, and Banū ʿAdi. The tribes of Banū ʿAmir b. Luʿayy and Muḥārib b. Fihr remained separate from the rest, not allying with either side.

Ultimately they made peace, agreeing that the prerogatives of feeding and watering the pilgrims should be held by Banū ʿAbd Manāf, while those of guardianship of the kaʿba, issuance of banners, and calling of assemblies were to be held by Banū ʿAbd al-Dār. This arrangement became firm and permanent.

Al-Umawi related from al-Ashram, on the authority of AbnʿUbayda that a number of the Khwā claim that after Quṣayy had married Ḥubbā daughter of Hulayl, he (Hulayl) found the guardianship of the kaʿba onerous and passed it on to his daughter Ḥubbā, appointing Abū Ghusbshān Salīm b. ʿAmr b. Luʿayy b. Malkān b. Quṣayy b. Ḥāritha b. ʿAmr b. ʿAmir as her trustee for it. Quṣayy purchased the guardianship of the kaʿba from him for a skin of wine and a young riding camel. And so there arose the saying, “A worse deal than that of Abū Ghusbshān!” When Khuzāʿa saw this happen they attacked Quṣayy, who called for assistance from his brother; when he and his men arrived the issue was resolved as reported above. Ultimately Quṣayy passed on the prerogatives of protection and guardianship of the House, issuance of banners, calling of assemblies, and feeding and watering the pilgrims to his son ʿAbd al-Dār, as will be related in detail. The ijāza, giving permission to leave Muzdalifah, was established as a right of Banū ʿAdwān, the nasr, the right of calendar intercalation, went to Fuqaym, while the Ṣūfā enjoyed that of ijāza, that is, of the nafr, the giving of the signal to leave Minā. All this information on the prerogatives of these people has been detailed above.
Ibn Ishāq stated that Quṣayy had four sons and two daughters, the sons being ʿAbd Manāf, ʿAbd al-Ḍār, ʿAbd al-ʿUzza, and ʿAbd, the daughters Takhmūr and Barra. The mother of all these was Ḥubbā, daughter of Ḥūayl b. Ḥubshiyya b. Sallūb b. Kaḥb b. ʿAmr, al-Khuzāʿī. It was from Ḥūayl that Quṣayy b. Kilāb took control over the Sacred House.

According to Ibn Hīṣam, ʿAbd Manāf b. Quṣayy had four sons, Hāshim, ʿAbd Shams, and al-Muttaḥalīb, their mother being ʿĀṭika daughter of Murra b. Hīlāl. Another son of his was Nawfāl b. ʿAbd Manāf, his mother being Wāqīda, daughter of ʿAmr al-Māziniyya.

Ibn Hīṣam stated as well that ʿAbd Manāf also fathered Abū ʿAmr, Tumāḏīr, Qulāba, Ḥayya, Rayṭa, Umm al-Akhṭam, and Umm Sufyān.

Also according to Ibn Hīṣam, Hāshim b. ʿAbd Manāf had four (sic) sons and five daughters. The sons were named ʿAbd al-Muttaḥalīb, Asad, and Abū Sayfī; the daughters were Nadīla, al-Shaffī, Khālīda, Daʿīfa, Ruqayyā, and Ḥayya. The mother of ʿAbd al-Muttaḥalīb and Ruqayyā was Salmā, daughter of ʿAmr b. Zayd b. Labīd b. Khīdāsh b. ʿAmr b. Ghanm b. Ādī b. al-Najjar from Medina. Ibn Hīṣam also gave the names of the mothers of the remaining children.

He stated that ʿAbd al-Muttaḥalīb had ten sons and six daughters. The sons were al-ʿAbbās, Ḥamza, ʿAbd Allāh, Abū Ṭaḥlib (whose name was ʿAbd Manāf and not ʿUmrān), al-Zubayr, al-Ḥārith, who was the first-born of his father who was therefore accorded his name, Ḥajl (whom some name as Ḥajj), who was nicknamed al-Ghaydaq, “the liberal”, for his generosity, al-Muqawwim, Dirār, and Abū Lahāb (whose name was ʿAbd al-ʿUzza). His daughters’ names were Ṣafīyya, Umm Ḥakīm al-Bayḍaʿ, ʿĀṭika, Ummayma, ʿArwā, and Barra. And Ibn Hīṣam also gave the names of their mothers. He stated that the mother of ʿAbd Allāh, Abū Ṭaḥlib, al-Zubayr and all the girls except Ṣafīyya was Ṣāʿīma, daughter of ʿAmr b. Qīdh b. ʿUmrān b. Makhzūm b. Yaqẓa b. Murra b. Kaḥb b. Luʿayy b. Ghalīb b. Fīrār b. Mālīk b. al-Nādir b. Khīzayma b. Khuzayma b. Mudrīka b. Iyās b. Muḍār b. Nizār b. Maʿād b. ʿAdnān.

He said further that ʿAbd Allāh fathered Muḥammad, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), the lord of all Adam’s children. His mother was Āmina daughter of Wāḥb b. ʿAbd Manāf b. Zuhra b. Kilāb b. Murra b. Kaḥb b. Luʿayy. He then gave mention of all her maternal forebears.

Ibn Hīṣam concluded that the Prophet (ṢAAS) was the most noble of Adam’s children in worthiness and descent from both his father and his mother. Previously recounted is the following statement of al-Awzaʿī on the authority of Shaddād Abū ʿAmmār from Wāṭhila b. al-ʿAsqāʾ: “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘God chose Ṣāʿīma from Isḥaq’s progeny and Quraysh from Kināna, Hāshim from Quraysh, and myself from Hāshim.’” Muslim recounted this tradition.
There will follow hereafter an account of the noble birth of the Prophet (SAAS) and of the events and circumstances surrounding it. And in recounting his honoured ancestry there will be other useful information not here given, if God Almighty so wills it, and in Him is all trust and reliance.

An Account of a variety of events that occurred in the jahiliyya.

It has already been recounted how Jurhum assumed control over the House from Banū Isma‘īl out of envy for them because they were the children of their daughters. And similarly how it was that Khuzā‘a fell upon Jurhum and took over the House from them, and how ultimately its guardianship fell to Qusayy and his sons, continuing in their hands until God sent his Messenger (SAAS) and how those prerogatives became established as they were.

Section: Information about a group of men famous in the jahiliyya.

An Account of Khālid b. Sinān the ‘Absite who lived in the inter-prophet period and who some allege was a prophet.

But God knows best.

The ḥāfiz Abū al-Qāsim al-Ṭabarānī stated that Aḥmad b. Zuhayr al-Tasaturrī related, quoting Yahyā b. al-Mu‘allā b. Mansūr al-Rāzī, quoting Muḥammad b. al-Ṣalt, quoting Qays b. al-Rabī‘, from Sālim al-Aftās, from Sa‘īd b. Jubayr, and from Ibn ‘Abbās as follows, “The daughter of Khalid b. Sinān came to the Prophet (SAAS) and he smoothed out his robe for her (to sit on), saying, ‘Here’s the daughter of a prophet whose people squandered him.’”

The ḥāfiz Abū Bakr al-Bazzār reported it from Yahyā b. al-Mu‘allā b. Mansūr, from Muḥammad b. al-Ṣalt, from Qays, from Sālim, from Sa‘īd, from Ibn ‘Abbās, as follows, “Someone made reference to Khalid b. Sinān in the presence of the Messenger of God (SAAS) who commented, ‘That was a prophet whose people squandered him.’”

Al-Bazzār then said, “And we have no direct reference of this hadith to the Prophet other than in this form. Qays b. al-Rabī‘ was highly respected, though he was not regarded as having been a good memorizer. He had a son who would add extraneous material into the traditions he related. But God knows best.” Al-Bazzār stated, “This hadith was also related by al-Thawrī from Sālim al-Aftās, transmitted forward indirectly from Sa‘īd b. Jubayr.”

The ḥāfiz Abū Ya‘qūb al-Mawsili stated that al-Mu‘allā b. Mahdī al-Mawsili related to him, as did Abū ʿAwāna, from Abū Yūnis, from ʿAkrama and down to Ibn ʿAbbās, that a man from ʿAbs called Khālid b. Sinān said to his people, “I shall put out from you the fire of al-Harratayn!” But one of his people responded, “O Khalid, you have only ever told us the truth; what have you to do with the fire of al-Harratayn you claim you will extinguish?”

So Khalid went forth accompanied by some of his people, including Umâra b. Ziyâd, until they reached where the fire emerged from a fissure in the mountain. Khalid then drew a line at which he made them sit, saying, “If I am delayed, do not call for me by my name.” As the fire spurted out, it looked like sorrel-red horses following one another. Khalid approached it and began beating it with his stick saying, “Badâ, badâ, badâ kullu hudâ; the son of the goatherds woman claimed I won’t come out from it bearing my clothes in my hand.” Then he went inside the fissure with the fire. When he had been gone a long time, Umâra b. Ziyâd said to Khalid’s people, “By God, if he were alive he would have come out to you by now!” Some said, “Call out to him by name.”

The account continued, indicating that others replied, “He forbade us to call him by his name.” But some did so and he emerged carrying his head, complaining, “Didn’t I forbid you to call me by name? By God, you’ve killed me, so bury me! And if some donkeys pass, one of which is bobtailed, then exhume me and you’ll find me alive.”

They did bury him and some donkeys did pass by, one of them being bobtailed. So some wanted to exhume him as he had told them to do but Umâra argued, “No don’t exhume him. By God, Muḍar won’t go around saying that we dig up our dead!” Khalid had also told them, “In my wife’s possession there are two tablets into which you must look if you should have difficulties; if you do so you will find a response to your questions. But do not let a menstruating woman touch them.” They therefore went to his wife and asked her about these tablets and she brought them out. However, she was in menstruation, and so whatever knowledge was in them had gone.

Abû Yûnus stated that Sammâk b. Harb responded that the Prophet (SAAS) was asked about Khalid and he replied, “That was a prophet whose people squandered him.”

Abû Yûnus also reported that Sammâk b. Harb said that the son of Khalid b. Sinân came to the Prophet (SAAS) who told him, “Welcome to my brother’s son!” This comment is traced back to Ibn ‘Abbâs who makes no reference to his being a prophet. The accounts that do so cannot use this comment as a proof that he was a prophet. What is most probable is that he was a pious man with certain qualities and gifts. This is because if he had indeed lived in the inter-prophet period, it was firmly established as incontrovertible in the sahih collection of al-Bukhari that the Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, “The closest of men to Jesus son of Mary is myself, for there came no prophet between him and me.” And if Khalid had lived earlier, he could not have been a prophet, because God Almighty stated, “that you may warn a people to whom no Warner had come before you” (sūrat al-Sajda, XXXII, v.3).

A number of scholars have stated that God Almighty sent no prophet to the Arabs after Ishmael except Muḥammad (ṢAAS), the Seal of the Prophets mentioned by Abraham, God’s true follower, who built the venerated ka'ba which God made the direction of prayer as a law for all the earth’s people; and the other prophets announced to their peoples his coming, right on up to the last of them to do so, namely Jesus son of Mary, upon whom be peace.

And in this same way may be refuted the reports of al-Suhayli and others concerning the dispatch to the Arabs of another prophet named Shu'ayb b. Dhi Muhdhim b. Shu'ayb b. Ṣafwān, lord of Madyan. Also the story that Ḥanẓalā b. Ṣafwān was sent to the Arabs and that since both he and Shu'ayb had been disowned, God imposed Bukhtunaṣṣār (Nebuchadnezzar) over the Arabs who suffered from him killing and captivity similar to those endured by the Israelites; all this occurred in the time of Ma‘ad b. ʿAdnān.

What is evident is that these people were all good men advocating righteousness. But God knows best. We have previously given mention of ʿAmr b. Luḥayy b. Qamʿa b. Khindif in the account of Khuzā'ā following Jurhum.

An Account of Ḥātim al-Ṭāʾi, a good and generous man of the jāhiliyya period.

He was Ḥātim b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Saʿd b. al-Ḥashrāj b. Ḫurrāb al-Qays b. ʿAdī b. Ḥāzm b. Abū Ḥāzm, the name of the last being Harūmā b. Rabīʿa b. Jarwāl b. Thaʿālī b. ʿAmr b. al-Ghwath b. Ṭayy? Abū Saffāna al-Ṭāʾi. Ḥātim was the father of ʿAdī b. Ḥātim al-ṣaḥābi, “the Companion of the Prophet”. He was a generous man much praised in the jāhiliyya period, as was his son after the coming of Islam.

Ḥātim was a man of such distinction and generosity that many extraordinary events and strange accounts are associated with him. However, by these deeds he did not seek the grace of God or the hereafter but was motivated by desire for fame and recognition.

The ḥāfiz Abū Bakr al-Bazzār stated in his compilation of traditions that Muḥammad b. Muʿammār related to him, as did ʿUbayd b. Wāqid the Qaysite, as did Abū Naṣr who was al-Nāji, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Dīnār, from Ibn ʿUmar that Ḥātim was referred to in the presence of the Prophet (ṢAAS) and he commented, “That man wanted something, and he attained it.”

This is a curious tradition. Al-Dārquṭnī said that ʿUbayd b. Wāqid was unique in transmitting it, on the authority of Abū Naṣr al-Nāji, whose name is said to have been Ḥammād.

Imām ‘Abd al-Malik b. Hanbal stated that Yazīd b. ‘Isā al-Qurashi related to him, as did Sufyān, from Sāmzāk b. Ḥarb, from Māri b. Qatārī, from ‘Adī b. Ḥātim who stated that he said to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); “My father was very generous to his kinsfolk and very active on their behalf; does he get something for that, some reward?” He responded, “Your father had sought something, and he attained it.”

This tradition was similarly reported by Abu Ya‘la, from al-Qawārīn, from Ghandar, from Shu‘ba, from Sāmzāk, in the form: “He responded, ‘Your father had wanted something, and he got it.’” By this he meant reputation. Abu al-Qāsim al-Baghwānī related it thus, from ‘Aḥmad b. al-Ja‘d from Shu‘ba.

In the saḥīḥ tradition compendium it has been established that the three kinds of people by whom the fires of hell are fed include the man who spends his money (on others) so that he will be considered generous. His pay-off is in having that said of him on earth. So, too, is it with the scholar and the warrior. And in another tradition in the saḥīḥ it tells how people asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) about ‘Abd Allāh b. Judān b. ‘Amr b. Ka‘b b. Sa‘d b. Taym b. Murra, saying, “He was hospitable, freed slaves, and gave to charity; did that benefit him?” He responded, “But he never once said, ‘O God, forgive me my sins on Judgement Day.’” This man was also one of those who were famous for their generosity, who gave food in years of famine and times of destitution.

The hāfīz Abu Bakr al-Bayhaqī stated that he was informed by the hāfīz Abu ‘Abd Allāh, Abu Bakr Muḥammad b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Yūsuf al-‘Umānī, that Abu Sa‘īd ‘Ubayd b. Kathīr b. ‘Abd al-Waḥīd al-Kūfī related to him, as did Dirār b. Śurd, and Aṣīm b. Ḥamīd, from Abu Ḥamza al-Thāmilī, from ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Jandāb, from Kumayl b. Ziyād al-Nakhī who said that ‘Alī b. Abū Ta‘līb exclaimed, “Glory be to God! How many a man acts pious for gain! How strange is someone who is approached by his Muslim brother in need yet does not see his way to doing good. For even if he did not hope for reward or fear punishment he ought to make haste in acting with nobility for it is such deeds that lead to success.”

A man thereupon arose to ask him, “O Commander of the Believers, I pledge you my father and my mother, did you hear that from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)?” ‘Alī replied, “Yes. And I’ve a tale even better than that. When Tā’ī’s women were brought in as captives, one of them was red-haired, cherry-lipped, smooth-skinned, slender-necked, fine-nosed, with a straight figure, raised head, full ankles, plump legs, rounded thighs, slim waist, slender sides and well-shaped body. I was much struck by her when I saw her and said I would request the Messenger of God (SAAS) to award her to me in my portion of the booty. But when she spoke I forgot her beauty for the eloquence I heard. She said, 'O Muhammad, will you not release me and spare me the malicious gloating of the Arab tribes, for I am the daughter of the leader of my people. My father was guardian of our sacred objects, he relieved the distressed, fed the hungry, clothed the naked, gave generous hospitality, provided the best of food, spread peace abroad and never refused the request of the needy. I am the daughter of Hátim al-Ṭā'ī.'

"The Prophet (SAAS) replied, 'O girl, all that truly describes the believers. Had your father been a believer, we would certainly have been merciful to him. Release her, for her father was a man who loved to perform good deeds, and God Almighty loves good deeds.'

"At that Abū Burda b. Niyār arose and said, 'O Messenger of God, does God really love good deeds?'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, 'By him in whose hand is my soul, no one will enter heaven except by good deeds.'"

Abū Bakr b. Abū al-Dunyā stated that 'Umar b. Bakr related to him, from Abū 'Abd al-Rahmān al-Ṭā'ī (his name being al-Qāsim b. 'Adi) from 'Uthmān; from 'Arāki b. Hulays al-Ṭā'ī, from his father, from his grandfather (who was the brother of 'Adi b. Hátim from his mother's side), that someone said to al-Nawār, wife of Hátim, "Tell us about Hátim."

She replied, "Everything about him was wonderful. Once we were afflicted with a year of utter desolation when the earth quaked, the skies filled with dust and wet nurses were too drained to suckle their children. The camels had become completely emaciated, their bones showing through, and not producing a drop of milk. And our money was all dried up.

"One interminable, cold night, with the small children writhing from hunger (their names were 'Abd Allāh and 'Adi and Saffānā), he said, 'By God, we don't have anything to pacify them with.' So he arose to one of the boys and lifted him up, while I went over to the girl to pacify her. And, by God, they only quietened down after a good part of the night had elapsed. After that we went to the other boy and rocked him until he became quiet, or almost so.

"Then we spread out a frayed Syrian rug we had and laid out the children on it, with me and him sleeping in the one room with the children in between us. Then he approached me, soothing me so I would sleep. I knew what he wanted, so I pretended to sleep. He asked, 'How are you? Have you fallen asleep?' I said nothing and he commented, 'I see that she has fallen asleep, but I'm not sleepy.'

"When the night became pitch black, the stars having almost disappeared and there was neither sound nor movement astir, the side of our tent was lifted. He called out, 'Who is there?' The person went away. At daybreak, or thereabouts, he again said, 'Who is there?' and a woman replied, 'It is your neighbour so-and-so, Abū ‘Adī; I have no one to turn to but you. I’m coming to you from my children who are moaning like wolves from their hunger. ‘Bring them to me quickly,’ he told her.”

Al-Nawār went on, “I jumped up and exclaimed, ‘What are you doing? Lie down! Your children are writhing from hunger and you’ve no means to soothe them, so what can you do for her and her children?’ He responded, ‘Be silent; by God, I will satisfy you, if God wills it.’”

She went on, “So in she came, carrying two children and with four others walking at her side, as though she were an ostrich surrounded by her chicks. Then he went over to his horse, thrust his spear in its upper chest and struck his flint and lit a fire. Next he brought a long knife and skinned the horse after which he handed the knife to the woman saying, ‘After you.’ Then he said, ‘Now send your children.’ And she did so. Then he said (to al-Nawzr) ‘You, evil woman, would you eat something before a poor man’s children!’

“He then went all round to each one of them until they had all got up and approached the horse. Then he wrapped himself up in his cloak and stretched out to one side watching us. And, by God, he did not taste one bite himself, even though he was the most of all in need. And by next morning there was nothing of the horse left but bones and hooves!”

Al-Dāqrūnī stated that Qādī (judge) Abū ‘Abd Allah al-Muḥāmīlī related to him, as did ‘Abd Allah b. Abū Sa’d, as did Uthaym b. Thawāba b. Ḥātim al-Tā’mī from his father, from his grandfather, that Ḥātim’s wife said to Ḥātim, “O Abū Saffāna, I desire that you and I eat alone together, with no one else there.” So he gave her instructions, and she moved her tent a parasang, a couple of miles, away from the rest. He ordered food and it was prepared, and the tent curtains were let down for him and for her. When the food was cooked, he took off his head-covering, then spoke these verses,

But at that hill light the fire with heavy wood if you do light it, not with quick kindling wood.”

The narrator continued, “Then he drew aside the curtains, brought out the food and invited in the people. He and they then ate. She told him, ‘You haven’t fulfilled what you said.’ And he responded, ‘I couldn’t bring myself to do it. My spirit was too noble to bring blame on me for this, when before I have always been generous.’ He then spoke the following:

‘I oppose the miser’s spirit till I overcome it and leave alone that of the generous man, not battling it.

My neighbour woman has no complaint of me except that I do not visit her when her husband is away.”
My goodness shall attain her, and her husband will return to her, while her veils have not fallen short for her.’”

Hātim’s verse includes the following:

“If I spent the night drinking and drinking in order to get drunk, may I never quench my thirst!
If I spent the night deceiving my neighbour to cheat with his wife, hiding by the dark, may I never be unseen!
Would I disgrace my neighbour woman and betray my neighbour?
By God, that I’ll never do so long as I live.”

And also:

“It never harmed my neighbour next to whom I live that his door had no curtain;
I look down when my neighbour’s wife appears, until the women’s quarters hide her again.”

He also recited:

“It’s not of my nature to curse a cousin or to reject someone’s request,
And many an envious word I’ve heard for no wrongdoing on my part and said, ‘Let it pass and spare me.’
They blamed it on my account but it never blemished me; my forehead never sweated for it.
The two-faced finds me free but does not imitate me when he leaves.
I overcome his evil and turn from him, preserving my repute and my faith.”

And also he composed:

“Ask, O Umm Malik, the wretched and cold if, when he comes to me between my fire and larder, I smile on him. He is the first person served; on him I lavish charity, denying him not.”

He also said:

“If you give your stomach its request, and your sexual desire too, they’ll both together reach the utmost blame.”

The judge Abū al-Faraj al-Muqafā b. Zakariyya al-Jariri said that al-Ḥusayn b. al-Qasim al-Kawkabi related to him, as did Abū ʿAbbās al-Mubarrid that al-Thawri told him, from Abū ʿUbayda, that when the following verses of al-Mutalammis reached Hātim al-Ṭāʿī,

“One of little wealth you can repair and he survive, but not the man of much corruption.
And preserving wealth is better than exhausting it and wandering abroad without provisions”, he said, "What's wrong with him, may God cut his tongue! Is he advising people to be miserly? Should he not have said, 'Generosity will not exhaust one's wealth before its going, nor stinginess increase the miser's wealth.

So don't seek wealth through living miserly; for every day there's a blessing that comes anew.

Do you not see that wealth comes and goes, and that He who gives to you is not far away.'"

The judge Abū al-Faraj commented, "He (Ḥātim) spoke well with those words, 'He who gives to you is not far away,' and if he had been a Muslim, good would have been hoped for him in the hereafter. For God stated in the Qurʾān, "Ask of God from His bounty" (ṣūrat al-Nisā', IV, v.32) and also, "If my servants ask you about me (then say) that I am nigh and that I answer the call of those who pray to me" (ṣūrat al-Baqara, II, v.186).

And from al-Waddāḥ b. Maḥbad al-Ṭāʾi comes the account that Ḥātim al-Ṭāʾi presented himself at the court of al-Nuʾmān b. al-Mundhir, who received and honoured him. Then upon his departure he gave him two camels loaded with gold and silver, as well as valued produce of his land. So off went Ḥātim, to be met by bedouins of the Ṭayyī tribe as he approached home. They addressed him thus, "O Ḥātim, you've just come from the king, whereas we have come from our people in poverty!" Ḥātim responded, "Come and take what I have, and distribute it amongst you." They rushed forward to do so, taking and distributing the gifts of al-Nuʾmān. Then his maidservant, Tiṭafa, came out to Ḥātim and said, "Both be pious and keep some for yourself; these people won't leave you a dinar or a dirham, a sheep or a camel." Ḥātim responded by speaking the verses,

"Ṭarifa said: 'You keep us no dirhams, though we are neither wasteful nor overburdened with them.'

If what we have is used up, then God will provide for us from someone else and it is not we who will provide for ourselves.

No sooner does the dirham get acquainted with our rags than it passes on over and leaves again.

If our dirhams were once to assemble together, they'd compete with one another for ways to give charity."

Abū Bakr b. 'Ayyāsh said that Ḥātim was once asked whether any other Arab was more generous than he and he replied, "All the Arabs are more generous than me!" Ḥātim then went on to relate that once he overnighted with a young Arab, an orphan, who had 100 sheep. So he slaughtered for him one ewe and when he brought it in and offered him its brain, Ḥātim commented, "What delicious brain!" Thereupon the young Arab kept on bringing him more and more of it until he told him he had had enough. Next morning Ḥātim found out that the young Arab had killed all 100 of the sheep and had nothing at all left for himself! Ḥātim was asked what he did then, and he replied, “However could I thank him enough if I were to do all in the world for him? But in any case, I did give him 100 of my very best camels.”

Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar al-Kharaʾiti stated in his book Makārim al-Akhlaq (Acts of Nobility of Character), that al-ʿAbbās b. al-ʿAbd al-Rabīʿ related to him, as did Ishāq b. ʿAbrahīm, as did Ḥammād al-ʿArūḥiyā and some elderly men of Ṭayy, that it is said that ʿAntāra, daughter of ʿAṣīf b. ʿAmr b. Ḥaqayṣ, the mother of Ḥātim al-Ṭāʿī, could never hold on to anything due to her munificent generosity. Her brothers would restrain her but she ignored them. Since she was a woman of wealth they ultimately imprisoned her inside a house for a year, even feeding her there to make her change her behaviour. After a year they released her, believing she had reformed, and paid her over a portion of her money and told her to enjoy it. But a woman from ʿAwzīn who used to visit her came and asked her for money and she responded, “Take this money, for, by God, I’ve so suffered hunger myself, I’ll spare no effort not to deny anyone who asks of me.” Then she spoke the following verses,

“By my life, I have been so bitten before by hunger, that I’ll spare no efforts never to deny the hungry,

So say now to this man blaming me, ‘Spare me, and if you don’t then chew on your own fingers!’

What can you tell your sister except your blame or the reproach of those who are misers.

What you witness today is only my nature, and how, O brother, should I abandon my nature?”

Al-Haytham b. ʿAdī stated, on the authority of Mālḥān b. ʿArakī b. Ṭāʾī b. Ḥātim, on the authority of his father and his grandfather that he witnessed Ḥātim’s excessive generosity and that Ḥātim had said to him, “Now, son, I pride myself on three qualities – I’ve never exposed a woman neighbour to suspicion, never given my trust and not fulfilled it, and no one has ever come to harm from me.”

Abū Bakr al-Kharāʾiti said, “Ali b. Ḥarb related to us, quoting ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Yahyā al-ʿAdawī, quoting Hishām b. Muḥammad b. al-Ṣāhib al-Kalbī, on the authority of Abū Miskin (otherwise known as Jaʿfar b. al-Muḥarrir b. al-Walid) from al-Muḥarrir Mawla Abū Hurayra, as follows: ‘A party of men from the ʿAbd al-Qays tribe passed the grave of Ḥātim al-Ṭāʿī and came near by. One of them, Abū al-Khaybarī by name, went over and began running his foot over his grave, saying, “O Abū Jaʿd14 give us hospitality!” One of his companions exclaimed, “What are you doing, talking to a decomposed corpse!” After darkness had fallen they went to sleep, but the man who had addressed Ḥātim awoke in a fright and began shouting, “Everyone, look to your mounts; Ḥātim came to me while I slept and spoke verses I’ve memorized that went:

34. Nickname of Ḥātim al-Ṭāʿī.
‘O Abū al-Khaybart, you’re a man who brings disgrace and dishonour to the tribe.
You brought your companions to seek hospitality at a grave whose corpse had perished.
Do you wish to blame me when you stay here, while around you is the Ṭayyī tribe and their generosity?
We’re ones to satisfy our guests, and delay the milking of their camels when they come to us.’”

“He (Abī Hurayra) went on: ‘And then, to their surprise, the camel of the man who had spoken to the grave began hobbling on three legs. So they killed it and cooked and ate it, saying: “By God, Ḥātim hosted us both alive and dead!”

‘Next morning they mounted their friend behind another rider and set off and were surprised to see a man waving to them as he approached on a camel, leading another behind him. “Which of you is Abū al-Khaybari?” he asked. Abū al-Khaybari identified himself and the man explained, “Ḥātim came to me in my sleep and told me he had hosted your companions with your camel, and so he asked me to bring you this mount. Take it!” And he gave it to him.’”

An Account of some matters relating to ʿAbd Allāh b. Judān.

His genealogy was ʿAbd Allāh, son of Judān, son of ʿAmr, son of Kaʿb, son of Saʿd, son of Taym, son of Murrah, lord of the Banū Taym. He was the nephew of the father of Abū Bakr al-Ṣiddiq, “the trusting”, God bless him.

He was a noble knight during the era before Islam, one of those who gave generously to the needy.

At first he was poor and deprived, mean and sinful, so that his people, tribe, kinsfolk, and family all hated him, even his father too.

One day he went off into the outskirts of Mecca, aimless and miserable, and noticed a fissure in a mountain. He thought there might be something there that would harm him, so he approached it, so that he might die and so be relieved from his sufferings.

When he drew near it, he saw a serpent coming out towards him, darting at him. He tried to avoid it, jumping away, but it was no use. But when it was upon him, he saw it to be of gold, its eyes of sapphire. So he destroyed it, picked it up, and went into the cave. To his amazement, there he found the graves of some of the kings of Jurhum, including that of al-Ḥārith b. Muḍād, who had long ago disappeared without trace. On their heads he found plaques of gold giving the dates of their death and the periods of their reigns. All about them were large quantities of jewels, pearls, gold, and silver. Of these he took what he wanted and left, after having marked the entry to the cave. When he reached his people he made gifts to them so that they loved him and then he became their leader. He would feed the people and when he ran out of valuables he would go off to the cave, get more and return. Of those who reported this were 'Abd al-Malik b. Hishâm in his book al-Tijân (The Crowns), and Ahmad b. 'Ammâr in the work entitled Rayy al-‘Atîsh wa Uns al-Wâhish (Quenching the Thirsty and Comforting the Lonely). He had a watering trough from which mounted riders would feed; the trough was so large that a boy fell in and drowned.

35. So that the guests can keep the milk of their camels for themselves.

Ibn Qutayba and others reported that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “I used to shelter in the shade of ‘Abd Allâh b. Judân’s watering trough during the sweltering heat of midday.”

In a hadith relating to the death of Abu Jahl, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said to his Companions, “Look for him among the dead; you will recognize him by a scar on his knee. I was competing with him among the crowd at a feast given by Ibn Judân. I knocked him over and he fell against his knee which broke, the damage still being visible there on it.” And they did find him just so.

People report that he used to feed people with dates and barley and with milk to drink until he heard the verses of Umayya b. Abû al-Ṣalt:

“I’ve seen doers and their deeds, and found their noblest to be Banû al-Dayyân. Wheat mixed with honey is their food, not what Banû Judân entertain us with.”

So Ibn Judân sent off 2,000 camels to Syria, and they returned bearing wheat, honey and butter. Then he had a man call out each night from the ka’ba roof, “You’re all to come to Ibn Judân’s trough.” Whereupon Umayya spoke the following:

“He has one energetic fellow summoning (people) in Mecca, while another calls out from above its ka’ba
To come to large wooden platters filled with ears of wheat mixed with honey.”

Yet despite all this, it is established in the sahih tradition collection of Muslim (b. al-Hadjdjâj) that Ā’isha said: “O Messenger of God, Ibn Judân used to donate food to eat and was hospitable to guests; will that benefit him on Judgement Day?” He replied, “No; he never once said: ‘O my Lord, forgive me my sins on Judgement Day.’”

An Account of Imrû’ al-Qays b. Hujr al-Kindî, author of one of the mu’allaqât odes.

His ode is the most magnificent and best known of them all, and it begins:

“Halt here, both of you, and let us lament memory of a loved one and a dwelling . . .”
Al-Imām Ahmad stated that Hushaym related to him, as did Abū al-Jahm al-Wāṣīṭi, from al-Zuhri, from Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said: "Imrū’ al-Qays will be the company commander of the poets on their way to hell-fire!"

A large number of transmitters related this tradition from Hushaym, including Bishr b. al-Ḥakam, al-Ḥasan b. ʿArafa, ʿAbd Allāh b. Ḥārūn, the Commander of the faithful al-Maʿmūn, brother of al-ʿAmin, and Yahyā b. Maʿṣūn. Ibn ʿAdī considered the transmission chain to be through ʿAbd al-Razzāq from al-Zuhri, but this would then be discontinuous and bad from another direction, through Abū Hurayra; and it would not be a reliable tradition except from the first chain of transmission.

The ḥāfīz Ibn ʿAsākir gave the genealogy of Imrū’ al-Qays as having been the son of Ḥujr, son of al-Ḥārith, son of ʿAmr, son of Ḥujr, the ʾākil al-mīrār,36 son of ʿAmr, son of Muʿāwiya, son of al-Ḥārith, son of Yāʿrub, son of Thawr, son of Murtā,37 son of Muʿāwiya b. Kinda. He was also known as Abū Yazīd, Abū Wāḥb, and Abū al-Ḥārith al-Ḵindi. He lived in the regions of Damascus and mentioned a number of these in his poetry, as for example in the lines:

"Halt here, both of you, and let us lament memory of a loved one and a dwelling at the winding ridges between al-Dakhil and Hawmal, Tūḏīḥ al-Miqrāt; its traces have not been erased by the interweaving winds from south and north."

These are well-known places in Ḥūrān.37

He then related, on a chain of authorities through Ḥishām b. Muḥammad b. al-Sāḥib al-Ḵalīb that Farwa b. Saʿīd b. ʿAfīf b. Maʿṣūr Karīb related to him, from his father, from his grandfather, that while he and others were with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) along came a delegation from Yemen. They said, "O Messenger of God, God gave us life by two verses from the poetry of Imrū’ al-Qays." He replied, "How so?" They explained, "We were making our way to visit you but lost our way en route, spending three days unable to get water. So we split up at the base of an acacia and a mimosa so that we each could die in the shade of a tree. When we were at our last gasp, there was a man speeding on his camel. When one of our men saw him, he spoke the following verses, the rider hearing them:

‘And when she (the wild ass) says that the water was her desire but that the white of her veins was bloody38

She made for the well at Darīj, its green slime shading it, overflowing.”39

36. One who ate the bitter desert plant Centaurea calcitrapa.
37. Ḥūrān is a plateau south of Damascus in Syria.
38. He implies that though the animal was thirsty, it was afraid that hunters might shoot it and that its veins would bleed.
39. Darīj was near where the ʿAbd tribe dwelt. The verse suggests that the animal headed for that well to be able to hide from hunters in the thick underbush.
“So the rider asked, ‘Whose verses are those?’ He saw our state of exhaustion. We answered, ‘Imru’ al-Qays b. Hujr.’ Then he said, ‘By God, he did not lie; this is Dārīj, where you are now.’ So we looked, and there was the water about 50 arm’s-lengths away. We slowly made our way to it on our mounts and found it just as Imru’ al-Qays had said, with ‘green-slime shading it’.

Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, ‘That’s a man who is remembered on earth but forgotten in the next world, honoured in the former but ignored in the latter. In his hands he will carry the banner of the poets, leading them to hell-fire.’

Al-Kalbi reported that Imru’ al-Qays advanced with his banners flying intending to battle Banū Asad after they had killed his father and passed by Tabālā. There was the shrine of Dhū al-Khalaṣa, an idol at which the Arabs would seek divine support. Imru’ al-Qays asked for prophecy and the arrow for negation came out. This then happened a second and a third time. At that he broke the arrows and struck them against the face of Dhū al-Khalaṣa, exclaiming: “You’d bite your father’s penis! If your father were the man murdered, you’d not impede me!” He then launched a raid against Banū Asad and engaged them in swift battle.

And al-Kalbi commented that (from then on) until the arrival of Islam, support from Dhū al-Khalaṣa was not sought.

Some say that Imru’ al-Qays gave praise to the Byzantine emperor and asked his support and assistance in certain wars but did not receive encouragement from him. Consequently Imru’ al-Qays spoke verses against him, and it is said that the emperor gave him poison to drink and so killed him. Death came to him when he was beside the grave of a woman on a mountain called ‘Asib and it was there he wrote the verses:

“Oh neighbour, the shrine is near and I rest where a mountain cleft is established.

Oh neighbour, we are strangers here and all strangers are of a common kin.”

They say that the seven mu’allaqāt, the select, displayed odes, were hung up on the ka’ba. That was because when one of the Arabs composed an ode he would exhibit it to Quraysh. If they approved of it they would hang it on the ka’ba in recognition of its worth. It is from this practice that the seven odes were gathered. The first of these, as previously noted, was by Imru’ al-Qays b. Hujr the Kindite, as previously mentioned. It begins:

“Halt here, both of you, and let us lament memory of a loved one and a dwelling at the winding ridges between al-Dakhūl and Ḥawmal.”

The second ode was by al-Nābigha al-Dhubyānī, whose given name was Ziyād b. Mu‘āwiya. He is also said to have been Ziyād b. ‘Amr b. Mu‘āwiya, who was the son of Ḏabbāb b. Jābir b. Yarbu‘ b. Ghayz b. Murra b. ‘Awf b. Sa‘d
b. Dhubyān b. Baghīd. His ode begins:

"Oh abode of Mayya at al-‘Alīyā, the mountain top; your people have gone for so long and earlier generations dwelt there."

The third ode was by Zuhayr b. Abū Sulmā, also named Rabī‘a b. Riyāḥ al-Muṣannā. It begins:

"Are there still some voiceless remnants of Umm ʿAwfa’s dwelling at the plain of al-Darrāj and al-Mutathallām?"

The fourth was composed by Ṭarāfa b. al-ʿAbd b. Sufyān b. Sa‘d b. Ṭubayrā b. Qays b. Thālabā, the son of ʿUkābā b. Sa‘b b. ʿAh b. Bakr b. Waqil. It opens:

"On the rocky ground of Thahmad, there are traces still of Khawla, visible like the shadow of an old tattoo on the back of a hand."

The fifth ode was by ʿAntara b. Shaddād b. Muṭāwiya b. Qurād b. Makhzum b. Rabī‘a b. Mālik b. Ghālib, the son of Quṭayā, the son of ʿAbs the ʿAbsite. It begins:

"Have the poets left anything unsaid, or have you recognized the abode after using imagination?"

The sixth was by ʿAlqama b. ʿAbda b. al-Nuʿmān b. Qays, a member of Banū Tamīm. It opens:

"Though your heart is burdened with care, there is joy in beautiful women; soon after youth comes time for greyness."

The seventh ode – and there are some who do not affirm it to have been one of the muʿallaqāt, as, for example al-Asmaʿī and others – is by Labīd, the son of Rabī‘a b. Mālik b. Jaʿfar b. Kilāb b. Rabī‘a b. ʿĀmir b. ʿSaʿṣa‘a b. Muṭāwiya b. Bakr b. Hawāzin b. Maṣṭūr b. ʿIkrima b. Khaṣṣa b. Qays b. Ayālān b. Muḍār. It begins:

"The place where she dwelt at Miṣr; its water-troughs and its mountains have been deserted."

As for the ode of unknown authorship, according to Abū ʿUbayda, al-Asmaʿī, al-Mubarrid and others, it reads:

"Is there any reply for one who asks at the ruins; or has it ever been accustomed to speak?"

It is a lengthy poem and has many fine lines.
SOME INFORMATION ABOUT UMAYYA B. ABŪ AL-SALT AL-THAQAFĪ; HE WAS A PRE-ISLAMIC POET WHO LIVED ON TO THE TIME OF ISLAM.

He was a pre-Islamic poet who went to Damascus before Islam. It is said that he was a righteous man and initially a man of the faith, but he turned away from it, and that God was referring to him in the words: “Tell them of him to whom we brought our signs, but he passed them by; so Satan followed him, and he went astray” (sūrat al-A‘rāf, VII, v.175).

Al-Zubayr b. Bakkar said that Ruqayya daughter of ‘Abd Shams b. ‘Abd Manāf gave birth to Umayya the poet, the son of Abū al-Ṣalt, whose name was Rabī‘a b. Wahb b. ‘Ilāj b. Abū Salama b. Thaqif.

Others said that his father was a famous poet of Ta‘if, and that Umayya was their best poet.

‘Abd al-Razzaq said that al-Thawfi stated that Ḥabīb b. Abū Thābit reported to him that ‘Abd Allah b. ‘Amr said that by God’s words: “Tell them of him to whom we brought our signs but he passed them by; so Satan followed him and he went astray”, Umayya b. Abū al-Ṣalt was implied.

Abū Ṣāliḥ and al-Kalbi said the same, and Qatāda reported it from several others.

Al-Ṭabrānī said that ‘Ali b. Abū al-‘Azīz related to him, quoting ‘Abd Allah b. Shabīb al-Rabī‘ī, quoting Muḥammad b. Maslama b. Hishām al-Makhzūmī, quoting Ismā‘īl, the son of al-Ṭurayḥ b. Ismā‘īl al-Thaqafī, that his father told him on the authority of his father, from Marwān b. al-Ḥakam, from Mu‘āwiyah b. Abū Sufyān from his father, saying: “I and Umayya b. Abū al-Ṣalt went on business to Syria and whenever we stopped anywhere for the night Umayya would take out a sacred book he had and would read it to us. This went on until we stopped at a Christian village. So its people came to him, honoured him and gave him presents, and he went off with them to their houses.”
“Late in the morning he came back, threw off his two garments and took out two black ones he had and dressed in them. He then asked me: ‘Abū Sufyān, do you have access to any Christian scholar well versed in the Bible you could ask a question?’ I replied, ‘I’ve no interest in that; if such a person were to tell me something I wanted, I’d not trust him. And if he told me something I disliked, I’d certainly be very angry with him.’”

He went on, “So he went away and a Christian sheikh disputed with him. Then Umayya came in to me and said: ‘What prevents you from going to this sheikh?’ I replied that I was not of his religion, but Umayya responded, ‘So what? You’d hear and see wonderful things from him.’ Then he said: ‘You’re of Thaqif, aren’t you?’ ‘No,’ I replied, ‘but I am of Quraysh.’ ‘Well,’ he asked, ‘so what prevents you from going to the sheikh? He likes you, I swear it, and he’d counsel you.’

“Umayya then left and remained with them till he returned to us later that night; he undressed and lay down on his bed. But I swear he was restless!

“Next morning he was sad and depressed, his ‘evening drink dropping on his morning draught’ (as the saying goes) not speaking to us, nor we to him. Eventually he said, ‘Won’t you ride?’ I responded: ‘You want to leave then?’ He replied, ‘Yes.’

“So we rode away and travelled for two nights. Then on the third night he said: ‘Wouldn’t you like to talk, Abī Sufyān? I replied, ‘There’s something you want to tell? I swear, I never saw anything like the way you came back from your friend.’

“Well that’s something you’ve nothing to do with; but it’s to do with something that scared me about my munqalab (hereafter).’

“Do you have a munqalab then?’ I asked.

“Yes, by God,’ he replied, ‘I’m to die then be brought back to life.’

‘Want to take my wager?’ I asked.

‘What about?’

‘That you’ll not be brought back nor be called to account.’

“He laughed, then said, ‘Oh but yes, by God, Abū Sufyān; we certainly will be brought back, and then called to account so that one group can enter heaven and another hell-fire.’

“And which group are you in according to what your friend told you?’

“He has no knowledge of that, either in my case or his own.’

“We journeyed on for two more nights, with him wondering at me and me laughing at him, until we reached the Damascus valley. There we sold our goods, remaining there two months.

“Then we again journeyed on until we reached a Christian village, where we made a stop. When they saw him they came to him, gave him gifts and he went with them to their houses. He came back in the afternoon, put on his two garments and went to them. He returned later that night, threw off his clothes and fell on his bed. But I swear he did not sleep a wink.

"Next morning he was sad and depressed, not talking to us nor we to him. Then he said, ‘Wouldn’t you like to move on?’

"Why yes,’ I responded. So we travelled on several nights, with him still depressed. Eventually he spoke, asking, ‘Abū Sufyān, would you like to travel on in advance of our companions?’

"‘Would you like that?’ I responded.

"‘Yes,’ he replied.

"So off we went and travelled one hour’s distance ahead of our companions. Then he said: ‘Let’s go to a rock.’

"‘What do you want,’ I asked him and he replied, ‘Tell me about Utba b. Rabī‘a; does he avoid doing wrong or evil?’

"‘Certainly, by God.’

"‘Is he held in esteem by high and low, a central figure in the tribe?’

"‘Yes.’

"‘Do you know any man of Quraysh more noble than him?’

"‘No, by God, I know of no one.’

"‘Is he financially needy?’ he asked.

"‘On the contrary, he’s a man of great wealth.’

"‘How old is he?’

"‘He’s over a hundred,’ I replied.

"‘So nobility, age, and wealth have brought him contempt.’

"‘Why should all that bring him contempt? No, by God, they benefit him.’

"‘Just so; would you like to rest here?’ he then asked.

"‘I would,’ I replied.

"So we rested till our fatigue passed. Then we travelled on till we alighted at the next rest station where we stayed. When it was night he spoke to me: ‘Abū Sufyān.’

"‘What do you want?’ I asked.

"‘Would you like to proceed as yesterday?’

"‘Would you?’ I asked.

"‘Yes,’ he replied.

"So on we went on two long-necked camels until we were ahead. He said: ‘Let’s go to a rock and talk again about Utba b. Rabī‘a.’

"‘Let’s talk of him again,’ I replied.

"‘Does he avoid wrongdoing and evil and do good and order good be done?’ he asked.

"‘Yes, by God, all that he does.’

"‘Is he wealthy?’

"‘Yes, he’s wealthy.’
‘Do you know of any man of Quraysh more central than him?’
‘No, no one.’
‘How old is he?’ he asked.
‘He is over a hundred.’
‘So his age, nobility, and wealth have brought him contempt?’
‘Certainly not, by God; if you have something to say, then do so.’
‘No,’ he replied, ‘Just remember what I said, whatever results from it.’
Then he went on: ‘What so affected me was going to that scholar and asking him some things and then saying to him, “Tell me about the prophet who is expected.”
‘He replied that he was an Arab; I responded that I knew that, and asked him from what group of Arabs.
‘He said: “He is from the people of a house to which the Arabs make pilgrimage.”
‘I said, “We have a house to which the Arabs make pilgrimage.”
‘He replied: “He is one of your brothers from Quraysh.”
‘This had an impact on me, by God, like nothing ever had before, and the success of this world and the next left my grasp. I had wanted to be him. I asked him then:
‘“If so it will be, describe him to me.”
‘“He is a man young when he entered old age; he started out avoiding wrongdoing and evil, doing good and ordering it. He is poor, respected by high and low and has a central position in the tribe. Most of his army are of angels.”
‘“What is the sign of that?” I asked and he replied:
‘“After the death of Jesus son of Mary, peace be upon him, Syria suffered 80 earthquakes, each causing a disaster. One overall quake is left which will bring several disasters.”’
Abū Sufyān went on: ‘I responded: “But, by God, that’s silly; if God sent a messenger he would only take him away in age and honour.”
‘Umayya spoke up, “But by him whose name you invoked, that’s how it is, Abū Sufyān. He is reiterating that the Christian’s statement is true. Shall we rest here?”
‘“Yes, I’d like that,” I responded.”
He went on: “So there we stayed until our fatigue left us and we travelled on till we were a two-stage or two-nights’ distance from Mecca. Then a rider caught us up from behind; we questioned him and he said: ‘After you left, the people of Syria suffered an earthquake that devastated them and caused them heavy losses.’”
Abū Sufyān went on: “Then Umayya approached me and asked: ‘So what do you think about what the Christian said, Abū Sufyān?’
‘I replied: “By God, it’s my considered view that what your friend told you was right.”’
Abū Sufyān continued: “So we arrived at Mecca where I settled my current affairs, then left for Yemen on business, staying there five months before returning to Mecca.

While there at my house people come to greet me and ask me about their goods. Eventually Muḥammad b. ‘Abd Allāh came to me; Hind was there with me playing with her children. He greeted me, welcomed me back and asked me about my journey and accommodations, but he did not enquire about his goods. Then he rose. I commented to Hind, ‘By God, that surprises me! Every one of Quraysh who had goods with me asked me about them, but this man did not ask about his.’

‘Apprehensive, I asked her what, and she replied: ‘He claims to be a messenger from God.’

‘She dumbfounded me. I recalled what the Christian had said, and I shivered. Hind asked me what was the matter and I came to myself and said: ‘This is crazy! He is too smart to say that.’

‘On the contrary,’ she explained, ‘he really is saying that and promulgating that. He also has followers in his religion.’

‘This is crazy,’ I repeated.”

Abū Sufyān continued: “I then went outside and while performing a ritual circumambulation of the kaʿba I met up with him. I said to him: ‘Your goods totalled up to so-and-so and there were profits. Send someone to receive them; I won’t be taking out the cut I charge my own people.’

“But he refused that, saying: ‘Then I won’t accept them.’ I went on: ‘Then send someone to take them and I will subtract the cut I get from my people.’ So he did send for his goods and received them, while I had from him what I would take from others.”

Abū Sufyān went on: “Soon thereafter I left for Yemen. Then I went to Ṭaʾīf, where I stayed with Umayya b. Abū al-Ṣalt. He said he wanted to ask me something, and I enquired what. He said: ‘Do you remember what the Christian said?’

‘I replied: ‘I do remember and it has come about.’

‘Who is he then?’ he asked.

‘He is Muḥammad b. ‘Abd Allāh,’ I replied.

‘The son of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib?’

‘Yes, the son of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib.’ Then I related to him what Hind had said.

‘Well, God alone knows!’ he exclaimed, and began sweating profusely.

‘Then he said: ‘By God, Abū Sufyān, perhaps it is him! The description certainly fits him. And if he has appeared while I’m alive, I’ll seek from God success from him in absolution.’
I then went off to Yemen and soon heard there of his appearance as a prophet. So I went forth until I reached Umayya b. Abū al-Ṣalt in al-Ṭāʾif and asked: ‘Oh Abū Uthmān, you must have heard about about what’s going on with the man.’

‘It has come to pass, by my life.’

‘So how do you stand with him, Abū Uthmān?’

‘He replied, ‘I wasn’t one to believe in any prophet coming from any tribe other than Thaqīf.’” Abū Sufyān continued: “I went on again to Mecca which didn’t take long since it was not far, and I found that his companions were being beaten and reviled.

“So I began asking myself: ‘Where are his hosts of angels?’ And I was assailed by the jealousies that enter people.”

This (previous) anecdote was also reported by the ḥāfiz al-Bayḥaqī in the book al-Dalīl (The Signs) from a ḥadīth via Ismāʿīl b. Ṭurayḥ. But the sequence given by al-Ṭabrānī we have quoted is fuller and lengthier. But God knows best.

Al-Ṭabrānī stated that Bakr b. Ahmad b. Nufayl related to him, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Shabīb, quoting Yaʿqūb b. Muḥammad al-Zuhri, quoting Mujāshī b. ʿAmr al-Asādī, quoting Layth b. Saʿd, from Abī al-Āsādī Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, from Muʿāwiya b. Abū Sufyān, from Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb, who said that: “Umayya b. Abū al-Ṣalt had been (with me) at Ghāzā or Ỉlīya and while we were returning home Umayya asked me: ‘Abū Sufyān, would you like to go on in advance of our companions so that we can talk?’

‘Yes,’ I agreed.

“So we did.”

“Then he asked: ‘What about Utba b. Rabiʿa?’

‘Honoured by high and low.’

‘And does he avoid sin and evil deeds?’

‘Yes.’

‘Is he aged and of noble birth?’

‘Both aged and of noble birth.’

‘Nobility and age have brought him contempt!’

‘You lie; his increase in age brought him only increase in honour.’

‘Abū Sufyān, that’s a word I’ve never heard anyone say to me since I reached awareness; don’t rush to judgement before I tell you.’

“Well then do so,” I responded.

“In my books I would find reference to a prophet who would be sent from this area of ours and I thought – indeed I had no doubt – that I would be him. But when I enquired of scholars, he was to be of Banū ʿAbd Manāf. So I looked into Bani 'Abd Manaf and the only person I found worthy of such a mission was 'Utbah b. Rabia. And when you told me of his age, I knew that it was not him, since he had passed the age of 40 and had not received revelation.'"

Abu Sufyan went on: "So destiny struck its blow and revelation came to the Messenger of God (SAAS). And I left in a party of Quraysh on a business trip to Yemen, so I passed by Umayya and commented mockingly: 'Well Umayya, the prophet you were describing has emerged.'

"'Indeed he is true, you should follow him,' he replied.

"'But what prevents you from following him?' I enquired.

"'Nothing but the embarrassment before the women of Thaqif. I have been telling them that I was him, then they would see me a follower of a young man of Bani 'Abd Manaf!'

"Then Umayya continued: 'It's to me as though, Abu Sufyan, you've defied him then have been bound fast like a billy goat and taken to him for whatever judgement he might want.'"

'Abd al-Razzaq said that Ma'mar related to him, from al-Kalbi, as follows: "Umayya was once lying down with two of his daughters present when one of them got scared and screamed to him. 'What's wrong?' he asked her. She replied: 'I saw two eagles rip off the roof of the house. Then one of them swooped down on you and split open your belly while the other perched on top of the house. The latter asked: 'Is he aware?' 'Yes,' was the response. 'Is he pure?' the eagle asked again. 'No,' came the answer.'

"He then said: 'This was good expected of your father; but he did it not.'"

This was also told from another source in another way. Ishaq b. Bishr said, from Muhammad b. Ishaq, from al-Zuhri, from Sa'id b. al-Musayyib and Uthman b. 'Abd al-Rahman, from al-Zuhri, from Sa'id b. al-Musayyib that al-Fari'a, sister of Umayya b. Abu al-Salt, went to see the Messenger of God (SAAS) after the conquest of Mecca. She was a person of reason, intellect, and beauty, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) was much impressed by her. One day he asked her: 'Fari'a, do you know any of your brother's poetry?' "Yes indeed; and even more remarkable than that is what I've seen."

She went on: 'My brother was on a journey and after he left he appeared to me, and came and lay on my bed while I was stripping hair off a piece of hide I held. Suddenly two white birds - or what seemed like two white birds - appeared. One alighted at the high window while the other came in and descended on to him. The latter then made a split between his chest and his pubic region, put its hand inside him, drew forth his heart, placed it on its palm then sniffed it. The other bird then asked: 'Is he aware?' 'Yes, he's aware,' the second replied. 'Is he pure?' it asked again. 'He declined,' answered the second. Then it replaced his heart where it belonged and the wound was healed in the twinkling of an eye. Then the two birds were both gone.
"When I had seen that I went over to him and stirred him, saying: ‘Do you feel anything?’ He answered, ‘No, except for some weakness in my body.’

"I had been alarmed at what I had seen and he asked, ‘Why do I see you upset?’

"So I told him what had happened, and he responded: ‘Goodness was wanted of me but was averted from me.’ He then spoke the verses:

‘My cares’ distresses flowed on, blinding my eyes, my tears preceding,
From the certainty that had come to me, and I had been brought no disavowal conveyed by anyone who spoke (to me),
Will I be one of those blazed by fire surrounding them like a tent (by its smoke and flames)
Or will I dwell in the paradise promised the guiltless, its cushions piled high?
The two positions are not equal there, nor are actions equal in kind,
They are two groups, one who enter paradise, its gardens enfolding them,
And another group sent to hell, its installations paining them;
These hearts were long accustomed, whenever tending to good, to have barriers set up against them,
And these were diverted to misfortune away from the pursuit of paradise by a world which God will erase.
A slave who called for his soul and censured it, knowing that God, the acutely aware, is clearly watching,
What gives the spirit a desire for life? Even though it lives a while, death overtakes it.
One fleeing his fate will one day soon unexpectedly agree to it,
If you don’t die exultant you will die decrepit; death has a cup and man must taste it.’"

She went on: "Then he continued on his journey, but only a little thereafter he was borne along in his bier. When news of it came to me I went to him and found him laid out in his burial winding-sheet. When I drew near him he emitted a deep sigh and stared; he looked up to the ceiling and raised his voice, saying:

‘Labbaykumā! Labbaykumā! At your service, at your service both of you; here I am before you both, not with money to ransom me nor with a clan to protect me.’

"He then lost consciousness, having emitted a deep sigh. So I said, ‘The man has expired!’

"But he stared up to the ceiling and raised his voice, saying: ‘At your service, at your service both; here am I before you both. Not innocent to seek forgiveness, nor with kinsfolk to achieve victory.’

"Then he lost consciousness, but suddenly emitted a deep sigh, stared up to the ceiling and said: ‘At your service, at your service both, here am I before you both, blessed by good fortune but destroyed by wrongdoing.’"
“Then he lost consciousness, but suddenly emitted a deep sigh and said, ‘At your service, at your service you both, here I am before you both.’

“If, O Lord, you forgive, forgive en masse; what slave of yours has no pain.’

“Then he lost consciousness but soon emitted a deep sigh, and said: ‘Each life, though it may last very long, is moving on but once till when it ceases.

“Would that I were, before what appeared to me, shepherding goats in the mountain heights.’”

She went on: “And then he died. The Messenger of God (SAAS) told me: ‘O Fāri’a, your brother is like him to whom God brought his signs but he passed them by . . . ’ (to the end of the verse)” (sūrat al-Ārāf, VII, v.175).

Al-Khaṭṭābī spoke of the strangeness of this hadith.

The ḥāfiz Ibn ‘Asākir related of al-Zuhrī that he said, “Umayya b. Abū al-Šalt spoke the verse:

‘Is there not a messenger to us from us who can inform us what is the distance of our ultimate goal from the beginning of our course.’”

Al-Zuhrī went on: “Then Umayya b. Abū al-Šalt left for Bahrain and the Messenger of God (SAAS) claimed prophecy. Umayya resided eight years in Bahrain then went to Ėrab, where he asked people, ‘What is Muḥammad son of ‘Abd Allāh saying?’

“They replied: ‘He claims that he is a prophet; he is the one you were wishing for.’”

He continued: “So Umayya left for Mecca where he met him and asked: ‘O son of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib, what is this you are saying?’ He replied: ‘I say that I am the Messenger of God, and that there is no God but Him.’ Umayya said, ‘I would like to speak with you; give me an appointment tomorrow.’ ‘Certainly, you have an appointment tomorrow,’ came the reply. Umayya then asked: ‘Would you like me to come alone or with a group of my friends?’ ‘Whichever you prefer,’ responded the Messenger of God (SAAS). ‘Then I will come with a group, and so you too come with a group,’ concluded Umayya.

“So early morning Umayya appeared with a group from Quraysh while the Messenger of God (SAAS) came with a number of his Companions. They all sat down in the shade of the ku`ba. Umayya began by making an address, then spoke some rhyming prose, and recited some poetry. When he had finished the poetry, he said: ‘Answer me then, son of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib.’ At that the Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke the words, ‘In the name of God the beneficent, the merciful, Yā Sin. By the Qur’ān full of wisdom.’ (sūrat Yā Sin, XXXVI, v.1–2). When he had finished the chapter, Umayya arose suddenly and walked off, dragging his feet. The Quraysh men followed him, asking, ‘Well, what do you have to say, Umayya?’ ‘I bear witness’, replied Umayya, ‘that he is right.’ ‘Will you follow him?’ they asked. ‘Until I look into his case,’ he replied.”
He continued: "Umayya went off to Syria and the Messenger of God (SAAS) left for Medina. Then, following the deaths of the people at the battle of Badr, Umayya returned from Syria and stayed at Badr. He travelled on to see the Messenger of God (SAAS). Someone asked Umayya: 'O Abū al-Šalt, what do you want?' 'I want Muḥammad,' he replied. 'What will you do?' he was asked. He replied, 'I believe in him and I will throw him the keys of this affair.' Someone asked him: 'Do you know who is in the burial pit?' 'No,' he answered. He was told: 'In it are Utba b. Rabī'a and Shayba b. Rabī'a, your maternal uncle's sons, along with his mother Rabī'a, daughter of 'Abd Shams.'"

He went on: "So Umayya mutilated the ears of his riding camel and cut off its tail, then stood over the pit and spoke the verses:

'What is in Badr—Mt. 'Aqanqa but chiefs and noble lords ...
(up to the end of the ode, which we will give in full in relating the history of the battle of Badr, if God wills it.)

"He then returned to Mecca and Ta'if and left Islam."
The source then related the story of the two birds and that of his death as we have given. At his death he spoke the verses:

"Each life, though it may last very long, is moving on but once till it ceases. Would that I were before what appeared to me, shepherding goats in the mountain heights,
So keep death before your vision and beware the destruction of fate, for fate has its evil demons
Their claws attaining lions, wild bulls, and the young child with red eyes41 at a lighthouse,
And the mountain vultures, the fleeing gazelles, and the young ostrich, mixed in flock, thin."

He means in these verses that wild animals in the deserts do not escape death, nor do vultures living on mountain tops; death does not leave alone the young for their youth, nor the old for their age. Al-Khaṭābī and others have spoken of the rarity of these accounts.

Al-Suhaylī mentioned in his book al-Ta'rif wa al-Iltām (Identifying and Informing) that Umayya b. Abū al-Šalt was the first who said, "bismika Allahumma", i.e. "in your name, O God". And concerning that he told a strange tale, as follows. He says that they were among a group of Quraysh who went away on a journey. They included Harb b. Umayya, the father of Abū Sufyān. On their way they came across a snake and killed it. But that evening a spirit woman came to them and berated them for killing that snake. With her she had a staff which she struck on the ground so hard that it completely stampeded their camels and they scattered in all directions. So off they went and chased them till they had them back. When they were all gathered, she again appeared, struck her staff on the ground and stampeded the camels. So off they went to search for them but having failed they asked Umayya, “By God, do you have any way out of our problem?” He replied, “No, by God, but I’ll look into it.” So they travelled on into that region hoping to find someone whom they could ask for some solution to their trouble. Eventually they saw a light ahead in the distance. When they arrived there they found an old man lighting a fire at the door of his tent. But he was in fact an evil spirit who was extremely tiny and ugly. They greeted him and he asked them what they wanted. (When they told him) he said: “When she comes to you, say: ‘In your name, O God’ and she will flee.” So when the travellers had assembled their camels and she came for the third or fourth time, Umayya looked her in the face and said: “In your name, O God.” She promptly fled in disarray. But the evil spirits attacked Ḥarb b. Umayya and killed him with that snake. His companions buried him there far from home or friend. On that subject the spirits spoke the verse:

Some people say that Umayya sometimes understood the languages of the animals. When passing some bird in his travel he would tell his companions, “This one says so-and-so.” But they would say they did not know whether he spoke the truth. But once they passed by a flock of sheep from which an ewe and her kid had been separated. She turned to it and bleated, as though urging it to hurry. Umayya asked his companions whether they knew what it said and they replied that they did not. He explained: “She’s saying, ‘Let’s hurry along so the wolf won’t come and eat you up like one did your brother last year.’” The group moved quickly on and asked the shepherd whether a wolf had eaten a sheep in that area the previous year. He replied in the affirmative! One day, moreover, Umayya passed by a mule carrying a woman and raising its head to her and grumbling. Umayya said: “The mule is telling the woman that there’s a needle in the saddle which she mounted on him.” So they took the woman off, untied the saddle, and discovered there was a needle as he had said.

Ibn al-Sikkit recounted that Umayya b. Abī al-Salt was drinking when a crow cawed. Umayya said, “May you have dust twice in your mouth!” His companions asked Umayya what it was saying and he replied that it had said: “You’ll drink that cup in your hand then die.” At that point the crow cawed again and Umayya reported: “It says: ‘The proof is that I’m going to fly down to this garbage pile, eat some and a bone is going to stick in my throat so I will die.’” At that the crow swooped down to the garbage pile, ate something, a bone lodged in its throat and it died!
Umayya said, “Well, he spoke the truth in this about himself but I’m going to see whether he was right about me or not.” He then drank that cup in his hand, keeled over, and died.

The following anecdote is established in the sahih collection in a hadith of Ibn Mahdi from al-Thawri from ‘Abd al-Malik b. Umayr, from Abu Salama, from Abu Hurayra who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said: “The truest word spoken by a poet is the verse of Lahid:42

‘Is not all vain except God.’

“And Umayya b. Abu al-Salt almost became a Muslim.”

The Imam Ahmad stated that Rawh related to him, quoting Zakariya b. Ishaq, from Ibrahim b. Maysara, that he heard ‘Amr b. al-Sharid say that al-Sharid stated, “I was riding on the same camel as the Messenger of God (SAAS) when he asked me, ‘Do you know any of the verses of Umayya b. Abu al-Salt?’ ‘Why yes,’ I replied. ‘So recite them,’ he asked. I then did recite a line and he went on asking for more, with me reciting till I had spoken a hundred lines for him. At that point the Prophet (SAAS) remained silent as did I.”

This anecdote is similarly told by Muslim from a hadith of Sufyan b. Uwaysa from Abu Tamim b. Maysara. In another line we have it from ‘Amr b. al-Sharid from his father al-Sharid b. Suwayd al-Thaqafi from the Prophet (SAAS). In some accounts the Messenger of God’s words were, “If he had almost become a Muslim.”

Yahya b. Muhammad b. Sa’id stated that Ibrahim b. Sa’id al-Jawhari related to him, quoting Abu Usama, quoting Hatism b. Abu Sufra, from Simak b. Harb, from ‘Amr b. Nafis, from al-Sharid al-Hamdani (whose uncles were of Thaqif) that he said, “We went off with the Messenger of God (SAAS) on the ‘farewell pilgrimage’. While I was walking along one day I sensed the tread of a camel behind me and it was the Messenger of God (SAAS). He said: ‘Al-Sharid?’ I replied, ‘Yes.’ Then he asked, ‘Can’t I give you a ride?’ ‘Why certainly,’ I accepted. I was not tired but wanted the baraka, the blessing, of riding with the Messenger of God (SAAS). So he made his camel kneel and carried me, asking: ‘Do you know any verses of Umayya b. Abu al-Salt?’ I replied in the affirmative and he asked me to recite them, which I did. ‘I think he spoke a hundred verses,’ he commented. Then he added, ‘God has knowledge about Umayya b. Abu al-Salt.’”

Ibn Sa’id then stated, “This is a strange hadith; and in what is related is that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said of Umayya: ‘His poetry believed but his heart disbeliefed.’ God alone knows.”

Imam Ahmad stated: “‘Abd Allah b. Muhammad – who was Abu Bakr b. Abu Shayba – related to us, quoting ‘Abda b. Sulayman, from Muhammad b. Ishaq, 42. A poet mentioned earlier as one of the authors of the famous mu’allaqat odes.
from Ya‘qūb b. ʿUtba, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) declared Umayya to be truthful in a piece of his poetry which says:

“As a man with a bull beneath his right foot, and an eagle for the other, and a lion in waiting;
And the sun appears at the end of each night, its colour red in the morning and turning rosy;
It is reluctant to arise for us, in its gentleness, unless tortured or else flogged.”

The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said (of this verse): “He spoke the truth.”

In an account of Abū Bakr al-Hudhali, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, he (the Prophet) said, “The sun never rises until it is urged up by 70,000 angels saying: ‘Come on up! Come on up!’ And it replies: ‘I will not rise above any people who worship me to the exclusion of God.’ When just about to rise a devil comes to the sun intending to divert it, but it rises between the devil’s horns and burns him. And when the sun gathers itself for its setting it directs itself to God, the Almighty and Glorious. So a devil comes to it wishing to divert it from its obeisance but it sets between his horns and burns him.”

Ibn ʿAsākir gives this anecdote at greater length.

In his poem on the throne-bearers, Umayya recited:

“And there’s many a bearer of one of the supports of his throne, who, were it not for the God of creation, would be fatigued and slow-moving, Standing on their feet, weary beneath it, their jugular veins trembling from the severity of their fear.”

These verses were transmitted by Ibn ʿAsākir.

It is reported from al-ʿAṣmaʿī that he would recite the following verses of Umayya:

“Glorify God, for He is worthy of glory; our Lord in heaven has been mighty.
There in his great edifice that existed prior to man, above the heavens, where he laid down his throne.
Longer it is than sight can see, before it you see al-malāʾik (the angels) bow down.”

According to al-ʿAṣmaʿī, the word al-malāʾik (in the last line quoted), is the plural of malak, angel, while the word al-sūr (translated as “those bowing down”) is the plural of āswar, meaning “bending the neck”. These are they who bear the throne.

The following verses praising ʿAbd Allāh b. Jūdān of Taym are also from the poetry of Umayya b. Abū al-Ṣalt:

“Should I make mention of my need or is your sensitivity enough for me; your nature is goodness
And your knowledge of rights; you are of lofty status; refinement, high esteem, and majesty are yours.
You are a generous man whose fine character no morning or evening time can change.

You compete with the wind by your nobility and generosity when cold winter nights prevent the dog from staying outside (the tent). Your land is one of all nobility built by Banū Taym, and you are its sky. Any man who one day praises you has in offering praise in itself reward enough.”

Umayya offered him other verses of praise in his poetry.

This man ‘Abd Allah b. Judān was a much praised, very noble, and famous man. He had a platter from which a rider could eat while on his mount, since it was so large and piled with food. He would fill it with the finest wheat mixed with butter and honey. He used to pay to free slaves and help the unfortunate. ‘Ā’isha asked the Prophet (SAAS) whether all that would ultimately benefit him. But he replied: “He never once said the words: ‘O Lord, forgive me my sins on Judgement Day!’”

Other fine lines of his poetry include:

“They do not plough the earth with wooden branches, when requests are made of them, as if seeking an excuse.”

Rather, when asked they uncover their faces and you see them cheerful with the finest of colouring.

And if the needy stay amidst their dwelling, they make him again a master of neighing horses and slaves,

And whatever dangerous enterprise to which you invite them, they block out the sun’s rays with their knights.”

This ends the biographical notice relating to Umayya b. Abū al-Ṣalt.

BAHIＲĀ THE MONK.

It was he who perceived prophethood in the Messenger of God (SAAS) when he was with his uncle Abū Ṭalib and went to Syria in a company of merchants of Mecca. He was at that time 12 years of age. (Bahīrā) saw a cloud shading him apart from the rest, so he made food for them and invited them to be his guests, as we will relate in the biography.

Al-Tirmidhī related an account which we discussed in detail therein. The ḥāfīz Ibn ‘Asākir recounted various testimonies and evidences relating to the biography of Bahīrā, but did not recount what al-Tirmidhī told; and that is strange.

Ibn ‘Asākir reported that Bahīrā lived in a village called al-Kafr situated some six miles from Basra. That is the place known as “Bahīrā’s monastery”. And it is

43. Barking dogs and fires lit outside the tent were signals for passers-by that a tribe was encamped, and that guests were welcome to stop and rest, and enjoy hospitality there.

44. That is, by pretending to be too busy.
also said that he lived in a village called Manfa'a in the plain of Balqā', beyond Zayrā. But God knows best.

An Account of Quss b. Sa‘īda al-Iyādi.

The hāfiz Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Ja’far b. Sahl al-Khara‘īṭi said in his book Hawātīf al-Jān (The Calls of the Spirits) that Dāwūd al-Qaṣṭarī related to him, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. Ṣa‘īd and Abū ‘Abd Allāh al-Masḥūrī, from Abū al-Ḥārith al-Warrāq, from Thawr b. Yazīd, from Mūriq al-Ṭlī, from ʿUbād b. al-Ṣāmīt that the latter said that when the delegation from the tribe of Iyād came to the Prophet (SAAS) he asked: “O members of the Iyād delegation, what happened to Quss b. Sa‘īda al-Iyādi?” They replied, “He died, O Messenger of God.” He commented, “Well, I once witnessed him at the ʿUkāz festival mounted on a red camel speaking words of strange and wonderful eloquence that I find I don’t recall.” A bedouin from the far back of the group came up to him and said: “I remember it, O Messenger of God,” and the Prophet (SAAS) was pleased at this. “Yes”, the man went on, “he was at the ʿUkāz festival on a red camel and saying, ‘O people gather around, for all those who have passed away are gone. And things to come will come. Gloomy nights. Castle-filled skies. Seas that rage. Splendorous stars. Towering mountains. Flowing streams. In the heavens there is notice; on earth there is warning. How is it I see people pass away and do not return? Were they content to stay and did so? Or were they left and fell asleep? Quss swears by an oath beyond reproach, that God has a religion more pleasing than the one you follow.’” Then he recited as follows:

‘In those who first passed away in ages gone there are signs for us,
Since I saw ways leading to death which had no beginnings,
And I saw my people passing towards them, young and old alike,
Not anyone who has passed on will come to you, nor will any of those who stay remain behind;
I have become sure that I will inevitably pass on to where the people have gone.’”

This chain of authorities as given is strange. Al-Ṭabarānī related it from another line, stating in his book al-Mu‘jam al-Kabīr (The Great Encyclopedia) that Muhammad b. al-Sarri b. Mahrān b. al-Naqīd al-Baghdādī related to him, quoting Muhammad b. Ḥassān al-Sahmī, quoting Muhammad b. al-Ḥajjāj, from Mujālid, from al-Shaḥbī, from Ibn ʿAbbās, that he said: “The delegation from ʿAbd al-Qays came to see the Prophet (SAAS) and he asked them, ‘Which of you knows al-Quss b. Sa‘īda al-Iyādi?’ They replied, ‘We all knew him, O Messenger of God.’ ‘Well, what’s he done?’ he asked. ‘He died,’ they told him. He went on: ‘I’ll never forget him at the ʿUkāz festival in the sacred month. He was on a red camel addressing the people in the words, “O people, gather, listen and take note. Those who live die. Those who die pass away. And what is to come will come. In heaven there is notice and on earth there is warning. A resting-place is put down and a roof is raised up. Stars move to and fro and seas do not empty. And Quss swore a true oath that if there be contentment in the matter, then discontent will follow! God has a religion more beloved by Him than that in which you engage. How is it I see people pass away and do not return? Were they content to stay and did so? Or were they left and fell asleep?"

Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, ‘Can anyone among you recite his poetry?’ One of them responded:

‘In those who first passed away in ages gone there are signs for us. Since I never saw ways leading to death which had no beginnings, And I saw my people moving towards them, young and old alike, The past will never return for me, nor will any of those who stay remain behind. I have become sure I will inevitably pass on to where the people have gone.”

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqi thus transmitted it in his book, Dalā'il al-Nubuwya (Signs of the Prophethood) in a line from Muḥammad b. Ḥasan al-Sahmī. And thus did we relate it in the fragment collected by al-Uṣṭādḥ Abū Muḥammad ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfar b. Darstawayh relating to Quss. He stated: “ʿAbd al-Karīm b. al-Haytham, the man from Dayr Ṣaqīl, related it to us from Saʿīd b. Shabīb, from Muḥammad b. al-Ḥajjāj Abū Ibrāhīm al-Wāsiṭī, a resident of Baghdad, known as ṣaḥīb al-ḥarīṣa (‘master of the beef and bulgar dish’). And he was called a liar by Yaḥyā b. Maʿṣīn and Abū Ḥātim al-Rāzī and al-Dārquṭnī. Also, more than one, including Ibn ʿAdī, accused him of fabricating the ḥadīth.”

Al-Bazzār and Abū Naʿaym related it from the account of this Muḥammad b. al-Ḥajjāj. And Ibn Darstawayh and Abū Naʿaym recounted it by way of al-Kalbī, from Abū Ṣāliḥ, from Ibn ʿAbbās. And this chain is preferable to that preceding it. In this account it is Abū Bakr who tells the story in its entirety, both its poetry and prose, before the Messenger of God (SAAS).

And the ḥāfīz Abū Naʿaym related it from a ḥadīth of Aḥmad b. Mūsā b. Ishaq al-Khatmī. ʿAli b. al-Ḥusayn b. Muḥammad al-Makhzumī related to us, quoting Abū Ḥātim al-Sijistānī, quoting Wahb b. Jarīr, from Muḥammad b. Ishaq, from al-Zuhrī, from Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab from Ibn ʿAbbās as follows: “A delegation from Bakr b. Wāṣil came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and he asked them, ‘What did your ally do whose name was Quss b. Saʿīd al-Īyādī?’”

Then he recounted the anecdote at length.

Sheikh Aḥmad b. Abū Ṭalib al-Ḥajjār, the authority on lines of transmission and travel, recounted to us, on the basis of ĭjāza if not samāʿa that Jaʿfar b. ʿAli al-Hamdānī told him the following tradition by ĭjāza, quoting the ḥāfīz Abū

45. Having heard it from a secondary source.
46. Having heard it himself from a named authority.
Tahir Al-Hmad b. Muhammad b. Al-Hmad b. Ibrahem al-Salafi, who told this account as having himself heard it directly. He stated that he read it from his Sheikh, the hajj Abû 'Abd Allah al-Dhahabi. Also Abu 'Ali al-Hasan b. 'Ali b. Abû Bakr al-Khallal recounted it as one the latter had himself heard directly. He also said that he heard it directly from Ja'far b. 'Ali, and also directly from al-Salafi. Also, Abu 'Abd Allah Muhammad b. Al-Hmad b. Ibrahem al-Razi informed us, quoting Abû al-Fadl Muhammad b. Al-Hmad b. Tsa al-Sadi, quoting Abû al-Qasim Ubayd Allah b. Al-Hmad b. 'Ali b. Muqri, and it was also related to him by Abû Muhammad 'Abd Allah b. Ja'far b. Darstawayh, the grammarian, by Ismâ'il b. Ibrahem b. Ahmad al-Sadi, the qâzi, judge, of Fâris (Persia) by Abû Dâwûd Sulaymân b. Sayf b. Yahyâ b. Dirham al-Tâ'if who was a man from Harrân, by Abû 'Amr Sa'id b. Yarbu, from Muhammad b. Ishaq. Abû Tâlib was also told by some of our scholars on the authority of al-Hasan b. Abû al-Hasan al-Bašrî, that the last mentioned said: "Al-Ja'rud b. al-Mu'alla b. Hanash b. Mu'alla al-'Abdi was a Christian of great learning in the interpretation and analysis of the holy texts, an expert on the history and sayings of the Persians, well versed in philosophy and medicine, a man of evident good manners and culture, fine in appearance and of great wealth. He went to see the Prophet (SAAS) as a member of a delegation of men of sound judgement, maturity, eloquence, and scholarship from the tribe of 'Abd Qays. When he approached the Prophet (SAAS) he stood before him, gestured towards him and spoke the verses:

'O Prophet of the right guidance, men have come to you through deserts and mirages, Crossing down the flat open lands towards you, not counting fatigue for you as fatigue at all.
All the short-legged beasts greatly urged along in speed by our young she-camels,
The fine horses racing over the land, bolting with their mailclad warriors like stars, glinting,
Seeking to avert the suffering of an awful day, one of terror, pain, and great distress,
A day when all mankind will be brought together, a day separating out all who strayed in disobedience,
Moving towards a light from God, a proof, a favour and a grace to be attained,
God distinguished you with all good, O son of Amina, through her; when (for others) good only comes and goes.
So, give your blessings in abundance, O proof of God, unlike the blessings of a false (prophet).'

"When he finished, the Prophet (SAAS) invited him to sit down close to himself and said, 'O Ja'rud, both you and your people are late in coming.'

"Al-Ja'rud responded, 'By my father and my mother, anyone late coming to you is indeed unfortunate, that being the greatest of faults, the worst of sins. But I'm not one of those who saw you or heard of you, aggressed against you, and followed someone other than you. I now follow a religion of which you have knowledge. But I have come to you and here I am, abandoning it for your religion. Will that not have faults, sins, and misdeeds forgiven and please the Lord?

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, 'I will guarantee you that! So sincerely express your belief in the unity (i.e. monotheism) and give up the religion of Christianity.'

"Al-Jārūd replied: 'By my father and my mother, extend your hand, for I bear witness that there is no God but God alone and that He has no associate; and I testify that you are Muḥammad, His slave and His Messenger.'

"And so he accepted Islam, as did some of his people.

"And the Prophet (SAAS) was pleased at their accepting Islam and treated them with such honour and generosity as to make them very happy and delighted.

"Then the Messenger of God went over to them and asked, 'Does any one of you know Quss b. Sā'īda al-Iyādi?'

"Al-Jārūd replied: 'By my father and mother, we all know him. And I am one who knows a lot about him. Quss, O Messenger of God, was a fine Arab knight. He lived 600 years, of which he spent five lifetimes living in the wastelands and deserts, crying out the glory of God like Jesus did. He settled nowhere, had no home to shelter him and no neighbour to appreciate him. He dressed in hair-cloth and outdid the fasting ascetics. He never tired of his monastic ways, on his journeys living off ostrich eggs and befriending lions, enjoying the darkness, observing and considering, thinking and experiencing.

"He therefore became one whose wisdom was legion, awe-inspiring things being discovered through him, and he attained the leadership of the disciples of Christ in reputation.

"He was the first Arab to acknowledge God and to accept His unity. He devoted himself firmly to God, becoming fully convinced of life after death and of judgement. He warned of the evil of refusal and enjoined action before it was too late. He reminded of death and spoke of his acceptance of fate without either anger or pleasure. He visited graves and preached of resurrection day. He spoke verses in elegy. He gave thought to the fates and informed about the heavens and about nature. He talked of the stars and discussed the water. He described the seas and informed of ancient relics. He orated while riding and exhorted with perseverance. He admonished against grief and against an excess of anger. He wrote many sermons and made mention of all things terrible. He spoke compellingly in his orations, gave explanation in his writings, expressed fear of time, cautioned against weakness, exalted God's power, avoided any blasphemy, expressed yearning for the pure faith, and called for immersion in religious life and thought.
“He is the person who said on the day of the ‘Ukāz festival:

“East and west, orphans and groups, peace and war, dry and moist, brackish water or sweet, suns and moons, winds and rains, nights and days, females and males, lands and seas, seeds and plants, fathers and mothers, united and scattered, signs followed by signs, light and dark, abundance and nothingness, a Lord and idols, mankind has gone astray, the raising of a child, the burial of a dead one, the cultivation of a harvest, rich and poor, benefactor and evil-doer, woe to the indolent, let the worker improve his labour, and let the hopeful lose his hope. Nay; on the contrary He is one God, neither given birth nor a father. He both repeats and does for the first time. He makes to die and brings to life. He created male and female, Lord of the first life and of the after life.

“Moreover, O tribe of Iyād, where now are Thamūd and ‘Ad? Where are the fathers and their forefathers? Where now are those (who were) ill and those who visited them? To each is his appointed time. Quss swears by the Lord of mankind, and the one who flattens the smooth ground, you will be gathered individually, on assembly day, when horns will be blown and drums beaten, when the earth will shine, and the preacher exhort and the despairing withdraw and the observer gazes out; woe to him who turns away from the truth most evident, and the shining light, and the great Judgement Day, on the day of separating, and the scales of justice, when He who decrees decides, and the apostle gives testimony, and the allies are far off, and the faults are apparent, and so one group goes to paradise, and one group to hell-fire.”

“It is he who spoke the verses:

“The heart passionately recalled and reflected: nights within which there are days. And bucketsful pouring from storm clouds that burst forth with water, there being fire in their insides,

Their light blinded the eye and violent thunder was cast in east and west;
There are lofty castles possessed of wealth while others are empty and uninhabited.
There are unshakable mountains towering, and seas whose waters abound,
There are stars which flash in the dark of night which we see every day are revolved,
And then there is a sun urged on by moon of night, each pursuing the other and in motion.
There are the young, the hoary, and the old, all of them one day to meet above.
And there is plenty beyond the surmise of those whose mind is not perplexed.
All these I mentioned are signs of God for the souls of good guidance and wisdom.”

Al-Ḥasan went on: “And the Messenger of God (SAAS) said: ‘Whatever else I may forget, I will never forget him (Quss) at the ‘Ukāz festival, standing up on a red camel and addressing the people: ‘Gather around and listen, and having heard, be aware, benefit! And speak, and if you speak, tell the truth! He who lives dies, he who dies is gone, and all that is coming will come, rain and plants, the living and the dead, dark nights and skies with zodiac signs, and stars that shine, and seas that rage, and light and shade, and nights and days, and innocence and sins. There is knowledge in the heavens and lessons on earth such as to amaze even the perspicacious. There is a ground laid out, a roof raised up, stars that set, seas that do not empty, destinies drawing near, a treacherous fate, as sharp as a surgeon's knife and as accurate as a precise scale. Quss swears an oath, neither insincere nor sinning thereby, that if there be any pleasure in this matter, then there will surely be discontent.' Then he said, 'O people, God has a religion which is more pleasing to him than this religion of yours you engage in. And this is its time, its epoch.' Then he said, 'How is it I see people go but not return? Were they content to stay and did so? Or were they left and fell asleep?'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then turned to some of his Companions and said, 'Which one of you can recite his verses to us?' Aha Bakr, the truthful, replied, 'By my father and my mother, I witnessed him on that day when he spoke the verses:

"In those who went first in ages past are clear proofs for us.
Since I saw ways leading to death which had no beginnings.
And I saw my people moving towards them, young and old alike.
The past will never come back to me, nor will any of those who stay remain behind;
I have become sure that I will inevitably pass on to where the people have gone."

"Then a tall, broad-shouldered, venerable old sheikh of 'Abd Qays approached the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, 'By my father and my mother, I saw something remarkable from Quss.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, 'What was it you saw, O brother from 'Abd Qays?'

"He explained: 'In my youth some camels I owned wandered off, so I hurried and followed their trail into rocky desert land where there were thorny twigs, wastelands of dead tree roots and palm trunks, waterlily ponds, and ostrich tracks and nests. While I passed along the trails in these high and low wastes, I came to a hilly area whose upper slopes were thick with thorn trees, their branches hanging low, their first fruits like seeds of pepper and heads of chamomile. Suddenly there was a bubbling spring, a green meadow, and a lofty tree. And there too was Quss b. Sā'īda at the base of that tree, standing with a stick in his hand. I approached him and said, "Good morning to you!" "Good morning to you likewise" he replied. There were many lions going down to drink at the water-hole. Whenever one tried to drink from the hole before another he would strike it with his stick and say: "Be patient! Wait till the one before you drinks!" I was absolutely amazed at that. He looked across at me and said, "Don't be afraid." Then I saw two graves with a mosque between them. I asked him, "What are these graves?" He replied, "They're the graves of two brothers who used to pray to God, Almighty and Glorious is He, at this spot. I remain here between their two graves, praying to God until I join them.” I asked him, “But wouldn’t it be better for you to join your people and enjoy their well-being and explain to them what it is they do that is evil?”

“May your death make your mother grieve! Don’t you know how Ishmael’s sons abandoned the faith of their father and followed rival gods and venerated idols?”

Then he approached the graves and spoke the following verses:

“O my two friends, arise; long have you lain. I urge you not to prolong your slumber; I see sleep between your skin and your bones, as though he who gives a drug to drink has given it to you.

Is it from your long sleep that you do not respond to him who calls you, as though he who gives a drug to drink has given it to you?

Do you not know that I am in Najran alone, with no friend there but for you two? Living at your graves, not leaving night after night until your response is heard.

I weep for you throughout my life, and what had the heartbroken gained that we wept for you both?

If a soul were to be a ransom for the soul of another, I would strive to have my soul become ransom for you both

As if death were the closest goal for my soul when death had come to you in your two graves.”

Al-Hasan went on: “So the Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘God have mercy on Quss! He will be resurrected as a whole nation by himself on Judgement Day.’”

This tradition is very strange in this regard; and it is mursal. However, al-Hasan did hear it from al-Jarud. God knows best!

Al-Bayhaqi related it, quoting the hadith of Muhammed b. Isaa b. Muhammed b. Sad al-Qurashi al-Akhbari, as follows: “My father related to us, quoting ‘Ali b. Sulayman b. ‘Ali, from ‘Ali b. ‘Abd Allah, from ‘Abd Allah b. ‘Abbas, may God be pleased with them both, as follows: ‘Al-Jarud b. ‘Abd Allah came forward and recalled almost the same anecdote, at length, with much additional prose and poetry. In that account there is the story of the man whose camels went astray and he went to find them. The man recited, “So I stayed the night in a valley where I was scared for my life, having only my sword to rely on, watching the stars, peering into the blackness, until the night had gone its term and morning was almost breathing; I then heard someone speak aloud the verses:

‘O you lying down in the pitch black of night, God has sent a prophet in the sacred sanctuary,

47. That is, its authority chain extends back to a successor rather than a Companion of the Prophet.
From Hashim, a people of trust and honour, illuminating all most gloomy, dark and impenetrable.”

"The man continued, “I turned but saw no one and heard nothing else. So I then spoke the following:

‘O you who speaks in darkest night, welcome indeed to you, a phantom who visited us!

Explain, may God give you guidance, in tone of words, what it is you urge that can be gained?’

“Then I then heard a clearing of the throat and a voice saying, ‘The light has appeared; and falsehood has been defeated. For God has sent Muhammad with righteousness, the master of the red mount, and the crown and the helmet, he of the shining visage, and the full eyebrows, and the eyes of marked contrast between the white of the cornea and the black of the iris, the man responsible for the words of the “shahada”, or testimony of the faith: “la ilaha illa Allah”, “there is no God but God”. That person is Muhammad, the one sent to the black and the white, to the people of the village and the people of the deserts.”’ Then he recited the words:

“Praise be to God who did not create nature in vain;
He did not once leave us forsaken after Jesus, nor was He uncaring.
He sent among us Ahmad, the best Prophet ever dispatched.
May God bless him whenever parties of men hurried (to seek audience with) him.”’

The same source attributes the following verses to Quss b. Sa‘īda:

“O announcer of death and of the grave, in the tomb there are men in rags which are remnants of their clothing.

Leave them, for one day they will be called; and they, if they do waken from their sleep, will stay awake.

Until they revert to some state other than theirs, to a new creation similar to what they were before.

Some will be naked, some in their clothes, some of which will be new, some quickly frayed and tattered.”

Also, al-Bayhaqi related it from Abū Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Yūsuf b. Aḥmad al-Asbahānī who said that Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. Sa‘īd b. Fardakh al-Akhmīmi of Mecca related it to him, quoting al-Qāsim b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Mahdi, quoting Abū ʿAbd Allāh Sa‘īd b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān al-Makhzūmī, quoting Sufyān b. Uyayna, from Abū Ḥamza al-Ṭhamālī, from Sa‘īd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās. The latter related the anecdote and the recitation and said that they found at his head a sheet on which were the verses:

“O announcer of death and of the dead, in the tomb there are men in rags which are remnants of their clothing,
Leave then, for one day they will be called, just as those who have fainted away at thunder will be aroused from their sleep.

Some will be naked and others will be dead in their clothes, some of which are bluish and shabby.”

So the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “By Him who sent me with the truth, Quss did believe in Judgement Day!”

The origins of this tradition are well known; these other lines of transmission despite their weakness, are helpful in affirming the origin of the anecdote.

Abū Muḥammad b. Darstawayh commented upon the strangeness of what occurred in this hadith; most of it is obvious, if God Almighty wishes it so. We have drawn attention in our marginal commentary to what is extremely strange about it.

Al-Bayhaqi said that Abū Sa'd Sa'īd b. Muḥammad b. ʿAmr b. Ṭāhir al-Muhammadabadhi related to him verbally that Abū Lubāba Muḥammad b. al-Mahdī al-Abyurdi related to him, quoting his father, quoting Sa'īd b. Hubayra, quoting al-Muṭamīr b. Sulaymān from his father, all from Anas b. Mālik, who said: “A delegation from Iyād went to the Prophet (SAAS) and he asked: ‘What did Quss b. Sa'īda do?’ They replied: ‘He died.’ He commented, ‘Well, I heard some words from him I no longer recall.’ Some of those present told him they remembered them, so he asked them to tell them. One of them responded, ‘He stood up at the Ukkāz festival and said, “O people, listen, hear, and take note. All those who live die. And all those who die pass away. And all that is to come will come. Dark nights. Skies with zodiac signs. Stars that shine. Seas that rage. Mountains tower above. Rivers flow. In heaven there is notice and on earth there is warning. I see people die and not return. Were they content to stay and did so? Or were they left and fell asleep? Quss swears an oath by God, not sinning thereby, that God has a religion which is more pleasing to Him than that you engage in.”’ Then he recited the verses:

“In those who went first in ages past are clear proofs for us.
Since I saw ways leading to death for people which had no beginnings,
And I saw my people moving towards them, young and old alike.

Al-Bayhaqi then traces it back by other routes that we have referred to heretofore. After all of this, he then stated: “That hadith was narrated from al-Kalbī from Abū ʿAlī ʿAbbās, with additions and deletions. It is also related via another way and with an incomplete line of transmission from al-Hasan al- Başrī. It is also related in abbreviated form in a hadith from Sa'd b. Abū Waqqāṣ and Abū Hurayra.” And I comment: also from Ubāda b. al-Ṣāmit, as given above, and ʿAbd Allāh b. Masʿūd, as related by Abū Nuʿaym in his book

Then al-Bayhaqī stated, "And since the hadith is related from other routes, even if some of them are weak, it shows that it did have an origin. But God knows best."

An Account of Zayd b. 'Amr b. Nufayl, God be pleased with him.

Al-Khamb, father of Oumar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, was both his uncle and brother from his mother. That was because 'Amr b. Nufayl had had a child by his father’s wife after his father. She had had his brother al-Khaṭṭāb by Nufayl. Al-Zubayr b. Bakkar and Muḥammad b. Ishāq told us of this.

Zayd b. 'Amr gave up the worship of idols and abandoned their religion; he would only eat what had been slaughtered in the name of God alone.

Yūnus b. Bukayr stated on the authority of Muḥammad b. Ishāq as follows: “Hishām b. Urwa related to me, from his father, that Asmā', daughter of Abī Bakr, said: 'I saw Zayd b. 'Amr b. Nufayl leaning his back against the kāba saying, 'O tribe of Quraysh, by Him in whose hand is Zayd's soul, not one of you apart from myself follows the religion of Abraham.' Moreover, he would say, ‘O God, if only I knew the way most favoured by you, I would worship you by it, but I do not know.’ Also he would bow in prayer while on his mount.’”

Abū Usāma too related this, from Hishām, and added, “He would pray towards the kāba and say, ‘My God is the God of Abraham, and my religion is that of Abraham.’ He would give life back to girls about to be killed at birth, telling a man wishing to kill his daughter, ‘Don't kill her. Give her to me to look after. When she grows up, you can take her back or if you wish give her up.’”

Al-Nasā'ī derived this account through Abū Usāma; and al-Bukāhī commented upon it saying, “And al-Layth said: ‘Hishām b. Urwa wrote to me about it from his father.’” daughter of 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib and whose sister was Zaynab, daughter of Jaḥsh whom the Prophet (SAAS) married after his mawla, his freedman, Zayd b. Ḥāritha, as we will relate hereafter. These men were present among Quraysh when they were before an idol of theirs to which they would make sacrifice at one of their feast days. As they all gathered, this group of men met apart and agreed that they would make a secret pact of friendship with one another. One of them said, 'By God, you know that your people are doing nothing; they have strayed from the religion of Abraham and gone against it. Why worship some idol incapable of doing harm or good? Seek out for yourselves!'

“As for Waraqa b. Nawfal, he became a Christian and became learned in Christianity, seeking out its scriptures from its adherents until he acquired a great knowledge from those who follow the Bible.

“None of this group was a man more honourable in deed nor more dedicated than Zayd b. ‘Amr b. Nufayl. He gave up the idols and abandoned all the religions, of the Jews, the Christians, and all the sects except the hanifiyya, the religion of Abraham. He spoke of the unity of God alone and cast aside the gods beneath Him. He ate none of the meat his people slaughtered, and warned them of the judgement they would suffer from the practices they followed.”

He went on: “Al-Khaṭṭāb so persecuted him that eventually Zayd left him by going to the heights of Mecca. So al-Khaṭṭāb assigned a group of young Quraysh thugs to watch him and told them not to let him enter Mecca. He never did so except without their knowledge, and when they found out they harmed him and evicted him violently, hating that he should spoil their religion for them or get others to join him in his own practice.”

Mūsā b. ‘Uqba stated that he heard someone he trusted give a report about Zayd b. ‘Amr b. Nufayl to the effect that he would criticize Quraysh for the slaughter of their beasts, saying, “Sheep were created by God and He brings down from the skies the water that makes vegetation grow for them from the earth, so why do you slaughter them in the name of gods other than God, denying all that and venerating them?”

Yūnus said, on the authority of Ibn Ishāq: “Zayd b. ‘Amr b. Nufayl had determined to leave Mecca and travel across the land seeking the hanafiyya, the religion of Abraham. His wife Ṣafiyya, daughter of al-Ḥadrami, whenever she saw him preparing to make the departure he wished, would warn al-Khaṭṭāb b. Nufayl.

“Zayd did leave for Syria, enquiring and seeking the religion of Abraham among the people of the first holy book. They say he went on doing this until he covered al-Mawṣil and all Mesopotamia, finally reaching Syria and travelling throughout it. Eventually he came upon a monk in a church in the region of al-Balqa' who had, as they claim, much learning in Christianity. Zayd asked him about the hanifiyya, the religion of Abraham, and the monk replied, 'You are asking about a religion you'll not find anyone today to instruct you in. Those who had knowledge and familiarity with it have faded away and gone. But the emergence of a prophet draws near, his time having come.' Now Zayd had examined Judaism and Christianity, but had not been content with anything in them, and so he left quickly for Mecca after what the monk had told him. But when he was in Lakhm territory he was attacked and killed. Wāraqa spoke the following verses eulogizing him:

'You followed the proper course and did right, O son of 'Amr; and indeed you have avoided the ovens of hell,

By your worshipping a Lord unlike any other and by your abandoning the idols of tyrants as they are,

Man may indeed be reached by God's mercy, even though he be seventy valleys beneath the earth.'"

Muḥammad b. Uthmān b. Abū Shayba said, "Aḥmad b. Ṭariq al-Wabishi related to us, quoting ʿAmr b. ʿAtiyya, from his father, from Ibn ʿUmar, from Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl, that the latter worshipped God before the coming of Islam. He once came to a Jew and told him he wanted him to induct him into his religion. The Jew replied, 'I will not accept you in my religion until you experience your share of God's anger.' Zayd replied, 'It is from the anger of God that I am fleeing.'

"Zayd went on further till he came to a Christian, telling him he would like to engage with him in his religion. The Christian replied, 'I'll not accept you in my religion until you experience your share of false guidance.' Zayd replied, 'It is from false guidance that I flee.' The Christian then told him: 'I will show you the way to a religion in which, if you follow it, you will be rightly guided.' 'What religion is that?' asked Zayd. 'The religion of Abraham,' he replied. So Zayd said, 'O God, I swear to you that I will follow the religion of Abraham; in it I shall live and die.'

"When Zayd's story was referred to the Prophet (ṢAAS) he stated, 'He will be as a nation all by himself on Judgement Day.'"

Mūsā b. ʿUqba, on the authority of Sālim from Ibn ʿUmar, related approximately the same.

Muḥammad b. Saʿd stated: "ʿAli b. Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Sayf al-Qurashi related to us, from Ismāʿil, from Muḥālīd from al-Shaʿbi, from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Zayd b. al-Khaṭṭāb as follows: 'Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl said, 'I examined Judaism and Christianity and disliked them both. I travelled in Syria and the neighbouring lands and eventually came to a monk in a cell. I told him of my alienation from my own people and of my dislike for the worship of idols, Judaism, and Christianity. He told me, ‘I see you desire the religion of Abraham, O brother from the people of Mecca. You are searching for a religion that today no one adheres to, the religion of your father Abraham. He was a hanif; neither a Jew nor a Christian. He prayed and prostrated himself in the direction of that house which is in your land. So you must go to your own country. God will send from your people in your land one who will bring the religion of Abraham, the hanifsyya; he is the most noble of creation in God’s sight.’”

Yūnus stated that Ibn Ishaq said, “A member of the family of Zayd b.‘Amr b. Nufayl related to me the following, ‘Zayd used to say when he entered the ka‘ba, ‘Here I am before you, really and truly, in worship, verity and submission. I turn in submission quoting Abraham, facing the ka‘ba.’” He would stand as he would say, “O my God, I am submissive to you, fearful, and humble. Whatever painful task you impose, I will perform it. It is faith I desire, not vanity. He who journeys in the heat is not as one who naps in the afternoon.’”

“Zayd went on: ‘Now Waraqa did adopt Christianity; but in my case, although I intended to become Christian he (the monk) would not accept me.’ So Zayd returned home and spoke the words: ‘Here I am before You, in truth, in worship and in submission. It is faith I desire, not vanity. Is he who journeys in the heat as one who naps in the afternoon? I believe in what Abraham believed in.’ He also said, ‘O my God, I am submissive to You, fearful, and humble. Whatever painful task You impose, I will perform it.’ Then he would bow down and prostrate himself in prayer.”

The account continues, “His son, by whom I mean Sa‘īd b. Zayd, one of the ṣāḥra, the ten, God bless him, said, ‘O Messenger of God, my father was as you have seen and heard; seek forgiveness for him.’ He replied, ‘Yes; he will be raised up on Judgement Day as a nation, by himself.’”

It continues: “And Zayd b. ‘Amr b. Zayd came to the Messenger of God when the latter was in the company of Zayd b. Ḥāritha; the two men were eating from a dining-table set out for them. They invited Zayd b. ‘Amr to eat with them, but he replied, ‘I am not one who eats what has been slaughtered on sacrificial stones.’”

Muhammad b. Sa'd stated, “Muhammad b. ‘Amr related to us, Abū Bakr b. Abū Sabra related to me, from Mūsā b. Maysara, from Ibn Abū Muayyak, from Ḥajar b. Abū Ihāb, as follows, ‘I saw Zayd b.‘Amr while I was at the idol named Bawāna, just after he had returned from Syria. He was observing the sun; when it set he approached the ka‘ba and performed the prayer of two prostrations. Then he said, ‘This is the qibla, the prayer site, to which Abraham and Ishmael directed themselves. I do not worship a stone, nor pray to it, nor eat what was sacrificed to it, nor will I seek the judgement of divining arrows. Yet I will pray towards this house till I die.’”

“He would also perform the pilgrimage and station himself on Mt. ‘Arafāt. He would also make the prayer call saying, ‘Labbayk! At Your service; there is no partner to You, nor any peer.’ Then he would leave ‘Arafāt, walking and praying, saying, ‘Labbayk! At Your service, in worship and submission.’””

Al-Waqqādī stated, “Alī b. Ḥākami related to me, from his father, from ‘Amīr b. Rabī‘a as follows, ‘I heard Zayd b. ‘Amr b. Nufayl say, ‘I await the coming of a prophet from the progeny of Ishmael, then from the tribe of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib. I do not see myself living to his time. But I have faith in him, assert his truthfulness, and testify that he is a prophet. If you live on a long time and see him, then tell him of my greetings to him. I will inform you of his qualities so that he will not be unknown to you.” I replied, “Do so then.”

‘He continued, “He will be a man neither tall nor short with neither much nor little hair. Redness is never absent from his eye. He bears the mark of prophethood between his shoulders. His name is to be Aḥmad and this country will be the place of his birth and his mission. Then his people will expel him from it and will disapprove of his message until he will emigrate to Yathrib; and so his authority will appear. Take care that you are not deceived about him, for I have travelled all over seeking the religion of Abraham. And those of the Jews, Christians, and Magians to whom I made enquiry answered, ‘That religion is behind you.’ And they would describe him as I have described him to you and say, ‘There is no prophet but him.’”’

‘Amīr b. Rabī‘a stated, ‘And when I became a Muslim I informed the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) of the words of Zayd b.‘Amr and did pass on his greetings to him. He returned such greeting to him and prayed for mercy for him, saying, ‘I have seen him in paradise in long, flowing robes.’””

Al-Bukhari stated in his sahih collection in his account on Zayd b. ‘Amr b. Nufayl that Muhammad b. Abū Bakr related to him that Fudayl b. Sulaymān related to us, quoting Mūsā b. Uqba, that Salim related, from ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Umar, that the Prophet (ṢAAS) met Zayd b.‘Amr b. Nufayl in the lowlands of Būdah, before revelation descended upon the Prophet. A meal was set out for the Prophet (ṢAAS) but he, Zayd, refused to eat of it. Then Zayd said, “I’m not going to eat from what you slaughter on your sacrificial stones; and I will only eat what has had the name of God spoken over it.” Zayd b. ‘Amr would criticize Quraysh for the animal sacrifices they made, saying, “Sheep are created by God; He sends rain down from the skies and makes things grow for them from the earth. But then you slaughter them in the name of gods other than Him, denying all of that and venerating them!”

Mūsā b. ‘Uqba said that Salīm b. ‘Abd Allāh related to him (indicating that he would not acknowledge what he related except that he spoke of it on the authority of Ibn ‘Umar) that Zayd b. ‘Amr b. Nufayl left for Syria enquiring after the religion he would follow and met a learned Jew whom he asked about his religion. Zayd said, “I’m inclined towards adopting your religion, so tell me of it.” The man replied, “You will not be in our religion until you receive your share of God’s anger.” Zayd replied, “But it’s only God’s anger from which I flee; I bear none of God’s anger, nor could I. Can you then direct me to something else?” He replied, “I don’t know of anything except for you to be a hanîf.” “What”, asked Zayd, “is a hanîf?” “The religion of Abraham, peace be upon him; he was neither a Jew nor a Christian and worshipped none but God.”

So Zayd left and met a Christian scholar to whom he spoke as before. But the Christian replied, “You will not be of our religion until you take your share of the curses of God.” Zayd replied, “But it’s only from the curses of God that I flee. I do not at all ever bear the curses of God or His anger, nor could I. So would you direct me to something else?” “I don’t know of anything, except for you to be a hanîf,” the Christian answered. “What is a hanîf?” Zayd asked. “It is the religion of Abraham,” the Christian answered; “he was neither a Jew nor a Christian and worshipped none but God.”

Having considered their statement about Abraham, Zayd went outside and when he was in open country, he raised his hands and said, “O God, I testify that I follow the religion of Abraham.”

Al-Bukhārī went on: “And al-Layth said, ‘Hishām b. Urwa wrote to me, on the authority of his father, and that of Asmā’ daughter of Abū Bakr, may God be pleased with them both, he quotes her as having said, “I saw Zayd b. ‘Amr b. Nufayl standing leaning his back against the ka’ba, saying, ‘O tribe of Quraysh, by God, none of you is in Abraham’s religion except me.’ And he used to give life back to a girl about to be killed at birth, saying to the man who wished to kill his daughter, ‘Don’t kill her; I will take care of providing for her.’ Then he would take her away, and when she grew up he would tell her father, ‘If you like, I’ll either return her to you or provide for her.’”” This brings to an end al-Bukhārī’s account of Zayd.

This last anecdote was corroborated by the hāfiz Ibn ‘Asakir in a line of authority from Abū Bakr b. Abū Dāwūd from Ḥammād, from al-Layth, from Hishām, from his father back to Asmā’, and his account is similar.
Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abū al-Zinād said that on a line of authority from Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, Asmāʾ? said: “I heard Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl say, as he was resting his back against the kaʿba: ‘O tribe of Quraysh, beware of adultery; it bequeaths poverty.”

Here in his account Ibn ʿAsākir gave several very strange anecdotes, some of which are extremely implausible. Then he related from a variety of lines back to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) as having said: “He will be raised up on Judgement Day as a nation all by himself.” These accounts include the one by Muḥammad b. Uthmān b. Abū Shayba in which he indicated that Yūsuf b. Yaʿqūb al-Ṣaffār and Yahyā b. Saʿīd al-Umawī related to him, fromMujālid, from al-Shaʿbī, from Jābir, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was asked about Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl having approached the qibla before the coming of Islam and saying, “My God is the God of Abraham, and my religion that of Abraham” and then making the prayer prostrations. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “That man will be gathered (on Judgement Day) as a nation all by himself between me and Jesus son of Mary.” The chain of authorities for this is very good.

Al-Waqīdī stated that Mūsā b. Shayba related to him, from Khārīja b. ʿAbd Allah b. Kaʿb b. Mālik, who said, “I heard Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab make reference to Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl with the words, ‘He died while Quraysh were building the kaʿba, five years before the divine inspiration descended upon the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). And death came to him while he spoke the words, “I follow the religion of Abraham.”’ His sonSaʿīd b. Zayd became a Muslim and a follower of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Once ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb and Saʿīd b. Zayd approached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and asked him about Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl and he responded, ‘May God give him forgiveness and grant him mercy. He died following the religion of Abraham.’ And after that day Muslims never failed to pray for forgiveness and mercy for him whenever they mentioned his name. And thenSaʿīd b. al-Musayyab himself spoke the words, ‘May God grant him mercy and forgiveness.’”

Muḥammad b. Saʿīd quoted al-Waqīdī as having said, “Zakariyyāʾ b. Yahyā al-Saʿdī related to me that he heard his father say, ‘Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl died in Mecca and he was buried at the foot ofMt. Hira.’”

We, however, stated previously that he died in the land of al-Balqāʾ in Syria, when he was attacked by some men of the tribe of Lakhm who killed him at a place called Mayfa. But God knows best.

Al-Bāghandī said, giving a line of authorities through Abū Saʿīd al-Aṣḥajj, Abū Muʿāwiya, Hishām and his father, that ʿĀʾisha said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, ‘I entered paradise and saw that Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl had two fine, lofty trees.’”

Among the verses of Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl, God have mercy on him, are the lines:
“To God I give my praise and homage, expressing a lasting joy that time will not fade.
To the Sovereign Lord all high, above whom there is none, a God to whom no other Lord can draw close.”

It is also said that these lines are of Umayya b. Abū al-Ṣalt. But God knows best.

Among his verses affirming the oneness of God are the lines related by Muhammad b. Ishaq and al-Zubayr b. Bakkār, among others:

“I turn my face in submission to Him to whom the earth bearing heavy rocks submits;
He laid it down and when it settled He made it firm and level, then raised up the mountains above it.
I turn my face in submission to Him to whom the clouds bearing sweet cool water submit,
When they are drawn along to a place, they obey, and pour water down copiously upon it.
I turn my face in submission to Him to whom the wind, changing direction hither and yon, submits.”

Muhammad b. Ishaq said, “I heard from Hishām b. Urwa that, according to his father, Zayd b. ‘Amr spoke the verses:

“Is it one Lord or one thousand I’m to worship according to your calculations?
I have abandoned al-Lāt and al-Uzza together; thus do all those who are firm and determined.
It is not al-Uzza I worship, nor her daughters, nor do I visit the two idols of the ‘Amr tribe.
Nor do I worship Ghanm, though he was our Lord when I had little wisdom.
I was perplexed – and at night many things are strange that a sensible man understands well by day –
That God erased many men who lived in wickedness,
Yet gave long life to others through the faith of a people so that from them a young child could multiply,
And though a man may falter, one day he may be cured, as a green tree branch will leaf again,
But I worship the All-merciful, my lord, that the compassionate Lord may forgive my sins.
So preserve your fear of God your Lord; while you preserve it you will not be lost.
You will see that the abode of the innocent is paradise, and that there is a burning hell-fire for disbelievers, Shame while alive and when they die they will suffer terrible torture.”

This is the complete text of this poem as given by Muhammad b. Ishaq. Abū al-Qasim al-Baghawi related it from Mus‘ab b. ‘Abd Allah, from al-Dahhak b. Uthmān, from ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Abū al-Zinād.
Hishām b. ‘Urwa stated, from his father, that Asmā', daughter of Abī Bakr, said, “Zayd b. ‘Amr b. Nufayl spoke the following verses:

'I have abandoned all spirits and demons; thus do all those who are firm and determined;

It is not al-'Uzza I worship, nor her daughters, nor do I revere the two idols of the Ṭasam tribe.

Nor do I worship Ghanm, though he was our lord when I had little wisdom,

Is it one lord or a thousand I'm to worship according to your calculations?

Do you not know that God erased many men who lived in wickedness,

And gave long life to others through the faith of a people so that from them a young boy could grow up.

And though a man may falter, one day he may be cured, as a green tree branch will leaf again.’”

Waraqa h. Nawfal spoke the following poetry:

“You followed the proper course and did right, O son of ‘Amr, but indeed you have avoided the hot ovens of hell,

For your worship of a Lord unlike any other and for your abandoning as they are the spirits of the mountains,

I say that when I descend into some eerie place: have pity, do not let enemies appear before me.

Have pity! For you are the hope of the spirits; and you are my God, our Lord, and my hope.

Let the mercy of his Lord attain a man, even if he be seventy valleys down beneath the earth.

I worship a Lord who responds, and I will not be seen worshipping someone who does not ever hear anyone calling.

I say as I pray in every church: ‘Blessed be You; I have indeed prayed much in Your name.’”

It has been stated earlier that Zayd b. ‘Amr b. Nufayl left for Syria along with Waraqa b. Nawfal, Uthmān b. al-Ḥuwayrith, and Ubayd Allāh b. Jahlsh. All became Christians except Zayd, who adopted no religion but remained in his natural state of the worship of God alone and without partner, following as best he could the religion of Abraham, as we have mentioned.

As for Waraqa b. Nawfal, his story will be told in discussion of the beginnings of the divine mission.

As for Uthmān b. al-Ḥuwayrith, he remained in Syria until he died there while with Caesar. His story is very strange and was related by al-Umawi. In brief it is as follows. When he approached Caesar and complained to him of the treatment he had received from his own people, Caesar wrote for him to Ibn Jafna, the king of the Arabs of Syria, to the effect that he should provide an army to go with him to make war against Quraysh. He did decide to do so, but the bedouins wrote to him advising him against that action because of what they saw to be the greatness of Mecca, and also how God had treated the army that had come with the elephants. So Ibn Jafna invested him with a tunic dyed with poison and he was killed by it. Zayd b. 'Amr b. Nufayl eulogized him in poetry recorded by al-Umawi which we have left out for brevity's sake.

His death occurred some three years before the mission of Islam. But God, All-glorious and Almighty is He, knows best.

An Account of some of the events that occurred in the time of the Fatimids, including the building of the ka'ba.

It has been said that it was Adam who first built it. Such a statement comes down in a hadith that is marfu' and came on the authority of 'Abd Allah b. 'Amr; Ibn Lahi'a is one of its chain of authorities and he is an authority considered da'if, weak.

The most credible of statements is that Abraham, al-Khalil, "the true friend", peace be upon him, was the first who built it, as reported above. Simak b. Harb so related, from Khalid b. 'Ar'ara back to 'Ali b. Abi Talib who said, "Then it collapsed, was rebuilt by al-'amaliqa, 'the giants', fell down and was built again by Jurhum; thereafter it collapsed and was rebuilt by Quraysh."

Here I will recount its being built by Quraysh; this occurred some five, or as some say fifteen, years before the coming of Islam. Al-Zuhri stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) had by then attained puberty." Material related to all that will come in its proper place, if God wills it, and in Him there is trust.

An Account of Ka'b b. Lu'ayy.

Abu Nu'aym related in a line from Muhammad b. al-Hasan b. Zabala, from Muhammad b. Talha al-Taymi, from Muhammad b. Ibrahim b. al-Harith back to Abu Salama who said, "Ka'b b. Lu'ayy would gather his people on Friday, a day Quraysh used to name al-'aaba, and he would address them as follows: 'And moreover you must listen, learn, understand, and know. Tranquil night, sunlit day; the earth is flat, the skies erected, the mountains bulwarks, the stars markers. The first are as the last, the female and the male, the couple, and whatever excites, all heads for decay. So respect your ties of relationship and preserve your kinship, 49. Al-fatra is a word given in Arabic to mean the period or the interval between two prophets. Here it refers to the interval between the life of Jesus and that of Muhammad.

50. A tradition related by a Companion of the Prophet and reporting the latter's words or actions.
and make your wealth multiply. For did you ever see return someone who expired, or a dead person revived? The (eternal) abode is before you and thought is not what you express. Embellish and venerate your sanctuary and preserve it well; for to it glorious tidings will come. And from it will emerge a noble prophet.'

"Then he would say,

'Veryday and night, every day has a happening; the same to us whether by day time or night.

They both bring events when they arrive and their coverings over us bring many blessings.

The Prophet Muḥammad will come unexpectedly, and bring such news; believable indeed is their bearer.'

"Then he would say, 'By God, were I but part of them, by hearing and sight, by hand and foot, I would vigorously rise up like a camel, and charge into it like a stallion.'

"Then he would say, 'Would that I could witness the impact of his mission, when the tribe seeks the truth without vigour."

Between the death of Ka'b b. Lu'ayy and the mission of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) there was a period of 560 years.

An Account of the re-digging of the well zamzam by ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib b. Ḥāshim, its whereabouts having been lost from the period when Jurhum filled and levelled it, up to his own time.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated, "ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib was sleeping in the sacred enclosure when he received a vision ordering him to dig up zamzam.

"ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib was the first to begin digging it, according to what was related to me by Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb al-Miṣrī from Marthad b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Yazānī, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Dhurayr al-Ghāfiqī, namely, that the last mentioned heard ʿAlī b. Abī Ṭalīb, God be pleased with him, telling how ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib had been ordered to dig zamzam. ʿAlī reported ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib as saying: 'I was sleeping in the sanctuary when a vision came to me and said, 'Dig ūiba!' 'But what's ūiba?' I asked. But it vanished.

"Next day when I again went to my bed and slept, he came again and said, "Dig barra!" 'But what's barra?' I asked. But it vanished.

"Next day when I again went to my bed and slept, he came again and said, "Dig al-madnīna!" 'But what's al-madnīna?' I asked. But it vanished.

"Next day when I again went to my bed and slept, he came again and said, "Dig zamzam!" 'But what's zamzam?' I asked. "It will never fail or dry up; it will water the grand pilgrim. It lies between the dung and the blood, near the nest of the crow with the white leg and the ants’ nest."

“The matter having been clarified and he having been directed to its location, and knowing that he had been spoken to in truth, he took up his pick-axe next day and went off in the company of his son al-Ḥārith b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, his only son at that time. So he dug down for it and when the coping stone appeared to ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib he let out a cry of praise for God. Quraysh therefore knew that he had achieved his purpose so they came and told him, ‘O ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, that is the well of our father Ishmael; we have a right to it, so make us partners in it with yourself.’ ‘I will do no such thing; I was specifically assigned to this without you; I was given it from among you all,’ he replied. They asked again, ‘Treat us fairly; we’ll not leave you alone till we share with you in it.’ ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib replied, ‘Then appoint someone of your choice for me to ask to adjudicate the matter with you.’ ‘The woman diviner of the Banū Saʿd b. Hudhaym,’ they suggested. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib agreed; the woman lived in the uplands of Syria.

“So ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib mounted up with a company of men of the Banū Ummaya, along with members of each tribe of Quraysh and they all left. The earth at that time was waterless and having travelled some distance ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib and his friends had used up their water. They were so thirsty that they became convinced they were doomed. They therefore asked the other party for water, but they refused, saying, ‘We’re in a waterless desert and we fear for ourselves a similar plight that afflicts you.’ ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib then said, ‘I think each man should dig a grave for himself with the strength he has remaining, so that when anyone dies his friends can put him in the hole and cover him up, and so on till there is only one man left. Better the loss (without burial) of one than that of a whole company.’ ‘What you instruct is good,’ they agreed.

“So each man dug himself a hole, and they sat down to await death from thirst. But then ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib told his companions, ‘By God, our casting ourselves down by our own hands like this for death without searching the land and exerting ourselves is truly weakness; God may well provide us water somewhere in this land. Mount up!’ So they did so. But when ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib urged his mount up, a spring of sweet water burst up from beneath its hoof! ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib made exclamations of God’s greatness, as did his companions; he and they dismounted, drank, and filled their water flasks. Then ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib called the Quraysh tribesmen who had been watching all this, saying, ‘Come on over to the spring. God has given us water.’ So they came and drank, all filling their flasks. They then said, ‘Judgement has been made, by God, in your favour against us! We won’t ever dispute with you over zamzam. He who gave you this water in this desert is also He who gave you zamzam. So return to your drawing of water, it being your right.’
“So he and they all went back without consulting the diviner. And Quraysh gave ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib free access to zamzam.”

Ibn Isḥaq stated, “And that is the account I heard on the authority of ʿAli b. Abū Ṭalib concerning zamzam.”

He also said, “I heard someone relate a tradition that ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib was told, when ordered to dig zamzam:

‘Then pray for abundant water without impurities to quench God’s pilgrims at all the sacred sites.

‘Having been told so, ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib went to Quraysh and said to them, ‘You should know that I have been ordered to dig zamzam.’ They asked, ‘And was it explained to you where it lies?’ When he responded in the negative, they told him, ‘Then go back to your bed where you had your vision. For if it in truth came from God, it will be made clear to you, whereas if it came from Satan, it will not reappear to you.’ ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib did return and slept and did receive a visitation, being told: ‘Dig zamzam. You will not regret if you do dig it. It is an inheritance from your most mighty Father. It will never fail or dry up. It will water the grand pilgrim. Like fleeing ostriches, it will never be divided. A truth-sayer vows it to a benefactor. It will be an inheritance and a secure contract. It is not as some things you might have known. And it lies between the dung and the blood.’”

Ibn Isḥaq went on, “It is claimed that when this was said to ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, he asked, ‘Then where is it?’ He was then told that it was near the ants’ nest where the crow would peck the next day. But God knows whether that was so.

“Next day ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib went with his son al-Ḥarīth, his only son at that time (al-Umawi added: ‘along with his servant Aṣrām’) and found the ants’ nest and the crow pecking near by, between the two idols Isāf and Nāʿila, at which Quraysh would make sacrifice. So he brought his pick-axe to dig where he had been told. But Quraysh stood in his way saying, ‘By God, we’ll not allow you to dig down between our two idols to which we make sacrifice.’ ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib addressed his son al-Ḥarīth, ‘Protect me so I can dig, for by God I shall carry on and do what I was ordered.’ When Quraysh realized that he would not back down, they made way for him to dig and left him alone. He had not been digging for long before the coping stone appeared and he acclaimed the greatness of God, knowing that truth had been spoken to hi. Persisting in the digging, he found there two golden gazelles that Jurhum had buried, along with some white metal swords and some breast-plates.

“Quraysh then addressed him, ‘O ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, we have a right to share in this.’ ‘No,’ he replied, ‘but let us decide what is equitable between us. Let us use divinatory arrows over it.’ ‘What shall we do then?’ they asked. He replied, ‘I will make two arrows for the kaʾba, two for myself, and two for you. Whoever has his arrows come out for something, that he shall have. Whoever has his arrows left behind gets nothing." They agreed that this was fair. So he made two yellow arrows for the ka'ba, two black ones for himself, and two white ones for them. Then he gave the arrows to the diviner at the site of the idol Hubal, who was to cast them. And Hubal was the largest of their idols; that was why Abū Sufyān said at the battle of Uhud, 'Arise, O Hubal!', referring to that idol. So Ābd al-Muṭṭalib said a prayer to God."

Yūnus b. Bukayr recounted, from Muḥammad b. Ishaq, that Ābd al-Muṭṭalib began saying:

"O God, You are the much-praised King; my Lord; You are the one who initiates and repeats,
The one who is firmly holding the rocky mountain; from You comes all that is new or that is old.
If You wish, You give inspiration as You want, to find the place of the ornaments and the steel.
So make clear today what You wish; I have made a vow to Him who decides Give it, O my Lord, to me, and I'll not go back."

"The diviner cast the arrows and the two yellow ones went towards the gazelles, giving them to the ka'ba, the two black ones came out for the swords and armour, making them for Ābd al-Muṭṭalib, but the two arrows for Quraysh remained behind. So Ābd al-Muṭṭalib hammered down the two swords into a door for the ka'ba into which he incorporated the two golden gazelles. This was, so they say, the first decoration of gold the ka'ba had."

Thereafter Ābd al-Muṭṭalib took charge of providing water from zamzam to the pilgrims. And Ibn Ishaq and others relate that Mecca had many wells in it prior to the appearance of zamzam at the time of Ābd al-Muṭṭalib. Ibn Ishaq, moreover, enumerated and named them, and told their whereabouts in and around Mecca as well as those who dug them. His account of this concludes, "Zamzam overshadowed all the other wells, their customers preferring to go to it, because of its proximity to the holy mosque, the superiority of its water over the rest, and its having been the well of Ishmael, son of Abraham. The Ābd Manāf tribe expressed because of it a superiority over all Quraysh as well as all the other Arabs."

It is established in the saḥīh collection of Muslim in the material relating to the adoption of Islam by Abū Dharr, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said the following about zamzam: "It is the taste supreme. It is the cure of disease."

The Imām Ahmad (Ibn Hanbal) said, "Ābd Allāh b. al-Waltid related to us, on the authority of Ābd Allāh b. al-Muṣmil, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābīr b. Ābd Allāh, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'The water of zamzam is for what is drunk from it.'"
Ibn Māja related this also, from a hadith of ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Muʿmil. They spoke it and gave its wording as: “The water of zamzam is for what is drunk to it.” Suwayd b. Saʿīd related it from ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Mubārak, from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Abū al-Mawālī, from Muḥammad b. al-Munkādīr, from Jābir, from the Prophet (ṢAAS) who said, “The water of zamzam is for what is drunk to it.” However, Suwayd b. Saʿīd is a weak link. The tradition as preserved from Ibn al-Mubārak from ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Muʿmil is as given above. Al-Ḥākim related it from Ibn ʿAbbās in the form “The water of zamzam is for what is drunk to it.” And this is questionable. But God knows best.

Similarly, Ibn Māja and al-Ḥākim relate that Ibn ʿAbbās said to a man, “When you drink from zamzam face the kaʿba and repeat the name of God. Then breathe deeply three times and drink from it until you are full. When finished, give praise to God. For the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘The evidence of the differences between us and the hypocrites is that they do not drink to the fill from the water of zamzam.’”

And it is related from ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib that he said, “O God, I do not allow a person to wash with it; it is for people to drink hillun, ‘freely available’, wa, ‘and’, ballun, ‘allowed’.”

Some learned scholars report this from al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib but in fact it came from ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib himself, for it was he who restored zamzam as stated above. But God knows best.

Al-Umawi wrote in his Maghāzi work as follows: “Abū ʿUbayd related to us, Yahyā b. Saʿīd informed us, from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥarmala, that the last mentioned said that he heard Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab relate that ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib b. Hāshim remarked when he dug zamzam, ‘I do not allow a person to wash with it; it is freely available and allowed for a person to drink it.’ To that purpose he had two basins for it, one for drinking, the other for the prayer ablution. At that point he said, ‘I do not allow a person to wash with it, deeming it inappropriate for the mosque to be washed in.’”

According to Abū ʿUbayd, al-Asmaʿī stated that his saying wa ballun is an ittāṣ, ḥillun. But Abū ʿUbayd objected that an ittāṣ cannot occur with the wa of conjunction (wa meaning “and”) but it is used because, as Muʿtamir b. Sulaymān had indicated, ballun in the language of Ḥimyar means mubāh, i.e. “allowed”.

Abū ʿUbayd then said, “Abū Bakr b. ʿAyyāsh related to us, from ʿĀsim b. Abū al-Nujūd, that he heard Zirr (say) that he heard al-ʿAbbās state, ‘I do not allow a person to wash in it.’” And ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Mahdī related to us, as did

51. Discussion of these words hillun wa ballun follows in the text. Also, another meaning of the word ballun is “for wetting”.

52. In Arabic grammar ittāṣ is intensification by repetition of a word with its initial consonant changed.
Sufyān, from ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ṭalqama, that the last mentioned heard Ibn ʿAbbās say the same.”

And this tradition relating back to both of them is true; it has them so saying in their own era with the purpose of informing and establishing what ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib had specified when he dug it; thus it does not contradict the preceding account. But God knows best.

The rights to providing water for the pilgrims remained with ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib as long as he lived, thereafter passing to his son Abū Ṭālib for a period. Then it so happened that he became impoverished for a while and went into debt to his brother al-ʿAbbās for 10,000 from one year to the next. Abū Ṭālib spent the money on matters relating to watering the pilgrims, and when the next year arrived he had nothing left. So he asked his brother for a loan of 14,000 to the following year, at which time, he promised, he would repay the total debt. But al-ʿAbbās agreed only on condition that if Abū Ṭālib did not repay it, control of the well would transfer to himself. To this Abū Ṭālib agreed.

When the next year arrived Abū Ṭālib had nothing to give to al-ʿAbbās and so he relinquished control of the well to him. Thereafter it went to ʿAbd Allāh, al-ʿAbbās’ son, then to ʿAṭī b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbbās, to Dāwūd b. ʿĀli, to Sulaymān b. ʿĀli and to ʿIsā b. ʿĀli. Then al-Manṣūr took it over and entrusted its control to his mawla, his freed slave, Abū Ruzayn. Al-Umawi gave this account.

An Account of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib’s vow to sacrifice one of his sons.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “It is claimed that when ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib received such opposition from Quraysh over the digging of zamzam, he vowed that if ten sons were born to him who grew up and protected him, he would sacrifice one of them for God at the kaʿba.

“Eventually he had ten sons grown up whom he knew would give him protection. Their names were al-Ḥārith, al-Zubayr, Ḥajj, Dirār, al-Muqawwim, Abū Labāh, al-ʿAbbās, Ḥamza, Abū Ṭālib, and ʿAbd Allāh. He assembled them and told them of his vow and asked them to honour his pledge to God, Almighty and All-glorious is He. They obeyed, and asked him what he wanted them to do. He asked each of them to take an arrow, write his name on it and return to him.

“They did so and he went with them inside the kaʿba to the site of their god Hubal where there was the well in which offerings to the kaʿba would be placed. There, near Hubal, were seven arrows which they would use for divining a judgement over some matter of consequence, a question of blood-money, kinship, or the like. They would come to Hubal to seek a resolution, accepting whatever they were ordered to do or to refrain from.”
The outcome was that when ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib came to seek judgement with the arrows from Hubal, the one with the name of his son ʿAbd Allah came forth.
He was his youngest boy and the one he loved most, but ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib took his son ʿAbd Allah by the hand, drew out his knife, and went up to Isḥāf and Nāʾila to sacrifice him. At this Quraysh left their meeting-places and asked him what he intended to do. When he replied that he was going to sacrifice ʿAbd Allāh, they, along with ʿAbd Allah’s brothers, said, “By God, do not sacrifice him without seeking forgiveness for him; if you do this men will keep bringing their sons to sacrifice and how could that go on?”

Yūnus b. Bukayr related from Ibn Ishaq that al-ʿAbbas was the one who drew ʿAbd Allah out from beneath his father’s foot when he had placed it on him to sacrifice him. And it is said that he scarred his face so badly that it remained visible there till he died.

Thereafter Quraysh advised that ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib should go to the Hijāz where there was a woman diviner who had an attendant spirit, and that he should consult her. “That”, they said, “is the best you can do. If she then orders you to sacrifice him, do so; but if she tells you to do something that provides you a way out, then accept it.”

So they left for Medina, where they found that the diviner whose name was Sajāh, as Yūnus b. Bukayr reported from Ibn Ishaq, was at Khaybar. They rode off again and went to her and sought her advice, ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib telling her of the whole problem regarding him and his son. She told them: “Leave me today, until my attendant spirit comes and I can ask him.”

They left her and ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib prayed to God. Next day they went back to her and she informed them that she had had a message. “How much is the blood-money you prescribe?” she asked. “Ten camels,” they told her, that being then the case. “Then go back to your land and present your man as an offering and do the same with ten camels. Then cast arrows to decide between him and them. If the divining arrow points to him then add to the number of camels until your god is satisfied; if it points to the camels, then sacrifice them in his place.
That way you will please your god and save your man.”

So they went back to Mecca and, when they had agreed to do as she had said, ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib said prayers to God. Then they offered up ʿAbd Allāh and the ten camels as sacrifice and cast the arrow. It came out against ʿAbd Allāh so they added ten more camels and tried once more. Again it came out against him and they added ten more, then kept on doing so until the camels reached one hundred in number. When they next cast the arrow it came out for the camels. At that point the men of Quraysh told ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, who was standing near Hubal praying to God, “It’s all over! Your God is pleased, O ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib.” It is claimed that he then replied, “No, not until I cast the arrows three times.” So they did cast three times, the arrow always indicating the camels, which were slaughtered and left there for anyone to take without hindrance. And Ibn Hishām reported “And it is said, for any wild beast to take as well.”

It is otherwise related that when the number of camels reached 100 the arrow was still against ‘Abd Allāh, so they added another 100, making 200, and the same thing happened. Likewise it did with 300. It was then that the arrow came out against the camels, whereupon ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib slaughtered them. But the first account is the true one. Though God knows best.

Ibn Jarir related, from Yūnus b. ‘Abd al-Aslām, from Ibn Wahb, from Yūnus b. Yazid, from al-Zuhri from Qabisā b. Ḍu‘ayb that Ibn ‘Abbās was asked for advice by a woman who had vowed to sacrifice her son at the ka’ba. He told her to sacrifice 100 camels instead and related to her the above account about ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib. She then asked ‘Abd Allāh b. Umar but he gave her no legal decision, simply refraining from doing so. The problem then reached Marwān b. al-Ḥakam, who was the governor of Medina. He said, “Neither of them gave a correct decision.” He then ordered the woman to perform whatever acts of charity she could, forbidding her from sacrificing her son and not ordering her to slaughter any camels. And the people accepted Marwān’s judgement in the matter. But God knows best.

An Account of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib’s marriage of his son ‘Abd Allāh to Āmina bint Wahb al-Zuhriyya.

Ibn Ishāq stated: “‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib then left, holding his son ‘Abd Allāh by the hand. They passed, it is claimed, a woman of Banū Asad b. ‘Abd al-Wazzā b. Qusayy who was named Umm Qattāl; she was the sister of Waraqa b. Nawfāl b. Asad b. ‘Abd al-Uzza b. Qusayy and had been there at the ka’ba. She stared into the face of ‘Ahd Allāh and asked him where he was going. ‘With my father,’ he replied. ‘If you will have me now,’ she said, ‘you can have the like number of camels that were sacrificed for you!’ ‘But I am with my father, and I may not oppose him or leave him,’ he answered.”

‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib took him further on till they reached Wahb b. ‘Abd Manāf b. Zuhra b. Kilāb b. Murra b. Ka‘b b. Lu‘ayy b. Ghālib b. Fihr who was at that time leader of Banū Zuhra in both age and honour. He agreed to marry to ‘Abd Allāh his daughter Āmina, who was then the woman most highly regarded among his people.

It is claimed that ‘Abd Allāh consummated the marriage then and there, and that she conceived the Messenger of God (ṣaḥīḥ). Afterwards he left her and passed again by the woman who had made a proposition to him. He asked her,
"How come you're not making me the offer today you did yesterday?" She replied, "The light you bore yesterday has left you, and I need you no more." She had heard from her brother Waraqa b. Nawfal who had become a Christian and studied the Scriptures, that there was to be a prophet come to that nation, and she wanted him to be born to her. So God made him of the finest and most noble lineage, as the Almighty put it, in the Qur'an, "And God knows best where to place His prophethood" (ṣūrat al-An'am, VI, v.124). We will relate the birth itself in detail.

And among the verses spoken by Umm Qattāl expressing her disappointment at her failure to get what she had wanted are the following lines related by al-Bayhaqi from Yūnus b. Bukayr from Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq, God be pleased with him:

"And so on to Bantū Zuhra, where they were, and to Amina who bore a boy
She sees al-Mahdi, the right-guided, when he mounted her, and a light that had preceded him ahead . . ."

and so on to the lines:

"All creation, all mankind, were hoping for him to lead the people as an Ima'm, rightly guided.
God shaped him from a light, making it pure, its glow taking the gloom from us.
That is the work of your lord who singled him out, whether he would move ahead one day or stay
He guides the people of Mecca after faithlessness, enjoining thereafter the fast."

Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Sahl al-Kharaḍiṭt said that 'Ali b. Ḥarb related to him, as did Muḥammad b. Umāra al-Qurashi, as did Muslim b. Khalid al-Zanjī, as did Ibn Jurayj from 'Ata' b. Abū Rihāb, from Ibn 'Abbas that the latter said, "When 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib went off with his son 'Abd Allah to arrange his marriage, he passed by a woman diviner of the Tibāla people who had adopted the Jewish faith and read the Scriptures, her name being Fāṭima daughter of Murr al-Khath'amiyya. She saw the light of prophethood on 'Abd Allah's face and said, 'Young man, would you like to have me now and let me give you 100 camels?' 'Abd Allah replied with the verse,

'I'd rather die than do the forbidden, and staying here is not allowed, I clearly see.
So how could we do what you desire?'"

Then 'Abd Allah passed on with his father who married him to Amina daughter of Wahb b. 'Abd Manāf b. Zuhra; and he stayed three nights with her. Then he had an urge to accept the woman's offer so he went to her. "Well, what did you do after (seeing) me?" she asked. And he told her. She then said: "By God, I'm not a woman of doubtful morals; but I did see a light in your face, and I wanted it to be in me. But God refused to put it anywhere other than He wished." Then Fāṭima spoke the following verses:
"I saw a sign shine forth, glistening like raindrops in dark storm clouds,
Which appeared to me as a light illuminating all around it, as the full moon shines forth.
And I hoped to attain it, a source of pride I could capture, but not everyone who strikes his flint lights fire,
For God is what a Zuhrīyya woman took, though your two garments are what she seized; but she did not know that."

She also spoke the verses:

"O Banū Ḥashim, it came off from your brother to Umayna (Āmina) as they were passionately consummating their marriage,
As the lamp when it dies down leaves behind its wicks, stained with oil,
Not all the wealth a man holds is achieved by resoluteness, nor is what escapes him always from lassitude.
So be moderate in pursuing what you want; good luck and misfortune contending together should suﬃce you, Suﬃce you either a hand tight closed or a hand laid open, ﬁngers stretched.
When Umayna (Āmina) got from him what she had, she received from him an honour, never to come again."

And Imām Abū Nu‘aym, the ḥāﬁz, in his book Dalā'il al-Nuβuwwa (Signs of the Prophethood), related on a chain from Ya‘qūb b. Muḥammad al-Zuhri, from ‘Abd al-‘Azīz b. ’Umrān, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Ja‘far, from Ibn ‘Awn, from al-Miswar b. Makhrama, from Ibn ‘Abbās as follows: “‘Abd al-Muṭṭālib went to Yemen on a winter’s journey and stayed with a Jewish high priest. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭālib said, ‘And one of the monks – by that he meant a scholar of the Scriptures – said to me, “O ‘Abd al-Muṭṭālib, would you allow me to look at a certain part of you?” “Yes, if it be nothing shameful,” I replied. Then the man opened up one of my nostrils and looked inside it, and did the same with the other one, saying, “I swear that in one of your hands you will have power and in the other prophethood. But we ﬁnd that to be in the Banū Zuhra, so how can that be?” I replied that I did not know. The man then asked, “Do you have a shā’a?” I asked him what he meant by this word shā’a and he replied, a wife. I replied that I did not at that time and he said, “Well, when you go back marry someone from them (i.e. Banū Zuhra).”’"

An Account of his life story, his battles and raids, the delegations to him, and his natural qualities, his virtues, and the features distinguishing him.

CHAPTER: AN ACCOUNT OF HIS NOBLE ANCESTRY AND THE EXCELLENCE OF HIS HIGH LINEAGE.

God Almighty’s words were: “God knows best where to place His prophethood” (sūrat al-An‘ām, VI, v.124).

When Heraclius, the Roman emperor, asked Abū Sufyān questions relating to the qualities of the Prophet (ṢAAS), he wanted to know how good his lineage was in his people. Abū Sufyān replied, “He does indeed have good lineage in us.” Heraclius commented, “Thus are the messengers given their missions within the ancestry of their own people.” He meant from among peoples with the highest reputation and the most numerous tribal connections. May God’s blessing be upon them all.

He was the best of Adam’s sons, their pride on earth and the hereafter. He was known as the father of al-Qāsim and of Ibrāhim, as Muhammad, as Ḥamad, as al-Māḥi, “the Abolisher”, the one by whom disbelief was abolished, as al-‘Aqīb, “the Ultimate” after whom no prophet would follow, as al-Ḥāshir, “the Gatherer”, i.e. he at whose feet the people would gather, as al-Muqaffi, “the Tracker”, as nabi al-Raḥma, “the Prophet of Mercy”, as nabi al-Tawbah, “the Prophet of Repentance”, as nabi al-Malḥama, “the Prophet of the Fierce Battle”, as khātim al-nabiyyin, “the Seal of the Prophets”, as al-fātih, “the Conqueror”, as Ṭāhā, as Yāsīn, and as ‘Abd Allāh, “God’s Servant”.

We will give the accounts relating to the names attributed to him (ṢAAS) in a chapter we will include after the completion of the biography. For on this subject many traditions have come down, responsibility for gathering them having been assumed by two of the great ḥuffūz Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī and Abū al-Qāsim b. ‘Asākir. Some people have written works specifically on these names, some going so far as to gather as many as 1,000. But the great legal scholar Abū Bakr b. al-ʿArabi al-Maliki, who interpreted the words of al-Tirmidhi in his book ʿAridat al-Ahwadhi (The Expert’s Clear Review), gives 64 such names. But God knows best.

He was the son of ʿAbd Allāh who was in turn the youngest son of his father ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib; ʿAbd Allāh was the man who lay down to be sacrificed but was ransomed by 100 camels, as previously explained.

Al-Zuhri said, “And ʿAbd Allāh was the most handsome man in Quraysh. He was brother to al-Ḥārith, al-Zubayr, Ḥanẓa, Ḥarār, Abū Ṭālib, whose own given name was ʿAbd Manāf, Abū Lahab, whose given name was ʿAbd al-ʿUzza, al-Muqawwim, whose given name was ʿAbd al-Kaʿba, though some say these were two men, Ḥajj, whose given name was al-Mughira, al-Ghaydaq, a man of great generosity whose given name was Nawfal, though some say that was Ḥajj. These, then, were the paternal uncles of the Prophet (SAAS).

“His aunts numbered six; they were Arwā, Barra, Umayma, Ṣafiyya, ʿĀtika, and Umm Hakīm, she being al-Baydaʿ, ‘the white woman’. We will talk of all of these later, if God wills it.

“All of these were children of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, whose own name was Shayba, ‘grey’, so known because of his grey hair; alternatively his name Shayba, meant ‘the one praised for his generosity’. However, he was known as ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib because when his father Ḥāshim had passed through Medina on a trading mission to Syria, he had stayed at the house of ʿAmr b. Zayd b. Labid b. Ḥarām b. Khidash b. Khindaf b. ʿAdi b. al-Najār al-Khazrajī al-Najjāri who was the leader of his tribe. Ḥāshim was much taken with ʿAmr’s daughter Salmā and asked her father to engage her in marriage. He did so but on condition that she should remain there with him. Some say that the condition was that she should only give birth there with him in Medina. When Ḥāshim returned from Syria he consummated marriage with her and took her with him to Mecca. When he next went away on business she was pregnant and he took her with him, leaving her in Medina. Ḥāshim then went off to Syria but died at Ghazza. When Salmā gave birth to her child she named him Shayba. He remained there with his maternal uncles of the Bani ʿAdi b. al-Najjār for seven years.

“Then his uncle al-Muṭṭalib b. ʿAbd Manāf came and secretly took him away from his mother and returned with him to Mecca. When people there saw them both on his mount they asked him who the boy was and he replied, ‘My ʿAbd, my servant!’ Then they all came up and welcomed the boy, addressing him consequently as ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, i.e. al-Muṭṭalib’s servant, and the name stuck to him.
“He rose to a great position of leadership among Quraysh, becoming their most honoured chief. They united behind him and in him rested the rights of al-saqzya and al-risāda, as had been the case with al-Muṭṭalib. It was al-Muṭṭalib who dug out the well zamzam, which had been covered up since the Jurhum era. He was the first to decorate the ka‘ba with gold, overlaying its doors with those two golden gazelles he found in zamzam along with the two white-metal swords.”

According to Ibn Hishām, ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib was brother to Asad, Naḍla, Abū Ṣayfī, Ḥayya, Khālida, Ruqayya, al-Shaffā and Da‘īfa. All these were children of Hāshim. His real name was ‘Amr, but he was called Hāshim, i.e. “the crusher”, because he would crush bread with meat and broth for his people during years of famine, as Maṭrūd b. Ka‘b al-Khuza‘i said in his ode; the poem is alternatively attributed to al-Zaba‘rī Wid ‘Abd Allāh. The verses are:

“‘Amr is he who crushed the bread and meat for his people, the people of Mecca suffering drought and hunger.

He received charge of both expeditions, the winter caravan and that of the summers.”

This related to his having been the first to institute the two expeditions, of winter and of summer; he was the oldest of his father’s children. Ibn Jarīr related that he was the twin brother of ‘Abd Shams, and that Hāshim came forth with his leg attached to his twin brother’s head, which was only separated after blood had flowed between them. People said that that signified wars between their progeny; and so there occurred the confrontation between Bani al-‘Abbās and Bani Umayya b. ‘Abd Shams in the year 133 AH.

Their third brother, al-Muṭṭalib, was his father’s youngest boy; their mother was ‘Ātika, daughter of Murra, son of Hilāl.

The fourth of the siblings was Nawfāl, born to another mother named Waqīda daughter of ‘Amr of the tribe of Māzin. These brothers ruled their people after their father; they were known as al-mujirīn, “the protectors”. That is because they negotiated safe conduct for their people of Quraysh with the kings of the neighbouring lands so that they could enter them for trading. Hāshim won safe passage from the rulers of Syria, Byzantium, and Ghassān; ‘Abd Shams won the same from the Great Negus, the emperor of Abyssinia; Nawfāl gained it for them from the Chosroes, while al-Muṭṭalib received it from the kings of Ḥimyar.

It was of them that a poet composed the lines,

“O you, man, changing your luggage, have you not dismounted at the family of ‘Abd Manaf?”

54. The provision of water and food to the pilgrims.
Hashim enjoyed the rights of feeding and watering the pilgrims following his father, and it is to him as well as to his brother al-Muṭṭalib, that his kinsfolk claimed relationship. The two men were as one during both the pre- and post-Islamic periods, never differing. They (and their progeny) all together constituted one multi-sided tribe. But the progeny of their brothers ʿAbd Shams and Nawfal separated out. That is why Abū Ṭalib stated in his ode:

“God requited us Abd Shams and Nawfal as a punishment for evil, immediate, not delayed.”

No family from one father is known who were so far removed from one another in their deaths as they were. Hashim died in Ghazza in Syria, ʿAbd Shams died in Mecca, Nawfal in Salmān in Iraq, while al-Muṭṭalib, known as “the moon” for his fine looks, died in Radman on the way to Yemen. These, then are the four famous brothers, Hashim, ʿAbd Shams, Nawfal, and al-Muṭṭalib.

They did have a fifth brother who was not famous. He was known as Abū ʿAmr, his own name being ʿAbd, from the name ʿAbd Qūṣayy. People called him ʿAbd b. Qūṣayy; he died childless. This is what al-Zubayr b. Bakkār and others said. They also had six sisters whose names were Tāmāḏur, Ḥayya, Rīṭa, Qīlāba, Umm al-Akḥthām, and Umm Sufyān.

All these, then, were children of ʿAbd Manāf. Manāf was the name of an idol, and the original name of ʿAbd Manāf was “al-Muḥṭara”. He took the leadership during his father’s time, and his nobility was unexcelled. He was the brother of ʿAbd al-Dār who was his father’s eldest son. To him he delegated various appointments, as told above. There were also ʿAbd al-ʿUzza, ʿAbd, Barra, and Takhmur, the mother of them all being Ḥūbbā, daughter of Ḥulayl b. Ḥubshiyya b. Sallāl b. Kašb b. ʿAmr the Khuzāʿī. Her father was the last of the kings of Khuzāʿa who were the guardians of the kaʿba. All were descendants of Qūṣayy, whose given name was Zayd. He was known as Qūṣayy because his mother had married Ṭābiʾa b. Ḥarām b. Udhra after his father; Ṭābiʾa travelled with her to his own land while her son was still young, and Qūṣayy was so named because of this, i.e. “little stranger”. He later, when fully grown, returned to Mecca and united Quraysh into one, having gathered them together from all parts of the land. He removed Khuzāʿa’s power from the House (the kaʿba) and expelled them from Mecca, thus restoring what was right. He became absolute ruler over Quraysh and controlled the feeding and watering of the pilgrims, systems he established, along with the sadāna, the ḥijāba, and al-liwā. And his house was where public meetings were held, all of which is explained above. It is due to this that a poet spoke the line:

55. These offices referred, respectively, to the keeper of the kaʿba, the chamberlain, and the hoisting of the banner.
“Qūṣayy, by my life, was known as a ‘gatherer together’; through him God gathered up all the tribes of Fihr.”

He was the brother of Zuhrā, both being sons of Kilāb, who was the brother of Taym and of Yaqṣa Abu Makhzūm. All three were sons of Murra, who was the brother of ʿAdī and Huṣayṣ.

All of these were progeny of Kaʿb. It was he who used to address his people each Friday and announce to them the glad tidings of the coming of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), reciting poetry to that effect as we have given above. Kaʿb was brother to ʿAmīr, Sāma, Khuzayma, Saʿīd, al-Ḥārith, and ʿAwf, the seven being sons of Luʿayy, brother of Taym al-ʿAdram. These latter two were sons of Ghālib, brother of al-Ḥārith and Muḥārīb. These three were sons of Fīhr who was the brother of al-Ḥārith, both of them being sons of Mālik. He was the brother of al-Ṣalṭ and Yakhlud, who were sons of al-Naḍr who was given due credit for bringing Quraysh together into the right way, as we have shown heretofore. He was the brother of Mālik, Makhān, ʿAbd Manāt, and others. All these were born to Kināna, brother of Asād, Asada, and al-Ḥawn, sons of Khuzayma who was brother to Hudhayl. These two were sons of Mudrika, whose name was ʿAmr who was brother to Ṭabīkha whose name was ʿAmīr, and to Qamāʿa. These three were sons of Iyās; his brother was ʿAylān who fathered all of Qays. These two were sons of Muḍar, brother of Rābiʿa. These two men were known as al-Sariḥān, the candid ones, of the line of Ishmael; they had brothers named Anmār and Iyād who went to Yemen. These four were sons of Nizār, brother of Qudāʿa, according, that is, to a group of those who consider Qudāʿa to have been Ḥijāzī and ʿAdnānī in line, as we have explained above. These last two, Nizār and Qudāʿa, were sons of Maʿād b. ʿAdnān.

This genealogy, described as above, is without dispute among scholars. All the tribes of the Arabs of Ḥijāz combine in this line of descent. That is why Ibn ʿAbbās and others comment on the Qurʾānic verse, “Say, I shall not ask of you all any other reward than that of love for those related” (ṣūrat al-Shūrā, XLII, v.23) by implying that there was not a single subtribe of Quraysh devoid of linear connection with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

Ibn ʿAbbās, God be pleased with him, was correct and conservative in saying as he did. Namely, that all the ʿAdnān Arab tribes relate to him through their fathers’ lines and many through their mothers’ lines as well, as Muhammad b. Ishāq and others showed through their tracing of all his mothers and of those of the rest back through their maternal lines at great length.

Ibn Ishāq, God have mercy on him, and the ḥāfīz Ibn ʿAsākir recorded all this.

In our comments above on the biography of ʿAdnān we gave details of his descent and matters relating thereto. He was very definitely of Ishmael’s line, though there is some variance in the number of generations between them, as is shown in accounts we explained above. But God knows best.
We also reported the rest of the genealogy back from 'Adnān to Adam, along with the ode of Abū al-‘Abbās al-Nashi' incorporating that material. All this was in the material relating to the Arabs of Hījāz, our thanks be to God.

The Imām Abū Ja‘far b. Jarir, God have mercy on him, gave a very useful, succinct, and accurate account of that in the opening part of his history.

We have one hadith relating to his descent from 'Adnān actually spoken when he was on the minbar, the pulpit, but God knows how authentic it is. The hāfiz Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī said that Abū al-Ḥasan al-‘Alī b. ʿAlī b. Ḥāfīz, the reciter in Baghdad, informed him that Abū ʿIsa Bakkār b. Aḥmad b. Bakkār related to him, as did Abū Ja‘far Aḥmad b. Mūsā b. Sa‘d in a transcription dated 296, quoting Abū Ja‘far Muḥammad b. Abān al-Qalānīsī, quoting Abū Muḥammad Abū Allāh b. Muḥammad b. Rabī‘a al-Qaddāmī, quoting Mālik b. Anas, from al-Zuhrī, from Anas, and from Abū Bakr, Abū al-Raḥmān b. ‘Arifī b. Hishām as follows: “It reached the Prophet (SAAS) that some men of Kinda were claiming relationship to him, so he stated, ‘Al-‘Abbās and Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb would say that only to make us look bad; we will never deny our forefathers. We are Banū al-Nadr b. Kūnān.”

The account states that the Prophet gave an address as follows: “I am Muḥammad son of ‘Abd ‘Allāh b. Abī al-Muṭṭalib b. Ḥāshim b. Abī Manāf b. Qurṣayy b. Kilāb b. Murra b. Ka‘b b. Lu‘ayy b. Ghālib b. Fihr b. Mālik b. al-Naḍr b. Kūnān b. Khuzayma b. Mūdirka b. Iyās b. Mūjār b. Nisār. And whenever people divided off into two groups God placed me in the better. I was born from my two parents and was tainted by none of the debauchery of the era before Islam. I was the product of true marriage, not fornication, right down from Adam to my father and my mother. I am the best of you in spirit and the best of you in parentage.”

This tradition is a very strange one from Mālik. Al-Qaddāmī alone transmits it, and he is a weak authority. Nevertheless we will give several testimonies in support of it from other sources.

Regarding his having said, as above, “I was the product of true marriage, not fornication”, Abī al-Razzāq stated that Ibn ‘Uyayna informed him, from Ja‘far b. Muḥammad, that his father Abū Ja‘far al-Bāqir making reference to the Qur’ānic verse, “A messenger has come to you from yourselves” (ṣūrat al-Tāhā, IX, v.128) said that, “He was not tainted at all by his birth during the jāhiliyya, the pre-Islamic era”; and the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “I was the product of true marriage, not fornication.” This tradition is very incomplete in its transmission.

The same was related by al-Bayhaqī from al-Ḥākim, from al-‘Āṣamm, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq al-Ṣan‘ānī, from Yaḥyā b. Abī Bukayr, from Abī al-Ghaflār b. al-Qāsim, from Ja‘far b. Muḥammad, from his father, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “God produced me from a true marriage, not from fornication.”
Ibn 'Adi related it with a complete transmission chain as follows, “Ahmad b. Ḥafṣ related to us, as did Muḥammad b. Abū ʿAmr al-Ṣaḍad al-Makki, as did Muḥammad b. Jafer b. Muḥammad b. ʿAli b. al-Ḥusayn, saying, ‘My father testified to me, on the authority of his father and his grandfather, as having heard from ʿAli b. Abū Ṭālib that the Prophet (ṢAAS) said, “I was the product of true marriage, not fornication, from Adam right on up to when my father and mother had me. And I was not at all tainted by the fornication of the jāhilyya.”’

This is a strange tradition from this line of transmission and can scarcely be credited.

Hushaym said, “Al-Madini related to me, from Abū al-Ḥuwayrith, from Ibn ʿAbbās, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘Nothing of the fornication of the jāhilyya was born in me; I was born from nothing but a true marriage, just like the true marriage of Islam.’”

This too is strange. The ḥāfiz Ibn ʿAsakir passed it on, then substantiated it by a tradition of Abū Hurayra, and there is weakness in its transmission from him. But God knows best.

Muḥammad b. Saʿd said, “Muḥammad b. ʿUmar informed us, quoting Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Muslim, from his uncle al-Zuhri, from Urwa, from ʿAisha who said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘I was born from a true marriage, not fornication.’”

Moreover Ibn ʿAsakir passed down from a tradition of Abū ʿĀṣim, from Shabib, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās who with reference to the Qurʾanic verse “your ever-changing presence among those who prostrate in prayer” (ṣūrat al-Shuʿarāʾ, XXVI, v.219) quoted the Prophet as saying, “from prophet to prophet until I was brought forth as a prophet.” He related this on the authority of ʿAṭaʾ.

Muḥammad b. Saʿd said, “Hishām b. Muḥammad al-Kalbi informed us, from his father who said, ‘I wrote out some 500 maternal ancestors for the Prophet (ṢAAS) and found fornication in not one of them, nor anything relating to (the evil ways) of the jāhilyya.’”

It is established in the saḥīḥ collection of al-Bukhārī from a ḥadīth of ʿAmr b. Abū ʿAmr from Saʿīd al-Maqbiri, from Abū Hurayra who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, ‘I was sent on through the best of generations of humankind, age after age, until I received my mission in the century in which I lived.’”

In the saḥīḥ of Muslim, from a tradition of al-Awzāʿī from Shaddād Abū ʿAmmār, from Wāthila b. al-Asqaʾ, comes the statement of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS): “God chose Ishmael from the children of Abraham, Banū Kināna from the tribe of Ishmael, Quraysh from the tribe of Kināna, Banū Ḥāshim from Quraysh, and myself from Banū Ḥāshim.”
The Imam Ahmad (Ibn Hanbal) stated that Abu Nu'aym related to him, from Sufyân, from Yazid b. Abū Ziyād, from 'Abd Allâh b. al-Ḥarith b. Nawfal, from al-Muṭṭalib b. Abū Wadâ'a, who said that Al-'Abbâs stated, "Certain things the people were saying reached the Prophet (ṢAAS) so he mounted the pulpit and asked, 'Who am I?' They replied, 'You are the Messenger of God.' He replied, 'I am Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allâh b. 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib; God devised creation and made me part of his best creatures. He made them all into two groups, placing me in the better of them. He created the tribes and placed me in the best one, subdivided them into buyūt (clans) and placed me in the best one. And so I am the best of you both in clan and in spirit.'" May God's grace and blessings be upon him always and forever till Judgement Day!

Ya'qūb b. Sufyân said that Ubayd Allâh b. Mūsâ related to him, from Ismā'īl b. Abū Khalīl, from Yazid b. Abū Ziyād, from 'Abd Allâh b. al-Ḥarith b. Nawfal, from al-'Abbâs b. 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib, who said, "I once said, 'O Messenger of God, when Quraysh meet one another they do so joyfully, but when they meet us it is as if we don't know them.' The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) became extremely angry when he heard that and said, 'By Him in whose hand is the soul of Muḥammad, faith will never enter the heart of any man until he loves you all for the sake of God and his Messenger.'"

"I commented, 'O Messenger of God, Quraysh sat recalling their lines of genealogy and you they compared to a date palm in a hole in the ground.' The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) responded, 'On the day when God created man he placed me among the best of them. Then when He divided them into tribes He placed me in the best one. And when He made the buyūt, clans, he placed me in the best one. And so I am the best of them in spirit and the best in clan.'"

Abū Bakr b. Abū Shība related it from Ibn Fuḍayl from Yazid b. Abū Ziyād, from 'Abd Allâh b. al-Ḥarith, from Rabī'a b. al-Ḥarith who said, "(The comment) reached the Prophet (ṢAAS) and he responded to it as above." But he (i.e. Rabī'a b. al-Ḥarith) made no mention of al-'Abbâs.

Ya'qūb b. Sufyân said that Yahyâ b. 'Abd al-Jamîd related to him, as did Qays b. 'Abd Allâh, from al-Ṭamâsh, from 'Alīlâ b. Rubâi' from Ibn 'Abbâs, who said: "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, 'God divided creation into two parts and placed me in the better of them. This relates to His words (in the Qur'ān) 'and those of the right' and "those of the left." And I am of those of the right, indeed the best one of them. God then split these two parts into thirds placing me in the best third. This relates to His words "those of al-maymâna" (the right wing) and to "al-sâbiqûn, al-sâbiqûn" (those in the forefront). I am one of those in the forefront; indeed I am the best of them.

"Then He made those thirds into tribes and placed me in the best of them. That relates to His words, "We made you into peoples and tribes so that you would know one another; the most noble of you in God's sight are the most pious. God is indeed knowing, informed” (ṣūrat al-Ḥujurat, XLIX, v.13). And I am the most pious of Adam's sons and the most noble of them with God. Without boast.

“God then made the tribes into buyūt, clans, and placed me in the best of them. This relates to God's words. "God wants only to remove from you what is unclear, O people of the house, purifying you thoroughly” (ṣūrat al-Ahzāb, XXXIII, v.33). And I and the people of my house are purified of sin.”

This hadith is somewhat strange and objectionable.

Al-Ḥakim and al-Bayhaqi related from a hadith from Muḥammad b. Dhakwān, the uncle of the son of Ḥamād b. Zayd, from ‘Amr b. Dinār, from Ibn Umar who said, "We were sitting in the courtyard of the Prophet (ṢAAS) when a woman passed by. Someone said, 'That's the daughter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)!' Abī Sufyān then commented, 'Muḥammad's presence in Banū Ḥāshim is like a sweet basil plant amidst rotten garbage!' The woman hurried off and informed the Prophet (ṢAAS).

“Soon the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arrived, his face showing his anger. He said, 'What's the meaning of certain statements reaching me about people? God created all seven heavens and chose the highest for whomsoever of his creatures he wished to dwell there. Then he created all living things and chose from them mankind. From mankind he chose the Arabs and from them Muḍār. From Muḍār he chose Quraysh and from them the Banū Ḥāshim. From Banū Ḥāshim he chose me. I am the choicest of the chosen; so whoever loves the Arabs, it is through loving me that he loves them. Whoever hates the Arabs, it is through hating me that he hates them.'”

This too is a strange hadith.

It is established in the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, "I am (to be) lord of Adam's sons on Judgement Day, without boasting.”

Al-Ḥakim and al-Bayhaqi recounted from a hadith of Mūsā b. Ubayda that ‘Amr b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Nawfāl related to him from al-Zuhrī, from Abū ‘Usāma or Abū Salama, from Ḥāishā, God bless her, who said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, “Gabriel said to me, 'I searched the earth from east to west but found no man superior to Muḥammad; and I searched the earth from east to west but found no tribe superior to the Banū Ḥāshim.'”

The ḥāfiz al-Bayhaqi said, “These traditions, even though the transmitters of some are unreliable, do substantiate one another. And the message of all does relate back to the hadith of Wāthila b. al-Asqa‘. But God knows best.”

On this subject Abū Ṭalib spoke the following verses in praise of the Prophet (ṢAAS):
“Were Quraysh to gather one day to boast, ‘Abd Manaf would be their heart and core,
And if the chiefs of ‘Abd Manaf were assessed, their most noble and ancient of line would be from Hashim,
Were they to boast one day, then Muhammed would be the one chosen from their inmost, and their pride.
Quraysh, all and sundry of them, plotted against us, but they did not succeed and were confounded;
Since ancient days we reject injustice and if others turned away in contempt we set them straight.
Each day we protect their sanctuary from evil, repelling from their refuges all seeking them;
By us the dried-out branches are revived, their roots becoming moist and growing under our protection.”

Abū al-Sakn Zakariyya b. Yaḥyā al-Ṭā‘ī said in the famous anecdote ascribed to him: “Umar b. Abū Zuhr b. Ḥašīn said, on the authority of his grandfather Ḥamīd b. Munhib, that his grandfather Khuraym b. Aws stated, ‘I went away to join the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and came to him at his camp at Tabūk. I had become a Muslim. I heard al-ʻAbbās b. ʻAbd al-Muṭṭalib say, ‘Oh Messenger of God, I would like to speak verses in your praise.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, ‘Speak on and may God not block your tongue.’ So he recited, “Before this you were pleasantly in the shade (of paradise) in a place where leaves clustered above.

Then you came down to this land; no human you, no embryo, no clot.
A droplet, rather, riding (Noah’s) vessel, the deep having bridled an eagle and his family.
Being carried from loins to womb, one world passing, another surface appearing,
Until your supreme house encompassed Khindaf56 so lofty (in honour), beneath her all other beings.
When you were born the earth glowed, the horizon shining with your light.
So we are in that illumination and that light, making our way upon the paths of righteousness.””

This poem has been ascribed to Ḥassān b. Thābit.

56. Khindaf was the wife of Ilyās, mother of Mudrika, referred to earlier in the lineage from which the Prophet descended.
Warqā' b. Umar, from Ibn Abū Najīth from ʿAtā and Mujāhid from Ibn ʿAbbās who said, "I posèd the following question to the Messenger of God (SAAS), 'Where were you, may my parents be your ransom, when Adam was still in paradise?' He replied, smiling so broadly all his teeth could be seen, 'I was in his loins. Then the vessel carried me into the loins of my father Noah, who cast me out into the loins of my father Abraham. My parents never once engaged in fornication. God went on transporting me from respectable loins to chaste wombs, pure and unsullied, and whenever a line split I was always in the better half. God has covenanted prophethood in me and made Islam my pact. He made mention of me in the Torah and in the Bible. All the prophets made clear my qualities; the earth brightens with my light and the dark clouds with my face. He taught me His Book and gave me honour in His heaven. He cut off for me one of His own names; the enthroned One is Mahmūd, while I am Muḥammad and Ahmad. He promised me that He would reward me with a garden and with al-kawthar, the river of paradise, that He would make me the first intercessor and the first for whom there was intercession. He drew me forth, moreover, out of the best marriage for my people, and they are those who give much praise, enjoin good deeds and prohibit sin.'"

Ibn ʿAbbās stated, "Ḥassān b. Ṭābit spoke the following verses about the Prophet (SAAS):

'Before this you were pleasantly in the shade, and in a place where the leaves are plaited together,
Then you dwelt in this land; no human you, no embryo, no clot,
Purified, riding the vessel, the deep flood having bridled an eagle and his family,
You were carried from loin to womb; whenever one surface passed, another appeared.'

"So the Prophet (SAAS) said, 'May God have mercy on Ḥassān!' And ʿĀli b. Abū Ṭalib commented, 'Ḥassān deserves paradise, by the Lord of the kaʿba!'"

The ḥāfiz Ibn ʿAsakir then stated: "This tradition is very strange!"
And I say, it is highly objectionable. And it is well established that these verses are by al-ʿAbbās, God be pleased with him. They were, moreover, passed on from a tradition of Abū al-Sakn Zakariyya b. Yahyā al-Ṭāḥi, as above.

I also comment that some claim that the verses are of al-ʿAbbās b. Mardās al-Salamī. But God knows best.

An observation: The qāḍī ʿIyād stated in his book al-Shifāʾ (Healing): "Regarding the name 'Ahmād' mentioned in the (holy) Books and of whom the prophets gave glad tidings, God in His wisdom prevented anyone to be named by it before Him, so that no confusion or doubt should descend on those weak of heart."
Similarly with “Muḥammad” as well; none of the Arabs or any other people was named by it until shortly before his birth word was spread that a prophet would be sent whose name would be “Muḥammad”. And so a small Arab group did give their sons that name hoping that one of them would be he. But God knows best where to place His message.

It is said that the first person named “Muḥammad” was Muhammad b. Sufyān b. Mujashi; in Yemen they say, however, that it was “Muḥammad” b. al-Yahmud of Azd.

Moreover, God protected those so named from claiming the prophethood or others from claiming it for them. Not one of them showed any manifestation that would cause anyone to suspect of such, until the two signs were realized in him (ṢAAS) “signs that could not be denied”, that being His expression.

CHAPTER ON THE BIRTH OF THE MESSENGER OF GOD (ṢAAS).

He was born on a Monday. This is from what is related by Muslim in his ṣaḥīḥ collection, from a ḥadīth told by Ghaylān b. Jarīr from ‘Abd Allāh b. Maẖad al-Zimmānī, from Abū Qatāda to the effect that a bedouin said, “O Messenger of God, what do you say about fasting on Mondays?” He replied, “That is the day I was born, and the day I was first sent revelation.”

The Imām Aḥmad said, “Mūsā b. Dāwūd related to us, as did Ibn Lāḥi’ā, from Khalīl b. Abū Ṭumān, from Ḥanash al-Sānānī, from Ibn ‘Abbās who said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was born on a Monday. He received the prophethood on a Monday, left Mecca for Medina as an emigrant on a Monday, arrived at Medina on a Monday, died on a Monday, and raised up the stone on a Monday.’”

Only Aḥmad gives the tradition thus, but ‘Amr b. Bukayr related it from Ibn Lāḥi’ā with an addition of the words, “The Qur’ānic sūrat al-Mācid (Ch. V) was revealed on a Monday, with the words, “This day have I completed for you your religion” (V, v.3).

Some others relate it thus from Mūsā b. Dāwūd with a further addition, “The battle of Badr was on a Monday.” Yazīd b. Ḥabīb was one of those who stated this. But it is highly objectionable.

According to Ibn ‘Asākir what is generally accepted is that the battle of Badr and the revelation of “This day I have completed for you your religion” both occurred on a Friday. And Ibn ‘Asākir spoke the truth.

‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Amr recounted, from Qurayb, from Ibn ‘Abbās who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was born and died on a Monday.”
Similar reports from different lines of transmission also have Ibn ‘Abbás saying that he was born on a Monday.

This, then, is a matter without dispute, namely that he was born on a Monday. Unlikely, indeed in error, is the view of those who say he was born on Friday, the 17th day, the month of Rabi‘ al-Awwal. This idea was transmitted by the ḥāfiz Ibn Dihya from what he had read in the book: 'I‘lām al-Ruwwāt bi A‘lām al-Hudā (Informing the Narrators of the Signs of Righteousness) written by certain Shi‘ites. But then Ibn Dihya proceeded to denigrate this account; and it is appropriate to criticize it since it contradicts authenticated tradition.

Most people believe that the birth occurred in the month of Rabi‘ al-Awwal, and, it is said, on the second day thereof. Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr stated this in his exhaustive study and al-Waqidi related it from Abū Ma‘ṣhar Nujayh b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān al-Madānī.

And it is said, in an account transmitted by Ibn Dihya in his book, that it occurred on the 10th of the month; Ibn ‘Aṣākir related this from Abū Ja‘far al-Bāqir as did Mujāhid from al-Sha‘bī, as above.

The birth is also said to have come on the 12th of the month. Ibn Ishāq states this. Ibn Abū Shayba relates this too in his compilation, on the authority of ‘Affān, from Sa‘īd b. Minā‘, from Jābir and from Ibn ‘Abbas, the latter two having stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was born in the ‘year of the elephant’, on Monday the 12th of Rabi‘ al-Awwal. On that same day he received his mission, was carried up to heaven, emigrated from Mecca, and died. And this is what is widely known to most people; but God knows best.”

He is also said to have been born on the 17th, as Ibn Dihya reported from some of the Shi‘a. But also on the 8th, Ibn Dihya so stating from the writing of the māzīr, the government minister, Abū Rāfī‘, son of the ḥāfiz Abū Muḥammad b. Ḥazm, from his father. What is correct about the account of Ibn Ḥazm, the first, that it occurred on the 8th, is as al-Ḥumaydī recounted from him; this is best established.

There is a second account, namely that he was born in Ramadān. Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr transmitted this from al-Zubayr b. Bakkār. This is a very strange statement. Its basis is the fact that he doubtless received revelation in Ramadān, at the beginning of the 40th year of his life. And so his birth should be in Ramadān. However, this is debatable. But God knows best.
Khaytham b. Sulaymān, the ḥāfīz, related from Khalaf b. Muḥammad Kirdaws al-Wasīṭī, from al-Muʿalla b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān, from ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd b. Jaʿfar, from al-Zuhri, from Ubayd Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh, from Ibn ʿAbbās who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was born on a Monday in Rabīʿ al-Awwal and revelation of his prophethood came down to him on Monday, the first of Rabīʿ al-Awwal; also the Qurʾān chapter al-Baqara (The Cow; II) was revealed on a Monday in Rabīʿ al-Awwal.”

This is very strange. It is Ibn ʿAsakir who related it.

Al-Zubayr b. Bakkār stated, “His mother became pregnant with him during ayyām al-taṣhriq, the celebratory feast days, in the vale of Abū Ṭalib, near al-jumrat al-wusṭā, the central stoning pile at Mina. He was born in Mecca in the house known as that of Muḥammad b. Yūsuf, brother of al-Ḥajjāj b. Yūsuf, on the 12th of Ramadān.”

The ḥāfīz Ibn ʿAsākir recounted this from a line through Muḥammad b. ʿUthmān b. ʿUqba b. Makram, from al-Musayyab b. Sharīk, from Shuʿayb b. Shuʿayb, from his father, from his grandfather, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was conceived on the day of ʿAshūrā, the 9th or 10th day of Muharram, and he was born on Monday, the 12th of Ramadān in the 23rd year after the attack on Mecca by the troops with elephants.”

Other sources relate that al-Khayzūrān, the mother of Haan al-Rashīd, when she performed the pilgrimage, ordered the conversion of this house into a mosque. It is known by her name to this day.

Al-Suhaylī gave the date of his birth as the 20th of Nisān, April. This was the most appropriate time and season; and that was in the year 882 of the era of Alexander, according to those who use astronomical almanacs.

And they claim that the ascendant was at twenty degrees from Capricorn, and that Jupiter and Saturn were joined together at a position within three degrees of Scorpio, a position in the middle of the heavens. This was in correspondence with the stages of Aries. The birth occurred as the moon first arose at the beginning of the night. Ibn Dihyā transmitted all this; but God knows best.

According to Ibn Ishaq, his birth occurred in the year of the elephant.

And this is what is well known to the people at large. Ibrāhīm b. al-Mundhir al-Ḥizāmī said, “And this is something about which our scholars have no doubt, the fact that he was born in the year of the elephant; and that he received his mission as a prophet at the beginning of the 40th year after the attack with elephants.”

57. The term was applied to the three days following the Day of Immolation during the Hajj festival.
Al-Bayhaqi related this as well from a tradition of Abū ʻIshāq al-Sabī‘ī, from Sa‘īd b. Jubayr from Ibn Abbās who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) was born in the year of the elephant attack.”

Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq stated, “Al-Muttašib b. ʻĀbd Allāh b. Qays b. Makhrama related, from his father, from his grandfather Qays b. Makhrama, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) and I were born in the year of the elephant attack; our births were contemporaneous.’” ‘Uthmān, may God be pleased with him, asked Qubāṭh b. Ashyam, brother of Bānū Ya‘mur b. Layth, “Were you the greater58 (in age) or was the Messenger of God (SAAS)?” He replied, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) was ‘greater’ than me, but I was earlier in birth. I saw the elephants’ droppings when still green and changing (in colour).” Al-Tirmidhī related this, as did al-Ḥākim from a ḥadīth of Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated: “The Messenger of God (SAAS) was 20 in the year of ‘ukāz.”

He also said, “Al-fijār59 took place 20 years after the elephant attack. The building of the kahba was done 15 years after al-fijār, and the divine mission came about 5 years after its building.”

Muḥammad b. Jubayr b. Muṭṣim stated, “Ukāz occurred 15 years after the ‘elephant’ battle, the building of the kahba 10 years thereafter, and the mission 15 years after that.”

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqi related from a tradition of ʻAbd al-‘Azīz b. Abū Thabit al-Madīni as follows: “Al-Zubayr b. Mūsā related to us on the authority of Abū al-Ḥuwayrith, saying, ‘I heard ʻAbd al-ʻMalik b. Marwān say to Qubāṭh b. Ashyam al-Kinānt al-Laythi, “O Qubāṭh, which of you, you or the Messenger of God (SAAS) was akbar?” He replied, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) was akbar (i.e. greater) than me, but I was asānn, older. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was born during the year of the elephant attack, but I was aware enough to recall my mother standing with me upon the elephant’s dung while it was still changing (in colour). And the Messenger of God (SAAS) became a Prophet at the beginning of 40 years thereafter.’’”

Yaʿqūb b. Sufyān said, “Yaḥyā b. ʻĀbd Allāh b. Bukayr related to us, Nuʿaym, meaning Ibn Maysara, related to us, from certain others, from Suwayd b. Ghafta, that the last-mentioned stated, ‘I am contemporary in birth with the Messenger of God (SAAS); I was born in the year of the elephant attack.’”

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “It is related from Suwayd b. Ghafta that he said, ‘I am younger than the Messenger of God (SAAS) by two years.’”

58. The word akbar is used which may mean “older” or “greater”; hence the exchanges in the accounts that follow.

59. Battles at Ukāz between Arab tribes during months when warfare was proscribed.
Ya'qūb said: "And Ibrāhīm b. al-Mundhir related to us, as did ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. Abū Thābit, (and) ʿAbd Allāh b. Uthmān b. Abū Sulaymān al-Nawfālī related to me, from his father, from Muḥammad b. Jabayr b. Muṭṣim, saying, 'The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was born in the year of the elephant attack, and the Ukáz incident occurred 15 years later. The kāṭha was built early in the 25th year after the elephant attack, and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) became a Prophet at the beginning of the 40th year after that attack.'"

The outcome is that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was, according to majority opinion, born in the year of the elephant attack. Some say the birth occurred one month after that event, others say 40 days, yet others 50 days, which is the most favoured date.

And according to Abī Jaʿfar al-Baqīr, the arrival of the elephants was halfway through the month of al-Muḥarram, while the birth of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) occurred 55 days thereafter.

But others say that, on the contrary, the elephant attack occurred ten years before the birth of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Ibn Abzā stated this. The attack is also said to have occurred 23 years before his birth; this is what Shuʿayb b. Shuʿayb related from his father from his grandfather, as stated above. Alternatively, the birth is said to have come 30 years after the attack; Mūsā b. ʿUqba stated this, from al-Zuhri, God be pleased with him. And Mūsā b. ʿUqba himself, God be pleased with him also, chose this date.

Abī Zakariyyāʾ al-Ṭjlānī stated that the birth came 40 years after the attack; Ibn ʿAsākir recounted this, something very strange.

Even stranger is the statement of Khalīfa b. Khayyāṭ who said, "Shuʿayb b. Ḥībbān related to me, from ʿAbd al-ʿWāḥid son of Abū ʿĀmr, from al-Ḵalīf, from Abū Ṣāliḥ, from Ibn ʿAbbās as follows: 'The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was born 15 years before the elephant attack.'" This statement is unique, objectionable, and considered weak as well.

Khalīfa b. Khayyāṭ stated, "The consensus is that he was born, peace be upon him, in the year of the elephants' attack."

A DESCRIPTION OF HIS NOBLE BIRTH (ṢAAS).

It has been told above how ʿAbd al-Ḥṣṭalib sacrificed the 100 camels, God having saved him from fulfilment of his vow to sacrifice his son ʿAbd Allāh. This was in accord with what He had decreed of old, that the nābī al-ʿummi, the unlettered Prophet (ṢAAS) the "seal of the prophets", and the lord of all the progeny of Adam would appear. Thereafter, as explained, He arranged the marriage of ʿAbd Allāḥ to the most noble of the women of Quraysh, ʿĀmina, daughter of Wahb b. ʿAbd Manāf b. Zuhra al-Zuhriyya. And when the groom took her as his wife and consummated the marriage, she became pregnant with the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Umm Qattāl, Raqīqa, daughter of Nawfal, sister of Waraqa b. Nawfal, saw the sign of light appear between ʿAbd Allāh’s eyes before he united with Āmina. She wished for it to be transmitted to herself, because of all the tidings she had heard from her brother foretelling the coming of Muḥammad (SAAS) and that his time was near; she therefore offered herself to ʿAbd Allāh. Some authorities add “To have him marry her”. That does seem most likely. But God knows best. But ʿAbd Allāh resisted her and when that dazzling light had gone to Āmina after he consummated marriage with her, it seems that he regretted not having accepted what Umm Qattāl had offered. And so he approached her to have her repeat her offer. But she now said she had no need of him and was sad at what she had missed. She therefore recited on that subject the fine and eloquent poetry we quoted above. The chaste abstinence of ʿAbd Allāh was not to his own credit but to that of the Messenger of God (SAAS); it reflected the words of God Almighty, “God knows best wherein to place His mission” (ṣūrat al-Anʿām, VI, v.124).

The tradition, from a good transmission line, has already been given that the Prophet (SAAS) stated, “I was born of marriage, not fornication.”

What is intended here is (to say) that after his mother had conceived him his father died and he remained a foetus in his mother’s womb, as it is generally understood.

Muḥammad b. Saʿd stated that Muḥammad b. ʿUmar, being al-Wāqīḍī, related to him, as did Mūsā b. Ubayyda al-Yazīḍī, as did Saʿīd b. Abū Zayd, from Ayyūb b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Abū Ṣaʿṣaʿā, as follows: “ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib went off to Ghazza in a Quraysh trading caravan. When they finished their business they left there and passed through Medina. By then ʿAbd Allāh was sick and he asked that he be left there in the company of Banū ʿAdī b. al-Najjār to whom he was related.

“He stayed there with them sick for one month while his friends continued back to Mecca. There ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib asked them about his son ʿAbd Allāh and they told him of how he was sick and they had left him with his relatives of Banū ʿAdī b. al-Najjār. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib sent to him his oldest son al-Ḥarīth, but the latter found that ʿAbd Allāh had died and been buried in the house of al-Nābigha. And so al-Ḥarīth returned to his father and told him this.

ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib and his brothers and sisters all grieved terribly at his loss. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was at that time still a foetus; ʿAbd Allāh, son of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, was 25 when he died.”

Al-Wāqīḍī asserted, “This is the most firmly based of the accounts of the death of ʿAbd Allāh and of his age that we have.”

Al-Wāqīḍī also said, “Maʿṣūr related to me from al-Zuhri that ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib sent ʿAbd Allāh to Medina to purchase dates for them but he died.”
Muḥammad b. Sa‘d stated, “Hishām b. Muḥammad b. al-Sā‘ib al-Kalbī told us from his father as well as from ‘Awānā b. al-Ḥakam that they had both said that ʻAbd Allāh b. ʻAbd al-Muṭṭalib died after the Messenger of God (ṣaḥīḥ) had reached 28 months; and it is also said he was 7 months old.”

Muḥammad b. Sa‘d stated, “The first account is better established, namely that when he died the Messenger of God (ṣaḥīḥ) was still a foetus.”

Al-Zubayr b. Bakkār said, “Mulynunad b. Hasan related to me, from ʻAbd al-Salam, from Ibn Kharbudh, as follows, ʻAbd Allāh died in Medina when the Messenger of God (ṣaḥīḥ) was 2 months old. His mother died when he was 4 years of age, and his grandfather when he was 8. And so he was entrusted to his uncle, Abū ʻAlī.”

What al-Waqidi considered more probable and the ḥāfīz Muḥammad b. Sa‘d wrote, was that when his father died the Messenger of God (ṣaḥīḥ) was still a foetus in his mother’s womb.

And this is the epitome and highest rank of being an orphan.

In the ḥadīth literature occur the words, “and the visions of my mother who saw, as she bore me, a light came forth from her that lit up the castles of Syria.”

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated that Šāmīna, daughter of Wahb and mother of the Messenger of God (ṣaḥīḥ), used to say that when she became pregnant with the Messenger of God (ṣaḥīḥ), a voice told her: “You are pregnant with the lord of this nation; when he drops to the ground (in birth) say the words, ‘I invoke for him the protection of the One God, from the evil of all who envy, from everyone committed to his oath and every prowling slave; may a champion protect me, for he is with the All-praised and All-glorious One, until I see him come into view. “And the proof of that is a light accompanying him that will fill the castles of Buṣrā in Syria. And at his birth, then call him Muḥammad, for in the Torah his name is “Ahmad” and the hosts of earth and heaven give him ḥamād, praise. In the Gospels his name is “Aḥmad”, the hosts of heaven and earth giving him ḥamād, praise. And his name in the Qur’ān is “Muḥammad”, “the praised one.””

But these traditions require that she had a vision when she became pregnant with him, that a light was emanating from her by which the castles of Syria were illuminated. And then, when she gave birth to him, she actually saw by her eyes a realization of that, just as she had seen beforehand, as told here. But God knows best.

Muḥammad b. Sa‘d stated that Muḥammad b. Umar, he being al-Wāqidi, informed him that Muḥammad b. ʻAbd Allāh b. Muslim related to him, from al-Zuhri, what follows. Al-Waqidi also stated that Mūsā b. ʻAbda related to him the following, from his brother and Muḥammad b. Ka‘b al-Quraṭī; as did ʻAbd Allāh b. Ja‘far al-Zuhri, from his aunt Umm Bakr, daughter of al-Miswar, from her father; as did ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Ibrāhīm al-Mazānī and Ziyād b. Ḥashraj, from Abū Wajza; as did Maʿmar from Abū Nujayh, from Mujaḥid; as did Ṭalha b. ʿAmr from ʿĀṭaʾ from Ibn ʿAbbās. The accounts of some of these correlate with those of others. These accounts state that Āmina daughter of Wāb said, “I became pregnant with him (meaning the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)) and he caused me no difficulties up to when I gave birth to him. When he was separated from me a light emerged along with him that lit all between east and west. Then he dropped to the ground, resting upon his hands, and took up a handful of earth which he gripped tight, raising his head towards heaven.”

Some sources word this tradition, “he dropped down resting upon his knees and there emerged with him a light by which were illuminated the castles and market-places of Syria, even so that the necks of the camels at Buṣrā could be seen, while he raised his head towards heaven.”

The ḥāfiẓ Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqi said that Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh, the ḥāfiẓ, informed him, quoting Muḥammad b. Ismāʿīl, quoting Muḥammad b. Ishaq, and Yūnus b. Muḥashshir b. al-Ḥasan, quoting Yaʿqūb b. Muḥammad al-Zuhri, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. ʿImrān, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUthmān b. Abū ʿUthmān b. Jāḥiẓ b. Muʿāwiyah, from his father, from Ibn Abī al-ʿAṣ as follows: “My mother told me that she witnessed the giving of the birth by Āmina daughter of Wāb to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) the night the birth occurred.” She said, “All I could see in the house was light. As I looked I saw the stars coming so close that I said that they were going to fall on me!”

The qāḍī (judge) ʿIyād recounted, from al-Shaffīʿ, mother of ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. ʿAww, that she was his midwife and that she said that when he dropped into her hands and first made a sound, she heard a voice say, “May God have mercy on you!” And (she said) that a light shone from him by which the castles of Byzantium could be seen.

Muḥammad b. Ishaq said that when she gave birth to him she sent her slave girl to ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, his father having died while she was pregnant (it is also said that ʿAbd Allāh died when the Prophet (ṢAAS) was 28 months old, and God knows best which account is true) to say to him, “A boy has been born to you, so look to him.”

When ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib came to her she related to him what she had seen when she bore him, what she had been told about him, and what she had been ordered to name him.

So ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib took him in to Hubal; inside the kaʿba, and stood and prayed, thanking God the Almighty and Glorious, and speaking the verses, “Praise be to God who gave me this fine, wonderful boy,

Who already in the cradle leads all boys; I entrust his safety to the pillared House (kaʿba),
Until he becomes the epitome of young men, until I see him fully grown.
I seek his protection from all who hate, and from the envious and the unstable,
From those with ambition but eyeless, until I see him highly eloquent;
You are he who was named in the Qur'ān, in books whose meanings are well established,
(Your name being) ‘Āḥmad, written upon the tongue.”

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “Ābu ‘Abd Allāh the ḥāfiz informed us, quoting Ābu Bakr Muḥammad b. Āḥmad b. Ḥātim al-Darābardi, of Merv, Ābu ‘Abd Allāh al-Būshanjī related to us, quoting Ābu Ayyūb Sulaymān b. Salama al-Khabā’īrī, quoting Yūnus b. ‘Aṭā’ b. ‘Uthmān b. Rabī’ā b. Ziyād b. al-Ḥārith al-Ṣaddāqī, of Egypt, quoting al-Ḥakam b. Abān, from Īkrīma, from Ibn ʿAbbās, from his father al-ʿAbbās b. ‘Ābd al-Muṭṭalīb, God bless him, as follows. “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was born circumcised and with his umbilical cord severed. His grandfather ‘Ābd al-Muṭṭalīb was amazed at this and found favour in him, saying, ‘This son of mine is sure to be important.’ And so he was.”

There is dispute over the veracity of this.
The ḥāfiz Ibn ‘Asākir told it, from an account of Sufyān b. Muḥammad al-Maṣṣiṣī, from Hushaym, from Yūnus b. Ubayd, from al-Ḥasan, from Anas, as follows: The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “One way God honoured me was in my being born already circumcised, so that no one saw my private parts.”

He (Ibn ‘Asākir) then related it on a line of transmission from al-Ḥasan b. ‘Arafa, on the authority of Hushaym.

He thereafter related it from Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. Sulaymān, he being al-Bāghandi, who said that ‘Abd al-Ḥāmīn b. Ayyūb al-Ḥīmṣī related to him, quoting Mūsā b. Ābd Mūṣā al-Maqdīṣī, that Khālid b. Salama related to him, from Naṭīḥ, from Ibn ʿUmar, that the latter said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was born circumcised and with his umbilical cord detached.”

Abū Nuʿaym stated that Abū ʿĀḥmad Muḥammad b. ʿĀḥmad al-Ghitrī related to him, quoting al-Ḥusayn b. ʿĀḥmad b. ‘Ābd Allāh al-Mālikī, quoting Sulaymān b. Salama al-Khabā’īrī, quoting Yūnus b. ‘Aṭā’, quoting al-Ḥakam b. Abān, quoting Īkrīma, from Ibn ʿAbbās, from his father al-ʿAbbās, as follows, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was born circumcised and with his umbilical cord detached. This amazed his grandfather ‘Ābd al-Muṭṭalīb and he found favour in him, saying, ‘This son of mine is sure to be important.’ And so he was.”

Some authorities claim authenticity for this tradition for the lines of transmission it has; some even claim for it the status of mutawātir.60 However, this is debatable.

60. The term connotes a tradition related by consecutive testimonies and therefore one of evident authenticity.
The word makhtūn given in these traditions means “having the foreskin cut off”; the word masrūr means “having had the umbilical cord from his mother severed”.

The hāfiz Ibn ʿAsākir related from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿUaynayn al-Baṣrī as follows, “ʿAlī b. Muḥammad al-Madīnī al-Salmī related to us, quoting Salama b. Muḥārib b. Muslim b. Ziyād, from his father, from Abū Bakr, that Gabriel circumcised the Prophet (ṣaas) when he cleansed his heart.”

This is extremely strange.

It is also said that it was his grandfather ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib who circumcised him and held a celebration for him to which he gathered all Quraysh. But God knows best.

Al-Bayhaqī said that Abū ʿAbd Allāh the hāfiz informed us, quoting Muḥammad b. Kāmil al-Qaḍī – verbally – that Muḥammad b. Ismāʿīl – meaning al-Salmī – related to him that Abū Saʿīd ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṣaʿīd related to him that Muṣʿūyiya b. Ṣaʿīd told him, from Abū al-Ḥakam al-Ṭanūkhī as follows: “When a child was born to Quraysh they would entrust it to some Quraysh women till next morning. They would place an upside-down pottery vessel over it. When the Messenger of God (ṣaas) was born, ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib entrusted him to the women and they did put over him an upside-down pottery vessel. When they came to him next morning they discovered that the vessel had split into two pieces and fallen away from him. They found him there with his eyes wide open gazing up to heaven! When ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib arrived they told him, ‘We never saw a newborn child like him! We discovered that the vessel had split in two away from him and found him open-eyed and gazing up to heaven!’ He commented, ‘Take care of him; I hope he will be of importance, or that he will achieve good.’”

On the seventh day he made sacrifice for him and invited Quraysh to see him. When they had feasted, they asked, “O ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, what have you thought of naming this son of yours you have honoured?” “I have named him Muḥammad,” he replied. “Why”, they asked, “have you preferred him not to have one of the names of his kinsfolk?” “Because I wanted God to praise him in heaven and His creatures to praise him on earth,” he replied.

Language scholars say, “All that invites the qualities of good is named ‘Muḥammad’.” As the poet said,

To you, blameless as you are, I have urged on my mount, to him who is the glorious and noble master, the one ‘Muḥammad’ (i.e. “the laudable one”).

Some scholars say that God, the Almighty and Glorious, encouraged them to name him Muḥammad for the praiseworthy qualities he possessed; so that word and deed be joined and that the name and the one named be appropriately congruent in form and concept. As his uncle Abī Tālib composed—and the verse is also attributed to ʿHashān—

“God took a part of His own name for him, to honour him; for He of the throne is named ‘Mahmūd’ (i.e. he to whom praise is due) while he is ‘Muḥammad’.”

We will report the various names and qualities by which he (Ṣaḥīḥ) is known, these being his evident qualities and pure virtues, the evidences of his prophethood, and the attributes of his status. All these we will give at the end of the biography, if God wills it so.

The ḥāfīz Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī said that Abī ʿAbd Allāh the ḥāfīz informed him that Abū al-ʿAbbās Muḥammād b. Yaʿqūb related to him, quoting Ahmad b. Shaybān al-Ramālī, quoting Ahmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ḥubalī, quoting al-Haytham b. Jamīl, quoting Zuḥayr, from Muḥārib b. Dithār, from ʿAmr b. Yathribī, from al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalīb, as follows: “I said: ‘O Messenger of God, it was a sign of your prophethood that encouraged me to join your religion. I saw you in the cradle whispering to the moon and gesturing to it with your finger. And it would move in the direction you indicated.’ He replied, ‘I would talk to it and it to me and it would distract me from crying. And I would hear its palpitations when it would prostrate beneath God’s throne.’”

He (Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī) then said, “He (Ahmad b. Ibrāhīm Ḥubalī) transmitted only this one tradition, and he is not known.”

Section: On the signs that occurred on the night of the birth of the Prophet (Ṣaḥīḥ).

In the section on Hawāṭif al-ʿAin (The Cries of the Spirits), we told of the downcast faces of many of the idols and how they fell from their places on that night, and of what the Negus, the king of Abyssinia, saw. Similarly we have reported the appearance of the light that came with him that even lit up the castles of Syria when he was born, and how he dropped into a kneeling position and raised his head to heaven. We told also how the vessel split asunder from above his honoured face, what was seen by the light in the house where he was born and how the stars came down close to them, and other such events.

Al-Suhaylī related from the Qurʾān commentary of Baqī b. Makhlid, the ḥāfīz, that Satan let out four cries. One came when he was cursed (by God); another when he was sent down from heaven; a third when the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ) was born; and the fourth when sūrat al-ʿĀʾishā, the opening verse of the Qurʾān, came down.

Muḥammād b. Ishāq said that Hishām b. Urwa would tell traditions on the authority of his father, that came from ʿĀʾisha, who once said, “There was a Jew who resided in Mecca and did business there. On the night when the Messenger of God (SAAS) was born, the man addressed a gathering of Quraysh with the words, 'O Quraysh, did a birth occur among you this night?' They replied that they did not know. He then exclaimed, 'Well, God is very great; if that should have missed you, then no matter. Do look, and remember what I am telling you. This night a prophet has been born to this last nation; between his shoulders there is a mark consisting of successive lines of hair looking like a horse’s mane. He will not suckle for two nights and this is because a spirit will have put his finger into his mouth and prevented him from suckling.'

"The gathering broke up at this with all amazed at what he had told them. When they returned to their homes each one told his family. And they responded, 'By God, a child was born to 'Abd Allah, son of 'Abd al-Muttalib, a boy they named "Muhammad".' The people then gathered and asked one another, 'Did you hear what the Jew said, and have you heard of the birth of the boy?' They then hurried off to the Jew and told him the news. He asked them to go with him, so that he could see the boy. They left together and took him in to Amina, saying, 'Bring out your son for us.' She did so and they uncovered his back. There they saw the mark and the Jew fell down in a faint. When he came to, they asked him what was the matter with him. He replied, 'By God, prophecy has left Israel's tribe; are you glad with it, O Quraysh? He will so empower you that news of it will spread from east and west!"

Muhammad b. Ishāq said that Ṣalih b. Ibrāhim b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Awf related to him, from Yahyā b. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Sa'īd b. Zurārā, as follows, “Certain trustworthy men of my tribe told me that Ḥassān b. Thābit once said, 'I was a mature lad of seven or eight, capable of understanding all I saw and heard, when one morning a Jew in Yathrib began shouting for the attention of his people. When they gathered about him— I heard all that myself— they asked him what was the matter with him. He replied, 'By God, prophecy has left Israel’s tribe; are you glad with it, O Quraysh? He will so empower you that news of it will spread from east and west!'

Muhammad b. Ṣalih b. Ibrāhim b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Awf related to him, from Yahyā b. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Sa'īd b. Zurārā, as follows, “Certain trustworthy men of my tribe told me that Ḥassān b. Thābit once said, 'I was a mature lad of seven or eight, capable of understanding all I saw and heard, when one morning a Jew in Yathrib began shouting for the attention of his people. When they gathered about him— I heard all that myself— they asked him what was the matter with him. He replied, 'By God, prophecy has left Israel’s tribe; are you glad with it, O Quraysh? He will so empower you that news of it will spread from east and west!'

The ḥāfiz Abū Nuʿaym related in the book, Dalā'il al-Nubuwā (Signs of the Prophethood), from a tradition of Abū Bakr b. 'Abd Allāh al-'Amīrī, from Sulaymān b. Suḥaym and Dhurayh b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān, both of their accounts coming from 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abū Sa'īd, from his father, who said that he heard Abū Mālik b. Sinān say: "I came one day to talk with Banū 'Abd al-Asḥal, with whom we then had a truce, and heard the Jew Yūshūʾ say, 'The time approaches for the coming of a prophet named 'Abī Ahmad who will arise from the sanctuary.' Khālid b. Thaqāfah al-Asḥalī asked him, sarcastically, 'How might you describe him?' He responded, 'A man neither short nor tall, with fine, light eyes; he wears a full cloak and rides a donkey, carries his sword over his shoulder and to this land will he migrate.'"

Abū Mālik went on, 'When I returned to my own people and expressed at that time my surprise at what Yūshūʾ had been saying, I heard one of our own men comment, ‘So is it Yūshū who alone says that? All the Jews of Yathrib are saying the same!’”

Abū Malik continued, “I thereafter left and visited the Banū Qurayza whom I found in assembly discussing the Prophet (SAAS). Al-Zubayr b. Bāṭā said, ‘The red star has risen and it only ever rises on the departure or emergence of a prophet. And the only one left is Ahmad; this will be the place to which he will migrate.’ And Abū Saʿīd said, ‘When the Prophet (SAAS) eventually arrived my father told him this story, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, “If al-Zubayr had adopted Islam, then his fellow Jewish leaders would also have done so; but they all followed him.”’

Abū Nuʿaym said that Umar b. Muḥammad related to him, quoting Ibrāḥīm b. al-Sindi, quoting al-Naḍr b. Salama, quoting Iṣmāʿīl b. Qays b. Sulaymān b. Zayd b. Thābit, from Ibrāḥīm b. Yaḥyā b. Thābit, who said that he heard Zayd b. Thābit say, “The Jewish rabbis of the Banū Qurayza and al-Naḍr would discuss the description of the Prophet (SAAS), and when the red star arose, they said that it was for a prophet after whom there would be no other, that his name was Ahmad and that he would migrate to Yathrib. But when the Messenger of God (SAAS) ultimately arrived in the town they denied him, expressing their envy and disbelief.”

This story is also given by the ḥāfīz Abū Nuʿaym in his book from other lines of transmission, and may God be praised.

An Account of the shaking of the palace, and of the falling of the balconies, the extinguishing of the fires, the visions of the Magian supreme priest, and other such signs.

The ḥāfīz Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar b. Sahl al-Kharaṭi stated in the book, Ḥaṃṭif al-Jān (The Cries of the Spirits), that ʿAlī b. Ḥarb related to him, quoting Abū Ayyūb Yaʿlā b. ʿImrān, from the family of Jarīr b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Bajāli quoting Makhzūm b. Hāni b. Makhzūm, from his father who reached the age of 150 years, as follows, “When it was the night in which the Messenger of God (SAAS) was born Chosroe’s domed palace shook and 14 balconies upon it fell down. Also the ‘fire of Persia’ went out, having not done so for a thousand years before, and Lake Sāwa emptied. A Magian priest saw (in a dream) wild camels leading pure-bred horses that had crossed the Tigris river and spread into their land. This greatly alarmed Chosroe when he told him of it next morning; he put on a brave front and pretended lack of concern but then decided not to conceal it from his governors. He therefore summoned them, put on his crown, and sat upon his throne. Then he had them brought in and when they gathered around him he said, 'Do you know why I have summoned you?' They replied that all they knew was that their king wanted to tell them something. At that point a message came telling of the extinguishing of the fire, news that further upset the king. He then told them what he (the priest) had seen and what had alarmed him.

"The supreme priest explained, 'Last night I saw, may God save the realm, a vision.' He then recounted his vision of the camels and the king asked him how he interpreted it. He replied that it concerned some event occurring over in the territory of the Arabs who would understand it better than they themselves.

"Thereupon the king wrote a message, saying, 'From Chosroe, king of kings, to al-Nu'mán b. al-Mundhir: Greetings. Send me some man learned in what I wish to question him about.' Al-Nu'mán then dispatched to him ʿAbd al-Masīh b. ʿAmr b. Ḥayyān b. Buqayla al-Ghassān. When he arrived Chosroe asked him, 'Do you have knowledge of what I wish to question you about?' ʿAbd al-Masīh replied, 'Let the king inform or question me as however he wishes; if I have knowledge of it (then good), otherwise I will inform him of someone who does know.'

"So Chosroe told him what he had been informed and ʿAbd al-Masīḥ replied, 'An uncle of mine named Saṭīḥ who lives in the uplands of Syria will have knowledge of that.' Chosroe then told him to go to this man to ask him what he wanted to know and then to return with the explanation.

"ʿAbd al-Masīḥ left but Saṭīḥ, by the time he reached him, was on his deathbed. ʿAbd al-Masīḥ greeted him and talked to him, but Saṭīḥ made no reply. So ʿAbd al-Masīḥ then spoke the following verses:

'Hast the noble lord of Yemen gone deaf or does he hear; or has he died, the ultimate reins (death) having him in tow.
O he who determines the course, one that would exhaust anyone, your visitor is the local sheikh of the Sunan family.
His mother is of the family of Dhīḥb (‘wolf’) b. Ḥajān (crooked of staff, evil-eyed) vicious of fang, raucous to the ear.
White, full of cloak and body, a messenger from the king of the Persians, travelling by night till deep slumber.
Carried over the earth by a strong, large she-camel, tireless, unwavering by thunder or vicissitudes of time.
Lifting me with a bump and dropping me with a crash, bare of breast and lower back, Enveloped by a gale of manure dust, as though blasting from the two sides of a mountain.'
"When Saṭṭāh heard those verses he raised his head and said, 'Why, it's ‘Abd al-Masṭḥ, ridden here on a tireless mount, who's come to Saṭṭāh, looking down at my death-bed; you've been sent by the king of the Sassanians, because of the shaking of his palace, the extinguishing of the fires, and the visions of the priest who saw wild camels leading pure-bred horses that had crossed the Tigris and spread into their lands.

"'O ‘Abd al-Masṭḥ, when many recitations have been made and the sceptre-bearer has appeared, the Samawā valley flooded, Lake Sāwa dried up, and the fires of Persia gone out, then Syria is Syria no more for Saṭṭāh. Of them there shall reign kings and queens to the number of their balconies; all that will be, will be.'

"At that Saṭṭāh died, right then and there. So ‘Abd al-Masṭḥ mounted his camel, saying the following verses:

'Get going, for you are decisive and expeditious; separation and change do not alarm you.

If the rule of the Sassanians is ending (so be it), for man is all stages and periods of time,

They may have achieved a status whose power mighty lions dread,

Of whom was Bahrām of the Tower and his brothers, the al-Hurmuzān, and Sābūr and Sābūr.61

People are indeed changeable; knowing that one of them has become destitute he is then despised and abandoned,

And many are the people who are (erroneously) influenced by what they hear, as if distracted by playing flutes.

However, should they see someone with riches and prosperity, then they are to him closely associated. This has been the secret of life, well preserved and repeatedly validated (they say), that's the province and concern of the unknown,

And good and evil stick always as a pair; for good is pursued relentlessly, evil avoided.'

"When ‘Abd al-Masṭḥ came in to Chosroe and told him what Saṭṭāh had said, Chosroe replied, 'So, until 14 of us have ruled, many things can happen!'

"Ten of their kings did rule in a period of four years and the remainder ruled on until the caliphate of Uthmān, God be pleased with him.’

The last of their kings, the one from whom rule was wrested, was Yazdajard b. Shahriyār b. Abravīz b. Hurmuz b. Anūshirwān; it was the last mentioned in whose era the domed palace shook. His forebears had ruled for 3,164 years. The first of their kings was Juŷūmart b. Umaym b. Lāwadh b. Sām b. Noah. Mention of the lives of Shaqq and Saṭṭāh have been given above.

61. Bahrām, Sābūr, and Sābūr were Sassanian kings. Al-Hurmuzān was a famous Persian military leader.
Regarding this man Saṭīḥ, the ḥāfiẓ Ibn ‘Asākir stated in his history: “His name was al-Rabiʾ b. Rabīʿa b. Masʿūd b. Māzin b. Dhīʾb b. ʿAdī b. Māzin b. al-Azd. He was known as al-Rabiʾ b. Masʿūd; his mother was Rāḍa daughter of Saʿd b. al-Ḥarīth al-Ḥajjūrī.”

Other accounts of his ancestry also exist. He lived at al-Jābiyya. Moreover, he (Ibn ‘Asākir) related from ‘Abd Ḥātim al-Sijistani that the latter heard some sheikhs, among whom were Abu ʿUbayda and others say, “He (Saṭīḥ) came after Luqāmān b. ʿAd. He was born at the time of the torrent of al-ʿArim and he lived on to the era of King Dhī Nuwās, a period of some 30 generations. He dwelt in Bahrain. The tribe of ʿAbd Qays claimed him as theirs, as also did Azd. Most authorities claim him to have been of Azd; we do not know from whom he was descended. His descendants, however, say he was from Azd.”

It is related of Ibn ʿAbbās that he said, “No one in all mankind was like Saṭīḥ; he was like flesh on a butcher’s block, devoid of bones or sinew except for his head, his eyes, and his hands. He folded up from feet to neck like a garment. And the only part of him that moved was his tongue.”

Others say that when he became angry he would puff up and sit. Ibn ʿAbbās recounted that when Saṭīḥ went to Mecca he was met by a group of their leaders among whom were ʿAbd Shams and ʿAbd Mānāf, sons of Ḥusayn. They questioned him on a variety of matters and he responded to them frankly. They asked him how it would be at the end of time and he replied, “Take this from me and as God’s inspiration to me, you are now, Arabs, in an age of decrepitude in terms of both your vision and that of foreigners. You have neither knowledge nor understanding. After you there will arise those with understanding. They will seek after all ranges of knowledge and they will destroy the idols, pursue the worthless, fight the non-Arabs, and go in search of the spoils of war. What will happen ultimately and for ever, will be that a right-guided prophet will surely draw you forth from this land and lead you to the truth. He will refute Yagāṭh and the lies, be innocent of worship of the devil, and pray to one Lord alone. Then God will take him unto Himself, giving him praise and the best abode, one lost to the world but seen there in heaven. Then al-ṣiddiq (‘the trusting’, i.e. the first Caliph ʿAbd Bakr) will follow him; when he gives judgement he will speak aright, and there will be no rush nor rupture in restoring rights. He will be followed by al-Hanif (‘The Sincere’, i.e. the second Caliph, ʿUmar), the noble and demanding lord. He will be the ‘host supreme’ and best arbiter of the faith.” He then made mention of (the third Caliph) ʿUthmān and his murder, and of the rule thereafter of the Umayyads and the ʿAbbāsid and all the disturbances and wars that followed. Ibn ʿAsākir traces his line of transmission back to Ibn ʿAbbās, in all its length.

62. Said to have been a man-made ditch filled with drinking-water for the camels.
We stated previously his comment to Rabi'ā b. Naṣr, king of Yemen, and how Sāṭīḥ described the vision he had had before he was himself told of it. And then we related how he predicted the disturbances and the changes of government that would occur in Yemen before reaching Sayf b. Dhū Yazan. Rabi'ā b. Naṣr then asked whether that rule would hold or be broken and Sāṭīḥ replied it would end. The king asked who would end it, and Sāṭīḥ responded, “A pure prophet to whom inspiration comes from the Almighty.” When asked from which tribe the prophet would come, he replied, “From the progeny of Ghalib b. Fihr b. Malik b. al-Nadr; and the rule shall be in his people till the end of time.” “And shall there be an end to time?” the king asked. “Yes, indeed,” was the reply, “on that day the first and the last shall be gathered and the good rejoice while the evil suffer.” “Is what you are telling me really true?” the king asked. “Yes”, Sāṭīḥ replied, “by the dawn and the dusk and by the moon when it becomes full, what I have told you is indeed true.” And Shiqq was in complete agreement with all this, using different phraseology, as we have shown above.

Among the verses of Sāṭīḥ are the lines, “Act in God’s piety in secret and in public, and never deceitfully pretend good faith.

And always be a protector and shield for those neighbouring you when fate’s misfortunes befall them.”

That poetry was transmitted by the ḥāfiẓ Abū ‘Asākir. Al-Muṣṭafā b. Zakariyyā al-Jariri, moreover, cited that and stated, “Stories relating to Sāṭīḥ are many, and several scholars have collected them. What is well known is that he was a soothsayer and gave information about the Prophet (ṢAAS) and described both his qualities and his mission. And it is related to us through a chain of authorities God alone can judge, that the Prophet (ṢAAS) was asked about Sāṭīḥ and responded, “He was a prophet, squandered by his own people.”

Regarding this tradition, my own comment is that it is without foundation in any of the established works of Islam. I do not consider its authority chain to be well founded; one similar to it is given relative to Khālid b. Sinān al-ʿAbsī and it too lacks veracity.

What is evident in these expressions points to Sāṭīḥ having had excellent knowledge, and they do evince believability. But he did not survive on after the coming of Islam, as al-Jariri maintained. In this regard, he tells us that Sāṭīḥ told his nephew, “O ‘Abd al-Masīḥ (if) when many recitations have been made, and the sceptre-bearer has appeared, the Samāwa valley has flooded, Lake Sawa dried up, and the fires of Persia gone out, then Syria is Syria no more for Sāṭīḥ; then kings and queens will reign to the number of their balconies; and all that will be, will be.” At that Sāṭīḥ died then and there. This was after the birth of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) by a month or, a shay’a, a portion thereof, that is, less than that.
His death occurred in a part of Syria contiguous to the land of Iraq; and God alone knows the truth about Sāṭīḥ and what became of him.

Ibn Ṭaḥrār al-Jarīrī relates that he lived 700 years. Others say he lived 500; yet others 300. But God knows best.

Ibn 'Asākir related that a king once asked Sāṭīḥ about the family origin of a young man about whom there was some disagreement. He therefore informed him of the facts at length and with wit and eloquence. The king then asked Sāṭīḥ to tell him about how he knew all that. Sāṭīḥ replied, “This knowledge of mine does not come from me, not by guesswork or by thought; I took it from a brother of mine who heard inspiration on Mt. Sinai.” The king then asked, “Have you seen your brother, this genie; is he with you and won’t he depart from you?” Sāṭīḥ replied, “He will cease to exist when I do. I only ever pronounce what he says.”

As stated previously, he and Shiqq b. Muṣʿab b. Yashkur b. Rahm b. Başr b. Uqba, the other diviner, were both born on the same day. They were carried to the fortune-teller, Tarifa, daughter of al-Ḥusayn al-Ḥamidiyya, and she spat into their mouths. And so they inherited divination from her. She died that very same day. Sāṭīḥ was half-human. It is said that Khālid b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Qusrī was of his progeny. Shiqq died a very long time before Sāṭīḥ.

Regarding ʿAbd al-Masīḥ b. ʿAmr b. Qays b. Ḥayyān b. Buqayla al-Ghassānī, the Christian, he was very long-lived.

The ẖāṣī Ibn ʿAsākir gave his life story in his history, saying therein that it was he who made the peace treaty for al-Ḥira with Khalid b. al-Walid; he gave at length the story of their contact. Also he reported that ʿAbd al-Masīḥ once ate by his own hand some rapid-acting poison, but that no harm came to him. This was because as he took it he spoke the words, “In the name of God; and by God, Lord of the earth and the heaven, who (ensures that) no harm will come when His name is invoked.” He then ate it, swooned, and beat his hands on his chest. He poured with sweat and then, God bless him, recovered. Verses other than those previously quoted are also attributed to ʿAbd al-Masīḥ.

Abū Nuʿaym said that Muḥammad b. Ahmad b. al-Ḥasan related to us, quoting Muḥammad b. ʿUthmān b. Abū Shayba, quoting Uqba b. Makram, quoting al-Musayyab b. Sharīk, quoting Muḥammad b. Sharīk, all on the authority of Shuʿayb b. Shuʿayb, from his father and from his grandfather, as follows, “At Marr al-Dhahrān there was a certain monk from Syria named ʿAṣā. He was under the protection of al-ʿĀṣ b. Wāṭīl. God had given him great knowledge and placed in him many qualities for the people of Mecca, qualities of goodness, kindness, and learning.

“He kept to a cell he had and came down to Mecca every year to meet the people and to say to them, ‘O people of Mecca, soon there will be born among you a child to whom the Arabs will look for guidance and who will hold sway over the foreigners. This is his time. Whoever has contact with him and follows him will achieve success, while those in contact with him who oppose him will experience failure. By God, I did not leave the land of fine wine, leavened bread, and security and come to live in the land of hunger, poverty, and fear for any reason other than to seek him.

"No birth in Mecca ever occurred without his asking about it, but he would always say, 'He's not come yet.' When people would ask for a description of him, he would decline. He would hide that information because of what he knew the future leader would experience from his tribe, fearing for himself that it might some day result in harm, however slight, to him.

“When the morning arrived of the day when the birth of the Messenger of God (SAAS) occurred, ‘Abd Allâh son of ‘Abd al-Mu‘izzîlîb went out to see ‘Ayşâ. He stood at the foot of the monk’s cell and called out, ‘Hallo there, ‘Ayşâ.’ The response came, ‘Who is there?’ ‘I am ‘Abd Allâh,’ he replied. Then ‘Ayşâ looked down at him and said, ‘Be his father! The child I used to tell you of has been born, and on a Monday. He shall also receive God’s mission on a Monday, and he will die on a Monday.’

‘Abd Allâh replied, ‘Well, this morning a boy was born to me.’ ‘And what have you named him?’ the monk asked. ‘Muḥammad.’ ‘By God,’ exclaimed ‘Ayşâ, ‘I wanted the child to be born among you, the people of the House (the ka‘ba), because of three factors of which we know. Those were that his star arose yesterday, that he was born today, and that his name is Muḥammad. Go to him, for he whom I used to foretell is your son.’ ‘Abd Allâh asked, ‘How do you know he is my son? Perhaps some other child will be born today.’ ‘Your son,’ the monk replied, ‘has got the right name. And God has never been one to confuse scholars; it is a proof. And a (further) sign of that is the fact that he is currently in pain. He will suffer for three days. Then for three days he will show hunger and after that be cured. So you hold your tongue; for no one ever before has been the object of the envy (there will be) for him, no one has been the object of such hatred as he will have. If you live until his mission appears and he announces himself, then you will experience from your people what you will only endure by patience and in humility. So hold your tongue and protect him.’ ‘Abd Allâh then asked, ‘What will his life-span be?’ ‘Whether his life be long or short, he will not attain seventy. He will die a short span before that, in his sixties, at age 61 or 63, at an age average for his people.’"

The account goes on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) was conceived on the 10th of muḥarram and born on Monday, the 12th of Ramadân, 23 years after the attack of those with elephants.”

Thus did Abî Nu‘aym relate it; and there is some strangeness in the account.
An Account of the rearing and suckling of the Prophet (SAAS).

Umm Ayman, whose given name was Baraka, reared him. The Prophet (SAAS) had inherited her from his father. When he grew up he emancipated her and married her to his mawłā, his freed-slave, Zayd b. Ḥāritha. She gave birth to Usāma b. Zayd, God be pleased with them all.

The Prophet (SAAS) was suckled, as well as by his mother, by the freed-slave of his uncle Abū Lahab who was named Thuwayba, and later by Ḥalīma al-Sawdiyya.

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim extracted in their two saḥīḥ tradition collections from a hadīth of al-Zuhri, from ʿUrwa b. al-Zubayr, from Zaynab daughter of Umm Salama, from Umm Ḥabība daughter of Abā Sufyān, as follows. She said, “O Messenger of God, marry my sister, Abū Sufyān’s daughter.” According to Muslim’s account the words used were, “my sister ‘Azza, Abū Sufyān’s daughter.”

The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, “Would you like that then?” She replied, “Yes; I’m not unmarried (and available) for you. And the person who shares best with me in goodness is my sister.”

The Prophet (SAAS) responded, “But that would not be permissible for me.”

She commented, “We are discussing your marrying Abū Salama’s daughter.” Also in an account the words, “Durra, Abū Salama’s daughter,” are given.

“You mean Umm Salama’s daughter?”

“Yes,” I replied.

“But”, he explained, “even if she were not under my care in my household, she would not be permitted for me. She is my niece by suckling. Her father Abī Salama and I were both suckled by Thuwayba. So don’t propose your daughters or your sisters for me.”

Al-Bukhari’s account adds, “ʿUrwa said, ‘And Thuwayba was a mawlāt, a freed-slave woman of Abū Lahab whom he had emancipated. So she sucked the Messenger of God (SAAS).’”

And when Abū Lahab was dead, one of his family, greatly disappointed, was shown him. The man asked him, “What happened to you?” Abū Lahab replied, “I experienced nothing good after (leaving) you, except for being given to drink from this for my having emancipated Thuwayba.” And he pointed to the hollow between his thumb and adjoining fingers.

Al-Suhayli and others report that the one who saw him was his brother al-ʿAbbās. And this occurred a year after the death of Abū Lahab, after the battle of Badr. Their account relates that Abū Lahab said to al-ʿAbbās, “It (i.e. the punishment of hell) is alleviated for me on Mondays.”

This is explained as being because when Thuwayba told him the news of the birth of his nephew Muḥammad, son of ʿAbd Allah, he emancipated her at once. And he was rewarded thus for that.
An Account of the suckling of the Prophet (SAAS) by Ḥalima, daughter of Abū Dhu‘ayb of the Sa‘d tribe, and of the signs of the prophethood and of blessedness apparent on him.

“And the name of the foster father of the Messenger of God (SAAS), that is Ḥalima’s husband, was al-Ḥarīth b. ‘Abd al-‘Uzza b. Rifa‘a b. Mallān b. Naṣīra b. Sa‘d b. Bakr b. Ḥawāzin.

“His foster-brother was ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Ḥarīth; and Unaysa and Khidāma daughters of al-Ḥarīth were his foster-sisters. The last named was known as ‘al-Shaymā‘; and it is said that she would cradle the Messenger of God (SAAS) along with her mother while he was with them.”

Ibn Isḥāq went on to report that Jahm b. Abī Jahm (the mawla, the freed-slave, of a woman of the Bāntu Tamīn who lived with al-Ḥarīth b. Ḥāṭib, who was known as “the mawla of al-Ḥarīth b. Ḥāṭib”), told him that someone related to him from someone who heard ‘Abd Allāh b. Ja‘far b. Abī Ṭalīb say that it was related to him that Ḥalima, daughter of al-Ḥarīth, had said, “I arrived at Mecca along with other women (al-Wāqīḍī told, with a chain of authorities, that they were ten in number from Bāntu Sa‘d b. Bakr who acted as foster-mothers along with her) from Bāntu Sa‘d looking for babies to suckle; it was a year of famine. I arrived on a dark grey she-ass worn out from riding. With us I had a boy of our own, and an old milch camel which, I swear, wasn’t giving a drop of milk. That whole night, along with that boy of ours, we did not sleep at all. There was nothing in my breast of use to him and nothing in our milch camel to feed him. We did, however, have hopes of rain and relief. So on I went on that old ass of mine, which lagged behind the other riders because of its weakness and its thirst, much to their annoyance.

“So we arrived in Mecca and, I swear, I don’t know of one woman of ours who was not offered the Messenger of God (SAAS); but all refused him when it was said that he was an orphan. We refused him saying, ‘What good could his mother do for us? What we want is some help from the boy’s father; what could his mother do for us?’ I swear, every single one of my women companions, all except me, did take a baby to suckle.

“Having found no one except him and being assembled to leave, I said to my husband, al-Ḥarīth b. ‘Abd al-‘Uzza, ‘By God, I hate to go back amongst my companions without having a baby to suckle. I’ll go off to that orphan and take him.’ He replied, ‘It’s not your duty to do so; and so perhaps God will bring us some blessings through him.’ And so I went off and got him; and the fact is, by God, I only took him because I couldn’t find anyone else.

“No sooner had I taken him and brought him back to my baggage than my breasts welcomed him, giving him all the milk he wanted. He drank till he was satisfied and his foster-brother drank his fill too. My husband then went over to that old milch camel of ours and, to his surprise, she was full. He milked her and we both drank till we were satisfied. We then spent a fine night together.

“Next morning my husband said, ‘Halima, by God I really think you’ve taken a person who is blessed! You see what a be, happy night we passed when we took him? May God Almighty go on bringing us more benefit yet!’

“We then left to return to our own land. And, I swear, my she-ass went off ahead of all the other riders, with not a single donkey able to catch up with her.
Eventually my women companions said, ‘Hey there, O daughter of Abii Dhu’ayh! Is that the she ass you were riding when you left with us?’ I replied, ‘Yes indeed, it’s her.’ They commented, ‘Well, by God, something’s really happened to her!”

“Eventually we were back in Banū Sa‘d territory, and I knew no other part of God’s earth more barren than it is. But my goats would graze free, then leave the grazing, satisfied and full of milk and we would milk them as ever we wished.
And this while no one around us, near or far, had their ewes give so much as a drop of milk, their ewes always going hungry. Finally the others said to their shepherds: ‘Woe on you! Just watch where the flock of Abū Du‘ayb’s daughter grazes. You graze along with them.’ And this they would do, theirs grazing where mine went, but their flocks remained hungry, not giving a drop of milk, while mine were satisfied and full so we could milk them as much as we wanted.

“And God went on blessing us this way, and we recognized it. Then he reached two years of age. He was already growing up a very fine boy, not like the other children. I swear that by age two he was a sturdy boy, so we took him to his mother; we were very covetous of him because of having seen the blessings he had brought. When his mother saw hi I told her, ‘Let us bring back this son of ours some other year. We are concerned he might catch a disease from Mecca.’ We kept on at her until she agreed and sent hi off with us and we stayed with him for two or three months more.

“Then one time he was out behind our dwellings with one of his foster-brothers with our animals. Suddenly that foster-brother came in greatly agitated and said, ‘That Quraysh brother of mine! Two men dressed in white came to him, laid him down, and split open his abdomen!’

“At this his father and I rushed outside towards him. We found him standing there, his colour pale. His foster-father hugged him and asked, ‘What’s wrong, son?’ He replied, ‘Two men dressed in white came to me. They laid me down and opened my abdomen. Then they drew something from inside it and threw it away. After that they put my abdomen back as before.' So we took the boy back with us and his foster father said, 'Halima, I'm afraid my foster son has become afflicted; let's hurry and give him back to his family before what we fear does develop.' So we did take him back. His mother was very surprised to see him and when we gave him over to her she said, 'So why did you bring him back, nurse? You both wanted to have him so much.' 'No, it's nothing,' we replied, 'it's just that God has relieved us of our task. We did our duty. We're afraid some harm or accident may befall him, so we are returning him to his own people.' His mother insisted, 'What's going on with you both! Tell me truthfully what's worrying you!' She would not leave us alone till we told her what had happened. She asked, 'Are you afraid for him from Satan? Absolutely not; Satan won't get to him. By God, this son of mine has a great future before him. Should I tell you what happened with him?' 'Please do,' we asked. 'Well,' she explained, 'when I was pregnant with him, he was the lightest child I ever bore. And when carrying him I saw in my sleep a light emanating so bright it lit up the castles of Syria! And then, when he was born, he came out in a manner that babies never do, drew himself up on his arms and lifted his head up to heaven. So leave him, and don't worry.'"

This account has been related through various other lines as well, and it is one of the best known, and most frequently told by the biographers and early historians.

Al-Waqidi said that Ma‘adh b. Muhammad related to him, from ‘Ata’ b. Abu Rabbah, from Ibn ‘Abbas, as follows, “Halima once went out to seek the Prophet (SAAS) and she found their animals to be sleeping in the sun. Him she found with his sister. She asked, 'Why outside in this heat?' His sister replied, 'My brother doesn't get hot; I saw a cloud shading him that stopped when he did and moved when he did, till he came to this spot.'"

Ibn Ishaaq said that Thawr b. Yazid related to him, from Khald b. Ma‘dan, from the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) that the Companions once asked him to tell them about himself. He responded, “I am the one called for by my father Abraham, the glad tidings foreseen by Jesus, peace be upon them both. When she bore me my mother saw that a light came from inside her that illuminated the castles of Syria. I was suckled by the tribe of Sa‘d b. Bakr and while I was among some of our animals two men dressed in white came, carrying a golden basin filled with ice. They laid me down, cut open my abdomen and took out my heart. This they split and extracted from it a black clot that they threw away. They then washed my heart and insides with that ice until clean. Having put it back as before, one of them said to his companion, 'Weigh him against ten of his nation.' He did so, but I outweighed them. He then said, 'Weigh him against a hundred of his nation.' This he did but I outweighed them. He said, 'Weigh him against a thousand.' The other man did, but I outweighed them too. The first man then said, 'Leave him now, for even if you weighed him against his entire nation, he would outweigh them!'

This has a fine, strong chain of authorities.

Ibn Ishâq also narrated that Abû Nu'aym, the ḥāfiz, related this story in his work al-Dalâ'il (The Signs) by way of Umar b. al-Šubh, known as Abû Nu'aym, from Thawr b. Yazân, from Makhtul, from Shaddâd b. Aws, in a much lengthened version. But this Umar b. Šubh should be ignored, for he was a liar who was accused of invention. For this reason we will not mention the text of the tradition, for it gives no pleasure.

Ibn Ishâq then said that Abû 'Amr b. Ḥamdân related to him, quoting al-Ḥasan b. Nafir, quoting 'Amr b. Uthmân, quoting Baqiyya b. al-Walid, from Buhâyr b. Sa'dî, from Khalîd b. Ma'dân, from 'Abd al-Râhîm b. 'Amr al-Salami, from Utba b. 'Abd Allâh, as follows. A man asked the Prophet (SAAS), “What was it happened to you first, O Messenger of God?” He replied, “My wet-nurse was from the Banû Sa'd b. Bakr. One time a son of hers and I went off with our flock without taking any food with us. So I said, 'Hey brother, go back and get us some food from our mother’s home.' So my brother hurried away while I stayed with the animals. Then two white birds like eagles came along and one said to the other, 'Is that he?' 'Yes,' the other replied. Then they both swooped down, took hold of me and laid me out on my back. They then split my abdomen, extracted my heart, cut it open, and took out from it two black clots. One bird said to his companion, ‘Bring me some ice water.’ And with it they cleaned my insides. The first bird then said, ‘Now get some cold water.’ With that they washed my heart. Then the bird said, ‘Bring me al-sakina (quietude).’ This they sprinkled into my heart. The one said to the other, ‘Sew it up.’ So he did that and then placed on my heart the seal of prophethood. After that one bird said to the other, ‘Place him in one balance scale and a thousand of his people in the other.’ And when I looked up, there were the thousand above me, and I was concerned that some of them might tumble down on to me. Then the bird said, ‘If his whole nation were balanced against him, he would still outweigh them.’ Then both birds went away, leaving me there. I was tremendously afraid and raced off to my foster-mother and told her what had happened. She was afraid I’d lost my mind and exclaimed, ‘God protect you!’ Then she got an ass of hers ready for travel and put me on it. She rode behind me and we travelled till we reached my mother. She then said, ‘Well, I’ve fulfilled my pact and agreement.’ She then told my mother what had happened, but it didn’t shock her. She said, ‘What I saw was that a light came from inside me that lit up the castles of Syria.’”

Ahmad related it from a tradition told by Baqiyya b. al-Walid. 'Abd Allâh b. al-Mubârak and others similarly told this from Baqiyya b. al-Walid.

Ibn 'Asâkir related it through Abû Dâwûd al-Ṭayâlîsî. Jâ'far b. 'Abd Allâh b. Uthmân al-Qurashi related to him that 'Umayr b. 'Umar b. 'Urwa b. al-Zubayr informed him as follows, “I heard Urwa b. al-Zubayr relate from Abū Dharr al-Ghifārī who said that he asked, ‘O Messenger of God, how were you informed that you were a prophet and when did you become convinced that you were one?’ He replied, ‘O Abū Dharr, two angels came to me when I was in one of the valleys of Mecca. One of them dropped down to the ground, while the other remained suspended between heaven and earth. One said to the other, “Is that he?” “Yes, it’s he.” The one said, “Weigh him against another man.” He did so, and I outweighed him.’

He then told it till the end, recounting how his chest was opened and sewn up and the seal was placed between his shoulders. He then said, “Then finally they turned away from me, as if their work was fully done.”

Moreover Ibn ‘Asākir gave it from Ubayy b. Ka'b in similar words, and from Shaddād b. Aws in a more simple form than that.

And it is established in the sahih collection of Muslim through Ḥammād b. Salama, from Thābit, from Anas b. Mālik that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was visited by Gabriel, on whom be peace, while he was playing with the other boys. Gabriel took him, laid him down, split his heart open, took it out and withdrew a black clot from inside it, saying, “That’s the devil’s lot!” Then he washed it in a golden basin with water from (the well called) zamzam. He then mended it and put it back in its place. The other boys raced off to his mother – meaning his nurse – and told her, “Muḥammad has been killed!” When they met him he was very pale. Anas stated, “And I used to see the mark of the sewing on his chest.”

Ibn ‘Asākir related this through Ibn Wahb, from Ṭāmir b. al-Ḥārith, from ‘Abd Rabbihī Ibn Sa'īd, from Thābit al-Banānī, from Anas, to the effect that prayer was prescribed in Medina and that two angels came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), took him to zamzam, split open his abdomen, took out his insides and put them in a basin of gold, washed them in zamzam water then filled his insides with wisdom and knowledge.

And the tradition also comes through Ibn Wahb, from Yaʿqūb b. ‘Abd al-Raḥmān al-Zuhri, from his father, from ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. ʿĀmir b. Utba b. Abū Waqqās, from Anas, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) was visited three nights. (A voice) said: ‘Take him who is the best of them and their leader.’ So they took the Messenger of God (SAAS), conducted him to zamzam, opened his abdomen, brought a gold bowl, washed out his insides then filled them with wisdom and faith.”

This is substantiated by the account of Sulaymān b. al-Muqṭira, from Thābit, from Anas.

In the two sahih collections it is given through Sharīk b. Abū Nimr, from Anas, and also from al-Zuhri from Anas, from Abū Dharr and Qatādā from Anas, and from Mālik b. Ṣaṣaʿa from the Prophet (SAAS) in the recounting of al-Īsrā’ (the ascension to heaven), as the story of the laying open of his chest (as occurring) on that night, and its being washed with zamzam water.

There is no denying the probability of that occurring twice, once when he was young and once on the night of the ascension in preparation for his going to join the heavenly assemblage of angels, and of conferring with and appearing before the Lord, the Almighty, Glorious, Blessed, and Exalted one.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) used to tell his Companions, 'I am the most Arab of you all; I am of Quraysh and was suckled by Bāni Saʿd b. Bakr.'"

Ibn Ishāq reported, "When Ḥalīma was returning him to his mother after he had been weaned, she passed with him by a caravan of Christians. They came up to him, turned him around in their hands and said, 'We must take this boy to our king; he is a person of great importance.' And Ḥalīma managed to evade them only after great effort."

He reported also that when Ḥalīma was returning him fearing some harm had come to him, as she approached Mecca she lost him and could not find him. So she went to his grandfather ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, and he and a group of men went off to search for him. It was ʿAwarṣa b. Naufal and another man of Quraysh who found him and brought him to his grandfather. He put him on his shoulders and circumambulated (the kaʿba), praying to God for the boy's protection, and then returned him to his mother Amina.

Al-Umawi related through ʿUthmān b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Waqīṣi, a weak authority, from al-Zuhri, from Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab, the story of the birth of the Prophet (SAAS), and of his being suckled by Ḥalīma with a course different from that of Muḥammad b. Ishāq. He stated that ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib ordered his son ʿAbd Allāh to take the baby and go around the quarters of the bedouin to find a foster-mother for him. He did so and eventually hired Ḥalīma to suckle him. He recounted that the boy stayed with her for six years, being brought each year to visit his grandfather. When the opening of his chest occurred while he was with them, she took him back and he lived with his mother until he was eight, when she died. Thereupon his grandfather ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib took charge of him, but he too died when the Prophet (SAAS) was ten. Then his two uncles, his father's two brothers al-Zubayr and Abū ʿAbd Allāh Talib, took responsibility for him. In his early teens his uncle al-Zubayr took him to Yemen. His account states that on that journey they saw signs (of his prophethood). One of these was that a stallion camel had made its way some distance along a valley through which the party was passing. When the stallion saw the Messenger of God (SAAS), it knelt down and rubbed its chest on the ground and so he mounted it. Another sign was that they came to a stream in violent flood but God Almighty dried it up so that they could cross it. Thereafter his uncle al-Zubayr died; at that time he was fourteen and Abū ʿAbd Allāh Talib alone took charge of him.

What is implied here is that the blessedness of the Prophet (SAAS) came down upon Ḥalima al-Saḍdiyya and her family, when he was young and then his evities reverted to the people of Hawāzin when he took them prisoners after their battle; that occurred a month following the capture of Mecca. They were related to him because of his being suckled among them. He therefore released them, taking pity on them, and treating them with kindness, as will be related in full in its proper place, if God wills it.

Concerning the battle with Hawāzin, Muhammad b. Ishaq related from ‘Amr
b. Shu‘ayb, from his father, from his grandfather, who said, “We were with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at the battle of Hunayn and when he seized their properties and took them prisoners, a delegation from Hawāzin who had accepted Islam came to him at al-Ji‘rana. They said, ‘O Messenger of God, we are one family and tribe. You know well what misfortune has befallen us. Have mercy on us, and may God have mercy on you.’ Their spokesman Zuhayr h.
Ṣurad then arose and said, ‘O Messenger of God, those prisoners you have in the stockades are your aunts and your nurses who looked after you. If we had suckled Ibn Aba Shamar or al-Nu‘mān b. al-Mundhir and then we were to suffer from them what we have from you, we would have hoped for their help and kindness. And yet you are the most honourable of men.’ He then recited the verses:

‘Have pity on us, O Messenger of God, in kindness; for you are the man we plead with and implore.
Have pity on a tribe ruined by fate, their whole divided, their fortune adversely changed,
Which has left us to cry out in sorrow; a people in whose hearts there is gloom and tragedy,
Unless you ward it off with kindnesses you spread forth, O most superior of men in wisdom when it is tested.
Have pity on women you once sucked, your mouth filled with their pure milk, Have pity on women you once sucked, for then whatever happens will sustain your reputation.
Do not make us as those who scattered and died; spare us, for we are a tribe of fame.
We give thanks for kindnesses even if not redeemed, and after this day we will have a store (of good will).’”

This story is also related through Ubayd Allah b. Rumāḥīs al-Kalbī al-Ramlī from Ziyād b. Ṭāriq al-Jashāmī, from Abū Šarad Zuhayr b. Jarwal, who was the leader of his people. The last-mentioned stated, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) took us prisoners at the battle of Ḥunayn he was separating the men from the women. So I jumped up, stood before him and spoke some verses to him, reminding him of the time when he was a boy and grew up among Hawāzin who suckled him:

63. A place between Mecca and al-Ṭāif.
'Have mercy on us, Messenger of God, in gentleness, for you are the man we hope for and await.
Have mercy on a people ruined by fate, their whole divided, their fortune adversely changed,
The fighting left us a war-cry only of sadness; a people in whose hearts there is gloom and tragedy.
Unless you ward it off with kindness you spread forth, O most superior of men in wisdom when he is tested
Have pity on women you used to suck, your mouth filled with their pure milk;
When you were a small child you used to suck them and then whatever happens will sustain your reputation.
Do not make us as those who scattered and died; spare us for we are a tribe of fame.
We give thanks for kindness, even if disavowed, for after this day we will have store (of goodwill);
Dress in forgiveness those you used to suck, your mothers; for acts of forgiveness become widely known.
We hope for forgiveness from you; dress these people in it, if forgive you will, and then be triumphant.
So forgive and may God forgive you from whatever you fear on Judgement Day when victory shall be given you.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, 'Whatever prizes were due myself or the family of 'Abd al-Muţţalib, that goes to God and to you all.' Al-ansār64 then said, 'And what was to be for us we give to God and to his Messenger (SAAS).’"

It will be later told how he set them free; they were 6,000, men and women combined. He gave them many camels and people. So that Abū al-Husayn b. Fāris said, "The value of what he gave them that day totalled 500,000 dirhams."
All this then came from his early blessings on earth: what blessings, then, will he bestow on those who follow him in the next world!

After recounting the return of the Prophet (SAAS) to his mother Amina following his suckling by Ḥalima, Ibn Iṣḥāq told how the Messenger of God (SAAS) stayed with his mother Amina, daughter of Wahb, and his grandfather ʿAbd al-Muţţalib in the care and trust of God. And God nurtured him like a fine plant for the honour He intended for him. When he reached the age of six his mother Amina daughter of Wahb died.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, "ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr b. Muḥammad b. ʿAmr b. Ḥazam related to me that Amina, the mother of the Messenger of God (SAAS), died 64. Al-ansār is a term denoting the Muslims of Medina who granted the Prophet refuge following his migration from Mecca.

when he was six at al-Abwā, a place between Mecca and Medina. She had taken him to visit his uncles of the tribe of ‘Adī b. al-Najjār and died when she was returning with him to Mecca.”

Al-Waqidi related, with chains of authorities, that the Prophet (SAAS) was taken by his mother to Medina, in the company of Umm Ayman, when he was six years old and that she visited his uncles.

Umm Ayman said, “One day two Jews of Medina came to me and said, ‘Bring out Ahmad for us to see.’ They then looked at him and turned him around in their hands. Then one of them said to the other, ‘This is the Prophet of this nation. And this shall be the abode of his refuge, where very many will be taken prisoner and many will be killed.’

“When his mother heard this she was afraid and left. And it was at al-Abwā that she died, on her way home.”

The Imam Ahmad said that Ḥusayn b. Muḥammad related to us, quoting Ayyūb b. Jabir, from Simāk, from al-Qāsim b. ‘Abd al-Raḥmān, from Ibn Burayda, from his father (Burayda) who said, “We left along with the Messenger of God (SAAS) and travelled until we reached Wadān. Then he told us to wait there until he returned. He went off and later returned looking grave. Then he said, ‘I went to the grave of Muhammad’s mother and asked my Lord for intercession for her. But He would not allow me that. I had forbidden you from visiting graves; do visit them. Similarly I had forbidden you from eating the flesh of sacrificed animals after three days had passed; do eat and take what you want. I had forbidden you from drinking from these vessels; do drink as you will.’”

Al-Bayhaqi related this tradition through Sufyān al-Thawrī, from ‘Alqama b. Yazid, from Sulaymān b. Burayda from his father as follows: “The Prophet (SAAS) went over to the site of a grave and the other men sat down around him. He began to move his head as though addressing someone, and then he wept. Umar went over to him and asked, ‘What is making you weep, O Messenger of God?’ He replied, ‘This is the grave of Āmina daughter of Wahb. I asked my Lord for permission to visit her grave and he gave permission. I also asked for forgiveness for her, but this He refused me. Sympathy for her overwhelmed me and so I wept.’ And I never saw an occasion of greater weeping than that.”

He was corroborated by Muḥārib b. Dithār, from (Ibn) Burayda, from his father.

Moreover al-Bayhaqi related from al-Ḥakim, from al-Asamm, from Bahr b. Naṣr, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Wahb that Ibn Jurayj related to us, from Ayyūb b. Ḥanī, from Masrūq b. al-Ajda’a, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Mas‘ād as follows, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went off to look at graves and we went with him. He told us to sit down and we did. Then he walked on till he stopped at one grave. He spoke to it at length and then there arose a lamentation and weeping from the Messenger of God (SAAS). And we all wept at his crying so.
“Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) came over to us and was met by 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb who said, 'O Messenger of God, what made you weep? It made us weep and scared us.’

“Then he came and sat down with us and asked, 'My weeping scared you, did it?' ‘Indeed yes,’ we replied. He explained, ‘The grave you saw me addressing was that of Amina, daughter of Wahb. I asked my Lord’s permission to visit it and he allowed me. Then I asked His permission to seek forgiveness for her, but this He did not permit me. Then there were revealed to me the verses:

“It is not for the Prophet and for those who believe to ask forgiveness for idolaters, even if related to them, once it has become clear to them that those are going to hell. Abraham’s seeking pardon for his father resulted only from a promise he had made him; and when it became clear to Abraham that he (his father) was an enemy of God, he (Abraham) disowned him. Abraham was certainly soft of heart, long-suffering” (Sūrat al-Tawbah, IX, v.113, 114). And I was affected by the emotion a son feels for his mother; that it was made me weep.”

A unique tradition, one they (the major scholars of the traditions) did not propagate.

Muslim related from Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba, from Muḥammad b. 'Ubayd, from Yazīd b. Kaysān, from Abū Ḥāzim, from Abū Hurayra as follows: “The Prophet (SAAS) visited his mother’s grave; he wept and this made those with him weep too. Then he said, ‘I asked my Lord’s permission to visit my mother’s grave and He allowed me. I also asked his permission to seek forgiveness for her, but he did not permit me. So do visit graves; they will remind you of death.’”

Muslim related, from Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba, from 'Affān, from Ḥammād b. Salama, from Thābit, from Anas, that a man asked, “O Messenger of God, where is my father?” He replied, “In hell-fire.” Then when the man turned away, he called out to him: “My father and yours are both in hell.”

Al-Bayhaqī related from a tradition of Abī Nu‘aym al-Fadl b. Dukayn, from Ibrahīm b. Sa‘d, from al-Zuhrī, from ‘Āmir b. Sa‘d, from his father as follows, “A bedouin came to the Prophet (SAAS) and said, ‘My father used to give to charity, and so on and so forth. So where is he now?’ He replied, ‘In hell-fire.’”

“The bedouin appeared angered at that and asked, ‘Well, Messenger of God, and where’s your father?’ He replied, ‘Whenever you pass by the grave of an unbeliever, warn him of hell-fire!’”

“Thereafter the bedouin accepted Islam and said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) put a heavy burden on me; when I pass the grave of an unbeliever, I never fail to warn him of hell-fire!’”

A unique tradition, and one they (the major scholars of the traditions) did not propagate.

The Imām Aḥmad said, “Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān related to us, as did Sa‘id – he being Ibn Abū Ayyūb – as did Rabī‘a b. Sayf al-Ma‘āfiri, from Abū ‘Abd al-Raḥmān al-Ḫublī, from ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Amr as follows, “While we were walking with the Messenger of God (SAAS) he noticed a woman he did not think he recognized. When half-way across the street he stopped until she reached him. Surprisingly, it was Fāṭima, the daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS). He said, ‘Fāṭima what brings you out of your house?’ She replied, ‘I came to visit the family in this house, expressing my condolences to them for their dead.’ He commented, ‘Perhaps you went as far as al-kudā (the grave) with them.’ She replied, ‘God forbid that I would have gone to that with them, having heard what you have said about that.’ He went on, ‘Well, if you had gone that far with them you would not see paradise until your father’s grandfather sees paradise!’”

Ahmad also related this, as did Abū Dawūd, al-Nasā’ī, and al-Bayhaqī from a hadīth of Rabi’a b. Sayf b. Māniʼ al-Ma‘ṣāfī al-Ṣanāmī al-Iskandāri. Al-Bukhārī said the tradition has faults. Al-Nasā’ī said there was nothing wrong with it. Once he said “It is trustworthy.” But in another account that it was “weak”. Ibn Ḥabbān made mention of it in al-Thiqāt and said, “He made a lot of errors.” Al-Dārqūqī stated that it was “sound”. Ibn Yūnus stated in the Tārīkh Mīṣr (History of Egypt) that “there are faults in his narration.” He died in approximately 120 AH.

And what is meant by al-kudā is the “grave”. And it is also said to mean “lamentation”.

What the tradition means is that ābū al-Muṭṭalib died while still being a member of pre-Islamic society; this contrasts with the views of some of the Shi’a about him and Abū Ṭalīb. This will be dealt with in the material on the death of Abū Ṭalīb.

Al-Bayhaqī stated, after relating these traditions in his work Dalā’il al-Nubūwā (Signs of the Prophethood), “And how would the father and grandfather of the Prophet (SAAS) not be in such circumstances regarding the hereafter when they used to worship idols until they died, and they did not follow the religion of Jesus son of Mary upon whom be peace? Yet their having been unbelievers did not impair the lineage of the Prophet (SAAS), because marriages between unbelievers were valid. Did not many men adopt Islam, along with their wives, but not have either to renew their marriage contracts or to separate from their wives, since these would similarly be allowed under Islam? And to God goes all success.” Thus ended his comments.

My own comment is, that the relating by the Prophet (SAAS) that his own parents and his grandfather ābū al-Muṭṭalib were in hell does not contradict the tradition related from him via various authorities that those who lived during the interregnum between the emergence of two prophets, children, the insane, and the deaf would all be put to the test in the assemblies on Judgement Day. This we laid out with chapter and verse in our Qurʾān exegesis dealing with the Almighty’s words: “and We have never punished before sending a prophet” (sūrat al-Isrā’, XVII, v.15). There will be some among these groups who will respond and others who will not. Those people, then, will be among those who will not respond; there is no inconsistency here, grace and praise be to God.

As for the tradition related by al-Suhayli about which it was mentioned that there are persons in its lineage who are unknown, traced back to the son of Abū al-Zinād, from Urwa from A'isha, God bless her, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked his Lord to bring his parents back to life and that God did so and that they expressed faith in him; this is a highly unreliable tradition. Even though all this would be possible in terms of the power of God Almighty. However, what is well established in the sahīḥ collections does contradict this tradition. And God knows best.

Division

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) lived with his grandfather ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib b. Hashim — that is, after the death of his mother Amina daughter of Wahb — a spread would be set out for ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib in the shade of the ka’ba. His sons would seat themselves around his spread until he would come to it. But none of his sons would actually sit upon it, out of respect for him. The Messenger of God (SAAS), when a young boy, would come along and sit down on it. Then his uncles would take him to remove him from it, but ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib would say, if he saw them doing that, ‘Leave my son (sic) alone; he has great things ahead of him.’ Then he would sit down with him on his spread, rub his back, and it would please him to watch what he would do.”

Al-Waqidi said that Muhammad b. ‘Abd Allah related to him, from al-Zuhri, as did ‘Abd Allah b. Ja‘far from ‘Abd al-Wāḥid b. Ḥamza b. ‘Abd Allah, and Hashim b. ‘Aṣim al-Aslami from al-Mundhir b. Jahm, and Ma‘mar from Ibn Abū Najīḥ from Mujāhid and ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. ‘Abd al-‘Azīz from Abū al-Ḥuwayrith, and Ibn Abū Sabra from Sulaymān b. Saḥīm, from Nāfi‘, from Ibn Jubayr, the narration of some interfering with that of others, as follows: “The Messenger of God (SAAS) used to live with his mother Amina daughter of Wahb and when she died his grandfather ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib took him to himself, treating him with a closeness and kindness he had not shown to his own son. He would allow and encourage him to come close to him, and the boy would go in to him when he was alone or asleep. He would sit down on his spread, and ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib would say when he saw him do this, “Leave my son alone; he will establish a kingdom.””

A group of men from Bani Mudlij said to ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib, “Take good care of him; for we have never seen anyone with so noble a lineage as his.” So ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib said to Abū Talib: “Listen to what these men are saying.” And Abū Ţalib did take care of him.
'Abd al-Muṭṭalib said to Umm Ayman—who had suckled him—"O Baraka, do not neglect my son. I found him with some boys close to the lote-tree; and the People of the Book (i.e. Christians and Jews) claim that my boy will be the Prophet of this nation."

'Abd al-Muṭṭalib used never to eat without saying, "Bring my son." And he would be brought to him.

And when death approached 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib he charged Abū Ṭālib with the care and safe-keeping of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Then 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib died and was buried at al-Ḥajūn.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "And when the Messenger of God (SAAS) was eight, his grandfather 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib died." He also stated that 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib had summoned his daughters and told them that they should compose elegies for him; these daughters were called Arwā, Umayma, Barra, Ṣafiyya, Ṭāqīa, and Umm Ḥakīm al-Ṭayyār.

Ibn Ishaq mentioned their poems and what they said in mourning their father, all while he listened, before he in fact died. Their words of mourning were extremely eloquent. He described that in great detail.

Ibn Hishām said, "I never met any scholar of poetry who knew these verses."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "And when 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib b. Ḥāshim died, control over providing water for the pilgrims and over zamzam went after him to al-Ṭābās who was the youngest of his brothers.

This control remained his until the coming of Islam, after which the Messenger of God (SAAS) confirmed it for al-Ṭābās.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) was with his uncle Abū Ṭālib after having been with his grandfather 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib. This was because the latter had placed him in trust of his uncle and because Aba Ṭalib was the full brother of his father 'Abd Allah, the mother of both having been Fāṭima daughter of 'Amr b. Ṣa'd b. Ḥmrān b. Makhzūm."

Ibn Ishaq went on: "Abū Ṭālib was the one who took charge of the Messenger of God (SAAS); he cared for him completely."

Al-Waqīqī stated that Ma'ṣmar told him, from Ibn Najīh, from Mujāhid; and that Ma'ādh b. Muḥammad al-ʿAnsārī related to him from 'Aṭāʾ, from Ibn Ṭābās, as did Muḥammad b. Ṣāliḥ and ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfar, as did Ibrāhīm b. Ṣaʿdī l b. Abū Ḥabība, the account of each of these corresponding with one another, as follows: "When 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib died Abū Ṭālib took the Messenger of God (SAAS) to live with him.

"Abū Ṭālib was not wealthy; he loved the boy very much, more so than his children. The boy slept always by his side and went wherever he did.

"Abū Ṭālib had very great and unusual depth of affection for him. He would give the boy's food special attention. And if his own children ever ate, alone or as a group, without the boy's presence, they would remain unsatisfied, whereas when the Prophet would eat with them they would be well satisfied. When serving his family a daytime meal he would tell them to wait till the boy's arrival. When the Messenger of God would arrive and eat with them, they would get satisfied, and part of the food would remain uneaten. But if he did not eat with them they would remain unsatisfied. Abū Ṭalib would say, 'You are clearly blessed.'

"In the morning the other boys would arise bleary-eyed and dishevelled while the Messenger of God (SAAS) would get up bright-eyed and with his hair in place."

Al-Ḥasan b. ʿArafā stated that ʿAlī b. Thābit related to him from Ṭalḥa b. ʿAmr that the latter heard ʿΑτα b. Abū Rabbāh report having heard Ibn ʿAbbās say, "Abū Ṭalib’s family would get up in the morning with bleary, dirty eyes, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) would get up bright-eyed and with his hair neatly groomed."

Early each morning Abū Ṭalib would bring to the boys their food platter and they would all sit down and snatch at it. The Messenger of God (SAAS), however, would keep his hand away and not grab at the food along with them. When his uncle saw this he set food aside for him alone.

Ibn Ishāq said, "Yahṣa b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zubayr related to me that his father told him that there was a certain man of Līb who could predict the future. Whenever he came to Mecca the men of Quraysh would take their boys to him to see and predict their futures."

He went on, "So Abū Ṭalib brought the Messenger of God (SAAS) to him when he was still a boy, along with some others. The fortune-teller looked at the Messenger of God, but then something engaged his attention. When finished with that, he said, 'Bring that boy over to me!' When Abū Ṭalib saw how interested the man was in him, he took him away. Then the man exclaimed, 'Woe on you! Bring back to me that boy I saw earlier; by God, he has a big future ahead of him!'"

"But Abū Ṭalib hurried away with him."

Section: The journey of the Prophet (SAAS) with his uncle Abū Ṭalib away to Syria and on what transpired with the monk Bahīrā.

Ibn Ishāq stated that thereafter Abū Ṭalib left with a trading caravan for Syria. As he was preparing to depart and assembling the goods, the Messenger of God (SAAS) began to miss him badly, or so they claim.

So Abū Ṭalib took pity on him and said words to the effect that, "By God, I'll take him away with me and never be parted from him, just as he will not be parted from me!"
He did leave with him. Eventually the caravan made a halt at Buṣra in Syria, where there was a monk named Bahirā living in a cell. He was very learned in Christianity; the cell he lived in had always been occupied by some monk who would acquire their Christian learning from a book, as they claim, which they had passed down in inheritance from one elder to the next.

They stopped that year near Bahirā, as they had often done previously without his paying them attention. When they halted, then, near his cell, this time he made a lot of food for them. This, they claim, was because of a vision he had seen while he was in his cell; he had seen the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) approaching in the caravan, with a cloud casting its shade only on him. When they had arrived they had dismounted in the shade of a tree near the monk. When he looked up at the cloud he saw it was shading the tree, the branches of which were extending out over the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) so that he was shaded beneath them.

When Bahirā saw this he came down from his cell and, having ordered food which was then prepared, he sent word over to the travellers saying, “O Quraysh, I have prepared food for you and would like you all to come over, great and small, and freemen or slaves.”

One Quraysh man commented to him, “By God, Bahirā, you’ve put yourself to much trouble today! You’ve never done this for us, even though we’ve passed by you here often before. Why today?”

Bahirā replied, “You are right; before it was as you say. But you are my guests, and I wanted to honour you and so have prepared you some food. I want all of you to eat of it.”

So they gathered around him. But the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), because of his youth, was left behind with the baggage, beneath the tree.

When Bahirā saw them he did not see the quality he had seen and known to be the boy’s. So he said, “O Quraysh let not any one of you be left out of my feast.”

They replied, “O Bahirā, the only one left out who ought to have come to you is a boy; he is the youngest of our party and he remained behind with the baggage.” Bahirā insisted. “Do not do this; call him over and let him attend this feast along with you.”

One of the Quraysh party exclaimed, “By al-Lat and al-Uzza it really is a shame on us that Muhammad son of ‘Abd Allah son of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib be kept back from eating the food among us.”

Then he went over to the boy, brought him back, and sat him down among the rest.

When Bahirā saw him he began to scrutinise him very intently, looking at various parts of his body and finding certain qualities in him. Finally, when all had finished dining and had dispersed, Bahirā went up to the boy and said, “Boy, by al-Lat and al-Uzza I charge you to answer what I will ask you.” Bahîrâ only used these words because he had heard the boy’s people swearing by these two gods.

They claim that the Messenger of God (SAAS) told him: “Don’t ask me anything by al-Lat and al-Uzza; for, by God, I hate nothing more than them.” So Bahîrâ said, “By God, would you tell me about what I ask you?” So the boy told him to ask whatever he liked.

The monk then asked him various questions about his sleep, habits, circumstances, and so on; and the Messenger of God (SAAS) responded. And what Bahîrâ heard matched the description he expected.

Then he looked at the boy’s back and saw the seal of prophethood between his shoulders, in the very place according to the description he had.

Having concluded this, he went over to the boy’s uncle Abû Ṭâlib and asked, “What relation is he to you?” “He is my son,” he replied.

Bahîrâ objected, “He’s not your son. This boy can’t have a living father.”

“Well,” Abû Ṭâlib replied, “he’s actually my nephew.”

“And what happened to his father?” the monk asked.

“He died while the boy’s mother was still pregnant with him.”

“Now you’re telling the truth,” the monk went on. “Take your brother’s son back to his own country and guard him from the Jews. For, by God, if they see him and know what I know, they will do him evil. This nephew of yours has a great future before him; take him back soon to his own country.”

So his uncle Abû Ṭâlib left with him for Mecca quickly, as soon as he had finished his business in Syria.

Ibn Ishâq stated, “They claim, according to what people said, that Zurayr, Tammâm, and Darîs - all believers in the Scriptures - had also seen what Bahîrâ noticed in the Messenger of God (SAAS) on that trip with his uncle Abû Ṭâlib. They tried to get him, but Bahîrâ kept them away from him, making reference to God and to the description of him and mention of him they would find in the Holy Scripture, as well as the statement that they would not succeed in getting him. They recognized the reference he was making to them, and since they believed what he said they let the boy alone and went away.”

Yûnus b. Bukayr recalled, on the authority of Ibn Ishâq, that Abû Ṭâlib spoke three odes on this subject.

This is how Ibn Ishâq related this sequence of events, but he gave no chain of authorities for it. A similar account also came down by way of a musnad marjû.65

The hâfiz Abû Bakr al-Kharâfi stated that ‘Abbâs b. Muḥammad al-Dûrî related to him, as did Qarâd Abû Nûh, as did Yûnus, from Ibn Ishâq, from Abû

65. The term denotes a tradition attributed to the Prophet that has a complete line of transmission.
Bakr b. Abū Mūsā, from his father, as follows: “Abū Ṭalib went off to Syria along with the Messenger of God (ṣaas) and a number of Quraysh elders. When they reached a point overlooking the monk — meaning Bahīra — they went down and untied their baggage. The monk then came out to them, whereas previously when they had passed by he had not come out or even turned towards them.”

He went on, “He came down, then, as they were untying their baggage, and walked among them until he came and took the Prophet (ṣaas) by the hand and said, ‘This is the Lord of all mankind!’”

In the account of al-Bayhaqi the phrase he used was longer, saying also, “This is the Messenger of the Lord of the worlds; God sent him as a mercy to all mankind.”

Some of the Quraysh elders then asked him, “What is it you know?” He replied, “When you looked down from the mountain road every single tree and every rock bent down in worship. And they would only prostrate themselves before a prophet. And I know him by the mark of prophethood below the cartilage of his shoulder blades.”

He then went back and prepared food for them. When he brought it, the boy was tending to the camels. The monk told them to send for him. As he approached a cloud was shading him, and as the boy came near the others the monk exclaimed, “See; there is a cloud above him!” When the boy arrived he found that the others had preceded him to the shade of the tree, but when he sat down the shade moved out over him. The monk commented, “Just look how the tree’s shade moved over him!”

While Bahīra was standing there urging them not to take him into Byzantine territory, saying that when they saw him the Romans would recognize him by his description and would kill him, he turned around and, to his surprise, saw seven Romans who had arrived. He greeted them and asked why they had come. They replied, “We have information that there’s this prophet who will come forth this month and so we have been sending men along each route; news we had of him brought us along this route of yours.” “Do you”, Bahīra asked, “have anyone superior to you coming along behind you?” They replied, “No; it’s just the information we had about him brought us along this road of yours.” Bahīra then asked them, “Have you ever known any matter God wished to bring about that anyone was able to reverse?” They said they had not, and then they pledged him allegiance and stayed with him there at Bahīra’s place.

The account goes on, reporting that the monk then asked, “I abjure you by God to tell me, which of you is his guardian?” “Abū Ṭalib,” they replied.

Bahīra kept on admonishing him (Abū Ṭalib) until he took the boy back (to Mecca); Abū Bakr sent Bilāl along with him and the monk provisioned him with cake and oil.

And thus too did more than one ḥāfīz relate it from an account of Abī Nūḥ ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Ghazwān al-Khuzāʿī, their mawla, their freed slave. He was known as al-Ḍabbi, and also as Qarād; he lived in Baghdad and was one of those "trustworthy sources" vouched for by al-Bukhārī. A number of legal scholars and ḥufāz declare him trustworthy, and I never knew anyone who impugned him. Nevertheless, there are unique aspects to this account of his.

Al-Tirmidḥi stated: "The tradition is good, though unusual. We know of it only from this account."

ʿAbbās al-Ḥūrī said, "There is no one in the world who relates it apart from Qarād Abī Nūḥ; Ahmad b. Ḥanbal, God have mercy on him, heard this from him, and Yaḥyā b. Muʿtin similarly for its unique and unusual quality." Al-Bayhaqi and Ibn ʿAsākir related it.

My comment is that one strange aspect to the tradition is its being attributed back to the Companions, whereas Abī Mūsā al-ʿAshʿarī only came forward (into Islam) in the year of the battle of Khaybar, in the seventh year of the ḥijrā. This view does not reflect Ibn ʿIṣḥāq's statement that includes him amongst those who emigrated to Abyssinia from Mecca.

By all estimations the story was attributed (back to the Prophet); the incident occurred, as some sources maintain, when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was 12 years old. Perhaps Abī Mūsā received it from the Prophet (ṢAAS), in which case it would be very accurate. Or he could have received it from some of the major Companions, God be pleased with them. Alternatively the incident might have been well known and often mentioned and the narrator took it from knowledge widely current.

The second strange aspect is that the cloud was not referred to in any account more reliable than this one. The third problem relates to the words: "Abū Bakr sent Bilāl along with him." If the age of the Prophet (ṢAAS) at that time was twelve, then Abū Bakr would have been nine or ten. Bilāl's age would have been less than that. And where was Abū Bakr at that time? And where was Bilāl? Both (being there) would be strange, certainly, unless it be said that this occurred when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was full grown. This would mean that the trip took place later than it is supposed, or that the statement that he was twelve at the time is inaccurate; al-Waqiṣi related the incident contingent upon that. Yet al-Suhaylī stated on the authority of certain sources, that the age of the prophet (ṢAAS) at the time was nine. So God knows best.

Al-Waqiṣi stated that Muḥammad b. ʿAlī related to him, as did ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfar and ʿIbāḥīm b. ʿIsāṣīl b. Abū Ḥabība, from Dāwūd b. al-Ḥusayn, as follows: “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) reached the age of twelve, his uncle Abū Ṭalib took him along to Syria in the caravan he was accompanying to engage in business there. They made a halt with the monk Bahīrā, who made some statements in confidence to Abū Talib. Bahīrā told him to look after the boy and Abū Ṭalib sent him back to Mecca. The Messenger of God lived as a youth with Abū Ṭalib, while God protected him and preserved him from the evils of the jāhilīyya period for the honour He wished for him.”

When he grew up he was consequently the most honourable man of his people, the best in character, the most noble in his relationships, the best neighbour, the most prudent, trustworthy and truthful, and the man most removed from immorality or harmfulness. He was never seen to do anyone harm or to quarrel with anyone, so that his people named him al-Amin, “the trustworthy one” because of all the fine qualities God had joined together in him.

Abū Ṭalib protected and cared for him, aided and assisted him until his death.

Muḥammad b. Saʿd stated, “Khālid b. Maʿdān told us, Muʾamir b. Sulaymān related to us, that he heard his father relate from Abū Mijlīz that ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib or Abū Ṭalib – Khālid was unsure which one – said, that when ‘Abd Allah died he was sorry for Muḥammad and never went away on any trip without taking him with him. And when he was on the way to Syria and stopped to set up camp, a monk came to him there and said, ‘You have a man of goodness among you.’ Then he said, ‘Where is the father of this boy?’ The reply was given, ‘I am his guardian’ (or it was said, ‘he is his guardian’). The monk commented: ‘Take care of this boy; do not take him to Syria. The Jews are jealous, and I fear for him from them.’ He was told, ‘It is not you who are saying that but God himself.’ So he did take him back, and said, ‘O God, I place Muḥammad in your care!’ Then he died.”

The Story of Bahīrā.

Al-Suhaylī related, quoting the biographical writings of al-Zuhrī, that Bahīrā was a Jewish high priest. My comment is, that it appears from the course of the story that he was a Christian monk. But God knows best.

From al-Masʿādī comes the information that he was a man of the ‘Abd al-Qays tribe, and that his name was Jirjis.

In the work al-Maʿārif (Knowledge) of Ibn Qutayba it states, “A voice was heard in the jāhilīyya period, shortly before Islam, calling out the words, ‘O yea, the finest of men on earth are three: Bahīrā, Rāba b. al-Barrā, al-Shanī, and the third is still awaited.” The third and one awaited was the Messenger of God (SAAS).
Ibn Qutayba stated, "Al-tish is always seen at the graves of Ri`ab al-Shanni and of his son who came after him." This word, al-tish, means light rain.

Section: On the early upbringing and raising of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and how God cared for him and protected him; how he had been an orphan and God gave him a home and destitute and God enriched him.

Muhammad b. Ishaq stated, "And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) became a youth under the care and protection of God who saved him from the evils of the jāhilīyya because of the honour and mission He wished for him. When he grew up he was the finest man among his people, the best of them in character and repute, the best of neighbours, the most prudent, the most honest in speech and most trustworthy, and the one most removed from immorality and those characteristics that corrupt men, which he avoided because of his nobility."

Consequently the name by which he was known among Quraysh was none other than al-Amin, "the trustworthy", because of the fine qualities God had joined in him.

The Messenger of God (SAAS), as I was told, used to relate about those (pre-Islamic) practices, matters from which God had protected him in his youth and time of ignorance. He said, "Once I happened to be amongst some Quraysh boys carrying some stones for those games boys play. Each of us was exposed, having taken up his shirt and fastened it around his neck to carry stones in. I was running along with them in this way and having fallen behind I suddenly received a very painful slap from someone who spoke the words, 'Put your shirt on properly!' So I took it and put it back on properly and began carrying the stones around my neck with my shirt on, alone among my friends."

This anecdote is similar to the one in the sahih collection relating to the building of the ka'ba, when he and his uncle al-`Abbās were hauling (stones). If not the same, it certainly precedes that and is seemingly preparing for it. But God knows best.

`Abd al-Razzāq said that Ibn Jurayj informed him, quoting `Amr b. Dinār, that he heard Jabir b. `Abd Allah say, "When the ka'ba was being built, the Messenger of God (SAAS) went off to transport stones. Al-`Abbās said to the Messenger of God (SAAS), 'Put your shirt over your shoulder for the stones.' He did so, but fell to the ground and his eyes were drawn up to heaven. Then he got up and said, 'It was my shirt.' So it was put back on him properly."

The two traditionalists brought this hadith out in the two sahih collections, from an account of `Abd al-Razzāq. They also extrapolated it from an account of Rawḥ b. `Ubāda from Zakariyyā? b. Abū Ishaq, from `Amr b. Dinār from Jabir to the same effect.
Al-Bayhaqi said that the hāfiz Abū ʿAbd Allāh and Abū Saʿīd b. Abū ʿAmr informed him that Abū al-ʿAbbas Muḥammad b. Yaʿqūb told them that Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq al-Ṣaghānī related to him, quoting Muḥammad b. Bukayr al-Ḥadramī, quoting ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Dashtakī, quoting ʿAmr b. Abū Qays, from Simāk, from ʿIkrima, who said that Ibn ʿAbbās related to him from his father that he would carry stones to the kaʿba when Quraysh was building it. Quraysh divided up into two groups, with the men transporting the stones and the women the mortar mix.

He went on: "I was with my nephew, carrying the rocks, wearing our shirts around our necks; when we came up to other people we covered up. While I was walking along with Muḥammad in front of me, he fell down and stretched out flat on his face. I hurried along, threw down my rocks, meanwhile he was looking up to heaven. ‘What’s wrong?’ I asked. He got up and took his shirt, saying, ‘I was forbidden from walking uncovered.’" Ibn ʿAbbās went on, "I hid this from the others for fear they would say (he) was mad."

Al-Bayhaqi related from a tradition of Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq, that Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Qays b. Makhrama related to him, from al-Ḥasan b. Muḥammad b. ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalīb, from his father and from his grandfather, ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalīb, who said that he heard the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) say, "I wasn’t interested in performing those things with women that people during the jāhilīyya used to do; except, that is, on two nights on which God, Almighty and Glorious is He, restrained me.

"One evening I and a young man of Mecca were watching some sheep belonging to some people there. I said to him, ‘Would you keep an eye on my sheep so I can go into Mecca and spend an evening there like other lads?’ ‘Sure,’ he replied. So I went into town and stopped at the first house where I heard the music of tambourines and flutes. I asked what was going on and was told that a man and woman had married. So I sat down to watch. But God struck my ears and, I swear, I was later awakened by the sun’s touch. I went back to my friend, who asked what I had done. I replied, ‘I didn’t do a thing.’ Then I told him what I had seen.

"Then one other night I asked him to watch my sheep so I could go to a party. He agreed, so I went off to Mecca and heard the same as I had the previous occasion. Again I was told that there was a marriage and so sat down to watch. But God again struck my ears and, I swear, I was later awakened by the sun’s touch.

“When I returned to my friend he asked what I had done. ‘Not a thing,’ I replied, and then I told him what had happened. And, by God, I never tried or returned to anything like that thereafter right up to when Almighty and Glorious God honoured me with His prophethood.”

This is a very strange tradition. It could be about ʿAlī himself, with the final words “up to when Almighty and Glorious God honoured me with his prophethood” having been added. But God knows best.
This scholar Ibn Ishāq is mentioned by Ibn Hibbān as being a very reliable source. Some authorities claim him to be an author of a saḥīḥ collection of traditions. In his supplementary notes, this sheikh of ours commented on this, “I don’t fully stand behind this.” But God knows best.

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī said that the ḥāfīz ‘Abd Allāh related to him, quoting Abū al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. Yaʿqūb, quoting al-Ḥasan b. ʿAlī b. ʿAffān al-ʿAmīrī, quoting Abū Usāma, quoting Muḥammad b. ʿAmr, from Abū Salama and Yaḥyā b. ʿAbd Raḥmān b. Ḥāṭib, from Usāma b. Zayd, from Zayd b. Ḥarīthah, who said, “There was a brass idol called ʿIsāf and Naʿīla which the polytheists would touch as they performed their circumambulation. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said ‘Don’t touch it.’”

Zayd continued, “Well, as we went round (again) I told myself I would touch it to see what would happen. When I did so, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked me, ‘Were you not forbidden to do that?’”

Al-Bayhaqī said that others added, from Muḥammad b. ʿAmr, giving a chain of authorities, that Zayd said, “By Him who honoured him and revealed to him the Holy Book, he (the Prophet) never saluted an idol right up to when God Almighty honoured him as He did and gave revelation to him.”

We earlier made reference to the comment of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) when Bahīra put a question to him invoking al-Lāt and al-ʿUzzā: “By God, do not question me by invoking them! I hate nothing so much as them!”

As for the tradition given by the ḥāfīz Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī, Abū Saʿd al-Malīnī informed us, Abū ʿĀḥmad b. ʿAdi, the ḥāfīz told us, Ibrāhīm b. ʿAbdāt related to us, as did ʿUthmān b. Abū Shayba, as did Jarīr, from Sufyān al-Thawrī, from Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. ʿUqayl, from Jābīr b. ʿAbd Allāh, God bless him, as follows: “The Prophet (ṢAAS) used to attend the ceremonies of the polytheists along with them. But once he heard two angels behind him, one saying to the other, ‘Let’s move up and stand right behind the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).’ But the other objected, ‘How can we stand right behind him when he is in the habit of saluting idols?’”

He went on, “And thereafter he never again attended such ceremonies with the polytheists.”

This is a tradition several authorities deny being attributed to ʿUthmān b. Abū Shayba. Regarding it Imām ʿĀḥmad commented: “His brother would never speak any such words.”

Al-Bayhaqī related from various sources that his meaning was that he witnessed those who saluted idols, and that that was before God made revelation to him. But God knows best.

We previously reported a tradition from Zayd b. Ḥarīthah to the effect that he abstained from witnessing the ceremonies of the polytheists until God honoured him with His mission.
It is established in the tradition that he did not participate in the assembly at al-Muzdalifah during the night on Mt. 'Arafat. Indeed he did not assemble with the people at 'Arafat.

Similarly Yūnus b. Bukayr said, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq, that ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to him, from 'Utāmah b. Abū Sulaymān, from Nāfī' b. Jubayr b. Muṭṣīm, from his father Jubayr who said, “I saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) while he was a member of his people’s religion. He would station himself there on a camel of his at 'Arafat, among his people until he raced away with them, God the Almighty and Glorious giving him blessing thereby.”

Al-Bayhaqī stated, “The meaning of the words ‘a member of his people’s religion’ refers to the remnants of the heritage of Abraham and Ishmael, on both of whom be peace. The Prophet (ṢAAS) never at any time associated with Allāh any other god.”

I also comment, that from these words of (al-Bayhaqī) it is to be understood that he did attend the assembly at 'Arafat before he received revelation. And it was this that was a “blessing” to him from God the Almighty and Glorious.

The Imām Aḥmad related this tradition from Ya'qūb, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq. The words he used were: “I saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) before he received revelation while he was positioned on a camel of his with his people on 'Arafat so that he would move forward with them, this being a blessing from God.”

The Imām Aḥmad said that Sufyān related to him, from 'Amr, from Muḥammad b. Jubayr b. Muṭṣīm, from his father, saying, “I lost track of a camel of mine in the Wārān valley (close to 'Arafat) and went off to look for it. I found the Prophet (ṢAAS) in the assembly there. I said, ‘He’s one of the hums (a word used for Quraysh). What’s he doing here?’”

They both derived this from a tradition of Sufyān b. 'Uyayn to that effect.

An Account of how the Prophet (ṢAAS) witnessed the war known as al-fījār, the sacrilegious war.

Ibn Ishāq said, “The ‘sacrilegious’ war raged at a time when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was 20. It was named the fījār (sacrilegious) war because the two tribes Kināna and Qays 'Aylān acted as though the sacred month (when warfare was disallowed) was open for them to fighting. The leader of Quraysh and of Kināna was Ḥarb b. Umayya b. 'Abd Shams. Early in the day of the battle, Qays were defeating Kināna, but by midday the victory had gone to Kināna over Qays.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “When the Messenger of God reached 14 – or 15 – as Abū 'Ubayda the grammarian related to me, from Abū 'Amr b. al-'Alā’, the ‘sacrilegious’ war broke out between Quraysh and its Kināna supporters and Qays ʾAylān.

“What started it was that ʿUrwa al-Raḥḥāl b. ʿUtba b. Jaʿfar b. Kilāb b. Rabīʿa b. ʿAmr b. Ṣaʿṣaʿa b. Muʿāwiya b. Bakr b. Hawāzin had given a passing permission to a trading caravan of musk which belonged to al-Nuʿmān b. al-Mundhir. And so al-Barrād b. Qays, one of the tribe of .Done ra b. Bakr b. ʿAbd Manāt b. Kināna asked, ‘Are you going to apply the same against Kināna’s will?’ ‘Yes,’ was the reply, ‘and against everyone.’

“So ʿUrwa al-Raḥḥāl set out with the trading party and al-Barrād left too, seeking to catch him unawares. When the party reached the high ground of Tayman Dhū Ṭīlāl, ʿUrwa became careless and al-Barrād fell upon him and killed him; this was during the sacred month. Consequently the warfare became known as ‘sacrilegious’.” Al-Barrād spoke the following verses about all this:

Thereby I destroyed the houses of Banū Kilāb and humbled the freed slaves to submission.

I raised my fist against him at Dhū Ṭīlāl and he dropped like a felled tree.”

Labīd b. Rabīʿa b. Mālik b. Jaʿfar b. Kilāb also composed the lines:

“Tell Banū Kilāb, if you chance on them, and ʿĀmir, that there are some who can master disasters,

Tell Banū Numayr, if you chance on them, and the dead man’s uncles of Banū Ḥilāl,

That the expected al-Raḥḥāl now rests at Tayman Dhū Ṭīlāl.”

Ibn Hishām continued, “A man arrived and told Quraysh of it, saying, ‘Al-Barrād has killed ʿUrwa, and during the sacred month, at Ṭukāz.’ They then rode off, unbeknown to Hawāzin. When Hawāzin learned of this they pursued them and caught up with them before they reached the sacred territory. They engaged in battle till nightfall but then they went inside the sacred territory and Hawāzin gave up on them.

“They met for several days after that battle, with the people going forth under various banners with a leader from each of the tribes of Quraysh and Kināna, and a leader from each of the tribes of Qays.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was present at some of these battles, his uncles having taken him with themselves. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘I was giving arrows to my uncles.’ That is, he would gather for them the arrows their enemy had shot at them.”

Ibn Hishām said, “The account of the ‘sacrilegious’ war is very long, longer than I have recounted. But I have been deterred from recounting it because it would have interrupted the telling of the biography of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).”
Al-Suhayli said that al-fijär is spelt with an “i” after the “f”, in the like form to qitāl, fighting. The fijār wars among the Arabs totalled four, and al-Mas'ūdī gave reference to all of them.

He went on, “The last of them was this one involving al-Barrād. The fighting in it consisted of four battles: the battle of Shamta, and the battle of al-'Ablā', both near Īkāz, and the battle of al-Sharb, which was the major battle. It was this one that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) attended. For this battle the chieftains of Quraysh and Banū Kināna, respectively Ḥarb b. Umayya and his brother Sufyān, made a pact not to take to flight. On that occasion Qays were defeated, except for Banū Naḍr who held out. The fourth battle was at al-Ḥarira, near Nakhlā. Then they made an agreement to meet the following year at Īkāz. When they assembled to fulfil this appointment 'Utba b. Rabī‘a rode out on his camel and called out: 'O tribe of Muḍār, what is it you are fighting for?' Hawāzin replied, 'What are you suggesting?' 'Peace,' he replied. 'How,' they asked. He said, 'We pay you blood-money for your dead, and will leave people hostage with you to guarantee payment; and we will forgo our blood-money you owe.' ‘Who will guarantee us that?’ ‘I will,’ he replied. ‘And who are you?’ they demanded. ‘I am ‘Utba b. Rabī‘a,’ he told them.

‘On that basis peace was made, and they sent out to them 40 men, including Ḥākim b. Ḥizān. And when Banū 'Amr b. Ṣa‘ṣa‘a saw the guarantee hostages in their hands they gave up their claims and the “sacrilegious” war was at an end.”

Al-Umawi gave an account of the “sacrilegious” wars and the battles that occurred, detailing them at length, his information deriving from al-Athram, who was al-Mughāra b. ‘Āli, from Abū Ubayda Ma’mar b. al-Muthannā.

CHAPTER: HOW THE MESSENGER OF GOD (ṢAAS) WITNESSED THE PACT OF AL-FUDUL.

The ḥāfiz al-Bayhaqī said that Abū Sa‘d al-Mālnī told him, Abū ʿĀmīd b. ʿAdi, the ḥāfiz, related to him, quoting Yahyā b. ʿAlī b. Ḥāshim al-Khaṭṭāf, quoting Ismā‘il b. ʿAlīyya, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Isḥāq, from al-Zuhri, from Muḥammad b. Jubayr b. Muṭṣim from his father, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “I was a witness, with my uncles, to the pact of al-muṭayyabīn and I would not have wanted to renege – or some such word – for the very choicest herd.”

He (al-Bayhaqī) said that this tradition was related in these words also by Bishr b. al-Mufaddal, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān.

He also said that Abū Naṣr b. Qatāda related to him, quoting Abū ʿAmr b. Maṭar, quoting Abū Bakr b. ʿĀmid b. Dāwūd al-Samnānī, quoting Mu‘allā b. Mahdī, quoting Abū ʿAwāna, all from ʿUmar b. Abū Salama, from his father, from Abū Hurayra, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said. “The only pact I witnessed Quraysh make was that of al-muṭayyabin. And I'd not have abrogated it in return for the choicest herd.”

He said that al-muṭayyabin referred to Ḥāshim, Umayya, Zahra, and Makhzūm.

Al-Bayhaqi said, “This explanation is also interpolated within the tradition, but I do not know who it was who said it.”

Some biographers maintain that he was referring to the fudūl pact; for the Prophet (ṢAAS) was not yet born at the time of the muṭayyabin pact.

In my view, there is no disputing that. The fact is that Quraysh did conclude a treaty following the death of Quṣayy. They disputed the fact of Quṣayy having left to his son ʿAbd al-Ḍar the right to control provision of food and drink to the pilgrims, raising the banner at the kaʿba, its guardianship, and the convening of the assembly. The tribe of ʿAbd Manāf disputed them these prerogatives and various of the Quraysh tribes gave alliance and help for victory to one or other side.

So the partisans of Abd Manāf brought a bowl filled with al-ṭib, nutmeg powder, into which they placed their hands and swore allegiance to one another. When they had done so, they wiped their hands over the corners of the house (the kaʿba). They were therefore named the muṭayyabina, as mentioned above; this took place long ago.

But what is meant by this alliance, is the treaty of al-fudūl, a word meaning “the excess” or “remnants”. This was sworn in the home of ʿAbd Allāh b. Judān, as al-Ḥumaydī related it, from Sufyān son of ʿUyayna, from ʿAbd Allāh, from Muḥammad and ʿAbd al-Rahmān, two sons of Abū Bakr. They stated that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “I witnessed in the house of ʿAbd Allāh b. Judān a treaty to which I would have responded positively if, during Islam, I had been invited to participate in it. They made an agreement to return any excess to those who had owned it, and that no one should take unfair advantage over anyone.”

The authorities stated that the fudūl pact was concluded 20 years before the prophethood, in the eleventh month, Dhū al-Qaʿda, that date being some four months after the al-fisār war. That was because the al-fisār occurred in Shaʿbān, the eighth month of the same year.

The al-fudūl treaty was reputed the most fair and honourable pact reached among the Arabs. The first man who suggested and advocated it was al-Zubayr, son of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib. The cause for it was that a man from Zabid brought some goods to Mecca and these were brought from him by al-ṣĀṣ son of Wāṣil who held back some of what was due to him. So the man from Zabid complained about him to his allies who were the tribes of ʿAbd al-Ḍar, Makhzūm, Jumāḥ, Sahm, and ʿAdī b. Kaʿb, but they declined to help him against al-ṣĀṣ son of Wāṣil and instead they roughed him up and drove him away. Having experienced such ill-treatment, the man from Zabid approached Abū Qubays at daybreak, while Quraysh were in their assemblies around the ka'ba, and called out at the top of his voice:

"O heirs of Fihr, there's a man being wronged of his goods, right here in the middle of Mecca, far from his own home and people.

"A man dishevelled and deprived, who has not completed his pilgrimage; fellow men, I'm right here at the very heart of the hijr."

"The sacrosanct is for those whose nobility is complete; there is nothing sacrosanct for the robe of the immoral and treacherous."

At this arose al-Zuhayr b. 'Abd al-MurtaJib and said, "This matter can't be ignored."

So the men of Hāshim, Zuhra, and Taym b. Murra assembled in the home of 'Abd Allah b. Judān who prepared food for them. They established their pact in Dhū al-Qa‘da, a sacrosanct month, agreeing and swearing by God that they would act in unison with any wronged person against the wrongdoer until his rights were fulfilled, for so long as the sea makes wool wet and the mountains Thabir and Hīra remain firmly set in their place and that they would comfort (people) as long as they are alive.

Quraysh named that pact al-fūdūl, saying, "Those men went into that matter fī faḍl, i.e. 'to excess'. Afterwards they walked over to al-‘Āṣ b. Wā'il and took away from him the goods of the man from Zabid and returned them to him."

Al-Zubayr b. 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib spoke the following verses about this pact:

"I swore, Let's make a pact against them, though we're all members of one tribe. We'll call it al-fūdūl; if we make a pact by it the stranger could overcome those under local protection, And those who go around the ka'ba will know that we reject injustice and will prevent all things shameful."

Al-Zubayr also spoke the following:

"Al-fūdūl made a pact and alliance that no evildoer shall dwell in Mecca's heart. This was a matter they firmly agreed and so the protected neighbour and the unprotected stranger are safe among them."

Qāsim b. Thābit related, in a curious ḥadīth that, "A man of Khath'am came to Mecca either as a pilgrim or to perform the umra (the 'minor pilgrimage'), and brought with him a daughter of his named al-Qatūl, an exceedingly modest girl. But Nabīb b. al-Ḥajjāj seized her and took her away from him. So the man of Khath'am said, 'Who will help me against this man?' He was advised to invoke the pact of al-fūdūl."

66. The space on the north-west side of the ka'ba enclosed by the curved wall, the ḥātim.
“So he stood at the ka‘ba and called out, ‘0 you who made the pact of al-fu‘āl!’ Men flocked to him from all sides, their swords unsheathed and shouting, ‘Help is here; what’s the matter?’ He told them how Nabīh had wronged him by taking his daughter from him by force.

“The men went with him to Nabīh’s house and he came out to them. They told him, ‘Bring the girl out! You know who we are and the pact on which we’ve agreed! ‘I’ll do it,’ he replied, ‘But let me enjoy her tonight!’ ‘Certainly not, by God,’ they insisted, ‘and there will be no intercourse!’ So he brought her out to them speaking the verses:

“My friends are gone, and I have not greeted al-Qattāl; I did not say to them a pleasant farewell,

For the al-fu‘āl reiterated that they protect her; yet I still see myself not fearing the al-fu‘āl.

Don’t think, girl, that I, that evening the riders left, did not feel disregarded by their going.”

And lines other than these were also given.

It has been said that this was known as the “pact of al-fu‘āl” merely because it was like an agreement reached by the Jurhum tribe that similarly favoured victims over oppressors. There were those of their leaders who advocated this, each one of whom bore the name “Faḍl”. They were al-Faḍl b. Faḍala, al-Faḍl b. Wādā‘a, and al-Faḍl b. al-Ḥārith. This is what Ibn Qutayba stated. Others give the names as al-Faḍl b. Sharā‘a, al-Faḍl b. Bīdā‘a and al-Faḍl b. Qudā‘a. It was al-Suhaylī, God be pleased with him, who reported this.

Muḥammad b. Ishaq b. Yasār said, “Tribes of Quraysh suggested making a pact and assembled for that purpose in the house of ‘Abd Allāh b. Ḥudān because of his high reputation and age.

“The pact made there at his house was between Banū Ḥāshim, Banū ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, Banū Asad b. ʿAbd al-ʿUzza, Zuhra b. Kilāb, and Taym b. Murra. They made a pact and agreement that they would support any man in Mecca who was wronged, whether from their own people or someone who had merely come there, against whoever had wronged him, and that they would ensure that his rights be upheld.

“Quraysh named that agreement the ‘pact of al-fu‘āl’.‘”

Muḥammad b. Ishaq said that Muḥammad b. Zayd b. al-Muḥājir b. Qunfudh of Taym related to him that he heard Ṭalḥa b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAwf al-Zuhri say that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, “I witnessed in the house of ʿAbd Allāh b. Ḥudān a pact made that I wouldn’t have exchanged for the choicest herd; and if it had been suggested after Islam, I would have responded positively to it.”
Ibn Ishāq said that Yazid b. 'Abd Allāh b. Usāma b. al-Ḥadi al-Laythī related to him that Muhammad b. Ibrahim b. al-Ḥarith of Taym told him that there was between al-Ḥusayn b. 'Alī b. Abū Ṭālib and al-Walid b. 'Utba b. Abū Sufyān – al-Walid being at that time governor of al-Medīna, having been appointed over it by his uncle Mu‘āwiya b. Abū Sufyān – a dispute over some property they owned at (the village of) Dhū al-Marwa. It seems that al-Walid was using his power to take advantage of al-Ḥusayn. So al-Ḥusayn told him, “I swear by God that you will either justly recognize my rights or I will draw my sword and stand up in the mosque of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and invoke the pact of al-fuḍūl.”

Ibn Ishāq continued, “So ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr, who was with al-Walid when al-Ḥusayn made this statement, said, ‘And I too swear by God that if he does invoke it, I’ll draw my sword and stand there with him until he gets his justice or we’ll all die together.’”

And when al-Walid b. ‘Utba heard what had been said, he treated al-Ḥusayn justly and made him content.

SECTION: On the Marriage of the Prophet (ṢAAS) to Khadija, Daughter of Khuwaylid b. Asad b. ‘Abd al-‘Uzza b. Qusayy.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Khadija daughter of Khuwaylid was a merchant woman of stature and wealth. She would employ men to trade her goods on a profit-sharing basis.

“When she heard of the truthfulness, trustworthy nature and fine character of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), she sent for him and proposed that he should take some of her goods on a trading venture to Syria; she offered him better terms than she did other merchants and suggested he be accompanied by a youth in her employment whose name was Maysara.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) accepted this offer and set off with her goods, in the company of Maysara. When they reached Syria, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) made a halt beneath the shade of a tree near the cell of a certain monk. This monk looked out at Maysara and said, ‘Who is that man resting beneath the tree?’ Maysara responded, ‘He is of Quraysh, those who guard the sanctuary.’ The monk responded, ‘No one but a prophet has ever stopped beneath that tree.’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then sold his wares, the goods that he had brought, and bought those things he wanted. Thereafter he set off in a caravan for Mecca, Maysara accompanying him.
"At midday when it was fiercely hot, Maysara would see, so they say, two angels shading him from the sun as he travelled forward on his camel.

When he reached Mecca and brought the goods back to Khadija, she sold them for twice their cost or thereabouts. Maysara related to her what the monk had said, and how he had seen the angels giving him shade.

"Now Khadija was a decisive, noble, and intelligent lady, as well as possessed of all the other fine qualities God had endowed her with. When Maysara told her all this she sent for the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said to him, so they say, 'Cousin, I am interested in you because of your being related to me, because of your high reputation among your people, and because of your trustworthiness, fine character and truthfulness.' She then offered herself to him in marriage.

"Khadija was the highest-born, most respected and wealthiest woman in Quraysh. All her people were covetous of all that and would have attained it if they could.

"When she said this to the Messenger of God (SAAS), he reported it to his uncles. One of these, Ḥamza, went off with him to visit Khuwaylid b. Asad and made an engagement between them. Thereafter the Prophet (SAAS) did marry her."

Ibn Hishām stated, "He gave her 20 young female camels as a dowry. She was the first woman he married. And he married no other woman until she died."

Ibn Ishaq said, "It was she who bore all the children of the Messenger of God (SAAS) except for Ibrāhīm. His sons from her were al-Qāsim, by whose name he was known, as ‘Abū al-Qāsim’, ‘father of Qāsim’ that is. Al-Ṭayyib and al-Ṭāhir were his other sons. His daughters were named Zaynab, Ruqayya, Umm Kulthūm, and Fāṭima."

Ibn Hishām stated, "The first-born of the boys was al-Qāsim, then came al-Ṭayyib, followed by al-Ṭāhir. The first-born girl was Ruqayya, followed by Zaynab, Umm Kulthūm, and Fāṭima, in that order."

Al-Bayhaqi stated, from al-Ḥākim that he read, by the hand of Abū Bakr b. Abū Khaythama, that Muṣʿab b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Zubayrī related to him, saying, "The eldest of his sons was al-Qāsim. Then came Zaynab, followed by ʿAbd Allāh, Umm Kulthūm, Fāṭima, and Ruqayya. The first of his children to die was al-Qāsim, followed by ʿAbd Allāh. Khadija is said to have died at age 65 or at age 50, the latter being more likely."

Others say that al-Qāsim attained an age when he could ride, even on light, swift camels but then he died, after the call to prophethood.

Others say he died while still unweaned. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "In heaven there is a place for him where he can complete his suckling."

However, it is well known that this statement applied to (his son) Ibrāhīm.

Yūnus b. Bukayr stated that Ibrāhīm b. Uṭḥmān related to him from al-Qāsim from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, "Khadija gave birth from the Messenger of God (SAAS) to two boys and four girls. These were al-Qāsim, ‘Abd Allāh, Fāṭima, Umm Kulthūm, Sayyāb, and Ruqayya.”

Al-Zubayr b. Bakkar said, “It was ‘Abd Allāh who was known as ‘al-Ṭayyib’ (the good) and ‘al-Ṭāhib’ (the pure). He was given these appellations because he was born after the call to prophethood. His other sons died before his mission. All his daughters were born prior to the call to the prophethood, and emigrated with him (SAAS).”

Ibn Hishām stated, “Ibrāhim was born to Maria the Copt who was presented to the Prophet (SAAS) by al-Muqawqis, governor of Alexandria; she was from (the Upper Egypt town of) Kūrat Andā.”

We will discuss the wives and children of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in a separate section at the end of this biography, if God Almighty wills it; and in Him we trust.

Ibn Hishām said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) was 25 years of age when he married Khadija, according to the account of several scholars, including Abī ‘Amr al-Madāni.”

Ya‘qūb b. Sufyān stated, “I wrote down, from Ibrāhim b. al-Mundhir, the following: Umar b. Abī Bakr al-Mu‘ammilī related to me that more than one authority related to him that ‘Amr b. Asad married Khadija to the Messenger of God (SAAS) when he was 25 years of age and Quraysh were building the ka‘ba.”

Similarly, al-Bayḥaqī transmitted from al-Ḥakīm that the age of the Messenger of God (SAAS) when he married Khadija was 25 and that she was then 35. It is also said that she was 25.

Al-Bayḥaqī stated, in a chapter entitled: “The employment the Messenger of God had before he married Khadija” as follows:

“Abī ‘Abd Allāh the ḥāfiz narrated to us, quoting Abī Bakr b. ‘Abd Allāh, quoting al-Ḥasan b. Sufyān; and Suwayd b. Sa‘īd related to us, quoting ‘Amr b. Abī Yahyā b. Sa‘īd al-Qurashi, from his grandfather Sa‘īd, from Abū Hurayra who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, ‘God never sent anyone to be a prophet without his having been a shepherd for sheep.’ His Companions asked him, ‘And you too, O Messenger of God?’ He replied, ‘I shepherded them for Meccans at al-Qurārī.’”

Al-Bukhārī related it from Ahmad b. Muḥammad the Meccan, from ‘Amr b. Yaḥya.

Thereafter al-Bayḥaqī related the same tradition by way of al-Rabī‘ b. Badr, a weak link, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “My wage from Khadija for two expeditions was a young she-camel.”

the Messenger of God (SAAS) to her at a time when he (her father) was - and I think this is what he said - drunk!"

Then al-Bayhaqi stated that Abu al-Hasayn b. al-Fadl al-Qattân related to him, as did ‘Abd Allah b. Ja’far, as did Ya’qub b. Sufyân, who said that he was told by Ibrahim b. al-Mundhir, and by ‘Umar b. Abu Bakr al-Mu‘ammili and by ‘Abd Allah b. Abû Ubayd b. Muḥammad b. ‘Ammâr b. Yâsir, from his father from Muqsim b. Abû al-‘Asim, the mawla of ‘Abd Allah b. al-‘Asim b. Nâwafal, that ‘Abd Allah b. al-‘Asim related to him that ‘Ammâr b. Yâsir, whenever he heard people discussing the marriage of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Khadija and embellishing it as they did, would tell them, ‘I know better than anyone else about his marriage to her. I was his companion and his close friend.

One day I was out with the Messenger of God (SAAS) and when we came to al-‘Asim we passed by Khadija’s sister who was seated on a fine-coloured camel she had for sale. She called to me and I went over to her, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) stood there waiting for me. She said, ‘Would that friend of yours like to marry Khadija?’

“So I went back to him and told him and he responded, ‘Indeed I certainly would!’

“I then reported to her what the Messenger of God (SAAS) had said and she suggested, ‘Come and visit us tomorrow.’ When we did so next day we found that they had slaughtered a cow and dressed Khadija’s father in ceremonial clothes; and his beard had been dyed yellow. I spoke with her brother and he with his father, who had been drinking wine. The brother told him of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and of his reputation and asked him if he would conduct his marriage. And so he did marry him to Khadija. They cooked the cow and we ate from it, after which her father went to sleep. When he woke up he was sober and he said, ‘What’s this I’m wearing, what’s this yellow and why this food?’ His daughter who had spoken to ‘Ammâr replied, ‘It was your son-in-law Muḥammad son of ‘Abd Allah who gave you the ceremonial outfit and he who presented the cow to you, and we slaughtered it when you married him to Khadija.’

“He denied having concluded this marriage with him and stormed off, shouting, to al-‘Asim. Banu Hashim brought out the Messenger of God (SAAS) and they all went off to talk to him. Khadija’s father demanded, ‘Where’s this man of yours you claim I married to Khadija?’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) made his presence known to him. Having looked at him, her father then said, ‘If I already performed his marriage, then so be it. If I didn’t before, I do so now!”

Al-Zuhri stated in his works of biography that her father married her to him when he was drunk. His account is similar to the foregoing. Al-Suhayli (similarly) related it.
Al-Mu‘ammar said, “What is generally agreed upon is that it was her uncle, ‘Amr b. Asad, who married her to him.”

This is what al-Suhayli preferred. He related so on the authority of Ibn ‘Abbas and ‘A’isha. The latter said, “Khuwaylid had died before al-fijär, the ‘sacrilegious’ war. It was he who had fought against Tubba‘ when he wanted to remove the ‘black stone’ to Yemen. Khuwaylid and a group from Quraysh had prevented him from doing so. Then Tubba‘ had a nightmare about it, changed his mind, and left the ‘black stone’ where it was.”

Ibn Ishq related at the end of his biography that Khadija’s brother, ‘Amr b. Khuwaylid, was the one who married her to the Messenger of God (SAAS), but God knows best.

DIVISION

Ibn Ishq stated that Khadija, daughter of Khuwaylid, had informed Waraqa b. Nawfal b. Asad b. ‘Abd al-Uzza b. Qaysyy, who was her cousin and a Christian who had studied the Scriptures and human knowledge, of what her young employee (Maysara) had told her of what the monk had said, and how he had seen the two angels shading him. Waraqa had then told her, “If this is true, Khadija, then Muhammad is the Prophet of this nation. I learned that a prophet was expected for this nation, and this is his time.” These were approximately the words he used.

Thereafter Waraqa had impatiently awaited his coming, asking how long it would be. He spoke the following verses on the subject:

“I persisted, being persistent in recalling both a worry that often inspired my tears,
And a description from Khadija, following (another) description; my waiting has been long, O Khadija,
In the heart of Mecca, with my hoping because of your words that I would see some solution.
From what you related as the words of a priest who was a monk whom I would hate to be wrong,
That Muhammad will one day prevail and defeat whomever opposes him,
Making a light appear in the land by which he will bring change to all creation.
Those who oppose him will meet defeat, while those who aid him will achieve success.
Would that I be there to witness, for I’ll be the first of them in participating.
Participating in that which Quraysh will hate, however much they bluster in their Mecca.
I aspire, through him whom they all hate, to reach the Enthroned One, even if they descend, aside.
Is it not folly to disbelieve in Him who chooses, He who raised the stars?
If they and I survive, things will happen at which the disbelievers will be sorely discomfited.
Even if I perish, so does every man meet from the fates with destruction and death.”

Waraqa also spoke the following lines, according to the account given of him by Yūnūs b. Bukayr from Ibn Ishaq:

“Will you leave early in the morning, or late tonight, or in the evening, there being a fire alight in your heart from your concealing your sadness?

At parting from a people whom I do not like to leave, as if after two days’ journey away they seem very far removed.

And at true information related about Muhammad, told about him when he was elsewhere by an honest man.

The man came back to you, O best of free women, whom you had sent to the Ghawr lowland and to the plateaux of the Najd ranges.

To the markets of Buṣrā with the mounts that left early, bent over with their loads, slow-moving.

He tells us of things good, through his knowledge; and truth has doors for which keys exist.

That ‘Abd Allah’s son, Aḥmad, is being sent to all people everywhere.

My belief is that he will be sent to tell the truth, just as God’s two servants Hūd and Salīḥ were sent

And Moses, and Abraham, until his glory shall be witnessed and widely spread abroad by report, very clear;

And there shall follow him the tribes of Luʿayy and Ghālib, their young and their grey leaders alike.

If I survive till his era reaches the people, then I will give glad tidings of love.

If not, O Khadija, then you should know that I shall be travelling the wide earth, far from your land.”

Al-Umawi added the lines:

“Following the religion of Him who established all things, He who had virtue far greater than all men.

And erected a secure building in Mecca, whose lamplight glitters in the dark,

A meeting place for all the various tribes, a place to which the tired, fine mounts hurry, Standing tall like arrows of fine wood, the sinews winding around them suspended above their pastern-joints.”

Other verses of this, as given by Abū al-Qāsim al-Suhaylī in his work al-Rawḍ (The Gardens) are the following:

“I gave advice to the tribes, telling them ‘I came to warn, so let no one deceive you.’

Do not worship any God other than your creator, and if others call you, then say, ‘We are in conflict with you.’

Glory everlasting be to Him of the throne; both the waters and the dry land glorified Him before us.
All things beneath the sky are subjugated before Him; no one should oppose His dominion.

Nothing that you see has its splendour last, but God remains, though wealth and progeny perish.

With his treasures, one day Hurmuz did not prevail, and the tribe of Ād sought eternity, but they did not last.

Nor Solomon either, for the winds blew him away, and all spirits and men too, a waste land between them.

Where are those kings whose glory was such that delegations would come to them from all parts?

A great basin is up there where, without falsehood, all must gather one day, just as they did.”

He then said, “Abū al-Faraj similarly attributed these to Waraqa.” He also commented that some of these verses are also considered to have been by Umayya b. Abū al-Salt.

I would also add that we have been told that ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, God bless him, used sometimes to quote some of these verses. But God knows best.

Section: On Quraysh having rebuilt the kaʿba five years before the coming of the prophethood.

Al-Bayhaqi recounts the building of the kaʿba to have been before the marriage of the Prophet (SAAS), to Khadija.

However, it is widely known that the building by Quraysh of the kaʿba took place some ten years following their marriage, as we have stated.

Al-Bayhaqi begins by relating the kaʿba’s construction as having occurred in the time of Abraham, as we have stated in our earlier account of him. He gives the hadith of Ibn ʿAbbas recorded in the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī and also makes reference to some of the accounts attributed to Israeli legends regarding the construction of the kaʿba in Adam’s lifetime.

But that is not correct, for the plain statement in the Qurʾān establishes that Abraham was the first person to begin building it, the first to establish it. Moreover its site was revered before that, honoured, and cared for throughout time. God Almighty stated,

“The first ‘house’ established for mankind was the one in Bekka (Mecca), blessed and a guidance for the worlds. In it there are clear signs. (There is) the stone on which Abraham stood. Whoever enters it shall be safe. Men owe it to God to make pilgrimage to the House, (all) those who can afford to do so” (sūrat ʿAl-ʾImrān, III, v.96, 97).

In the two sahihs it is said of Abū Dharr that he stated, “I asked, ‘O Messenger of God, which mosque was established first?’ He replied, ‘The al-Haram mosque (the 'Holy Mosque' in Mecca) 'Which one next?' I enquired. 'The al-Aqsa mosque' (the 'further mosque', in Jerusalem). 'How many years intervened?', I asked. 'Forty years', he replied.

We have earlier addressed this issue and the fact that the al-Aqsa mosque was established by (the tribe of) Israel, by Jacob, peace be upon him.

In both sahih collections it is stated: "This land was made sacred by God when he created the heavens and the earth. It is made sacred by the sanctity of God until Judgement Day."

Al-Bayhaqi stated that Abū 'Abd Allāh, the ḥāfīẓ, informed him, as did Abū 'Abd Allāh al-Ṣaffār, Ahmad b. Māhrūn, 'Ubayd Allāh, and Isrá'īl, from Abū Yahyā, from Mujāhid, from 'Abd Allāh b. Amr as follows, "The house (of worship) existed 2,000 years before the earth: 'And lo! the earth was laid out' (sūrat al-Inshiqaq, LXXXIV, v.3). "It was," he said, "laid out beneath it."

He said, "And Maṃṣūr traced this account back to Mujāhid."

I consider this very strange. It is as though it comes from the two baggage camels seized by 'Abd Allāh b. Amr at the battle of Yarmuk which were transporting Israeli legends, from which he used to relate; they told of strange and objectionable things.

Then al-Bayhaqi stated that Abū 'Abd Allāh, the ḥāfīẓ, informed him, quoting Abū Ja'far Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. 'Abd Allāh al-Bağhdādı, quoting Yaḥyā b. 'Uthmān b. Ṣāliḥ, as did Abū Ṣāliḥ al-Juḥānī, quoting Ibn Lahīfa, from Yazīd b. Abū al-Khayr, from 'Abd Allāh b. Amr b. al-'Āṣ that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, "God sent down Gabriel to Adam and Eve, and told them: 'Build a house of worship for me.' Gabriel drew it out for them and Adam began digging while Eve transported until the water spoke to him, calling out from beneath him, 'That's enough, Adam!' When they had finished building, God revealed to him that he should circumambulate it. He was told, 'You are the first man, and this is the first house.' Thereafter the centuries succeeded one another until Noah made pilgrimage there. Further centuries went by until Abraham constructed its foundations."

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "Ibn Lahīfa is the only one transmitting this tradition in this way."

I consider him to be a weak source. If its transmission had stopped directly with 'Abd Allāh b. Amr it would have been a stronger and more authentic tradition. But God knows best.

Al-Rābi stated that al-Shāfi‘ī informed him, as did Sufyān, from Ibn Abū Labīd, from Muḥammad b. Ka'b al-Quraṣī – or someone else – that he (the Prophet, ṢAAS) said, "Adam performed the pilgrimage and the angels met him and told him, 'Your sacrifice made has been successful. We made pilgrimage 2,000 years before you!'"
Yûnus b. Bukayr stated that Ibn Isḥāq said, “Buqayya – or, he said, someone trustworthy of Medina – related to me, from Urwa b. al-Zubayr that he (the Prophet) said, ‘There has never been a prophet who has not made pilgrimage to the kaʿba – except, that is, for Hud and Ṣāliḥ.’”

But I have elsewhere reported their pilgrimage to it; by which I meant their having made pilgrimage to its site, even though it was not yet built. But God knows best.

After this al-Bayhaqi reported the hadith from Ibn ʿAbbās giving in full the story of Abraham, upon whom be peace; it is included in the saḥīḥ collection of al-Bukhārī.

Al-Bayhaqi then related from the hadith of Simak b. Ḥarb, on the authority of Khalid b. ʿAr’ara, as follows: “A man asked ʿAli about God’s statement (in the Qurʾān): ‘The first house (of worship) established for mankind was the one in Bekka (Mecca), blessed and a guidance for the world’ and asked whether it really was the first house built on earth.

“He replied, ‘No, but it was the first one in which blessings and guidance for all mankind were in place, along with the stone on which Abraham stood; and whoever enters it is safe. And if you like, we can tell you how it was constructed.

“Almighty God sent a revelation to Abraham, saying, ‘Build for me a house on earth!’ This command disturbed him greatly. So God sent down al-sakīna, which is a strong wind with a head to it. Head and wind pursued one another until finally stopping. Thereupon the gale whirled around itself at a certain spot, like the coils of a snake. So Abraham built (there) until he reached the position for the stone. He then said to his son: ‘Help me by finding a stone.’ He searched for one and brought it, but found that the ‘black stone’ had already been set in place. He asked his father, ‘Where did you get that?’ ‘Someone came who wouldn’t rely on your building. Gabriel brought it from heaven.’ So he finished it.

“Time passed and it fell down. So the ʿamāliqa (the giants) rebuilt it and when it next collapsed it was Jurhum who reconstructed it.

‘Again it collapsed and Quraysh rebuilt it, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) being a young man at that time. When they wanted to lift into place the ‘black stone’ they fell into a dispute who should do so. They agreed they would let the first person to come along that street decide. It was the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who came by first, so he decided for them to place it in a piece of cloth, so that all the tribes would lift it to its place.’” Abū Dāwūd al-Ṭayālisī said that Ḥammād b. Salama and Qays and Sallām related to him, all on the authority of Simāk b. Ḥarb, from Khalid b. ʿAr’ara, from ʿAli b. Abū Ṭalib who said, “When the kaʿba fell down after Jurhum, Quraysh rebuilt it. And when they wanted to position the stone they fell into a dispute with one another. So they agreed that the first person to come in the door should do it.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) came in through the Banu Shayba door. He told them to bring a robe in the centre of which he placed the stone. Then he ordered each subtribe to take hold of an edge of the cloth. They then lifted it up and the Messenger of God (SAAS) took the stone and positioned it."

Ya'qub b. Sufyan said that Asbugh b. Faraj related to him, as did Ibn Wahb, from Yunus from Ibn Shihab as follows: "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) reached puberty a woman set alight to the kaba. A spark from her fire lit some of the cloth covering of the kaba and it burned. So they tore it down and rebuilt it up to that point in the corner where a dispute arose among Quraysh as to which of the tribes should be entrusted with raising it.

"They agreed to appoint as arbitrator the first person who came up to them. It was the Messenger of God (SAAS) who did so, he being a youth, and he was wearing a leopardskin sash. They asked him to decide the issue and he told them to get the corner piece, which was placed in a cloth. Then he asked the leader of each tribe to come forward and gave each one a side of the cloth while he climbed up. They lifted it up and he put the corner piece in position.

"As he increased in age he became only more pleasing, and so they gave him the sobriquet al-Amin, 'the trustworthy', even before revelation came down to him. They adopted the practice of never slaughtering a camel for sacrifice without seeking him, and he would say a prayer over it for them."

The context of this tradition is good, it being from the biographies written by al-Zuhri.

One strange element in it is the wording "when he reached puberty". For it is well known that this occurred when the Messenger of God (SAAS) was 35. This is established by Muhammad b. Ishaq. God bless him.

Musa b. Wqba stated that the building of the kaba occurred 15 years prior to the prophethood. Similarly, Mujahid agreed, as did Urwa, Muhammad b. Jubayr b. Mu'tim and others. But God knows best.

Musa b. Uqba stated: "There was a period of 15 years between the 'sacrilegious' war al-fijar and the building of the kaba."

I observe that al-fijar and the pact of al-fudul came in one year, when the Messenger of God (SAAS) was 20. This fact substantiates what Muhammad b. Ishaq said. But God knows best.

Musa b. Uqba said: "Quraysh were motivated towards rebuilding the kaba because water would flood in from its top, from above the earth roof with which it was covered and which was in disrepair. Consequently they were concerned that water might leak inside.

"Also, a man named Mulayh had stolen the kaba's incense and they wanted to rebuild it taller and raise its door so that only those they wished could enter it.
They therefore established a fund for the costs and hired workers and then went there one morning to tear it down, despite their concern and apprehension that God might prevent them from doing what they wanted.

The first man to start and to take down a piece of it was al-Walid b. al-Mughira. When they saw what al-Walid had done the others followed by doing the same; they levelled it and were pleased to have done so.

When they wanted to begin rebuilding it, they brought the workmen, but not one of them would set foot anywhere before it.

They claimed that they saw a snake encircling the building completely, its head reaching back to its tail. They were terrified of it and afraid that what they were doing would destroy them.

The ka'ba had been their haven and safe refuge from others as well as a source of their pride. Because of their confusion and worry at what had happened to them, al-Mughira b. 'Abd Allâh b. 'Amr b. Makhzûm stood up and reminded them of the advice and orders he had given them, namely that they should not dispute or envy one another in rebuilding it, but should divide it into quarters and use no ill-gotten money in its construction.

When they had decided to proceed, the snake disappeared up into the sky, and they could see that this was the work of God, Almighty and All-powerful is He.

His account also states that some people maintain that a bird picked it up and tossed it away towards Ajyad. 67

Muhammad b. Ishâq b. Yasîr said, 'When the Messenger of God (S.A.S.S) reached 35 Quraysh reached an agreement to rebuild the ka'ba. They did so because they were concerned about reroofing it, being afraid its roof would collapse since it was made only of stones set above its frame. They also wanted to make it taller as well as reroof it.

That was because some men had stolen the ka'ba's treasure which had been kept in a well in its middle. The man who was found in possession of the treasure was Duwayk, a freed-man of Bântî Mula'yî b. 'Amr b. Khuzâ'a. Consequently Quraysh cut off his hand.

Quraysh claims that those who stole it planted it with Duwayk.

'The sea had cast ashore at Jidda a ship belonging to a Byzantine trader. The ship had broken up, so they took its wood to use for the ka'ba's roof.'

Al-'Umâwî said, "This ship belonged to the emperor of Byzantium and was carrying building materials, marble, wood, and metal. The emperor had sent this off with Baqum the Byzantine for the church the Persians had burned belonging to the Abyssinians. When it had reached its anchorage at Jidda God had sent a gale which destroyed it."

67. Ajyad is a mountain at Mecca.
Ibn Ishaq said, "In Mecca there was a Copt who was a carpenter and so they had available to them some of what was needed to repair it."

"There was a serpent that would emerge from the ka'ba's well into which they would drop every day the sacrificial offerings. It would emerge and sun itself on the ka'ba's wall. They were all afraid of it, because whenever anyone approached it, it would raise its head, move its coils audibly and open its mouth. One day as it lay on the ka'ba's wall as was its habit, God sent down a bird which snatched it up and flew away with it.

"At this Quraysh said, 'Now we can hope that God is pleased at our plan. We have a local carpenter, and wood, and God has taken care of the serpent.'"

Al-Suhayli recounted, on the authority of Razin, that a thief had entered the ka'ba during the Jurhum era to steal its treasure but that the well had caved in on him. Some men had come and lifted him out and retrieved what he had taken. After that, a serpent resided in the well, its head as big as that of a young goat, its belly white and its back black. It had lived there for 500 years. This was the serpent mentioned by Muhammad b. Ishaq.

Muhammad b. Ishaq stated, "When they had agreed on demolishing and rebuilding it, Aba Wahb b. 'Amr b. 'Aidh b. 'Abd b. Imam b. Makhzum (whose name according to Ibn Hisham was 'Aidh b. Imam b. Makhzum) went and removed a stone from the ka'ba but it flew straight out of his hand back to its position. So he said, 'O Quraysh, in rebuilding it, use only money that you have fairly earned. Nothing gained from prostitution, usury, or injustice against any person must enter it.'"

(Some) people attribute this statement to al-Walid b. al-Mughira b. 'Abd Allah b. Umar b. Makhzum. Ibn Ishaq, moreover, was inclined to believe that the man who said this was Abū Wahb b. 'Amr. He said that he was the maternal uncle of the father of the Prophet (SAAS), and a very highly regarded and honourable man.

Ibn Ishaq said, "Then Quraysh divided up the ka'ba. The side with the door was entrusted to the tribes of 'Abd Manaf and Zuḥra, that between the 'black stone' corner and the Yemeni corner went to the Banū Makhzum, along with various other Quraysh tribes. The back of the ka'ba went to the tribes of Jumah and Sahm; the hijr (shrine) side was entrusted to the tribes of 'Abd al-Dār b. Quṣayy and Assad b. 'Abd al-Ωzza, while the 'Adi b. Ka'b were assigned the rahw al-ḥašim, the enclosed slope around the walls.

"But the people were apprehensive about demolishing it and were very scared of it. So al-Walid b. al-Mughira said, 'I shall begin demolishing it.' And he took up a pick-axe and set about it, saying, 'O God, it is not to be feared. O God, good is all we want.'"
"He then demolished some of the side where two rukn, the sacred corners, are. That night everyone expected something bad would happen and said, 'Let's keep watch on him and if he comes to harm we'll not demolish any more of it and we'll repair it just as it was. But if nothing happens to him, then God will have been pleased by our action in destroying it.'

"Early next morning al-Walid recommenced his work of demolition, and the others joined in with him. Eventually they had demolished it down to the foundations established by Abraham, peace be upon him. They uncovered some green rocks interlocking together like teeth."

In the sahih of al-Bukhari an account from Yazid b. Rumn gives the phrase "interlocking together like camels' humps". And al-Suhayli said, "I consider the wording in the biography 'like teeth' to be imaginary." But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "A certain reciter of traditions related to me as follows, 'A man of Quraysh, who were demolishing the ka'ba, put his crowbar between two stones to remove one of them and when the stone moved all Mecca shook, so they stopped working on that foundation.'"

Musa b. Uqba stated, "Abd Allah b. 'Abbâs claimed that leaders of Quraysh related that when they had assembled to extract stones to set up the (stations of) Abraham and Ishmael, upon both of whom he peace, one of their tribesmen began removing one of the stones from the original foundation. When he lifted it up, not knowing that it was from the original foundation, the onlookers saw a light emitting from beneath it that almost dazzled the man's sight. Then the stone jumped out of his hand and dropped back into its place. The man and the other builders were terrified. But when the stone again hid from them what was beneath it they went back to their building, saying, 'Don't move that stone, or any of those next to it.'"

Ibn Ishaq stated, "It was related to me that Quraysh found in the corner a document with Syriac writing on it and they did not know what it was until a Jew read it to them. It said, 'I am God, Lord of Bakka (Mecca). I created the heavens and the earth and formed the sun and the moon. I have set seven trusty angels around it. It will not cease to exist until its akkhabaha (a word Ibn Hishâm interpreted to mean "its two mountains") disappear, a blessing to its people in their water and their milk.'"

Ibn Ishaq stated, "It was related to me that they found in the shrine a document stating, 'Mecca is God's holy House. Its sustenance shall come from three paths; let it not be first desecrated by its own people.'"

He also stated that Layth b. Abû Sulaym claimed that they had found a stone in the ka'ba 40 years before the coming of the mission of the Prophet (SAAS) - if what they said is true - on which was written, "He who plants good shall harvest joy; he who plants evil shall harvest regret. If you do evil things, shall you be rewarded with good things? Indeed so, just as grapes are harvested from thorns!"

Sa‘íd b. Yaḥyā al-Umawī stated that al-Muṣṭamīr b. Sulaymān al-Raqqī related to him, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Bishr al-Zuhrī, with a chain of authorities back to the prophet (ṢAAS), who said, "In the shrine three slates were found. On the first was written, 'It is I, God, Lord of Bakka; I made it when I made the sun and the moon and I have set seven trusty angels around it. And I have blessed its people in the meat and in the milk.'

"On the second it said, 'I am God, Lord of Bakka. I created al-raḥīm, kinship, which I derived from my name, (Raḥīm, (meaning) merciful and compassionate). He who acts kindly to his kin, so will I treat; he who severs his ties of kinship, so will I treat.'

"On the third was written: 'I am God, Lord of Bakka. I created goodness and evil and I predetermine. Joy shall be for those who bring good, and woe upon those who bring evil!'"

Ibn Ishaq continued, "Then the tribes of Quraysh gathered stones to rebuild it, each one collecting them separately.

"They built it up until it reached the place for the (black) stone but then fell into dispute about it. Each tribe wanted to raise it into its position, regardless of the rest. Eventually they broke up, established alliances, and readied to do battle. Banū ‘Abd al-Dār brought a bowl full of blood and they and Banū ‘Adī b. Ka‘b b. Lu‘ayy made a pact to fight to the death, placing their hands into that bowl of blood. And so they were known as the ‘blood-lickers’.

"Quraysh remained in this confrontation for four or five nights, then they met together in the mosque, debated one another but divided into equal sides.

"Some scholars of the traditions claim that Abū Umayya b. al-Mughira b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmar b. Makhzūm, who was at that time the oldest man in all Quraysh, said, ‘O Tribe of of Quraysh, resolve your dispute by agreeing that the first man who enters by the door of this mosque will decide the issue.’ They agreed.

"The first man to enter was the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and when they saw him they said, ‘This is al-Amin, “the trustworthy”; we are satisfied. This is Muḥammad.’ When he reached them and they told him of the problem, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said: ‘Bring me a robe.’ One was brought to him and he took the corner piece (the ‘black stone’) and placed it on the robe. Then he said, ‘Let each tribe grasp one side of the cloth. Then all raise it up.’ This they did until it was at the right spot, whereupon the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) himself positioned it. Then they built above it.”

Quraysh used to refer to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) as “the trustworthy”.

Imām Aḥmad stated that ʿAbd al-Ṣamad related to him, quoting Thabit – meaning Abū Yazid – quoting Hilāl – meaning Ibn Ḥabbān – from Mujāhid from his mawla, whose name was al-Sa'ib b. 'Abd Allāh, that the last-mentioned related to him that he was one of those who built the ka'ba before the coming of Islam. He stated, “I had a stone I had sculpted that I worshipped besides God. I used to bring clotted milk unfit for myself and pour it over it. Then a dog would lick it off, raise its hind leg and urinate on it. We continued building until we reached the position for the (black) stone, but no one knew where it was. But then it was seen among our rocks looking like a man’s head with a face almost distinguishable. A leader of Quraysh said, ‘We’ll position it.’ But others said they too would do it. People suggested an arbitrator be appointed and they agreed that he should be the first man to appear from the mountain road. And it was the Messenger of God (SAAS) who arrived, and those there commented, ‘Well, it’s the “trustworthy” who’s come.’ They talked to him and he placed it on a cloak. He then summoned their head men and they lifted it up while he, (SAAS) placed it in its position.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “At the time of the Prophet (SAAS), the ka'ba measured 18 cubits and was covered by Egyptian-woven Qabāṭi cloth. Later it was covered by al-burūḏ68 cloths. The first to clothe it with the dibāj silk brocade was al-Ḥajjāj b. Yūsuf.”

My comment is that they left out of it the hijr area that was six or seven cubits long in the direction of Syria. They had insufficient funds for that; that is, they were not able to rebuild it on Abraham’s foundations. They constructed one door for the ka'ba on the east side, placing it high up so that not everyone could get inside. This allowed them to permit inside only those they wished.

It has been established in both sahīḥ collections, on the authority of 'Ā'isha, God be pleased with her, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) told her: “Don’t you know that your people had insufficient funds for the expenses? If it were not for the fact that your people were only recently unbelievers, I would have torn down the ka'ba and made for it one door on the east and another on the west. And I would have included the hijr area within it.”

This was how Ibn Zubayr rebuilt it, just as the Messenger of God (SAAS) had indicated. It was done in the utmost splendour and beauty, one complete whole on the foundations of al-Khalil (Abraham). It had two doors at ground level, on the east and west sides, and people would enter through one and exit through the other.

When he had executed Ibn al-Zubayr, al-Ḥajjāj wrote to the Caliph of the time, 'Abd al-Malik b. Marwān, concerning what Ibn Zubayr had done; and they believed that he had made the changes on his own authority.

And so it was ordered that it be restored to its original state. They set to work on the “Syrian” wall, tearing it down and removing the (black) stone, laying out its stones on the ka'ba floor. Then its door was raised and the western door was blocked off; the eastern one was left as it was. When it was the time of al-Mahdi – or his son al-Mansūr – he (the ruler) sought advice from Mālik on rebuilding it as it had been remodelled by Ibn al-Zubayr. But Mālik, God be pleased with him, said, "I hate for the rulers to treat it like a plaything."

And so he left it as it was; it remains the same to this day.

As for the masjid al-harām, the sacred mosque at Mecca, the first man to remove the buildings around the ka'ba was 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, God be pleased with him. He purchased them from their owners and demolished them. When Uthmān ruled he bought other houses which he added to it. When Ibn al-Zubayr succeeded, he reinforced it, improved its walls, and increased the number of its doors. But he was not able to make any additions to increase its size.

When 'Abd al-Mālik b. Marwān seized power he made the walls of the sacred mosque taller and ordered that the ka'ba be covered by the dibāj. The one who carried out this order was al-Ḥajjāj b. Yūsuf.

We have elsewhere related the history of the building of the House and the traditions that came down about that in our exegesis of the surat al-Baqara (Qur'ān, II) in reference to the verse: "When we ordered Abraham to raise the foundations of the house along with Ishmael" (verse 127). Our explanation of this is lengthy and exhaustive and whoever wishes could write it down here. And all praise and power be to God.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "When they had finished the construction, having built it as they wished, al-Zubayr b. 'Abd al-Muṭṭalīb spoke the following verses about the serpent that caused Quraysh to be afraid of rebuilding the ka'ba:

"I was amazed at the eagle aiming straight for the serpent when it was in an excited state.

It used to make a rustling sound, and sometimes it would dash out;

When we began the building it increased our awe of the structure and we were scared.

When we were too afraid to drive it away an eagle came, swooping straight down at it.

It grasped it tight, then left the building to us; there being nothing else in its way.

Together we assembled to begin the building, for which we already had the foundations and the soil;

Next morning its foundations were raised, our men wearing no clothes.

The Lord ennobled Banū Lu'ayy through it and there's no denying their founding it.

Banū 'Adī had also assembled there, and Murra who were preceded by Kilāb.

The Lord thereby established us in glory, and it is from God that reward is requested."
We earlier treated in a separate passage how God protected the Messenger of God (SAAS) from the bad practices of the pre-Islamic era. He and his uncle al-‘Abbās used to transport stones and when he (SAAS) positioned his loincloth over his shoulder beneath the stones, he was forbidden from doing so and therefore reverted to his former practice.

DIVISION

Ibn Ishāq related how Quraysh began the practice of calling themselves al-Hums, a word implying intensity in religion, and intolerance.

This is because they gave extreme veneration to the holy places, to the extent that they required people not to leave there on the night of the procession to ʿArafa. They would say, “We are men of the holy places, the haram, and the Quṭṭān, those who dwell at God’s house.”

They would not make the halt on Mt. ʿArafa, though they knew that was the wish of Abraham, peace be upon him, in order not to abandon the corrupt innovative practices they themselves established. They would not put away for storage sour cheese made from milk or butter, or clarify fat while they were in a state of ritual uncleanness. While in this state, they would not enter any tent made of hair, and would seek shelter from the sun only under tents made of leather. Similarly they prevented those making the greater or smaller pilgrimage from eating any but Quraysh food while in that state, and these people could only circumambulate wearing Quraysh clothes. If one of these pilgrims could not find a gown from one of the Hums, who were Quraysh either by birth or by having joined Quraysh from Kināna and Khuzā‘a, they would have to circumambulate naked, even if they were women. A woman who happened to go round in this manner would place her hand over her vagina and recite:

> “Today all or part may appear, but visible though it may be, I do not make it available!”

If anyone who had access to the garment of a Hums person were too proud to use it, then he could go round in his own clothes, but when he had finished he had to throw them aside; thereafter, they could not be used again, either by them or by anyone else, nor ever touched. The Arabs used to call such clothes al-luqa, “cast-offs”. A certain poet spoke the lines:

> “How sad it is, my returning to it, it being like a proscribed thing cast off before the pilgrims.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “They continued in these practices until God sent Muḥammad (SAAS) and revealed the Qur’ān to him, as a retort to them and their innovations. God said, ‘Hasten forth from the place where people hasten from' (ṣūrat al-Baqara, II, v.199). By this is meant the masses of the Arabs from ʿArafat. And also that same verse reads, 'and ask the forgiveness of God; surely God is forgiving, merciful.'"

As we have previously shown, the Messenger of God (SAAS) would make the halt at ʿArafat before he received his prophethood, this being an award granted by God to him.

God also revealed to him a response to their practice of forbidding people certain actions and foods in the words, "O mankind, attend to your dress at every prayer meeting and eat and drink, but do not be extreme. God does not love extremists. Say, 'Who made forbidden clothing (from) God that He brought forth for His worshippers, along with all good provisions?'" (ṣūrat al-ʿArāf, VII, v.31–2).

Ziyād al-Bakkāʾi stated from Ibn Ishāq, "But I don't know whether their making these innovations preceded or followed the battle of the elephant."
Muhammad b. Ishāq, God bless him, stated: "Jewish Rabbis, Christian priests and Arab soothsayers all spoke of the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥa) before his mission as the time for it approached.

"The rabbis and the priests found in their books descriptions of him and of his time along with inferences relating to him from their prophets."

God Almighty said, "Those who follow the Messenger, the prophet, the ummi, "the unlettered", to whom they will find written reference in the Torah and the Bible requiring them to do good and warning them of evil, allowing them the good things and forbidding them the bad, removing the burden and chains formerly upon them; so those who believe in him, honour him and aid him and follow the light that was sent down with him, those will be successful" (sūrat al-Anfāṣ, VII, v.157).

God Almighty stated, "And when Jesus son of Mary said, 'O children of Israel, I am God's messenger to you, bringing affirmation of the Torah before me and giving tidings of a prophet who will come after me whose name will be Ahmad'" (sūrat al-Saff, LXI, v.6). And God Almighty said, "Muḥammad is the Messenger of God. And those with him are those who are very severe against the unbelievers, compassionate with one another. You shall see them bowing down, prostrating themselves, seeking grace from God, and approval. They have marks on their faces from their prostrations. That is their likeness in the Torah and in the Bible. (They are) like plants. (God) brings forth their sprouts and then strengthens them and thickens them so they stand straight on their stalks. He pleases the planters to discomfort through them the unbelievers. God gave promise of forgiveness and great reward to those who believe in him and perform righteous deeds" (sūrat al-Fath, XLVIII, v.29).

And God Almighty said, "When God made the covenant with the Prophets, saying, 'I gave you the Scripture and wisdom, then there will come unto you a messenger confirming what you possess; you shall believe in him and render him help.' He said, 'Do you agree and accept my covenant as binding to you?' They replied, 'We affirm.' He said, 'So bear witness and I along with you am a witness'" (sūrat Al-ʾImrān, III, v.81).

In the saḥīḥ of al-Bukhārī there is a hadith from Ibn ʿAbbās that states, "God never sent down a prophet without entering into a covenant upon him (to the effect that) if Muhammad were sent down his mission when he was (already) living, then he (that prophet) would believe in him and aid him. God ordered him to take a covenant to his people that if Muhammad were given his mission during their lifetime, then they should believe in him, aid him, and follow him.”

This confirms that all prophets had talked about him and were commanded to follow him.

Abraham, upon whom be peace, stated in the prayer he made about the people of Mecca, “O our Lord! Send among them as a messenger one of their own people, who will recite to them Your signs and teach them the scriptures and wisdom and purify them. You are the mighty one, the wise” (sūrat al-Baqara, II, v.129).

Imām Aḥmad said that Abū al-Nadr related to him, quoting al-Faraj b. Faḍāla, quoting Luqmān b. ʿAmīr, who said that he heard Abū Umāma say, “I asked the Prophet, ‘O Messenger of God, what was the beginning of your mission?’

“He replied, ‘The prayer of my father Abraham, the glad tidings from Jesus, and my mother’s seeing a light emitting from her that illuminated the castles of Syria.’”

Muḥammad b. Ishaq said that just such a statement was related to him from Thawr b. Yazid, from Khalid b. Maḍān, from the Companions of the Prophet (SAAS).

By this is meant his wanting to refer to the beginning of his mission among his people and the spreading and expanding of his fame. And so he made mention of the prayer of Abraham, to whom the Arabs trace their descent. Then the prediction of Jesus, the ‘Seal’ of the prophets of the tribe of Israel, as mentioned before. This shows that there were other prophets between these two who also gave tidings of his coming.

Regarding (the assembly of) the archangels, their cognizance of him was widespread and well known before the creation of Adam, upon whom be prayers and peace. Imām Aḥmad stated that ‘Abd al-Ḥamīn b. Mahdī related to him, quoting Muʿāwiyya b. Ṣāliḥ, from Saʿīd b. Suwayd al-Kalbī, from ‘Abd al-ʿĀl b. Hilāl al-Salāmī, from al-ʿIrbaḍ b. Sāriyya who stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘For God I am the Seal of the prophets; Adam was well made in His likeness. And I shall tell you of the first of it: my father Abraham’s prayer, the prediction of Jesus about my coming, and the visions seen by my mother, as well as by the mothers of the believers.’”

Al-Layth related this from Muʿāwiyya b. Ṣāliḥ who said, “When she delivered him, his mother saw a light from him that illuminated the castles of Syria.”
Imām Ahmad also said, “‘Abd al-Raḥmān related to us, as did Maḥsur b. Sa‘d, from Badīl b. Maysara, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Shaqiqa, from Maysara al-Fajr, who stated, ‘I asked, O Messenger of God, when did you become a prophet?’ He replied, ‘When Adam was between the spirit and the body.’”

Ahmad is the sole source of these.

‘Umar b. ʿAbd al-Malik b. Shāhīn related this in the work entitled Dalʿīl al-Nubuwa (Signs of the Prophethood) from a hadith of Abū Hurayra who stated, “‘Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. ‘Abd al-ʿAzīz – meaning Abū al-Qāsim al-Baghawi – related to us, as did Abī Hammām al-Walīd b. Muslim, from al-Awzāʿī, and I was told by Yaḥyā from Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra, who said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was asked, ‘When was it made your duty to become a prophet?’ He replied, ‘Between the making of Adam and the breathing of the spirit into him.’”

It was related on another line of authorities from al-Awzāʿī who used the words “and Adam was formed in his likeness”.

It was also related from al-Baghawi, from ʿAbd al-Malik b. al-Miqdām, from Baqīyya b. Saʿd b. Bashir, from Ṭabāda, from Abū Hurayra, relating to the words of Almighty God, “And when we made a covenant with the prophets, and with you, and with Noah” (ṣūrat al-Ahzāb, XXXIII, v.7) that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, “I was the first of the prophets to be created and the last of them to be sent.”

And from a hadith of Abū Muzāḥim, on the authority of Qays b. al-Rabīʿ, from Jābir, from al-Shaʿbī, from Ibn ʿAbbās, that someone asked, “O Messenger of God, when were you a prophet?” He replied, “While Adam was between spirit and body.”

The Arab soothsayers had been told by the devils from the jīn things overheard by them while they were still not prevented from so doing by having stars cast at them. Soothsayers, male and female, continued mentioning such matters, without the Arabs giving any credence to them, until God Almighty sent him, and there occurred those things they had talked of and so recognized.

When the time of the Messenger of God and his prophethood approached, the devils were screened from overhearing and they were prevented from occupying those seats from which they used to overhear. Stars were hurled at them, and the devils knew that that was because of an order coming from God, the Almighty and Glorious.

On this subject God sent down to his messenger (ṢAAS) the words, “Say: it has been revealed to me that a group of jīn listened and then said, ‘We heard a wonderful Qurʾān which guides towards the right, and we believed in it. And we will never associate any other god with our Lord’” (ṣūrat al-Jīn; LXXII, v.1–2).

We have given prior explanation to all that in our Taṣḥīr, exegesis of the Qurʾān, as well as to God’s words, “And when we directed (mention) towards you (of) a group of jinn who listened to the Qurʾān. And when they came to it, they said, ‘Listen silently!’ And when it was over they turned back to their people warning them, and saying: ‘O people ours, we have heard a book sent down after Moses verifying what came before it, guiding towards the truth, and to the straight path’” (ṣūrat al-ʿAṣrāf, XLVI, v.29, 30). All this too we elucidated there.

Muḥammad b. Ishaq stated that Yaʿqūb b. ʿUtba b. al-Mughīra b. al-Akhnas related to him that he was told that the first Arabs to be afraid at (seeing) the stars being thrown was the tribe of Thaqīf. They consulted one of their men on the subject, whose name was ʿAmr b. Umayya, one of Banū ʿIlaj, he being the most shrewd and astute of all Arabs. They asked him, “O ʿAmr, don’t you see what’s going on in the heavens, all those stars being thrown about?”

He replied, “I certainly do. Keep watch and if the ones being cast are most prominent stars, the ones by which men are guided on land and sea, and by the rising and setting of which the seasons of summer and winter are marked, for the good of men in their lives, then, by God, it means the end of the world, and the destruction of all creation. If it is other stars, while the prominent stars remain firm in their place, then it is occurring for some purpose God intends for mankind. So what could that be?”

Ibn Ishaq said, “A certain scholar related to me that a woman of Banū Sahm known as al-Ghafīlā who had been a soothsayer before the coming of Islam was visited one night by her other world contact who swooped down beneath her, then said, ‘I know what I know; a day of slaying and slaughtering.’ When she told Quraysh of this they asked, ‘What does he mean?’

“When he came to her on another night, swooping down beneath her, he said, ‘Ravines! What ravines? In them, down their sides, Kaʿb will fall.’ When this reached Quraysh they said, ‘What does this mean? This is something that will happen; look to see what it will be.’

“But they could not interpret it until the battles of Badr and Uhud took place in ‘ravines’; then they knew what it was the spirit had told her.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Ali b. Naḥf al-Jurashi related to me that Janb, a tribe from Yemen, had a soothsayer before Islam came. And when news of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) spread among the Arabs, Janb asked their soothsayer, ‘Find out about this man for us’ and they assembled (to hear him) at the foot of his mountain.

“When the sun rose he came down to them and stood leaning on a bow he had. Then, having gazed up for a long time into the sky, he began to leap about. Then he spoke: ‘O people, God has honoured Muḥammad by choosing him. He has purified his heart and his insides. But, O people, his stay among you will be short.’ He then hurried back up his mountain, returning whence he had come.”
Thereafter Ibn Ishaq mentions the story of Siwād b. Qārib. We have postponed giving it until the section on The Cries of the Spirits.

Division

Ibn Ishaq stated that 'Āṣim b. 'Amr b. Qatāda related to him, from some of his tribe, as follows: "One of the things that brought us into Islam – along with the mercy of God Almighty and His guidance – was what we heard from a Jew. We were at that time polytheists and worshipped idols, while they, the Jews, were people with Scriptures who had knowledge we did not. There was always enmity between us and them and if ever we bested them in some way they disliked they would tell us, 'The time is near for a prophet; he will now be sent, and with him we will kill you just as Ād and Iram were killed.'

"We heard that from them often.

"So when God sent His messenger (ṣaas) we responded positively when he invited us to God, and became aware of what their threats to us meant. We therefore hastened to him before them and believed in him, while they disbelieved in him.

"Concerning us and them this verse was sent down: 'And when there came to them a book from God verifying what they had, though they formerly prayed for victory against those who disbelieved; and when there came to them that which they knew, they disbelieved in it. And so may God's curse be upon the disbelievers'" (ṣūrat al-Baqara, II, v.89).

Warqā' stated, from Ibn Abī Najīh from 'Alī al-Azdi that the Jews used to say: "O God send us this prophet who will judge between us and the people who seek victory by him." It was al-Bayhaqi who related this.

Thereafter it was related through ʿAbd al-Mālik b. Ḥarūn b. ʿAnbara, from his father, from his grandfather, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, "The Jews were at Khaybar battling Ghaṭafān, but whenever battle was joined the Jews of Khaybar were defeated. So the Jews resorted to this prayer, saying, 'O God, we will ask you by Muhammad's rightness, the Prophet, the ummi, "the unlettered", whom you promised us you would send at the end of time, if you will give us victory over them.'"

The report went on to say that when they met in battle and they spoke this prayer they defeated Ghaṭafān.

Yet when the Prophet (ṣaas) was sent, they disbelieved in him. And so God, Almighty and Glorious is He, revealed the words, "they formerly prayed for victory against those who disbelieved."

ʿĀṭiyya related approximately the same from Ibn ʿAbbās, and also said that ʿIkrima used similar words.
Ibn Isḥāq stated that Ṣalih b. Ibrāhim b. ʿAbd al-ʿRahmān b. ʿAwf related to him, from Mahmūd b. Labīd, from Salama b. Saʿlām b. Waqṣ, who was at the battle of Badr, who said, “We had a Jewish neighbour from Banū ʿAbd al-ʿAshhal and he came out of his house one day to us. At that time, I was the youngest of my household; I was wearing a fur gown I had and was lying in it in the courtyard of my family’s house.

“The Jew talked of the resurrection, the Day of Judgement, the reckoning, the scales, paradise, and hell-fire.

“This he told to polytheists, idolaters who did not believe in any life after death.

“They replied, ‘Come on, now! You really think people can be sent, after their death, to some place where there is a paradise, and a fire where they will be punished for their deeds?’

‘‘Yes indeed,’ he replied, ‘and by Him by whom oaths are sworn, anyone going into that fire would prefer being placed in the hottest oven in the house, and having it covered over him, and he being let out of it only next day.’

‘‘Good gracious! But what proof is there?’ they asked.

‘‘A prophet is being sent from hereabouts in these lands,’ he replied, and gestured over towards Mecca and Yemen.

‘‘When will we see him?’ they enquired.

“He looked over at me, I being the youngest one there, and said, ‘If this lad lives a normal lifespan, he’ll live to his time.’”

Salama said, “And a day and a night had scarcely passed thereafter until God sent the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who lived among us. And so we believed in him. But he (the Jew) disbelieved in him out of evil and envy.

“So we asked him, ‘What now then; aren’t you the one who told us certain things about him?’

‘‘Yes,’ he replied, ‘but he’s not the one.’”

This anecdote was also related by Ḩāmid, from Yaʿqīb from his father, from Ibn ʿAbbās. And al-Bayhaqi told it from al-Ḥākim with a chain of authorities through Yūnus b. Bukayr.

Abū Nuʿaym related in al-Dalāʾīl (The Signs), from ʿAṣim b. Umar b. Qatāda, from Mahmūd b. Labīd, from Muḥammad b. Salama, saying, “In the tribe of ʿAbd al-ʿAshhal there was only one Jew, whose name was Yūshaʿ. When I was still a boy, wearing a waist-wrapper, I heard him say, ‘The time is near for a prophet to be sent to you from somewhere over near this building.’ And he pointed over at God’s temple, saying, ‘And whoever lives till then, let him believe in him.’

“And the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was sent and we accepted Islam, while he, living there among us, did not, out of envy and evil.”

We have already given the account of Abū Saʿīd, from his father, about this Yūshaʿ’s having told of the coming of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and of having given his description. Also we told of al-Zubayr b. Bâta’s account of the appearance of a star at the birth of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Al-Ḥakîm related this anecdote from al-Bayhaqî with a chain of authorities through Yûnus b. Bukayr.

Ibn Ishāq said that ‘Āṣim b. ʿUmar b. Qatāda related to him about a sheikh of Banû Qurayṣa who asked him, “Do you know how it came about that Islam was accepted by Thaʿlabah b. Saʿya and Usayd b. Saʿya along with Asad b. ʿUbayd, all of Banû Hudal, brothers of Banû Qurayṣa, with whom they had lived in the days before Islam but who then became their masters after Islam?”

‘Āṣim said, “I do not.” Whereupon the sheikh told him, “A Jew from Syria called Ibn al-Hayyibân came to us some years before the arrival of Islam and lived among us. And by God, I never knew a non-Muslim (one who does not perform the five daily prayers) better than him. Well, he was living there with us at a time of drought, so we asked him, ‘Please, Ibn al-Hayyibân, pray for rain for us!’ But he replied, ‘No, by God, I’ll not do that until you pay me.’ ‘How much?’ we asked. ‘A ʿa weight of dates or two mudd weights of barley.’ ‘We’ll pay it,’ we agreed.

“He then went out with us to the top of our parched land and prayed for rain for us. And by God, he no sooner got up but clouds came and it rained! Yet others had done that once, twice, and thrice!

“Later his death came while he lived with us. When he knew he was dying, he said, ‘O Jews, what do you think it was that brought me from a land of wine and bread to one of poverty and hunger?’ ‘You know that best,’ we replied. He then said, ‘I only came to this country because I expected the arrival of a prophet whose time is near. This land is where he will take refuge. And I had hoped that he would be sent so that I could follow him. His time is near for you. But don’t hasten to him, O Jews, for he is sent to shed the blood and capture the women and children of those who oppose him. And that (hurrying to him) will not prevent him treating you thus.’

“And when the Messenger of God (SAAS) was sent, he besieged Banû Qurayṣa. Those grown men who had been young boys at the earlier occasion addressed their people, saying, ‘O Banû Qurayṣa, he is, by God, the prophet foretold to you by Ibn al-Hayyibân.’ They replied, ‘He is not.’ The men insisted, saying, ‘Yes he is. He has just his description.’ So they went down and accepted Islam, and by doing so saved their blood, their property, and their people.”

Ibn Ishāq commented, “This account reached us from Jewish rabbis.”

Earlier we gave an account of the arrival at Medina of the Tubbaʿ of Yemen, Abū Karib Tubbân Asʿad, and of his siege of it; and how those two rabbis came out to him and told him, "You shall have no path to it. It will be the place of refuge for a prophet at the end of time", and how that made him turn away from the town.

Abū Nuʿaym told in his work, al-Dalāʾil (The Signs), on a line of authorities through al-Walid b. Muslim, that Muḥammad b. Ḥamza b. Yūsuf b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Sallām related to him, from his father and grandfather, the following, "ʿAbd Allāh b. Sallām stated that God having wished good guidance for Zayd b. Saʿyā, Zayd said, 'All marks of the prophethood were there as expected for me to recognize on the face of Muḥammad (SAAS) when I looked at him, except that there were two I had not explored in him: that his patient wisdom preceded his ignorance, and that the more ignorance was directed at him, the more his patient wisdom increased.'

"He stated further, 'I used to be nice to him so that I could mix with him and get to know his wisdom and his foolishness.'

"He then told a story of his having made an advance payment to the Prophet (ṢAAS) for profit. He went on, 'And when the time for the loan was due, I went to him and grabbed him by the closure of his cloak and gown, he being then at a funeral with some of his Companions. I also glared at him in an ugly fashion and said, 'O Muḥammad, aren't you going to pay me my due? By God, I never knew you of the tribe of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib to be late payers!'"

"Umar stared over at me, his eyes rolled like revolving celestial bodies. Then he said, "You enemy of God! Do you dare say to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) what I am hearing and do what I am seeing? By Him who sent him with the truth, if I were not wary of his blaming me, I would cut off your head with my sword!"

"Meanwhile, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was looking at Umar, smiling quietly with gentleness. Then he said, "Umar, both he and I were in need of something other than that from you; you should have told me to pay up properly, and him to behave better. Take him away, Umar, and pay him his due. And give him 20 ṣāq's weight of dates as a bonus!'"

"And so Zayd b. Saʿyā, may God be pleased with him, became a Muslim. He was present with the Messenger of God at all the battles, and he died in the year of Tabūk, God bless him."

Then Ibn Ishaq, God be pleased with him, recounted how Salmān al-Fārist, "the Persian", God bless him, became a Muslim. He stated that ʿĀsim b. Umar b. Qatāda the anṣārī, the "helper", related to him, from Maḥmūd b. Labid, from ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbbās, who said that Salmān al-Fārist told him as follows, "I was a Persian from Isfahan and dwelt in a village called Jayy. My father was the headman of the village and I was the one he most loved of all creatures; his affection for me was so strong that he kept me closeted in his house like a slave-girl.
"I took pains to be a good Magian, and became the keeper of the fire, the one who lights it and never for a moment lets it go out.

"My father owned a large farm and one day, when he was busy constructing a building, he said to me, 'Son, I'm too busy to leave here today for the farm, so you go and look to it.' And he told me certain things he wanted. Then he told me, 'Don't be away from me too long. If you are I'll be more concerned about you than about my farm or work, and you'll keep me from everything else.'

"So I left for the farm as he had told me and on my way I passed by a church for Christians and heard their voices as they prayed there. I didn't know anything about other people, because my father had kept me shut up at home. So when I heard their voices I went in to them to find out what they were doing. When I saw them I was much impressed with their prayers and wanted to join them. I said to myself, 'This, by God, is better than the religion we have.'

"So I didn't leave them until sunset and neglected to go to my father's farm.

"I asked them, 'Where is the origin of this religion?' 'In Syria,' they replied.

"I then went back to my father who had sent people to look for me and had been distracted from all his work. When I arrived he asked, 'Well, son, where were you? Didn't I ask you to do something?' 'O Father,' I replied, 'I went by some people praying in a church of theirs and I was much impressed by what I saw of their religion. So I stayed with them till sunset.'

"'Son, there's no good in that religion. Your religion and that of your forefathers is better than it.'

"'But no,' I replied, 'I swear by God theirs is better than ours.'

"My father was afraid for me and set chains on my legs and imprisoned me in his house. So I sent a message to the Christians saying, 'If a caravan comes to you from Syria send word to me about them.'

"A caravan did arrive from Syria and the Christians came and told me about them. I said to them, 'When they finish their business and are about to return home, then tell me.'

"When they were ready to go home they let me know and I threw the shackles off my legs and left with them. When we arrived in Syria, I asked, 'Who is the most learned man in this religion?' 'The bishop in the church,' they replied.

"So I went to him and said, 'I really like this religion, and I want to join you and to serve you in your church, to learn from you and to pray with you.'

"'Come on in,' he invited me.

"So I joined him. But he was an evil man, demanding alms from his people and whatever they collected he would store away for himself and not give to the poor. Eventually he had gathered seven jars of gold and silver.

"I hated him mightily for what I saw him doing.
“Then he died, and the Christians assembled to bury him. I told them, ‘This was an evil man. He demanded alms from you but when you brought it to him he stored it away for himself and gave none of it to the poor.’

“They asked me, ‘How do you know that?’ and I replied that I could take them to his treasure. ‘Do so!’ they told me, so I showed them where it was and they brought out seven jars filled with gold and silver. When they saw it they said, ‘We’ll never give him burial!’ And so they crucified and stoned him.

“Then they brought another man to take his place. And,” said Salman, “I never saw a man who did not attend the five prayers who was better than he, nor more ascetic, nor more enthusiastic about the afterlife, nor more devoted both day and night. I loved him as I had never loved before.

“So I stayed with him for a time and then his death approached. I asked him, ‘Since I’ve been with you I’ve loved you as never before. But now what you know to be God’s decree is approaching, so to whom do you entrust me? And what are your orders to me?’

“‘My son,’ he replied, ‘I don’t know anyone who has done as I have. People have either died or changed or abandoned most of their prior practices, except for one man in Mawsil; he practises as I did. Join him.’

“So when he died and was buried, I joined the leader of al-Mawsil. I told him, ‘So-and-so enjoined me at his death to come to you; he told me you are as he was.’ ‘Stay with me,’ I was invited.

“I did so and found him the best of men, like his friend. But soon he was to die. And when death was near for him, I told him, ‘So-and-so entrusted me to you and told me to join you. Now God’s decree, as you know, is near for you, so whom do you recommend to me, and what are your orders to me?’ ‘My son,’ he replied, ‘I don’t know anyone else who is as we were, except one man at Nasibtn, so join him.’

“When he did die and was buried, I joined the bishop at Nasibtn and told him my story and what my two masters had ordered me. ‘Stay with me,’ he said. And so I did so, finding him extremely good, as his two colleagues had been. But, I swear by God, death soon approached him too, so I asked him, ‘So-and-so recommended one man to me, who recommended me to another, who recommended me to you. Whom do you recommend for me, and what are your orders?’

“‘My son,’ he said, ‘I don’t know anyone who is still as we were whom I can recommend, except for one man at Amurriyya in Byzantium. He is as we were. If you wish, go to him.’

“When he died and was buried, I joined the bishop of Amurriyya, and related to him my story. He said, ‘Stay with me.’ So I did stay there, and he was the best of men, as well-directed and fine in his behaviour as his predecessors had been.
“I worked hard and earned well and eventually I had some cows and a small goat. But then God’s decree came for him too and I told him, ‘So-and-so recommended someone to me, who recommended me to another, he to another, then he to another and so on until you were recommended me. To whom do you recommend me and what are your orders?’

‘My son,’ he replied, ‘I don’t know anyone who is as we were to whom to send you. But the time is near for a prophet being sent with Abraham’s religion who will come forth in the land of the Arabs. He will move to refuge to somewhere with date-palms growing between two scorched, rocky plains. He has signs that are unmistakable. He eats things given to him as gifts but not alms. And between his shoulders there is the seal of prophethood. If you can go there, do so.’

Then he died and was buried, and I stayed in ‘Amāriyya for the length of time God wished.

Eventually a group of merchants of the Kalb tribe passed by and I asked them to take me to the land of the Arabs and offered them my cows and goat. They agreed, so I gave them to them and they took me with them as far as Wādī al-Qurā. There they did me evil by selling me as a slave to a Jew. There with him I saw palm trees and hoped that might be the land my master had described.

While I was there with him he received a visit from a cousin of his of Banī Qurayṣa from Medina. He sold me to him, who bore me off to Medina. And I swear by God, as soon as I saw it I recognized it as my friend had described it to me. And there it was I stayed.

Then the mission came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who remained in Mecca without me hearing any report of him, busy as I was in the toil of slavery. But then he took refuge in Medina.

One day I was doing some work for my master at the top of a palm tree, with him sitting there underneath, when a cousin of his came and stopped there. ‘Hey there, so-and-so,’ the cousin said, ‘God damn those ḍanṣār of Banū Qayla! They are assembled at Qibţa in support of a man come from Mecca whom they claim to be a prophet.’

Salmān continued, ‘When I heard this I began to tremble, so much I thought I would fall down on top of my master! So I climbed down the tree and began questioning his cousin.

‘This angered my master and he slapped me hard. Then he asked, ‘What’s this to do with you? Get back to your work!’

Salmān went on: “I had put aside some food, so that evening I took it to the Messenger of God (SAAS) he being at Qibţa, and went in to see him, saying, ‘I heard you were a good man and that you have with you some companions who are strangers and needy. This is some food I have to give as alms, and I consider you have more right to it than anyone else.’
"I then handed it to him and the Messenger of God (SAAS) said to his companions, 'Eat it then.' He himself took none.

"This is one test passed," I told myself.

"Then I left him and saved up some more, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was moving on towards Medina. I then went to him again and said, 'I noticed you didn't eat from the food I gave as alms. This is a present I wish to honour you with.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) did eat from this and told his companions to do the same, which they did.

"And again I said to myself: 'That makes it two!'

"I then went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) when he was at Baqi' al-Gharqad, the cemetery, where he had followed the funeral procession of one of his companions. He was wearing two cloaks, sitting there among his companions. I greeted him, then came round behind him to look at his back to find out if I could see the mark my former master had described to me. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw me go behind him he knew I was trying to establish something of what had been described to me. So he threw off his cloak from his back and I looked at the sign and recognized it. I then prostrated myself before him, kissing him and weeping. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then told me, 'Turn around!' So I stood up in front of him and told him my story as I have to you, O Ibn 'Abbâs.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then wanted his companions to hear my story."

Thereafter Salmân was so engaged at his work as a slave that he missed participation with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the battles of Badr and Uhud.

Salmân continued, "Eventually the Messenger of God (SAAS) said to me, 'Salmân, write!' So I wrote out for my master an agreement that I would plant 300 palm trees watered by a well and pay 40 ounces (of gold). The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said to his companions, 'Help your brother.' So they helped me, one man with 30 seedlings, another with 20, another with 15, and another with 10, each one participating as he could, until I had all the 300 together. Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) told me, 'Now Salmân, go and dig the holes for them. When you have finished come to me so that I can plant them with my own hands.'

"So I dug and my companions helped me and when we had finished I went and told him. He then went out with me to them and we began handing him the seedlings which the Messenger of God (SAAS) himself planted. When we had finished, and this I swear by Him in whose hands Salmân is, not one of those plants died.

"I had now settled up for the palm trees but was still in debt for the money. Now the Messenger of God (SAAS) was given a quantity of gold the size of a chicken’s egg from a mine. He said, ‘Hasn’t the Persian done accounts?’ I then said a prayer for him. Next, he said, ‘Take this and pay off what you owe, Salmān.’

“I asked him, ‘Where will this stand relative to what I owe, O Messenger of God?’ He said, ‘Take it, for God will pay your debt with it.’ So I took it and weighed it for them and, I swear by Him in whose hand Salmān is, it was 40 ounces! So I gave my debt in full.’

“And Salmān was set free.”

“And”, concluded Salmān, “I was present with the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥa) at the battle of al-khandaq (‘the trench’) as a free man, and never missed another battle where he participated.”

Ibn Ishāq continued, “Yazīd b. Abī Ḥabīb related to me, from a man from the ‘Abd al-Qays tribe, from Salmān, who said, ‘When I asked, “Where will this stand relative to what I owe, O Messenger of God?” he took it (the gold nugget), turned it over on his tongue and then said, “Take it; pay them in full with this.” And so I did and with it paid off the 40 ounces.”

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated that ʿĀṣim b. ʿUmar b. Qatāda related to me that a reliable authority told him from ʿUmar b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. Marwān who said that it was related to him about Salmān that when he, Salmān, was telling his story to the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥa), he said that the bishop of ʿAmūriyya told him, “Go this way and that in Syria, and there you will find a man who dwells between two thickets. Every year he emerges from one of these and then is accosted by people who are sick. Every one of these for whom he says a prayer is cured. So ask him about this religion you’re seeking. And he will tell you about it.”

Salmān said, “So I left and travelled to the place he had described and I found people gathered there with their sick waiting until the night the man would move out from one of the thickets towards the other. (When he came out) the people there overwhelmed him and every sick person for whom he prayed was cured. They beat me to him and I couldn’t get near him till he entered the thicket he was heading for, when I touched his shoulder. ‘Who is that?’ he asked and turned towards me. I replied, ‘God have mercy on you! Do tell me about the hanifīyya, Abraham’s religion!’

‘You’re asking me about something people don’t enquire about nowadays. The time is near for the coming of a prophet who will be sent down with that religion; he will be one of the people of the sanctuary. Go to him and he will take you to it.’ He then went into the thicket.

“At this the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥa) commented: ‘If you have told me the truth, O Salmān, you have met Jesus son of Mary!’”

That, then, is how this anecdote is worded. There is (in its chain of authorities) one man of questionable reliability, he being Sheikh ʿĀṣim b. ʿUmar b.
Qatada. That link is also said to have been al-Hasan b. ‘Umara. The tradition is also missing a link, indeed untraceable, between ‘Umar b. ‘Abd al-‘Aziz and Salman, may God be pleased with him.

As for his words, “If you have told me the truth, O Salmän, you have met Jesus son of Mary,” these are very strange, if not unacceptable. For the period involved must, by all accounts, be one of 400 years, perhaps even 600 years by the solar calendar. The longest anyone suggests that Salmän lived is some 350 years. Al-‘Abbās b. Yazīd al-Bahrānī related that the consensus of his elders was that he lived for 250 years; they differed as to whether it could have been as much as 350 years. But God knows best. And it seems that he was saying, “You met a (good) follower of Jesus, son of Mary.” And that could well be true.

Al-Suhaylī stated, “The man of questionable reliability (in the above chain of authorities) is al-Hasan b. ‘Umara, a weak authority. But if he was correct, then there is nothing unacceptable about it. Because Ibn Jarir related that Jesus came down again to earth after he had been resurrected and that he found his mother and another woman weeping at the cross of the crucified man. Jesus told them that he had not been killed, and after that he sent his disciples.”

He went on: “And if it is possible that he came down once, then it is possible he did so many times. Moreover there is his evident return when he broke the cross and killed the pig and thereafter married a woman of Banū Jīdhām and finally was buried in a chamber of the grave (usually referred to as the garden) of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).”

Al-Bayhaqī related in his book Dalā’il al-Nubuwwa (Signs of the Prophethood) this story of Salmän by way of Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Muhammad b. Ishāq as previously given. And he also related it from al-Ḥākim, from al-‘Āsamm b. Yahyā b. Abū Ṭalib.

‘Alī b. Ṭālib related to us, as did Hātim b. Abū Ṣufra, from Simak b. Ḥarb, from Yazīd b. Ṣuḥrān, that he heard Salmän relating how his accepting Islam first occurred. Salmän made a lengthy account of how he had originated in Rāhmūruz and that he had a wealthy brother who was older than himself. He himself was poor and under his brother’s care, and the son of the headman of Rāhmūruz was his friend, with whom he would visit a teacher. And his friend also used to call upon some Christian worshippers who lived in a cave. Salmän asked his friend to take him to visit them, but the reply was, “You’re just a young man, and I’m afraid that you will betray them and that my father will kill them.” And so he made him promise that he would not do anything his friend would not like.

So he accompanied his friend and they (the Christians) were six or seven in number. And they looked as if, from all their praying, their souls had left them; they fasted by day and stayed up (praying) at night, and ate trees or whatever they found.
He related of them that they believed in all the previous messengers from God and that Jesus was a worshipper of God, His messenger, and the son of His slave-girl and that God aided him with miracles.

They told him, "Boy, you have a Lord; and will have an afterlife. Awaiting you there is to be a heaven and a hell. And those people who worship fires are unbelievers and in error. God is not pleased with what they do, and they are not in his religion."

Thereafter Salmān went to them often with his friend and eventually joined them totally. But then the ruler of that land expelled them, and he was the father of the young man who had visited them with Salmān. The ruler imprisoned his son at home. Salmān presented their religion to his older brother but the latter said, "I'm personally just busy with making my living."

So Salmān went away with them, and they entered the church at al-Mawsil, whose people made them welcome. "Then", continued Salmān, "they wanted to leave me there with those people, but I refused to do anything but accompany them. So then they went further until they came to a mountain valley, and the monks of that region hurried down to greet them and to be with them. The monks asked them how it had been away, and also enquired about me, and they praised me highly."

Then there arrived a man much respected among them who addressed them and gave all due praise to God. He made mention of the messengers and what assistance they were given. He also talked of Jesus son of Mary and how he was the slave of God and His Messenger. He enjoined them to be good and forbade them evil. Then when his former companions wished to go further on, Salmān kept with this man and followed him. He would fast by day and stay up at night (praying) from one Sunday to the next. He would go out before them and give them sermons, enjoining good and forbidding evil. This went on for a long period and then he wished to visit Jerusalem, and Salmān accompanied him there.

Salmān went on, "As he walked he would turn towards me, draw near, preach to me, and tell me that I had a Lord, that there were heaven, hell, and an accounting before me, reminding me of approximately what he would preach to the congregation on Sundays. One time he told me, 'O Salmān, God will send a messenger whose name is Ahmad. He will come up out of Tihāma; he will eat a gift, but not alms. And between his shoulders there will be a seal of prophethood. This is the time now approaching when he will appear. I am an old man, and I don't think I will live until his coming. But if you do, then believe in him and follow him.' 'But what', I asked, 'if he tells me to abandon your faith and practices?' He replied, 'No matter what he orders you, he brings the truth with him, and the wish of the Most Merciful One is in what he says.'"
Salmān then related their arrival in Jerusalem and that his companion worshipped at various places there. Before he went to sleep, the priest told him to wake him up when the shadow arrived at a certain place. But Salmān let him rest a little longer than he had requested and when he awoke he first praised God then reproached Salmān for not having done as he requested. They then left Jerusalem and (Salmān’s account continues), “A cripple begged, ‘O worshipper of God, I asked of you when you arrived, but you gave me nothing. I am now asking you again.’ The priest looked but found no one else. So he took him by the hand and said, ‘Stand up, in the name of God.’ The man did so, and there was nothing wrong with him, no diseases at all; he was moving as if with the slightest limp. The priest then told me, ‘O, worshipper of God, load up my baggage for me so I can go off to my own people and tell them the good tidings.’ I got busy doing this, but when I wanted to go over to him, I could not find him. I did not know where he had gone. And whenever I asked anyone about him, they told me, ‘He’s out ahead of you.’

“Eventually I was met by a caravan of Arabs of Banū Kalb and I made enquiry of them. When they heard my accent one man made his camel kneel and mounted me up behind him, and they brought me to their land.

“Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived.”

Salmān related after this how he went to see him (the Prophet) and gave him alms, then a gift to test what his companion had told him, and asked to see the seal. When he did see it he believed at once and informed the Messenger of God (SAAS) what he had been told.

The account then tells of the Messenger of God (SAAS), having summoned Abū Bakr, “the trusting”, who bought Salmān from the woman and then set him free.

Salmān went on: “Later I asked the Messenger of God one day about the Christians’ religion. He replied, ‘There’s no good in them.’ I remembered all those I had accompanied and in particular that good man who had been in Jerusalem with me, and so his words had great impact on me. Then God sent down to the Messenger of God (SAAS) the statement: ‘Certainly you will find that the people the most violent in their enmity to those who believe are the Jews along with polytheists. And you will find that the closest of people in friendship to those who believe are those who say, “We are Christians.” That is because there are priests and monks among them and because they do not behave with conceit’ (sūrat al-Mā’ida, V, v.82).

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) summoned me, and I was afraid when I came. When I sat before him he recited, ‘In the name of God the most compassionate, the most merciful. ‘That is because there are priests and monks among them, and because they do not behave with conceit." Then he said, 'O Salmān, those whom you accompanied, and your friend as well, were not Christians; they were Muslims.' I replied, 'By Him who sent you with the truth, he certainly did order me to follow you.' And when I said, 'But what if he tells me to leave your religion and your practices?' he did say, 'Yes; do leave that, for the truth, and what pleases God is whatever he orders you.'"

In this passage there are many strange elements and some differences with the text cited by Muḥammad Ibn Ishāq. Ibn Ishāq's is stronger in its chains of authorities, better in its narrative, and closer to that related by al-Bukhārī in his sahih collection. The latter relies on the hadith of Muḥtamar b. Sūlāmān b. Tarkhān al-Taʿīmī, from his father, from Abū ʿUthmān al-Nahdī, from Sūlāmān al-Fārisī. That account relates dozens of interactions, from master to master, that is, from teacher to teacher, and from guide to guide. But God knows best.

Al-Suhaylī said, "There were 30 changes in all, from one master to the next." But God knows best.

Similarly the hā迪士尼 Abū Nuʿaym abbreviated the account of Sūlāmān's conversion in his work al-Dalāʿīl (The Signs). In it he gave many different chains of authorities, and many different phrases. In some of these the name of the woman who made the contract about him was named Ḥalbasa. But God knows best.

An Account of certain strange events relating thereto.

Abū Nuʿaym stated in al-Dalāʿīl that Sūlāmān b. Ḥāmid related to him, quoting Muḥammad b. Zakariyāʾ al-Ghālābī, quoting al-ʿĀlāʾ b. al-Faḍl b. ʿAbd al-Malik b. Abū al-Sawīyya al-Minqārī, as did ʿAbbād b. Kassīb, from his father, from Abū ʿAtwārā al-Khuzāʿī, from Saʿīr b. Sawāda al-ʿĀmirī, who said, "I was in love with one of the finest ladies of the tribe. For her I rode every kind of mount, difficult and submissive alike, leaving no place untried in my hopes of business and profit. I left Syria with goods and produce I wanted to sell to the crowds of pilgrims and Arabs and so entered Mecca one very dark night. I stayed until night was over and when I lifted my head I could see a pavilion over against the top of the mountain quilted out of heavy cloth from al-ʿṬāʾīf. Animals were being slaughtered and others brought. People were eating and others encouraging the cooks to hurry up. There, too, was a man calling loudly from a hilltop, saying, 'O pilgrims, come on over and eat lunch!' There was also a little man over on a path calling out, 'O pilgrims, if you have eaten, pass on till supper.' I was amazed by what I saw and went over there seeking the group's leader. One man saw what I wanted and told me, 'Straight ahead!'"

"Then I saw an old man whose cheeks were very red and who seemed to have a star shining forth from his forehead. He had twisted around his head a black turban from beneath the folds of which his head-parting appeared, sesame seed in colour.” (Some accounts give the wording as “sitting on a chair of black samāsim wood with a saddle cushion beneath it.”) “In his hand he lightly held a rod. All around him sheikhs were sitting, their heads held down, and not one of them was saying a word. Information had reached me in Syria that this was the time for the arrival of the ummi (unlettered) Prophet, so when I saw this man I thought it was he. So I said to him, ‘Peace be upon you, O Messenger of God!’ He replied in anger, ‘Stop that! No! I wish I were he.’ I asked, ‘Who is that sheikh?’ ‘That’s Abū Nadla, Ḥāshim b. ‘Abd Manāf.’ So I turned away, saying, ‘Now that is glory! Not like that of the house of Jafna!’”

By this he meant the Arab kings of Syria of the Ghassān tribe, who were known as the Āl (family of) Jafna. The office he was describing relative to Ḥāshim was that of the rijāda, namely the feeding of the pilgrims.

Abū Nuʿaym said that ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar related to him, quoting Muḥammad b. Ahmad b. Abū Yaḥyā, quoting Saʿīd b. Uṭmān, quoting ʿAlī b. Qutayba al-Khurāsānī, quoting Khālid b. Ḫaṣāṣ b. ʿAbd Bākh b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū al-Jahm, from his father from his grandfather, who said that he heard Abū Ṭālib relate the following about Abū Muḥāliah. He said, “While I was sleeping in the hijr enclosure, I had visions that scared me really badly. I went to a Quraysh soothsayer and I was wearing a silk shawl and my long hair was brushing my shoulders. When she looked at me, she knew from my face that something was changed; at that time I was the leader of my tribe. She said, ‘What is wrong with our master that he has come to us, his face so changed? Is he afraid of some fateful happening?’ ‘Indeed I am,’ I replied.

“Now she never first addressed anyone before they kissed her right hand. She would then place that hand on top of her head and the person would tell her what he wanted. I did not do that because I was the chief of my tribe.

“So I then sat down and said, ‘As I lay sleeping last night in the hijr I had a vision of a tree having grown up, its head touching the sky and its boughs touching both the east and the west. And I never saw any light shine more brightly, 70 times brighter than the sun’s light. I saw the Arabs and the non-Arabs alike prostrate before it, while it grew broader, taller, and more dazzling all the time, sometimes dimming but then gleaming again. I saw a group of men of Quraysh who had grasped its branches, while another group of them wanted to cut it down. When they came near it they were fended away by a young man more good and handsome than I had ever seen before. And he was breaking their backs and gouging their eyes. I raised my hand to have my share of the tree but the young man stopped me. ‘But who is to have it, then?’ I asked. He replied, ‘It is for those who climbed it, and they were there before you.’ At that I woke up in a fright.
“I saw that the expression on the face of the soothsayer had now altered. She said, ‘If your vision was true, then a man will emerge from your offspring who will rule both east and west, a man whom all will follow.’”

After that he – ‘Abd al-Mu’ttalib, that is – said to Abū Ṭālib: “Maybe you are to be that person.”

Abū Ṭālib used to tell this anecdote after the birth of the Messenger of God, following his receiving his mission. Then he said, “As God knows best, the tree was Abū al-Qāsim, the Trustworthy.” Someone asked Abū Ṭālib, “So don’t you believe?” He replied, “Shame and disgrace!”

Abū Nu’aym stated that Sulaymān b. Ahmad related to him, quoting Muḥammad b. Zakariyyāʾ al-Ghalabī, quoting al-‘Abbās b. Bakkār al-Dabī, quoting Abū Bakr al-Hudhali, from Ikrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās that al-‘Abbās said, “I went off in a caravan to Yemen to trade. In that party was Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb. When we were in Yemen I used to prepare the food one day and then go off with Abū Sufyān and others. Then next day Abū Sufyān would prepare the food and do the same as I had. One day when I was to prepare it, he asked, ‘Abū al-Fadl, how would you like to go to my house and send your food to me?’ I agreed.

“So I went with the group to his place and I sent off for the food. When everyone had finished eating, they left but he kept me there. He asked, ‘Abū al-Fadl, are you aware that your brother’s son claims to be the Messenger of God?’ I replied, ‘Which one of my brother’s sons?’ Abū Sufyān said, ‘Would you evade me? Which of your brother’s sons would it have to be saying that except one?’ ‘Nevertheless, which one?’ I asked. ‘He is Muhammad b. ‘Abd Allāh,’ he replied. ‘He’s done that?’ I enquired. ‘He certainly has,’ he insisted.

“He then took out a letter to him from his son Ḥanżala b. Abū Sufyān which said, ‘This is to tell you that Muhammad stood up in the open space and said, ‘I am the Messenger of God; I summon you to God, Almighty and Glorious is He!’’ Al-‘Abbās replied, ‘O Abī Ḥanżala, I think he’s telling the truth!’

“‘Easy does it, O Abū al-Fadl! By God, I don’t like him saying that. (Yet) I don’t fear any harm for us from his saying that, O son of ‘Abd al-Muṭtalib. By God, Quraysh is always saying something or other is yours, and there’s purpose behind each of them! Have you heard of that, Abū al-Fadl?’ ‘Yes, I have,’ I replied. So he said, ‘You’re cursed with this, by God!’ ‘Maybe we’re blessed with it,’ I responded.”

Al-‘Abbās went on: “It was only a few days thereafter that ‘Abd Allāh b. Ḥudhāfa brought that information, he being a believer. That news spread in all the assemblies of Yemen. Abū Sufyān used to attend one assembly in Yemen where a rabbi would talk. And the Jew said to him, ‘What’s this news? I’ve heard that you have among you the uncle of the man who has been saying these things.’
“Aбу Sufyان replied, ‘Yes, that’s true. I am his uncle.’ The Jew asked, ‘His father’s brother?’ ‘Yes,’ Aбу Sufyан told him. ‘Well tell me about him,’ he said.

‘Don’t ask me,’ he responded. ‘I am not at all pleased at him making that claim, and I don’t want to find fault with him, though there are others better than him.’”

“The Jew noticed that Abu Sufyan did not want to diminish his support nor to criticize him.

‘He has no ill will towards the Jews, or the Torah,’ the Jew commented.”

Al-‘Abbās stated: “Having been invited by the rabbi, I went and sat in at one of their meetings the next day. Aбу Sufyān b. Ḥarb was there along with the rabbi. I said to the rabbi, ‘I’ve been told that you asked my cousin about one of our men who claims to be the Messenger of God (SAAS) and that he told you he was his uncle. But he is not his uncle but his cousin. I’m his uncle, his father’s brother.’

‘You’re his father’s brother?’ he asked and I stated I was.

‘He then approached Abū Sufyān and asked, ‘Did he tell the truth?’ ‘Yes, he did,’ he replied.

‘Then I said, ‘Ask me some questions, and if I lie, he can refute me.’

‘He came over to me and said, ‘I ask you now, has your brother’s son sexual desires or immoral behaviour?’

‘Certainly not, by the God of ‘Abd al-Mu’talib,’ I replied, ‘and he has never lied or cheated. Among Quraysh he is known as “the Trustworthy”’.

‘Does he write by his own hand?’ he asked.”

Al-‘Abbās thought it would be better for him if he did write by his own hand, and he wanted to say he did. But then he remembered Abū Sufyān’s being there and how he would call him a liar and refute him. So al-‘Abbās replied, “No, he doesn’t write.”

He continued, “The rabbi jumped up, and his loose robe fell down as he exclaimed, ‘Jews will be slaughtered, Jews killed!’”

Al-‘Abbās went on, “And when we returned home, Abū Sufyān said, ‘O Abū al-Faḍl, the Jews are terrified of your nephew.’ I asked him, ‘Well, having seen what you have, do you believe in him? If it’s true, you could be there early; but if it’s not, you’d only be among others like you.’

‘He replied: ‘I’ll not believe in him till I see horses high up on Mt. Kada’.”

‘What do you mean?’ I asked. ‘Just a phrase that came to mind,’ he replied. ‘Except that I know that God won’t allow horsemen to climb up on Kada’.”

Al-‘Abbās said, “But when the Messenger of God (SAAS) conquered Mecca and we looked up at the horsemen high on Kada’, I said, ‘Well Abū Sufyān, remember what you said?’

‘Yes,’ he replied, ‘I certainly do. And thanks be to God for guiding me to Islam.’”
This account is excellent, fully illuminated by the light of truth, even though some people cast doubts on some who reported it. But God knows best.

We have previously given the story of Abū Sufyān’s contact with Umayya b. Abū al-Ŝalt and it is similar to that given here. It is one of the strangest and best authenticated of stories, and one that is clear.

Also there will come the story of Abī Sufyān with Heraclius, the King of Byzantium, when the former was asked to describe the Messenger of God (SAAS) and how he then thus gave proof of his truthfulness, prophethood, and mission. The King replied, “I knew he was coming, but did not realize he was one of you. If I had known I would survive to his time, I would have striven to meet him. If I had been with him, I would have washed his feet. And if what you say is true, he will govern wherever these two feet of mine are placed.” So did it happen, all power and praise be to God.

The ḥāfiṣ Abn Nuʿaym gave more instances with lengthy and better reports relating to monks, rabbis, and Arabs; may God have mercy on him and bless him.

Al-Ṭabarānī stated that ʿAlī b. Ibrāhim al-Khuzaʿī al-Ahwazī related to him, quoting ʿAbd Allah b. Dawūd b. Dalhāth b. Ismāʿīl b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿArif b. Yāsir b. Suwayd, the Companion of the Messenger of God (SAAS), quoting his father, from his father Dalhāth, from his father Ismāʿīl, that his father ʿAbd Allāh related to him from his father, that his father Yāsir b. Suwayd related to him from ʿAmr b. Murra al-Juhani, who said, “I went on a pilgrimage before the coming of Islam. In my dream, when I was in Mecca, I saw a shining light emerging from the kaʿba, and going as far as the mountains of Yathrib and the fertile slopes of Yanbu‘. I heard a voice coming from amidst the light saying, ‘The shadows are dispersed, the light shines bright, and the Seal of the Prophets has been sent.’

“Then another light shone, so that I could see to the castles of al-Ḥira and to Abyad al-Madā’in, Chosroe’s palace. I heard a voice from that light calling, ‘Islam has appeared! The idols are destroyed! And all is made whole!’

“I awoke with a start and called out to my people, ‘By God, something is certainly going to happen in this tribe of Quraysh!’ And I told them what I had seen.

“When we reached home, the news came that a man called Ahmad had received a mission. So I went to him and told him what I had seen. He then said to me, ‘O ʿAmr b. Murra, I am the Prophet sent to all mankind; I summon them to Islam, order them to shed blood and to bring reconciliation, to pray to God and reject idols, to make the pilgrimage to the ka'ba, to fast the month of Ramadān, one month out of twelve. For those who respond, there is paradise; for those who rebel, the fire. So have faith, O 'Amr, and God will protect you from the terror of hell!'

"I said, 'I give testimony that there is no God but God, and that you are the Messenger of God. I have faith in your message as to what is permitted and prohibited, even though that offends many peoples.' I then recited to him verses that I had spoken when I heard of him. We had an idol whom my father worshipped, and I went and destroyed it. Then I joined the Prophet (SAAS), speaking the verses,

'I gave witness that God is truth, and that I am the first to abandon stone worship. I busied myself taking flight to you, crossing wild deserts and sand wastes To accompany the best of men in spirit and line, the messenger of mankind's Lord above the stars.'

"The Prophet (SAAS) said, 'Welcome to you indeed, O 'Amr b. Murra.' And I replied, 'O Messenger of God, send me to my people so that God may favour them through me as He did me through you.'

"So he sent me to them, saying, 'Behave with kindness and speak the truth. Be you not churlish, nor arrogant, nor envious.'"

He told how he came to his people, and summoned them to the teachings of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and they all accepted Islam, except for one of their men. 'Amr then went with them to the Messenger of God (SAAS) who greeted and welcomed them. He wrote for them a document as follows:

"In the name of God the Most Merciful and Beneficent. This document is a safe-passage from God through the words of the Messenger of God (SAAS) through a truth-telling document and a veracious spokesman, sent with 'Amr b. Murra al-Juhani to Juhayna b. Zayd. For you there shall be the lowlands and the slopes, the depths and the sides of the valleys. You shall cultivate their produce and drink their pure water, provided that you affirm that you shall forsake one-fifth (of the harvest) and keep praying the five prayers. (Your rich shall pay the alms to the poor): one ewe for each forty sheep and one ewe for each five camels, or two ewes for any combination thereof. The rich shall not be eligible to receive charity. And God will bear witness that we so agreed, and the Muslims attending will bear witness. (This document is) handwritten by Qays b. Shammās.'

He then gave some verses spoken by 'Amr b. Murra on that subject, as is depicted in the great musnad hadith collection. In God we trust, and upon Him we rely.

And God Almighty said, "And when we made a covenant with the prophets and with you and with Noah and Abraham and Moses and Jesus son of Mary, and we made a firm covenant with them" (sūrat al-Ahzāb, XXXIII, v.7).
Many of our early ancestors said, “When God made his covenant with mankind the day he said, ‘Am I not your Lord?’ he made a special agreement with the prophets. And He affirmed that that group (consisted) of five great law-giving prophets, the first of whom was Noah and the last Muhammad (SAAS).”

The ḥāfīz Abū Nu‘aym informed us in his book the Dalī'il al-Nubuwwa (Signs of the Prophethood) through various routes from al-Walīd b. Muslim, that al-Awzā'ī related to him, as did Yahyā b. Abū Kāthīr, from Abū Salāma, from Abū Hurayra, who said that the Prophet (SAAS) was asked, “When was the prophethood required of you?” He replied, “Between the creation of Adam and the blowing of the spirit into him.”

Aḥmad related it similarly through al-Walīd b. Muslim. He defined it as “good, but unique as a hadīth from Abū Hurayra; we know of it only from that line”.

Abū Nu‘aym stated that Sūraym b. Aḥmad related to him, quoting Ya‘qūb b. Ishaq b. al-Zubayr al-Ḥalabi, quoting Abū Ja‘far al-Nufaylī, quoting ʿAmr b. Wāqīrelude, from Urwa b. Rūwaym, from al-Ṣānābi, saying that ʿUmar said, “O Messenger of God, when were you made a prophet?” He replied, “While Adam was being formed in the clay.”

He then related it from a hadīth of Nasr b. Muzāḥim from Qays b. Rabī‘, from Jābir b. Ju‘fī, from al-Shaʿbī, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said that someone asked, “O Messenger of God, when were you (made) a prophet?” He replied, “While Adam was between soul and body.”

In the tradition we gave in the story of Adam when God extracted from his loins his progeny, He singled out the prophets by a light between their eyes. It is apparent – but God knows best – that it (i.e. the light) was commensurate with their levels and ranks in God’s view. If that be the case, then the light of Muḥammad (SAAS) was greater, stronger, and more evident than that of all the rest.

And this is a great and obvious distinction and indication of his nobility and high worth.

And to that effect there is the hadīth spoken by Imam Aḥmad who said that ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Mahdī related to him, as did Mu‘āwiya b. Ṣāliḥ from Sa‘īd b. Suwayd al-Kalbī, from ‘Abd al-A‘lā b. Hūlāl al-Salāmī from al-Ṭibā‘ī b. Sāriyya, who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, “In God’s view I was the Seal of the Prophets while Adam was still within his clay. And I shall tell you of the first of it – the prayer of my father Abraham, the glad tidings of Jesus regarding me, the visions my mother saw, and similarly those that the mothers of the believers see.”

Al-Layth and Ibn Wahb related this from ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Mahdī, and ‘Abd Allāh b. Ṣāliḥ from Mu‘āwiya b. Ṣāliḥ, who added, “his mother saw, when she delivered him, a light from him that illuminated the castles of Syria.”
Imám Aḥmad stated that 'Abd al-Rahmān related to him, as did Mašṭūr b. Saʿīd, from Badīl, from 'Abd Allāh b. Shaqīq, from Maysara al-Fājr, who stated that he said, "O Messenger of God, when were you a prophet?" And he replied, "While Adam was between spirit and body."

The line of transmission of this tradition is also excellent.

Abū Nuʿaym related it from Muḥammad b. 'Umar b. Aslam, from Muhammad b. Bakr b. Amr al-Bāhili, from Shaybān, from al-Ḥasan b. Dīnār, from 'Abd Allāh b. Su[fyan, from Maysara al-Fājr, who said that he asked, "O Messenger of God, when were you a prophet?" He replied, "While Adam was between spirit and body."

The ḥāfīz Abū Nuʿaym stated in his book Dalāʾīl al-Nubuwwa (Signs of the Prophethood) that Abū 'Amr b. Ḥamdān related to him, quoting al-Ḥasan b. Su[fyan, quoting Hishām b. Ammār, quoting al-Walīd b. Muslim, from Khulayy b. Da[laj, and Saʿīd, from Qatāda, from al-Ḥasan, from Abū Hurayra, from the Prophet (ṢAAS), about Almighty God's words, "And when we made a covenant with the Prophets." He said, "I was the first of the Prophets in creation, and the last of them to be sent."

He then related it from Hishām b. Ammār from Baqīyya, from Saʿīd b. Nusayr, from Qatāda, from al-Ḥasan, from Abū Hurayra, traced back similarly.

He also related it through Saʿīd b. Abū Arūba and Shaybān, from Qatāda who said, "It was related to us that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said the like." And this account is very firm and reliable. But God knows best.

This acknowledges the extremely high regard in which he is held among the heavenly host of angels, that he is recognized among them for having been the Seal of the Prophets even before the soul was blown into Adam. This is because God's knowledge of that was prior, most assuredly before the creation of the earth and heaven. And so all that remained necessary was to make reference to the recognition there was among the heavenly hosts. But God knows best.

Abū Nuʿaym reported from a hadīth of 'Abd al-Rāziq from Maʿmar, from Ḥammām, from Abū Hurayra, the hadīth being agreed upon as stating, "We are those who will have precedence at Judgement Day and who will be judged before the other creatures, even though they were brought the Scriptures before we were, we receiving them after them."

Abū Nuʿaym added at the end, "And he (ṢAAS) was the last of them to receive a mission, and through him the prophethood ended. He will take precedence on Judgement Day, because he was the first covenanted for prophethood."

He then said, "That hadīth depicts the high honour of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) regarding God's appointing him to the prophethood before the completion of the creation of Adam. It is likely that it is this affirmation that God conveyed to His angels, of what there was previously in His knowledge, and His judgement of sending a mission to him till the end of time.”

This comment is in agreement with what we previously stated. And so all praise be to God.

In his interpretation of the hadith of ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Zayd b. Aslam — about which there is some controversy — al-Hākim related from his father, from his grandfather, from ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, God be pleased with him, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “When Adam committed sin, he said, ‘O God, I ask you for Muḥammad’s sake, won’t you forgive me?’ God replied, ‘O Adam, how did you know Muḥammad when I haven’t created him yet?’ Adam replied, ‘O Lord, because when you created me with your own hand and blew life into me from your spirit, I raised my head and saw on the foundations beneath the throne the writing, ‘There is no God but God. Muḥammad is the Messenger of God.’ I knew that you would never have added to your own name anyone but the most precious to you of your creation.’ God replied, ‘You have spoken the truth, 0 Adam; he is to me the most precious of my creation. And since you asked in his name, you have my forgiveness. Were it not for Muḥammad, I would not have created you.’”

God Almighty said, “And when God made a covenant with the prophets, saying, ‘I brought you the Scripture and wisdom, then a Messenger will come unto you verifying what you have. Let you believe in him well, and aid him!’ He said, ‘Have you agreed, and accepted my covenant in that?’ They replied, ‘We have agreed.’ He said, ‘Then bear witness and I too along with you will bear witness. Whoever revokes this hereafter, those are sinners!’” (ṣūrat Al-‘Imrān, III, v.81-2).

‘Ali b. Abū Ṭalib and ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbbās, God bless them, said, “God never sent any prophet without first making a covenant with him (to the effect that) if Muḥammad (SAAS) was sent when that prophet was alive, then he would believe in him and aid him. And He ordered him to convey the covenant to his people, that if Muḥammad was sent while they were living, they really would believe in him and aid him to make him victorious.”

This is a recognition and an affirmation of his honour and high stature among all the religions and upon the tongues of all the prophets. It is an announcement to them and from them of his being a Messenger to the end of time and of his being the most noble of the messengers and the Seal of the Prophets.

And God has made plain all the facts about him, all information, all secrets pertaining to him. He made his splendour very clear, as well as facts of his birth and homeland through the words of Abraham the “true friend”, peace be upon him, when he finished building the ka'ba: "O our Lord, send among them a Messenger from among themselves who will recite to them your signs and teach them the Scripture and wisdom, and purify them. You are the Mighty and the Wise" (ṣūrat al-Baqara, II, v.129).

The first clear and evident sign of his status among the people of the earth came, then, on the tongue of Abraham, the “true friend”, the prophet, the next most honoured by God after Muhammad (SAAS).

This is why Imam Ahmad said that Abu al-Nadr related to him, quoting al-Faraj, meaning Ibn Faḍāla, as did Luqmān b. ʿĀmir, who said that he heard Abū Amāna say that he once asked, “O Messenger of God, what was the beginning of your mission?” He replied, “It was the prayer of my father Abraham, the glad tidings of Jesus, and my mother’s seeing a light emitting from her that illuminated the castles of Syria.”

Imām Ahmad alone gave this tradition, and none of the authors of the six (canonical) books (of traditions) included it.

The ḥafiz Abu Bakr b. Abū ʿAṣim related in his book al-Mawlid (The Birth) through Baqīyya, from Saifwān b. ʿAmr, from Hajar b. Hajar, from Abī Mariq, that a bedouin asked, “O Messenger of God, what event was it that began your prophethood?” He replied, “God took from me the covenant, as he took covenants from the other prophets.” And the mother of the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw in her sleep that a light was emitting from between her feet that lit up the castles of Syria.

Imām Muḥammad b. Ishāq b. Yasār stated that Thawr b. Yazīd related to him from Khalīd b. Maḍān, from the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) that they, the Companions, asked, “O Messenger of God, tell us about yourself.” He replied, “The prayer of my father Abraham, the glad tidings of Jesus, and (the fact that) my mother saw, when she was pregnant, that a light came from inside her that illuminated Buṣrā in Syria.”

The chain of authorities of this tradition is also excellent.

It contains good news for the people of our community in the lands of Buṣrā. It is the first place in Syria to receive the light of the prophethood; and to God all praise and favour are due. That is why it was the first city of Syria to be conquered. It was taken peacefully during the caliphate of Abu Bakr, God be pleased with him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) travelled there twice in the company of his uncle Abu Ṭālīb when he was a boy of 12. It was there the story of Bahira the monk was set, as we have related above. The second time he was with Maysara, the freed man of Khadija, while on a trading expedition on her behalf. Also, it has the spot where the camel known as the camel of the Messenger of God (SAAS) had knelt. Its remains are still there, so they say. Eventually its remains were gathered, and a mosque, famous to this day, was built over it. That is the town where the necks of the camels lit up from the light of the fire that came from Hijáz in the year 654, according to the statement made by the Messenger of God (SAAS), who said, “A fire leaves Hijáz that illuminates the necks of the camels at Busrâ.”

And God Almighty stated, “Those who follow the Prophet, the ummi (unlettered), whom they find written down with them in the Torah and the Gospel, who orders people to be good and forbids them evil, and who makes lawful for them good things and makes unlawful foul things, who removes from them their burden and the chains that were upon them. And so those who believe in him and honour him and help him and who follow the light that came down with him, those shall be successful” (ṣūrat al-ʿArāf, VII, v.157).

Imám Ahmad stated that Ismā'īl related to him, from al-Jurayrí, from Abū Ṣakhr al-ʿUqaylí, who said that a beduîn told him that he had brought in some merchandise to Medina while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was still alive. And when he had finished selling it, he told himself that he should meet that man and listen to him.

The beduîn said, “He met me when he was walking between Abû Bakr and ʿUmar. I followed them until they came to a Jew holding and reading the Torah, and consoling himself with it at the death of a son of his, the best and most handsome of boys. The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him, ‘I beg of you, by Him who sent down the Torah, do you see in your Scripture any description of me and my place of origin?’ The man made a gesture with his head, meaning, ‘no’. But his (dead) son spoke, saying, ‘But yes, by Him who sent down the Torah, we do find in our Scriptures a description of you and of your place of origin! I bear witness that there is no God but God, and that you are the Messenger of God.’ And so he said, ‘Keep away the Jew from your brother.’ Then he (the Prophet) took care of winding the dead boy in his shroud and performed the prayers for the dead over him.”

This chain of authorities is excellent, and there are testimonies to its veracity in the sahih from Anas b. Mâlik.

Abû al-Qâsim al-Baghawî stated that ʿAbd al-ʿWâhid b. Ghiyâth, Abû Bahr that is, related to him, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿAzîz b. Muslim, quoting ʿĀsim b. Kulayb, from his father, from al-Ṣallâtân b. ʿĀsim, who related that his uncle said that he was seated with the Prophet (SAAS) when he gazed over at a certain man, a Jew wearing a shirt, trousers, and sandals. The Prophet (SAAS) began talking to him. The man asked, “O Messenger of God . . .” The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, “Are you witnessing that I am the Messenger of God?” “No,” the man said. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked him, “Do you read the Torah?” “Yes,” the man replied. He asked, “Do you read the Gospel?” “Yes, the man replied. “And the Qur’ân?” “No,” the Jew replied. “But if you want, I will.” The Prophet (SAAS) then asked, “In what you read of the Torah and the Gospel, do you find me to be a prophet?” The man answered, “We do find a description of you and of your place of origin. When you came, we hoped you would be one of us. But when we saw you we knew that you were not he.”

The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, “Why is that, O Jew?” He replied, “We find it to be written down that, ‘There will enter paradise from his nation 70,000’. But with you we see only a few men.”

The Messenger of God (SAAS) then responded, “My nation is far greater in number than 70,000, and 70,000 more again.”

This is a unique hadith from such a source, and they (the scholars) have not promulgated it.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated, from Salīm, the freed-man of ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥṭ, from Abū Hurayra who said that some Jews came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) who said, “Bring out your most knowledgeable man.” They replied, “He is ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṣūrīyā.” The Messenger of God (SAAS) sat with him alone and adjured him by his religion and by God’s blessings to them, by God who had fed them with manna and quails and shaded them with clouds.

“Do you know me as the Messenger of God?” the Prophet (SAAS) asked. “Yes indeed, by God,” the Jew responded. “And my people know what I know. You are fully apparent in the Torah. But they are envious.”

“So what prevents you (from believing)?” he asked.

“I just hate to disagree with my people,” the Jew replied. “Maybe they will follow you and accept Islam, then I will.”

Salāma b. al-Fadl stated, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq, from Muḥammad b. Abū Muḥammad, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, to the effect that he used to say that the Messenger of God (SAAS) wrote to the Jews of Khaybar as follows, “In the name of God the most merciful and beneficent, from Muḥammad, the Messenger of God, the companion and brother of Moses and the corroborator of the message Moses brought. God stated to you, ‘O Jews, people of the Torah, you will find in your book the fact that Muḥammad is the Messenger of God; and those who are with him are violent against unbelievers, compassionate among themselves. You see them bowing down and prostrating themselves, desiring grace and approval from God. They have marks on their faces from the effects of prostration. That is how they are compared in the Torah and in the Gospel. (They are) like a plant that emits its shoot, then strengthens it so that it thickens and stands straight on its stem. He (God) gives the sowers delight so that He may enrage through them the unbelievers. God has promised forgiveness and great reward to those of them who believe and do good’ (ṣūrat al-Fāṭih, XLVII, v.29). I adjure you by God by that which has come down to you, and by Him who fed manna and quails to your forebears and tribes, who dried up the sea for your forefathers to save you from Pharaoh and his deeds, can you not tell us whether you find in God’s revelations to you (the fact) that you should believe in Muhammad? And if you do not discover that in your Scriptures, then there is no hatred for you. (But now) what is right has become clear from what is error. And I call you to God and to his Prophet (SAAS).”

Muhammad b. Ishāq b. Yasar related in his book al-Mubtada’ (The Beginning) from Sa’d b. Bashir, from Qatāda, from Ka‘b al-Ahbar, and others related from Wahb b. Munabbih, that Bukhtunāṣṣar (Nebuchadnezzar), after he had destroyed Jerusalem and kept the Jews in subjugation for seven years, saw strange visions in a dream that terrified him. And so he assembled his soothsayers and wise men and questioned them about those visions of his. They suggested, “If the King first tells us of them, then we can interpret them.” But he replied, “I’ve forgotten them. And if you don’t tell me in three days about them, I’ll kill the lot of you!”

Off they went very fearful of his threat. Daniel, in gaol at the time, heard of this and told the gaoler, “Go and tell the King, ‘We have a man who has knowledge of your visions and can interpret them.’”

So he went to tell the King who summoned Daniel. When he entered, Daniel did not bow down to him, so the King demanded, “What prevents you from prostrating before me?” Daniel replied, “God brought me knowledge, and ordered me not to bow to anyone but Him.” Bukhtunāṣṣar then said, “I like those who fulfil their duty to their masters. Tell me about my vision.”

Daniel said to him, “You saw a huge idol, its feet on the ground and its head in the sky. Its upper part was of gold, its middle of silver, its lower part of brass, its legs of iron and its feet of clay. While you were looking at it, delighted by its beauty and the intricacy of its workmanship, God cast down a stone from heaven which hit the top of its head and crushed it completely. Its gold, silver, brass, iron, and clay became mixed together so that it seemed to you that even if all men and all the spirits were to try to differentiate its components they would fail. When you looked at the stone that had been thrown, you saw it get bigger and bigger until it filled all the earth so that all you could see was it and the sky.”

Bukhtunāṣṣar said, “You are right. That is the vision I saw. What does it mean?”

“Well”, replied Daniel, “the idol represents various nations, early, intermediate, and late in time. The stone by which the idol was struck is a religion God will send and reveal to these nations at time’s end. And God will send a prophet, an ummi, from the Arabs who will conquer with it all the nations and all the religions, as you saw the stone destroy the various components of the idol. It will overcome all the nations and religions, just as you saw the stone overwhelm the entire earth. God will purify the truth and annihilate falsehood through it. Through it He will guide those in error. He will teach the illiterate, strengthen the weak, uplift the humble, and give victory to the disadvantaged.”
The account ends the story by Bukhtunaṣṣar releasing the Israelites through Daniel, peace be upon him.

Al-Waqidi related, with a chain of authorities from al-Mughira b. Shu'ba, the story of the latter's going to al-Muqawkis, King of Alexandria, and of being questioned by him about the qualities of the Messenger of God (SAAS) similarly to how Heraclius asked Abū Sufyān Ṣakhir b. Ḥarb. He related how he questioned the Christian bishops in the churches for a description of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and how they did so. It is a long story that is related by the ḥāfīz Abū Nu'aym in Dalā'il al-Nubuwwa (Signs of the Prophethood).

It is established in the sahih that the Messenger of God (SAAS) went past some Jewish schools and asked them, “O Jews, accept Islam. For, by Him in whose hand is my soul, you will certainly find description of me in your scriptures.”

Imām Aḥmad stated that Mūsā b. Dāwūd related to him, quoting Fulayḥ b. Sulaymān, from Hilāl b. ʿAlī, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṣaʿd b. Abn Yasar who said that he met ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṣaʿd b. Abn Yasar and asked him, “Describe to me the qualities of the Messenger of God (SAAS) that are in the Torah.” He replied, “Certainly. He is, by God, referred to in the Torah as he is in the Qurān. ‘O Prophet, we have sent you to give witness, to bring good tidings, and to warn, and to protect the illiterate. You are my slave and my messenger. I have named you al-Mutawakkil, the manager”, a man not rough or uncouth nor one who shouts loudly in the markets. A man who does not pay back evil with evil, but one who forgives and pardons. God will not take him until they set the deviant community aright by them saying, “There is no God but God.” By him He will open blind eyes, deaf ears, and closed hearts.”

Al-Bukhārī related this from Muḥammad b. Sinān from Fulayḥ. He also related it from ʿAbd Allāh (who was the son of Rajaʿ, or as others say the son of Ṣaʿd) from Abn al-Azīz b. Abn Salama, from Hilāl b. ʿAllūya, and his text is similar to this, with additions.

Ibn Jarīr related it from a hadīth of Fulayḥ, from Hilāl, from ʿAṭāʾ. His account adds the words, “And ʿAṭāʾ said, ‘I met Kaʿbah and asked him about that, and he did not disagree by so much as a letter; though he said, among the merchants’. And he gave the line of authorities as Saʿīd, from Hilāl, from ʿAṭāʾ from ʿAbd Allāh b. Saʿīd.”

and to protect the illiterate. You are My slave and My messenger. I have named him al-Mutawwakil, "the manager"; he will be neither rough nor uncouth nor one who shouts loudly in the markets. He will not requite evil with the same but will pardon and make allowance. And He will not take him until he sets the deviant community aright by having them bear witness that there is no God but God. By him He will open blind eyes, deaf ears, and closed hearts."

‘Atā’ b. Yāsār stated, "Al-Laythi informed me that he heard Ka'b al-Aḥbār say the same as Ibn Sallām."

My comment is, that this tradition from ‘Abd Allāh b. Sallām is similar, though the account from ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Amr is lengthier. However, he found at the battle of Yarmuk two bags full of the books of the people of the Scriptures, and he used to talk about them a great deal.

And it should be recognized that many of our forebears used to apply the word "Torah" to the books of the peoples of the scriptures. These are in their view more comprehensive than those God revealed to Moses. This fact is attested from the hadith.

Yānus stated from Muḥammad b. Ishāq that Muḥammad b. Thābit b. Shurahbil related to him, from Ibn Abū Awdā, from Umm al-Dardā‘ who said that she asked Ka'b al-Aḥbar: "How do you find the description of the Messenger of God (ṣa‘ād) in the Torah?"

"We find him as Muḥammad the Messenger of God; his name is al-Mutawwakil. He is not rough nor uncouth nor one who shouts loudly in the markets. He has been given the keys. Through him, God will give sight to eyes that are damaged, and hearing to ears that are dulled. He will set right twisted tongues, through him, until they give witness that there is no God but God, one and without partner. And through him He will aid and protect the ill-treated."

And this is also related from Ka'b from a different chain of authorities.

Al-Bayhaqī related, from al-Ḥākim, from Abū al-Walīd al-Faqīh, from al-Ḥasan b. Sufyān who indicated that Uthā b. Mukrim related to him, quoting Abū Qaṭān ‘Amr b. al-Haytham, quoting Ḥamza b. al-Zayyāt, from Sulaymān al-‘A‘mash, from ‘Alī b. Mudrik from Abū Zur‘a, from Abū Hurayra, that regarding the wording, "And you were not besides Mt. Tūr when we called" the tradition gives, "it was called out to them, 'O nation of Muḥammad, I have responded to you before you called to me, and have given to you before you asked me.'"

Wahb b. Munabbih mentioned that God revealed to Dāwūd (David) in the Book of Psalms, "O Dāwūd, there will come after you a prophet named Ḥāmid and Muḥammad, a truthful man, a lord; I will never be angry with him, and he will never make me angry with him. I have forgiven him before he disobeyed me, both his previous and his later sins. His nation is forgiven. I have made gifts to them similar to those I gave to the prophets, and imposed duties upon them that I imposed upon the prophets and the messengers, so that they will come to me on Judgement Day with their light like that of the prophets.”

The text continues until the words, “O Dawūd, I have given preference to Muḥammad and to his nation above all the nations.”

Knowledge of the existence of reference to him in the books of the peoples of the Scriptures, a fact known to the religion, is essential. And many verses of the holy Qurʾān give proof of that and we have, praise be to God, made reference to those in the proper places.

One such verse is, “(As for) those to whom we gave the Scripture before it, they believe in it. And when it is recited to them, they say, ‘We believe in it. It is the truth from our Lord. We were already submitting Muslims before it’” (ṣūrat al-Qāṣaṣ, XXVII, v.52–3).

And Almighty God said, “Those to whom we have brought the book know him as they know their sons. (Yet) a group of them certainly conceal the truth, though they know it” (ṣūrat al-Baqara, II, v.146).

Almighty God also said, “Those who were given the knowledge of it prostrate themselves on their faces when it is recited to them and they say, ‘Glory be to our Lord; the promise of our Lord is fulfilled’” (ṣūrat al-Isrāʾ, XVII, v.107–8). This means that if it were the promise of our Lord that Muhammad (ṢAAS) exists and be sent, then that is an indisputable fact. And all praise to Him capable of whatever he wishes; there is nothing he is incapable of doing.

And the Almighty said, making reference to the priests and monks, “And when they hear what was revealed to the Messenger, you see their eyes overflow with tears for the truth they recognize. They say, ‘O God, we believe, so write us down among those bearing witness’ (ṣūrat al-Māʾida, V, v.83).

In the story of the Negus, Salman, ‘Abd Allah b. Salām and others, as will come hereafter, there are many testimonials to this effect. And all praise and power are to God.

In the explanatory notes relating to the lives of the prophets (in the text al-Bidāyā wa al-Nihāyā: The Beginning and the End) we referred to their descriptions of the mission of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), of his towns of birth and of refuge, and of his nation. These occur in the accounts of Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, and others.

Almighty God has related of the last of the prophets of the Israelites, Jesus, son of Mary, that he stood up among his people and addressed them as follows, “I am the Messenger of God to you, verifying what is in the Torah that came before me and announcing the coming of a messenger who will come to you after me and whose name is Aḥmad” (ṣūrat al-Ṣaff, LXI, v.6).
And in the Gospel there are the tidings of al-Fārqalī, "the Paraclete",\(^{69}\) by whom Mūhammad (ṢAAS) is meant.

Al-Bayhaqi related from al-Ḥākim, from al-Ḥāṣim, from Ahmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbar, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Yūnus b. ʿAmr, from al-ʿIzar b. Ḥarb, from ʿĀʾish, God be pleased with her, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, "It is written in the Gospel (that he will be) not rough, nor uncouth, not one who shouts loudly in the markets, and does not repay evil with the like, but rather who pardons and forgives."

Yaʿqūb b. Sufyān stated that Fayūd al-Bajalī related to him, quoting Salām b. Miskin, from Muqṭil b. Hayyān who said that the Almighty and Glorious God revealed to Jesus, son of Mary, as follows: "Serve me well and listen and obey, O Son of the pure, chaste, virgin. We have created you without a physical father and have made you a sign for the worlds, so worship me. And explain to the people of Surān, in Syriac, and tell those around you that I am the existent truth that will not pass away. Believe in the Arab ummi (unlettered) Prophet; he who has the camel, and wears a midraʿa (outer garment), and a turban that is his crown, and sandals, and has a cane that is his staff. His hair is curly, his brow is broad, his eyebrows are joined, his eyes are large, his lashes are fine, his eyes are black, his nose is curved, his cheeks are distinct, and his beard is full. The sweat of his face is like pearls; from him the scent of musk emanates. His neck is like a silver vessel, and along his collarbone gold seems to flow. He has hairs that grow long and soft from his throat down to his navel, his stomach bearing no other hair. He is broad of fingers and toes. He overshadows all when he is with others. When he walks he seems to emerge from the rock and flow from a stream. He has few progeny, as if he wanted males as his offspring."

This is also how al-Bayhaqi related this account, through Yaʿqūb b. Sufyān.

Al-Bayhaqi related that Uthmān b. al-Ḥakam b. Rāfīʿ b. Sinān said, "Some of my older male relatives told me that they had in their possession a document they had inherited before Islam and still had when God brought Islam. When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came to Medina they told him of it and brought it to him. In it was written, 'In the name of God, His words are truth, while those of evil-doers shall perish. This statement is for a nation that will come at the end of time who will wash their extremities and wear a loincloth around their waists. They will plunge into the seas after their enemies. They will perform prayers that would have saved Noah's people from the flood if spoken then, and ʿĀd's people would not have been destroyed by the wind, and Thamūd's would not have been destroyed by the shouting. In the name of God, His words are truth,\ while those of evil-doers shall perish.' The document then recounted another story. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was astonished at what was read to him from it.

We recounted, regarding the verse in surat al-'Araf, "whom they find written down along with them in the Torah and the Gospel" (VII, v.157) the story of Hishām b. al-Āṣ al-Umawi when (Abū Bakr) al-Ṣiddiq sent him with a group of men to Heraclius, calling upon him to worship God, Almighty and Glorious is He. He related how Heraclius brought out for them pictures of the prophets in a piece of cloth, from Adam to Muḥammad (SAAS). It showed how they had all looked. Then he related how, when he brought out the picture of Muḥammad (SAAS) Heraclius stood up to show his respect for him. He then sat down again and gazed at it, contemplating it closely. The group then asked him where he had obtained the picture and he responded, "Adam asked his Lord to show him all the prophets he had produced. And God did reveal their pictures to him. They were kept in the treasury of Adam, peace be upon him, where the sun sets. And Dhū al-Qarnayn (Alexander) took them out and gave them to Daniel."

The account continues, "Heraclius then stated, 'O how I wish I could leave my kingdom and were a slave to the worst of your kings till I die.' He then dismissed us, giving us generous gifts, and we left."

When the group returned to Abū Bakr and related to him what they had seen, how he had rewarded them, and what he had said, he wept and said, "Poor man! If God had wished good for him, He would have done so." Then he said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) related to us that they and the Jews would find among them the description of Muḥammad (SAAS)."

Al-Ḥakīm related this tradition in full. It is written down here from the exegesis. Al-Bayhaqī related it in Dalā'il al-Nubuwwa (Signs of the Prophethood).

Al-Umawi stated that ʿAbd Allāh b. Ziyād related to him from Ibn Iṣḥāq who said that Yaʿqūb b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfar b. ʿAmr b. Umayya related to him, from his father, from his grandfather ʿAmr b. Umayya, who said, "I brought in some slaves from the Negus who had given them to me. They said, 'O ʿAmr, if we saw the Messenger of God, we would recognize him without you telling us.' Abū Bakr passed by, so I asked them, 'Is that he?' 'No,' they replied. ʿUmar went by and I asked, 'Is that he?' 'No,' they responded.

"We went inside the house and the Messenger of God (SAAS) went by and then they called out to me, 'O ʿAmr that is the Messenger of God (SAAS).’ When I looked I saw it was he, yet no one had told them so. They recognized him from the writings they had."

We previously recounted the warning made by Sābāʾ to his people, and how he had announced to them the coming of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in poetry we gave earlier in his biography. So there is no need to repeat it. Also we earlier recounted the words of the two rabbis to Tubba, the Yemeni, when he besieged the people of Medina, telling him that it was to be the place of refuge for a prophet at the end of time. And so he retired from the city and composed verses that include his salutations to the Prophet (SAAS).

The Story of Sayf b. Dhū Yazan the Ḥimyarite and his foretelling the coming of the ummi Prophet.

The ḥāfiz Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar b. Sahl al-Kharbīṭi stated in his book Hawāṭif al-Jann (Calls of the jinn) that ʿAlī b. Ḥarb related to him, quoting ʿAḥmad b. ʿUthmān b. Ḥakīm, quoting ʿAmr b. Bakr—who was the son of Bakkār al-Qaʿnabī—from ʿAḥmad b. al-Qāsim, from Muḥammad b. al-Ṣāib al-Kalbī, from ʿAbū Śāliḥ, from ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbbās—who said that when when Sayf b. Dhū Yazan came to power over Abyssinia (Ibn al-Mundhir said that his name was al-Nuʿmān b. Qays), that being two years after the birth of the Messenger of God (SAAS), a delegation of Arabs, including poets, went to congratulate and praise him and to recognize his achievements.

Among those who went to him was one delegation from Quraysh that included ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib b. Ḥāshim, Umayya b. ʿAbd Shams, ʿAbd Allāh b. Judān, and Khuwaylid b. Asad, along with other Quraysh leaders. They went to ʿAṣā to see him, but he was in Raʾs Ghūmdān to which Umayya b. Abū al-Ṣalt made reference in the line of poetry:

“Drink up, may you enjoy it, with your crown raised upon your head at Raʾs Ghūmdān, a home for you to stay in.”

The chamberlain went in to him and told the King where they were and he gave them permission to attend him. When ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib arrived he asked to speak with the King, who replied, “If you are a man who speaks before kings, then I give you permission to do so now.” ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib responded, “God has placed you, O King, in a high, impregnable, lofty, and splendid position, having given you growth in a spot where your roots have developed strong and well, firmly established, and eminently branched, in the most noble of lands, the best of origins. You are, may you be immune to curses, the King of the Arabs, their springtime that their land brings to growth, the head of the Arabs to which you give leadership, their pier upon which they depend, their refuge to which people have recourse. Your forebears were the best ever, and from them you came to us as the best successor. None with such forebears could fail, none perish with you as their successor. O King, we are the people of God's sanctuary, the custodians of His house. He who delighted you by removing the cares that oppressed us has brought us up to you, and so we are a delegation of congratulation, not of complaint.”

The King asked, “And who are you who speak?”
He replied, “I am ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib b. Ḥashim.” “Our sister’s son?” “Yes.” “Approach then.” When he had done so the King addressed him and the delegation, saying, “Welcome indeed to you; may you enjoy your stay and find us generous hosts. The King has heard your speeches and of your kinship and accepted your petition. You are welcome at all times. You will be honoured as long as you stay, and awarded gifts when you leave.”

The Arab delegation then went off to the guest quarters where they stayed a month having no access to the King but not being given permission to leave. He then again turned his attention fully to them and sent for ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib with whom he sat alone, close by himself. He then said, “O ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, I am going to reveal to you a secret I know that I would not reveal to anyone else. But I believe you worthy of it and will tell you of it. Let you keep it to yourself until God makes His purpose known. For God will achieve His goal.

“I have found in the hidden book and the treasured knowledge we preserve and protect for ourselves alone certain information of vital and critical importance that affects the honour and virtue of mankind in general, your community in particular, and you in person.”

ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib asked, “O King, the like of you brings joy and good! What is it, O he for whom company after company of bedouins would sacrifice themselves?”

He replied, “When a youth is born in Tihāma who has a sign upon him, a birthmark between his shoulders, he shall have leadership and through him you shall have primacy till Judgement Day.”

ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib exclaimed, “May you be immune to curses, I have been better rewarded than any visitor before! And were it not for the great dignity, honour and glory of the King, I would ask his whom coming it is he is announcing such as to bring such joy to me.”

Ibn Dhū Yazan responded, “This is the time for his birth, or he may have already been born. His name is to be Muḥammad. His father and his mother will die and his grandfather and his uncle will care for him, and hold him always dear. God will send him plainly and He will make us his helpers, through whom God will give power to His allies, humble His enemies, strike people down everywhere, render permissible the most precious of things on earth, destroy the idols, extinguish the fires, worship the All-Merciful, rout out the devil, his word being final, his rule being justice, demanding goodness and acting it, averting from evil and abolishing it.”

ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib responded, “O King, may your power increase, your glory rise, your kingdom last, and your life be long, such is my origin. And so if power is coming to me plainly, then it has all become somewhat clear to me.”

Ibn Dhū Yazan responded, “By the House that has a screen and the marks on the idols, you O ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib are, without doubt, his grandfather.”
‘Abd al-Mu‘tālib fell down prostrate in worship. The King then said, “Lift your head, calm yourself, and be content. Did you have any prior sense of what I told you?”

“O King,” he replied, “I had one son in whom I delighted and whose fond companion I was. I married him to a noble lady of his tribe, Āmina b. Wāḥb, and she had a son I named Muḥammad. But his father died, then his mother, and I and his uncle brought him up.”

Ibn Dhū Yazan then said, “What I told you is as you told me. Take care of your boy and protect him from the Jews; for they are his enemies. God will give them no path to him. Keep what I have told you from the group with you, for I am concerned that they or their children may feel some rivalry at your having the leadership and so scheme and plot his destruction. If I were not aware that I will die before his mission, I would take my men and cavalry and go to Yathrib, the seat of his reign. For I find in previous knowledge and the Scriptures that it will be in Yathrib that he will establish his power, there that he will find those to aid him, and there that his grave will be. If I were not concerned with protecting him from curses and from bodily harm, I would make public all about him despite his youth and would have crushed the Arabs’ nobles and leaders under his foot. But I am charging you with that since I do not find inadequate those who are with you.”

He then ordered that each one of them be presented with ten male and ten female slaves, one hundred camels, two sets of fine, striped clothing, five rotls of gold, ten rotls of silver, and a receptacle filled with ambergris.

For ‘Abd al-Mu‘tālib he ordered ten times that amount. He told him to come back to him after one year, but Ibn Dhū Yazan died before the year had passed.

‘Abd al-Mu‘tālib used often to say, “O Tribe of Quraysh, let not any one of you envy me the generosity of the king’s gift, large though it was, for it will not last forever. But do envy me the repute, honour and pride there will be for me and for my ancestors to come.”

He would be asked, “When will that be?” And he would then reply, “It will one day be known, though after some period.”

On this subject Umayya b. ‘Abd Shams spoke the verses,

“We brought away good counsel, carrying it in bags on our mounts and on the saddle bags of camels, male and female;

Their grazing grounds stripped bare, rising high up to Ṣan‘ā’ from a deep ravine,

Leading us to Ibn Dhū Yazan, their appetite carrying them across the scant fodder of the road, Feeding in their imagination on the lightning flashing constantly.

When they reached Ṣan‘ā’ they stayed in the home of the king and of ancient dignity.”

Abū Bakr al-Kharaṣṭī stated that Abū Yūsuf Yaʿqūb b. Iṣḥāq al-Qalūsī related to him, quoting al-ʿAlāʾ b. al-Fāḍl b. Abī Sāwiyya that he was informed by his father from his father ʿAbd al-Malik b. Abī Sāwiyya, from his grandfather Abū Sāwiyya, from his father Khalīfa, who said that he asked Muḥammad b. ʿUthmān b. Rabiʿa b. Sawaʾa b. Khathṭām b. Saʿd, how was it his father named him Muḥammad. He related that he asked his father the same question, and he replied, “Four men from Banū Tamīm, including myself, went on a trip. The group consisted of myself, Sufyān b. Mūjāshi‘ b. Dārīm, Usāma b. Mālik b. Jundāb b. al-ʿAqīd and Yazīd b. Rabiʿa b. Kināna b. Ḥurbūs b. Māzin. We travelled to see Ibn Jafna, the King of Ghasrān. When we were overlooking Syria we alighted at a stream where there were some small trees and we talked together. A monk overheard our conversation and, as he looked down on us, he said, ‘That language (of yours) is not the speech of this country.’ We replied, ‘No, we’re from a tribe of Mūḍār.’ ‘From which subtribe?’ he asked. ‘From Khindif,’ we told him. ‘Very soon will be the mission of a prophet who will be the very last one of all prophets. Hurry to him and take your chances with him and you’ll be wise.’ We asked him, ‘What is his name?’ ‘His name is Muḥammad,’ he replied.

He went on, “When we came back from the land of Ibn Jafna each one of us had a son and each one named his Muḥammad.’

This means that each of them wanted his own son to be this Prophet whose coming had been foreseen.

The hāfiz Abū Bakr al-Kharaṣṭī stated that Abū Allāh b. Abū Saʿd related to him, quoting Ḥāzim b. ʿAqqāl b. al-Zahr b. ʿAbd b. al-Mundhir b. Abū al-Ḥusayn b. al-Samawʿal b. ʿAdiyya, quoting Jābir b. Jaddān b. Jamīʿ b. ʿUthmān b. Sāmāk b. al-Ḥusayn b. al-Samawʿal b. ʿAdiyya that when death was close to al-Aws b. Ḥāritha b. Thaʿlabā b. ʿAmr b. ʿAmīr, his people of Ghasrān gathered around him and said, “You know that God’s decree for you is near. We used to tell you in your youth to get married, but you refused. This brother of yours, al-Khazraj, has five sons, but you have none other than Malik.” He replied, “No one shall perish who has left behind the like of Malik. He who is capable of drawing fire out of stone is capable of giving progeny to Malik, and fine heroic progeny too. Everyone, in any case, is headed for death.”
He then went to Malik and said, "O son, (if it is a matter of choice, then choose) death over infamy, punishment over blame, stoicism over rage. The grave is better than poverty. And those few in number are those humiliated. Those who can attack are those who can escape. And defending women is part of being honourable. Time is of two days – one for you and one against. If it's going for you, don't overdo it, if against you don't give up. Either state will exhaust itself. Neither crowned kingship nor despised ridicule are permanent. Greet your day well, and God will bless you." He then spoke the following verses:

"I witnessed the taking of prisoners at the battle of Al-Muharriq, and I lived (to see) God's punishment for the sin (of Thamud) at al-Hijr

I never saw any man, king or pauper, who was not on his way to the grave.

All glory be to Him who destroyed Thamud and Jurhum; He will leave for me my progeny till time's end,

So that they will delight the kin of 'Amr b. 'Amir (and protect them) against those who seek revenge.

And even if time had not worn me out and turned my head grey – for greyness comes with age –

We do have a Lord sitting high upon his throne who knows what good and evil there will be.

Has it not come to my people that God has a message by which good and happy people can succeed

When the Messenger was sent out from Ghâlib's tribe at Mecca, between Mecca and al-Hijr?

There; so seek his victory for your country, O tribe of 'Amir, for happiness is in victory."

Thereupon, so the account states, he died.

CHAPTER ON THE CRIES OF THE SPIRITS, CONSISTING OF WHAT WORDS OF INSPIRATION THE SPIRITS GAVE TO THE TONGUES OF SOOTHSAYERS, AND WHICH WERE TO BE HEARD BY THE IDOLS.

We previously reported the words of Shiqq and Saṭḥ to Râbi’â b. Naṣr, King of Yemen, announcing the coming of the Messenger of God (SAAS) of his being, "A chaste messenger to whom revelation comes from the All-High."

Regarding his birth, there would come the words of Saṭḥ to ʿAbd al-Maṣîḥ, "when many recitations have been made, Lake Sâwa dried up, and the sceptre-bearer has appeared", by which he was referring to the Messenger of God (SAAS), as we will explain in detail.

Al-Bukhârî stated that Yaḥyâ b. Sulaymân al-Juʿfî related to him, quoting Ibn Wahb, quoting ʿAmr – he being Muḥammad b. Zayd – that Sâlim told him from 'Abd Allah b. 'Umar who said, "I never heard 'Umar ever say of anything, 'I think it so' without it being as he thought it would."

"While 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb was seated one day, a handsome man passed by. 'Umar said, 'Either I'm mistaken or that man has not adopted Islam, or maybe he was a soothsayer. Bring him to me.'

"So he was summoned and told the same. He commented, 'I never thought I would meet a Muslim man in the manner I did today!'

"'I invite you to tell me about yourself.'

"'I was a soothsayer in the old days before Islam,' he told him.

"'And what was the strangest thing your female jinni friend, your channel, brought you?'

"'Once, in the market, she came to me and I recognized that she was in a state of panic. She said, 'Do you not see the spirits and their despondency, their despair after their decadence, and their clinging to their fast mounts and to the cloth under their saddles?'

"'Umar said, 'He spoke true. While I was asleep near their gods a man came with a calf that he sacrificed. And I then heard a voice cry out louder than any I had ever heard before. It said, 'O Jalīḥ, a success! An eloquent man! He says, 'There is no God but God!'" Everyone jumped up, and I said, "I'll not leave till I know what's behind this!" Then (the voice) called out, "O Jalīḥ, a success, an eloquent man! He says 'There is no God but God!'" So I arose, and soon thereafter it was said, 'This was a prophet."

Al-Bukhārī alone gave this tradition.

The man speaking here was Sawwād b. Qārīb al-Azdī, called al-Sadūṣī, of the people of al-Sarāt of the Balqāʾ mountains. He had the honour of being a Companion and envoy of the Prophet (SAAS). Abī Hātim and Ibn Mandah stated that Sa’īd b. Jubayr and Abī Ja’far Muḥammad b. ‘Āli quoted him. Al-Bukhārī said, "He had the honour of being a Companion." Similarly Aḥmad b. Rūḥ al-Bardhašī, the ḥāfiḍ, included his name among the Companions, quoting al-Dārquṭnī and others besides these two. The ḥāfiḍ ‘Abd al-Ghāni b. Sa’īd al-Miṣrī said that his name was spelled, "Sawwād", not "Sawwād" b. Qārīb. Uṯmān al-Waqqāṣī related from Muḥammad b. Kaḥ al-Quṣayrī that he was a Yemeni noble man.

Abū Nu‘aym mentioned him in al-Dala’il (The Signs). The account relating to him was also told by others at greater length but based upon al-Bukhārī’s account.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated that a reliable source related to him, from ‘Abd Allah b. Kaḥ, the freed-man of Uṯmān b. ‘Affān, that it was told to him that ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, God be pleased with him, was one day sitting in the mosque of the Messenger of God (SAAS) when an Arab came in looking for him. When 'Umar looked at him he commented, "That man is still a polytheist, still an unbeliever, or maybe he was a soothsayer before Islam."

The man greeted him, then sat down. 'Umar addressed him, "Have you become a Muslim?" "Oh yes, O Commander of the Faithful," the man replied. "Were you a soothsayer before Islam?" 'Umar asked.

The man replied, "Glory be to God, O Commander of the Faithful, you're casting suspicion on me; and you are receiving me with words I never heard you use to any other of your subjects since you came to power."

"O God, forgive me," exclaimed 'Umar. "Before Islam we were involved in things far worse than that. We worshipped idols and adopted images until God favoured us with His Messenger and with Islam."

"Yes, by God, O Commander of the Faithful. I was a soothsayer before Islam."

"Then tell me what your channel had informed you."

"It came to me one month or so before Islam and said, 'Do you not see the spirits and their despondency, their despair for their religion, and their clinging to their fast mounts and to the cloth under their saddles?'"

Ibn Ishāq commented that the preceding quotation was rhymed prose and not poetry.

"At that, 'Umar said, addressing the people around him, 'I swear, I was once near an idol, before Islam, along with a group of Quraysh. An Arab had sacrificed a calf and we were waiting for him to divide it up so we would have our share. Then I heard a voice louder than I had ever heard before coming out from the calf's belly. This was a month or so before Islam. The voice said, 'O Dharīḥ, success is won! A man is crying out and saying, "There is no God but God."'"

Ibn Hishām commented, "Another version has the words as, 'A man is crying out, his language eloquent, and saying, "There is no God but God."'"

He went on, "A scholar learned in poetry recited to me the lines,

'I was surprised at the spirits and their grief and their gripping their cloth-blankets on their mounts Heading for Mecca, seeking guidance, for the believing spirits are not like the impure ones.'"

The hāfiz Abū Ya'la al-Mawsīlī stated that it was related to him by Yahyā b. Hījīr b. al-Nu'mān the Syrian, and also by 'Alī b. Manṣūr al-Anbārī, from Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Rāhman al-Waqqāṣī, from Muhammad b. Ka'b al-Qurashi, who said that while 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, God bless him, was one day seated, a man passed him by and someone asked, "O Commander of the Faithful, do you know this passer-by?" "Who is he?", he asked. They replied, "That is Sawwād b. Qārīb whose channel came to him and told him about the rising of the Messenger of God (SAAS)." ‘Umar sent for him and asked him whether he was Sawwād b. Qārīb, and the man replied that he was.

“Are you still a soothsayer, as you were?” asked ‘Umar.

The man became angry and replied, “No one greeted me that way since I became a Muslim, O Commander of the Faithful.”

“O glory be to God!” exclaimed ‘Umar, “the polytheism we used to follow was far worse than the soothsaying you were involved in! But tell me what it was your channel told you of the coming of the Messenger of God (SAAS).”

“Certainly, O Commander of the Faithful. One night I was between sleep and wakefulness when my channel came to me, kicked me and said, ‘Up you get, O Sawwād b. Qārīb, listen to what I have to say and comprehend, if you can. A messenger has been sent from the tribe of Lu‘ayy b. Ghālib calling people to God and to His worship.’ He then recited these verses,

‘I was surprised at the spirits and their intentions and their gripping their saddle-bags on their mounts
   Heading for Mecca, seeking guidance, for the honest spirits are not like the lying ones.
   So head to the finest men of Hāshim, their best men are not like their hindmost.’

“I told it, ‘Let me sleep. I’m very sleepy now.’

“The next night back he came and kicked me, saying, ‘Up you get, O Sawwād b. Qārīb, and listen to what I am saying. And comprehend, if you can. A messenger has been sent from the tribe of Lu‘ayy b. Ghālib, calling men to God and to His worship.’ He then recited these verses,

‘I was surprised at the spirits and their knowledge, and their gripping their baggage on their mounts Heading for Mecca, seeking guidance, for believing spirits are not like those that disbelieve.
   So head for the finest men of Hāshim, amidst their hills and rocks.’

‘Leave me alone to sleep,’ I pleaded, ‘I’m very sleepy.’

“The third night, again it came and kicked me, saying, ‘Up you get, O Sawwād b. Qārīb, and listen to what I am saying. And comprehend, if you can. A messenger has been sent from the tribe of Lu‘ayy b. Ghālib, calling men to God and to His worship.’ He then recited the verses,

‘I was surprised at the spirits and their perceptions, and their gripping their cloth blankets on their mounts
   Heading for Mecca, seeking guidance, for the gracious of the spirits are not like the foul ones.
   So head for the finest men of Hāshim, and raise your eyes to their head.’

“So I got up, saying, ‘God has put my heart to the test.’ I readied my camel for travel and went off to the city – by which he meant Mecca – and there I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) amidst his Companions. I approached him and said, ‘Listen to what I have to say, O Messenger of God.’ ‘Let’s hear it,’ he replied. So I recited to him the following verses.

‘My channel came to me after rest and sleep, and I never experienced him to be untruthful.

Three nights and each time he would say, “A messenger has come out to you of (the tribe of) Lu’ayy b. Ghālib”.

So I tucked up my waist-wrapping, for travel, and my strong and swift she-camel carried me across the deserts

And I bear witness that there is nothing besides God, and that you are safe from any conqueror

And that you are the messenger with closest access of all to God, O you born of the finest and best of men.

So order us to do whatever you are told, O best man ever to walk, even if what comes is such as to make the hair grey;

Intercede for me when intercession time comes, for none but you can help Sawwād b. Qārib.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) and his Companions were most pleased at what I had said, their pleasure being evident in their faces.

‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb jumped from his place and came close to him and said, ‘I wanted to hear that from you. Can your channel come to you today?’

‘But after I had read the Qur’ān, then never again; God’s book does away with any need for spirits.

‘Umar then said, ‘Once we were in a quarter of Quraysh known by their name of the Dharih family. They had sacrificed a calf and the butcher was cutting it up when we heard a voice emitting from its stomach. We could not see anything (there), however. It said, ‘O family of Dharih, success is won. A voice is crying out, its tongue eloquent, giving witness that there is no God but God.’

This account is abbreviated, as that of al-Bukhārī shows. They do substantiate that the one hearing the voice from the calf was ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb. But God knows best.

The ḥāfīz Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Ja‘far b. Saḥl al-Kharaqīṭi stated, in his work that he compiled on the cries of the spirits, that Abū Mūsā ʿImrān b. Mūsā al-Muʿaddib related to him, quoting Muḥammad b. ʿImrān b. Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Abū Laylā, quoting ʿAbd Allāh al-Waṣṣābi, from his father, from Abū Jaʿfar Muḥammad b. ʿAlī, who said that Sawwād b. Qārib al-Sadāsī came in to ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, God be pleased with him, and the latter said to him, “By God, O Sawwād b. Qārib, I adjure you to say whether nowadays your soothsaying benefits you.” He replied, “Glory be to God, O Commander of the Faithful, you’ve never greeted anyone else the way you have me!” “Glory be to God indeed, O Sawwād,” he replied, “our polytheistic practices were worse than your soothsaying. By God, O Sawwād, I’ve heard a most strange account relating to you.” “Yes indeed, O Commander of the Faithful, strange it certainly was.” “Tell me about it,” asked Ĕmar.

“Well, I was a soothsayer before Islam. One night when I was asleep, my channel came to me, kicked me and said, ‘O Sawwād, listen to what I will tell you.’ ‘Go on,’ I said. It then recited,

'I was surprised at the spirits and their concern, and how they gripped their blankets on their mounts

Heading for Mecca seeking guidance, for those of them that believe are not like those that are evil.

So travel to the best of Ħāshim and raise your eyes to their head.'

“But I went to sleep, not caring at all what he had said. Then he came back the second night, kicked me and said, ‘Up you get, Sawwād b. Qārib and listen to what I say.’ ‘Well let’s hear it,’ I said. He then recited,

'I was surprised at the spirits and their intentions and their gripping their saddle-bags on their mounts

Heading for Mecca, seeking guidance, for the honest spirits are not like the lying ones.

So head for the finest man of Ħāshim, for their foremost men are not like their hindmost.'

‘His words did intrigue me, somewhat, but I went to sleep. The third night he came again, kicked me and said, ‘O Sawwād b. Qārib, are you going to comprehend or not?’

‘How?’ I asked. He explained, ‘A prophet has come forth in Mecca calling for worship of his Lord. Go and join him. Listen to what I tell you.’ ‘Let’s hear it,’ I said. Then he recited,

'I was surprised at the spirits and their fright, and how they gripped their cloth blankets to their mounts

Heading for Mecca, seeking guidance, for the spirits who believe are unlike those who disbelieve.

So travel to the best of Ħāshim, between their hills and rocks.'

“So I realized that God wished me well. I went and got a striped garment I had, unsewed it, put it on and placed my feet in the saddle stirrups of my camel and rode off till I reached the Prophet (SAAS). He then suggested to me that I become a Muslim, and I did so. I told him what had happened, and he said, ‘When the Muslims are all gathered, tell them this.’ So when all were assembled, I got up and recited the following verses,

‘My channel came to me after rest and sleep, and I never knew him to be untruthful;

Three nights, and each time he would say, “A messenger has come to you out of Lu’ayy b. Ghālib.”
So I tucked up my waist-wrapper for travel, and my strong and swift she-camel carried me across the deserts,
  And I know that there is nothing besides God, and that you are safe from any conqueror
  And that you are the Messenger with closest access of all to God, O you born of the finest and best of men.
  So order us to do whatever you are told, O best messenger, even if what comes is such as to make the hair grey.'

"The Muslims," he concluded, "were delighted with this."
"Well," asked 'Umar, "do you have any sense of that now?" "Since God has taught me the Qur'an now, then no."

Muhammad b. al-Sa'ib al-Kalbī related this anecdote from his father, from 'Umar b. Haḍṣ. He said that when Sawwād b. Qārīb came to 'Umar, the latter asked, "O Sawwād b. Qārīb, what remains from your being a soothsayer?"
He got angry and retorted, "O Commander of the Faithful. I don’t think you greeted any Arab like that before."
When 'Umar saw the anger in his face, he said, "Look Sawwād, the polytheism we were previously involved in was worse." Then he went on, "Tell me, Sawwād, that story I’ve so wanted to hear from you."
"Certainly. Once I was tending some camels of mine at al-Sarāt. One night when I was asleep a channel I had came to me, kicked me and said, ‘Up you get, Sawwād b. Qārīb! A prophet has appeared in Tihāma who calls people to the truth and to the straight path.’" He then related the story as given above, adding one last line to the poetry. It read:

"And intercede for me on a day when no relative than you will he of any use for Sawwād b. Qārīb."

The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him: "Go to your people and speak these verses to them."

The ḥāfīz Ibn ʿAsākir related this story through Sulaymān b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān, from al-Ḥakam b. Yaḥyā b. ʿAṭā al-Muḥārībī, from ʿAbbād b. ʿAbd al-Ṣamād, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr who said that Sawwād b. Qārīb al-Azdi recounted to him, "I was sleeping up on a mountain of al-Sarāt when someone came and kicked me ..." And he went on to tell the story too.
It was also related through Muhammad b. al-Barrāʾ, from Abū Bakr b. ʿAyyāsh, from Abū Isḥāq from al-Barrāʾ, who said that Sawwād b. Qārīb stated, "I was living in India when one night my channel came to me ..." and he told the whole story. Then, after reciting the final piece of poetry, he said, "And the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) laughed so loud his back teeth were visible, and he commented, ‘You did well, Sawwād!’"
Abū Nuʿaym stated in his book Dalāʾīl al-Nuḥyūw (Signs of the Prophethood) that ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar related to him, quoting Māzin said, “One day we brought a ewe to the idol for slaughter, it being our sacrifice, and I heard a voice emanating from the idol saying, ‘O Māzin, hear and rejoice. Goodness has emerged and evil been submerged. A prophet has been sent from Mūdar with God’s greatest religion. Abandon something carved from stone and you will be saved from scorching fire.’

“I was extremely scared to hear this.

“Then, a few days later, we sacrificed another ewe, and heard a voice from the idol say, ‘Come to me, come close and hear what you cannot ignore. This is a prophet who has been sent; he has brought truth revealed. Believe in him so that you will avoid the heat of a fire that will flame, a fire set alight by the stone.’”

Māzin continued, “This is amazing, I thought. And this is good intended for me. Then a man from Hījāz arrived, and I asked him what news there was back home. He replied, ‘A man called Aḥmad has emerged who tells everyone who comes to him to respond to God’s Messenger.’”

“This news relates to what I heard, I thought. So I rushed to the idol and broke it into small pieces. I then mounted up and rode off to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). God then opened my heart to Islam, which I accepted. I spoke the verses,

‘I broke Yājūr into pieces, there now being a Lord through whom we would see false guidance and delusion,

Through the Ḥāshimite, who led us out of our error, his religion having been unknown to me.

O rider, tell ‘Amr and its brothers that I detest those who said, ‘My Lord is Yājūr.’’”

By ‘Amr here he means al-Ṣāmit, the silent one. By “brothers” he means Ḥutāma.

“I said, ‘O Messenger of God, I’m a man who is crazy for pleasure, for women and wine. But now the years are pressing hard, the money is gone, the concubines have thinned out, and I have no son. Please pray to God to alleviate my suffering, to make us modest, and to grant me a son.’

“The Prophet (ṢAAS) then spoke a prayer: ‘O God, exchange his pleasure-seeking with Qurān readings, his immorality with morality, his sin and corruption with chastity, make him modest, and grant him a son.’”
Main went on: “And so God alleviated my suffering and Umān became fertile. I married four noble women, learned by heart a portion of the Qurʾān, and God granted me my son Ḥayyān.” He then recited the verses:

“My mount galloped towards you, 0 Messenger of God, traversing the deserts from Umān to al-ʿArj,
So that you would intercede for me, 0 you who are the best of those who walked on earth; and God would forgive me, and I return victorious.
To people whose religion I contradict; their beliefs and likes are different from mine.
I was a man crazy over wine and women all my youth, until my boyhood almost wore out;
He substituted fear and anxiety for the wine, and gave me chastity for immortality, and reinforced my virtue.
So my interest and intent turned to the holy fight, and to God I direct my fasting, to God my pilgrimage.”

He went on, “So when I came back to my people, they censured me and cursed me, and set one of their poets to attack me. And I realized that if I responded in like kind, I would only harm myself.
“So I moved away from them. Then a great delegation of them came to me; I had been formerly in charge of their affairs. They told me, ‘0 Cousin, we hate what has happened. If you can put it all aside, then return and be in charge of our affairs. And we’ll not bother you or whatever is in your religion.’
“So I did return with them and spoke the lines,

‘Your hatred for us is bitter in taste, whereas our dislike for you, 0 my people, tasted like buttermilk;
Time (fate) would not notice if your faults were laid out, but all of you when our faults are extolled are keenly aware;
Our poet does not answer you back, while your poet is eloquent and flamboyant in cursing us.
Towards you, you should know, there is in (our) hearts only irritation, while in yours there is hatred and loathing.’”

Māzin ended: “Then God led them all to Islam.”

The ḥāfiz Abū Nuʿaym related from a ḥadīth of ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. ʿUqayl, from Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh, who said, “The first news of the mission of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in Medina was as follows. A certain woman of Medina had a channel who would come to her in the form of a white bird. It alighted on a wall they had and she asked it, ‘Why don’t you come on down so that we can talk together and exchange news?’ It replied, ‘A Prophet has been sent in Mecca who has prohibited fornication. And so our pleasure is prevented.’”
Al-Waqidi stated that 'Abd al-Rahmān b. 'Abd al-'Azīz related to him, from al-Zuhri, from 'Alī b. al-Ḥusayn, as follows, “The first news that arrived in Medina about the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was that a woman called Fāṭima had a channel (a male jinn) that came to her one day but stood on a wall. She asked it, ‘Aren’t you coming down?’ ‘No, a Messenger has been sent who has prohibited fornication,’ he replied.

“One of the early Muslims related the same account also. He mentioned that the woman’s channel was called Ibn Lūdān, and stated that he had been absent from her a long time, and then when he did come she reproached him and he replied, ‘I went to the Messenger and heard him forbidding fornication; so good-bye to you!’”

Al-Waqidi stated that Muhammad b. Sāliḥ related to him, from Āṣim b. ʿUmar b. Qatāda who said that Uthmān b. Affān stated, “We left in a camel caravan for Syria, before the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) received his mission. When we were on the outskirts of Syria where a female soothsayer lived, she stood in our way and said that her channel came to her and stopped at her door. So she asked him to come in, but he replied, ‘There’s no way for that; Āḥmad has come forth and an unendurable situation has arisen.’”

Uthmān continued, “Then I left and, upon returning to Mecca discovered that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had announced his mission in Mecca and was calling people to God the Almighty and Glorious.”

Al-Waqidi stated that Muhammad b. Ābd Allāh al-Zuhri related to him, saying, “It used to be that inspired voices were heard; but when Islam came these were banned.”

There was a woman of Bānū Asad named Sāʿira who had a spirit companion. When it learned that inspired voices were not being allowed, he came to her and entered her chest where he made such an uproar that she lost her mind. From inside her chest he began shouting, “Embracing has been banned. Companionship has been abolished! And an unendurable situation has arisen! Āḥmad has forbidden fornication.”

The ḥāfīz Abū Bakr al-Khaṭṭāṭi stated that Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad al-Balawī – in Egypt – related to him, quoting ʿUmāra b. Zayd, quoting ʿĪsā b. Yazīd, from Šāliḥ b. Kīsān, from someone who told it to him, from Mīrdās b. Qays al-Sadūsī, who said, “I was present with the Prophet (ṢAAS) when the subject of soothsaying came up and the changes that had occurred in it as a result of his coming forth. I said to him, ‘O Messenger of God, some of that used to go on among us. I can tell you about a slave-girl we had called al-Khulaṣa about whom nothing but good was known until she came to us and said, ‘O tribe of Daws something very strange has happened to me; did you ever know anything except good (about me)?’ We asked, ‘What’s wrong?’ She replied, ‘I was out with my sheep when a cloud overshadowed me, and I had some strange experience, some sense of a man with a woman. I was afraid I might be pregnant." Eventually came the time for her to give birth, and she did produce a boy who had lop-ears like those of a dog. He remained with us till the age when he would play with other boys. Then one day he jumped into the air, threw off his waist wrapper and began screaming out at the top of his voice, saying, ‘Ya wayla, ya wayla, ya ‘awla ya ‘awla, woe on the sheep, woe on Fahm who is the fire brand, there are horsemen, by God, behind the mountain path, and among them are youths who are handsome, noble.”

“So we mounted up, our weapons ready, and asked, ‘O you, woe to you, what do you see?’ He asked, ‘Is there some menstruating girl among you?’ ‘Who can find one for us?’ we asked. An old sheikh of ours said, ‘Yes, I have a daughter of a chaste mother.’ We told him to bring her at once. So the sheikh brought the girl and (he) went up the mountain, telling her: ‘Throw off your clothes and go out in front of them.’ He then told our men, ‘Follow on after her.’ Then he said to one of our men called Ahmād b. Ḥabīs, ‘O Ahmād b. Ḥabīs you get the first rider!’ So Ahmād charged and struck the first rider, felling him. And they were defeated and we plundered them. Then we built a house over them which we named ‘Dhū al-Khulāsā’. And this boy never told us anything that did not come out as he said.

“Until your mission, that is, O Messenger of God. One day he told us, ‘O tribe of Daws, Banū al-Hārith b. Ka'b has encamped.’ So we rode off, with him telling us, ‘Urge your horses on at speed, and stuff the enemy into their graves! Sweep them away in the morning and drink wine in the evening!’

“We met them in battle, but they utterly defeated us. So when we returned to him we demanded, ‘What’s wrong with you? What have you done to us?’ When we looked at him we saw his eyes all red and his ears standing straight up. He was absolutely furious, almost exploding with anger. Then he left.

“We rode away and eventually forgave him, and nothing happened for a while. Then he summoned us and said, ‘How would you like to go on a raid that will give you glory, and provide you fine booty so that you’ll have a real treasure?’ ‘We need that more than anyone,’ we replied. So he said, ‘Then mount up.’ We did so and asked, ‘What next?’ He replied: ‘Attack Banū al-Hārith b. Maslama!’ Then he said, ‘Stop.’ So we did, and he said, ‘Attack Fahm!’ Then he went on, ‘But you’ve no bad blood with them; attack Muḍar; they have horses and cattle.’ Then he said, ‘No; attack Durayd b. al-Ṣimma. They’re few in number and under protection.’ Then he said, ‘No; instead go after (the tribe of) Ka'b b. Rabi'a. first, lodge them at the estate of ‘Amir b. Saṣaṣa, then do battle with them!’

“So we engaged them in battle but they defeated us, indeed humiliated us. So when we returned we asked him, ‘Woe on you! What are you doing to us?’ He replied, ‘I just don’t know; he who was telling me the truth is now lying to me. Imprison me in my house for three days, then come back.’
"We did that. Then, after three days, we returned to him and let him out. And to our surprise he was like a stone of fire! He said, 'O Daws, heaven is protected! And the best of prophets has come forth!' ‘Where?’ we asked. ‘In Mecca; and I am dying, so bury me on a mountain top, for I shall burst into flames. If you leave me (unburied) I will be a source of your shame. When you see me catch fire and flame, then throw three stones at me and with each one say, “In your name, O God.” Then I will die down and go out.’

“And he did die and burst into flame! We did what he had told us, throwing three stones and saying after each one ‘O God, in your name!’ And he did die down and go out.

“Things went on as before until the pilgrims came and told us of your mission, O Messenger of God.”

Very strange!

Al-Waqidi related to us, from his father, from the son of Abū Dhī‘b, from Muslim b. Jandab, from al-Naḍr b. Sufyān al-Hudhali, from his father, who said, “We left for Syria on a camel caravan and when we were between d-Zarqa‘ and Muṣāin, having stopped there to rest for the night, along came a horseman, seemingly somehow between earth and sky, who called out, ‘Get up, all you who sleep! This is no time to rest! Aḥmad has come forth and put all the spirits to flight!’

“We were terrified, though brave men we were, all having heard this.

“So we travelled back to our people and when we arrived we found them discussing a conflict in Mecca among Quraysh about a Prophet who had come forth from among them, from the ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib family, whose name was Aḥmad.”

Abū Nuṣaym related this.

Al-Khariḍi stated that ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad al-Balawi – in Egypt – related to him, quoting Umāra b. Zayd, ‘Abd Allāh b. al-ʿAlā‘, quoting Yahyā b. Urwa, from his father, who said that a group from Quraysh, including Waraqa b. Nawfal b. Asad b. ʿAbd al-ʿUzza b. Ḍuṣṣayy, Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nuṭayl, ʿAbd Allāh b. Jahsh b. Rāb and Uthmān b. al-Ḥuwayrith, were once at a place where they had an idol around which they would assemble. That particular day they had set aside as a holiday each year. They would worship it and make sacrifice of camels to it and then feast, drink wine, and say prayers to it. When they went into it that night, they saw it to be overturned onto its face. They disliked that, so they took it and set it back up as before. Soon, however, it tumbled over violently, but they set it back straight as before. Again, for a third time, it fell over.

Seeing this they were both amazed and very worried. Uthmān b. al-Ḥuwayrith said, “Why is it turning upside down so much? This must be because something has happened.” This was occurring during the night when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was born.
Uthman then spoke the following verses,

"O festival idol, around whom assemble the chiefs of delegations come from far and near,
You turn upside down if defeated; tell us why. Is this unimportant, or do you turn in anger?
If this is for some sin we have committed, we will acknowledge it and give up this sin,
But if you have been defeated and turned over in abasement, then among idols you are no Lord, no master."

They then set the idol back in its position. When they did so, a great voice rang out from inside the idol, saying,

"It fell over because of a newly born, light from whom illuminated all the mountain sides of all the earth, in east and west,
To which all the idols, without exception, fell down and at which the hearts of all the kings of the earth, without exception, trembled in fear.
And the fires of all the Persians died down and went out, the king of the Persians himself spending a night of great anxiety.
The soothsayers of the unknown having been abandoned by their spirits, from them no information coming, true or false.
O Qusayy, come back from your error, come over to Islam and to the wide-open house."

When they heard this they conferred together in private and some of them said, "Let us be truthful to one another and keep our secret among one another."
All of them said, "Yes indeed!"
Waraqa b. Nawfal told them, "By God, you all know that your people have no religion. They have made an enormous mistake and abandoned Abraham's religion. What purpose is there in a stone you circumambulate that does not hear, nor see, nor can do any good or harm? O my people, adopt a religion!"

The account proceeds, "And so thereupon they left, travelling all over asking about the hanifyya, the religion of Abraham, God bless him."
As for Waraqa b. Nawfal, he became a Christian, studied the Scriptures and so became very learned.
Uthman b. al-Huwayrith travelled to the emperor, became a Christian and lived there in high estate with him.
Zayd b. 'Amr b. Nufayl tried to leave but was gaoled. Eventually, however, he did leave, travelling far and wide till he reached al-Raqqa, in the Arabian peninsula. There he met a learned monk whom he told what he wanted to know. Then the monk said, "You are seeking a religion to which you won't find anyone to lead you. But the time is near for a prophet who will come forth from your land and who will be sent with the hanifyya religion."
When he was told this Zayd headed back for Mecca but the Lakhmites attacked and killed him.

As for 'Abd Allah b. Jaḥṣ, he stayed in Mecca until the Prophet (ṢAAS) was sent. He left thereafter with the others who went to Abyssinia. Once there, he became a Christian and abandoned Islam. He remained there till he died, still a Christian.

There is testimony for this in the earlier account given of the life of Zayd b. 'Amr b. Nufayl.

Al-Khara'îṣ stated that Aḥmad b. Iṣḥāq b. Šāliḥ Abū Bakr al-Warrāq related to him, quoting 'Amr b. 'Uthmān, quoting his father, quoting 'Abd Allāh b. Ḥabīl, quoting Muḥammad b. Ḥabīl, from al-Zuhrī, from 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Anas al-Sulami, from al-'Abbās b. Mīrād who said he was one day busy impregnating a milch-camel at midday when a white dove appeared before him with a rider on its back all dressed in clothing as white as milk. The rider said to him, “O Aḥmad b. Mīrād, don’t you see that the heavens have assembled their guards, that war has choked on its own breath, that the mounts have their riding blankets saddled, and that there (has come) he who brought piety and devotion on Monday, the night of the third day, the master of the furthest-riding camel?”

Al-'Abbās then said, “So I returned in a fright, very scared by what I had seen and heard. Then I went to an idol we had called al-Ḍīmār that we used to worship; it would address us from inside its belly. I swept up all around it, anointed it and kissed it, and then a voice sounded from inside it saying, “Tell all the tribes of Sulaym that al-Ḍīmār is gone, and that the people of the mosque have triumphed.

Al-Ḍīmār is dead, though once he was worshipped, before prayer with the Prophet Muḥammad.

He who inherited the prophethood and the right path following the son of Mary is from Quraysh, rightly guided.”

He continued, “So off I went until I reached my people and told them what had happened. Then I left, along with 300 of my men of Banū Ḥāritha, to join the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who was at Medina. We entered the mosque and when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) saw me he said, ‘O 'Abbās, how did your acceptance of Islam come about?’ I then told him the story. He was delighted, and thereupon I and my men all adopted Islam.”

The ḥāfiz Abū Nuʿaym related this in the al-Dalāʾil (The Signs) from an account of Abū Bakr b. Abī 'Āṣim, from 'Amr b. 'Uthmān.

He then recounted it again through al-ʿAsmaʾī, who said, that al-Wassāfi related to him, from Mansūr b. al-Muṭamīr, from Qabīṣa b. 'Amr b. Iṣḥāq al-Khuzāʾi, from al-ʿAbbās b. Mīrād al-Sulami, who said, “My adoption of Islam first came about this way. My father Mirdās, when near death, recommended to me an idol named Dimār he had. So I placed it in a building and established a visitation time, once each day. Now when the Prophet (SAAS) came forth, I heard a voice calling out through the night that scared me. So I hurried to Dimār seeking its help and heard a voice coming from its belly that said,

'Tell to the tribe of all Sulaym that al-Ants (the close friend)^70 is gone and that the people of the mosque live on.'

'Dimār has perished, and he was once worshipped, before the Scripture (was sent) to the Prophet Muḥammad.

'He who has inherited the prophethood and the right path, after the son of Mary, is from Quraysh, rightly guided.'

He went on, 'I kept this from my people. After they had returned from the battle (of the siege of Medina) I was out with my herd on the side of the ravine at Dhāt Ḥrq, asleep, when I heard a voice. Then I saw a man riding on a dove's wing and saying, 'The light appeared on the night before Tuesday along with (the birth of) the master of the she-camel named al-‘Aḍbā',^71 at the house of Bānī al ‘Anqā'. And another voice, from the left, replied, 'Tell the disheartened spirits that the mount has put on its saddle blankets, that heaven has been protected by its guards.'

'I jumped up in fright at this and knew that Muḥammad was a messenger. So I rode my mare as fast as I could till I reached him and pledged him my allegiance. Then I went off, burned Dimār in fire, returned again to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and recited to him the following verses:

'By your life, by my making Dimār as partner with the Lord of the worlds
And by my leaving the Messenger of God with the Aws tribe around him, those being his helpers;
I am like someone who left the easy ground and sought out the difficult one, to find his path into the most difficult of matters,
So I believed in God, whose servant I am, and opposed those who have begun seeking destruction.
And I turned my face towards Mecca, seeking to declare allegiance to the blessed Prophet of the most noble men,
A Prophet who came to us after Jesus, with a message of truth in which there is the conclusive word.
Entrusted with the Qurʾān, the first Intercessor and the first Messenger to respond to the angels,
He restored the bonds of Islam after they had been broken, making them firm and establishing the rituals.

^70. He is referring to the idol Dimār.
^71. The camel of the Prophet (SAAS) was so named.
I meant you, O best man of all the world; you have been situated at the top of all heights and possessed all eminence and honour.

You are the purified one of Quraysh; when they fade away you will remain blessed for the ages.

When the two tribes Ka'b and Malik trace their lineage we find you of pure descent, and your fertile women too.”

Al-Khārāṣītī stated that ’Ībād Allāh b. Muḥammad al-Balawī, in Egypt, related to him, quoting ’Umar b. Zayd, quoting Ḫāṣiq b. Bishr and Salama b. al-Faḍl, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq who said that it was related to him by a sheikh from among the Companions whose name was ’Ībād Allāh b. Maḥmūd, from the family of Muḥammad b. Maslama, that he said that he was informed that men of Khath'am used to say, “This is what drew us to Islam. We used to be a people who worshipped idols. One day we were at an idol of ours when a group came to seek the idol’s advice in settling a dispute among them. Suddenly a voice called out to them:

‘O people possessed of bodies, old men and young alike, what are you with your perplexed minds to rely on idols for judgements?

Are all of you in confusion, sleeping, or do you not see what I see: a shining light, clearing up the darkness, has emerged to view from Tihām?

That is a prophet, Lord of mankind, who has brought Islam after disbelief.

The All-Merciful has honoured him by making him a leader, and a messenger whose words are truthful.

The most just of all judges, he commands prayer and fasting

And piety and reconciliation and drives people away from evil.

And from immorality, idol worship, and sin; he is from Hāshim among the elite of leaders

Announcing (his mission) in the sacred land.’

Al-Khārāṣītī stated that ’Ībād Allāh al-Balawī related to him, quoting ’Umar, quoting ’Ubayd Allāh b. al-’Aẓm, quoting Muḥammad b. Akbar, from Saḥīd b. Jubayr, that there was a man from the Banū Tamīm called Rāfī’ b. Umayr, a highly skilled tracker, the best of all men in travelling at night, and the most intrepid in danger. The Arabs therefore used to call him “‘Uṯmān of the Arabs”, a name implying his skill in following a trail and his bravery. He recounted how he first adopted Islam, as follows, “One night I was travelling over deep sand when I felt very sleepy. So I dismounted, tied my camel down, rested my head on its leg and went to sleep. Before falling asleep I said a prayer: ‘I seek protection from the master (spirit) of this valley against being harmed or disturbed by evil spirits.’ In my sleep I saw a young man creeping up on my camel, a spearhead in his hand with which he was going to stab her in the throat. At that I awoke in alarm and, though I looked in all directions, I could see nothing. I told myself it was just a dream. So I went back into a light sleep and saw the same as I had before. Again I awoke, walked all around my camel but saw nothing. Once more I slept, saw the same and awoke to find my camel trembling. Again I slept, saw the vision once more and awoke to find my camel in a disturbed state. I turned around and there was a young man just like I had seen in my dream, carrying a spearhead in his hand which was being restrained by an old man who was reciting:

'O Malik b. Muhalhil b. Dithar, easy does it, my mantle and waist-wrapper be your ransom, Leave the human’s camel alone, don’t harm it and choose instead whatever of my bulls you want.

You’re showing me a side of yourself I never knew, not to honour my relationship to you and my honour.

Going up to him with a poisoned spearhead! Woe to you for doing so, O Abu al-Ghaffar.

If it were not for shame and your family being neighbours, I’d tell you things of me I’ve not disclosed.'

"After he had spoken thus, the young man responded:

‘Did you want to raise and drop our reputation for no contemptible action, O Abu al-{izar?

They never in the past had a lord among them; it is Banu al-Akhyar who are best.
So go your way, O Mu‘akbar; however, the protector was Muhalhil b. Dithar.’

"While they were thus disputing three bulls emerged from the wilderness and the old man said to the young one, ‘Go on now, nephew, just take any one of these you want in compensation for the camel of my human friend here.’ So the young man did take one bull and left with it. Then the old man turned to me and said, ‘When you go down into some valley or other and are afraid, then say, “I take refuge in God, the Lord of Muhammad, from the terror of this valley.” Don’t seek the protection of any spirit because they’re all finished.’ I asked him, ‘Who is this Muhammad?’ He replied, ‘He is an Arab prophet, neither of the east nor of the west, who was sent down on a Monday.’ ‘Where does he live?’ I asked. ‘Yathrib, where there are palm trees’, he replied. So I rode off on my mount as soon as dawn broke and rode on and on till I entered Medina (i.e. Yathrib). The Messenger of God (SAAS) saw me and he told me my story before I told him anything about it! He invited me into Islam, and I did accept Islam.’

Sa‘id b. Jubayr commented, “We used to think that it was about him that God revealed the words, ‘There were human men who used to seek protection from spirit men, and so made them more malicious’” (surat al-Jinn, LXXII, v.6).
Al-Khara'iti related, through Ibrahim b. Isma'il b. Hammad b. Abu Hanifa, from Dawud b. al-Husayn, from Ikrima, from Ibn 'Abbás, from 'Ali, who said, "If you should be in a valley where you fear lions, then say 'I seek protection from Danial and the well against the evil of the lion.'"

Al-Balawi recounted, from 'Umara b. Zayd, from Ibrahim b. Sa'id, from Muhammad b. Ishaq who said that Yahya b. Abd Allah b. al-Harith related to him, from his father, from Ibn 'Abbás, the story of 'Ali's killing the jinn in the well which had a flag that was at al-Juhfa. This happened when the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent him to get water; they (the jinn) wanted to prevent him and so they cut up the bucket. He then went down to them; this is a long and very objectionable story. But God knows best.

Al-Khara'iti stated that it was related to him by Abū al-Harith Muḥammad b. Muṣʿab the Damascene and others, and also by Sulaymān, son of the daughter of Sharahbil the Damascene, and by 'Abd al-Quddūs b. al-Ḥajjāj, as by Khalid b. Sa'id, from al-Sha'bi, from a man who said that he was once attending an assembly with 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb. There also present were a group of the Companions of the Prophet (SAAS), who were discussing the virtues of the Qur'an. One of them referred to the final verses of surat al-Nahl (XVI). Another suggested surat Yā Sin (XXXVI). 'Ali said, "How about the Ayat al-Kursi? ('The Throne Verse', surat al-Baqara, II, v.255). It has 70 words, each one of which has a blessing."

One of those present was 'Amr b. Ma'di Karib who was never lost for a comment. He asked, "Where do you stand regarding the invocation, 'In the name of God, the most Merciful, the most Beneficent'?" 'Umar said, "Tell us an anecdote, O Abī Thawr?" (addressing 'Amr).

He responded, "One time, before Islam, I felt terribly hungry, so I urged on my horse into the wilderness, but all I found were some ostrich eggs. As I went further I came across a bedouin sheikh in a tent with a girl beside him who was as beautiful as the rising sun. He also had some young goats. I addressed him, saying, 'Surrender, may your mother be bereft of you!' He raised his head to me and replied, 'Now lad, if you need hospitality, then dismount. If you want help, I'll help you.' But I replied, 'Surrender!' He then recited the following verses,

'We offered you hospitality out of kindness on our part, but you were not converted, in ignorance, acting as the unlucky do. You came and insulted us and were rude. And your throat would be slashed before you get what you hoped to get from my daughter.'"

He went on: "And then all of a sudden he leapt at me, saying, 'In the name of God, the Most Merciful, the Most Beneficent.' Suddenly I felt as if I were beneath him in submission. He then asked, 'Well, shall I kill you or let you go?' 'Let me go,' I said. Then he stood back from me. But at that point my spirit persuaded me to try again, so I said, ‘Surrender! May your mother be bereft of you!’ He responded with the verses:

‘In the name of God and the All-Merciful, we were victorious there, and by the Most Beneficent it was we conquered.

But the determination of a haughty man will do no good when once we go forth to battle.’

‘He then leapt at me, while I was there under him in submission. ‘Well,’ he said, ‘should I kill you or let you go?’ ‘Let me go,’ I replied. He stood back from me and I hurried some small distance away. But then I said to myself, ‘O ‘Amr, can this old sheikh really defeat you? By God, better you be dead than alive.’ So I went back to him and said again, ‘Surrender! May your mother be bereft of you!’ Again he leapt at me, saying, ‘In the name of God, the most Merciful and Beneficent,’ and again I suddenly found myself there in submission beneath him. Again he asked, ‘Should I kill you or let you go?’ Again I replied, ‘Let me go.’ ‘Impossible! Now girl, bring me the sharp dagger.’ She brought it to him and he lopped off my forelock! When the Arabs defeated a man and lopped off his forelock they would be placing him into servitude. So I stayed with him for a time as his servant. He then said to me, ‘O ‘Amr, I want you to ride out into the desert with me. I have fear of you yet am fully confident in the words, “In the name of God, the most Merciful, the most Beneficent.”’

“So off we went till we came to a valley that was overgrown, awesome and spirit-ridden. He cried out at the top of his voice, ‘In the name of God, the most Merciful and Beneficent!’ Immediately every bird there left its cover and flew off. He repeated the same cry and every single lion there fled its den. Again he made the cry and all of a sudden there before us was an Abyssinian who had come out at us from the valley, standing there like a tall palm tree. The sheikh said to me, ‘O ‘Amr, when you see us both go off alone together, then say, “May my master overcome him through the words ‘In the name of God, the most Merciful, the most Beneficent.’”’ But when I saw them alone together I said, ‘May my master overcome him through al-Lat and al-Uzza.’ So the sheikh did nothing. He then came back to me and said, ‘You realize you disobeyed me?’ ‘Yes,’ I replied, ‘but I won’t do it again.’ He then said, ‘When you see us alone together, then say, “May my master overcome him through the words ‘In the name of God, the most Merciful, the most Beneficent.’”’ ‘All right,’ I agreed. So when I saw them go off alone together I did say, ‘May my master overcome him through (the words) “In the name of God, the most Merciful, the most Beneficent.”’ The sheikh then threw himself upon the Abyssinian, sliced at him with his sword, slit his stomach open and drew out from his insides something in the form of a black candle. He then said, ‘O ‘Amr, this is his deceit and his rancour.’ He then asked me, ‘Do you know who this girl is?’ ‘No,’ I answered.
‘This,’ he replied, ‘is al-Fāri‘a, daughter of al-Salīl al-Jurhumī, a leader of the demon spirits. Those are all her people, her relatives. Every year one man of them makes an attack on me, but God helps me defeat him through the words, ‘In the name of God, the most Merciful, the most Beneficent.’” He then said, ‘You saw how I treated that Abyssinian. Now I’m really hungry, so get me something to eat.’ I rode my mount off into the desert but only found some ostrich eggs. These I brought back for him but found him asleep. Beneath his head there was something that looked like a piece of wood. When I drew it out it was a sword, its size being one hand-span by seven. I struck his legs off with one blow which severed them along with his feet. He sat up on his haunches and cried out, ‘May God destroy you! How treacherous you are, traitor!’”

Umar then asked, “What did you do then?”

“Well,” ‘Amr replied, “I just kept hitting him till I had chopped him up into little bits.” He remained silent in sorrow a while, then went on, reciting the verses:

“Through deceit and from close by you took Islam’s brother; I never heard the like in Arabs of former times.

(Even) the non-Arabs would be shamed in their honour to do as you did; may you perish for what you did to this able Lord.

Yet I am amazed that you were able to murder him; and that you did not care how (well) he treated you when you sinned.

He was a chief who had forgiven you often and whose hands clung to you at his place of death.

Yet if I had been acting during Islam as they have done to polytheists and those of the cross,

Then you would have attained by my justice a terrible fate such as to make its suf-ferrer call out in grief and woe.”

“And what happened to the slave girl?” he asked. ‘Amr replied, “I then went to her. When she saw me, she said, ‘What happened to the sheikh?’ ‘The Abyssinian killed him,’ I replied. ‘You lie!’ she cried. ‘You killed him, by betraying him!’ Then she recited the verses:

‘O eyes, weep well for the brave warrior, then weep copious droplets more;

Do not tire of weeping, for fate has deceived you (in taking) a trustworthy man who had truth and was patient.

A man who was pious, stately and wise, a man worthy of glory on Judgement Day.

How sad I am that you let Amr live, for time has given you up to your fate.

By my life, if you had not sought him out in betrayal, you would have faced a lion as sharp as a sword.’

“What she said greatly angered me so I drew my sword and entered the tent to kill her. But in the tent I found no one. So I herded up the cattle and came home.”
This is a curious anecdote.

It is obvious that the sheikh was a demon spirit, one of those that adopted Islam and learned the Qur'ān, one thing he used being the invocation “In the name of God the most Merciful, the most Beneficent.” He would seek protection by speaking it.

Al-Khara'iti stated that 'Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad al-Balawi related to him, quoting ʿUmāra b. Zayd, saying that ʿAbd Allāh b. al-ʿAlā' related to him, from Hishām b. ʿUrwa, from his father, from his grandmother Asmā', daughter of Abū Bakr, who said, “Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl and Waraqa b. Nawfal used to tell how they went to the Negus after the retreat of Abraha from Mecca. They would say, ‘When we went in to him, he told us, ‘0 you two men of Quraysh, tell me truthfully. Was there born among you a boy whose father wanted to sacrifice him and who had divining arrows cast about him, but who was saved and had many camels sacrificed for him?’”

“Yes,’ we replied. ‘Do you have knowledge of him then, and of what became of him?’ We replied, ‘He married a woman named ʿAmina, daughter of Wahb; he left her pregnant then went away.’ ‘Do you know if a child was born or not?’

Waraqa b. Nawfal replied, ‘I will tell you, O King. I had spent a night at an idol of ours around which we used to circumambulate and worship. Suddenly I heard a voice emanating from its belly that said, “The Prophet is born and so the kings are abased, falsehood is averted and polytheism is dead.”

“The idol therupon tipped over on to its face.’

Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl then spoke, ‘I had a similar experience, O King.’ ‘Let’s hear it,’ he was told. He related as follows, ‘On just such a night as he told of, I left my people, who were talking about ʿAmina’s being pregnant, and went to Mt. Abū Qubays, wanting to be alone there because of something that was bothering me. Suddenly I saw a man descend from the skies who had two green wings. He stood atop Mt. Abū Qubays, then looked down over Mecca and said, ‘Satan is humiliated and the idols are cast down. The ‘Trustworthy One’ is born.’ He then spread out a cloth he had with him and floated away on it to the east and west. I saw that he had lit up all beneath the sky and a light was shining so brightly that it almost blinded me. I was awed by what I had seen. The man who had called out flapped his wings and flew down to the ka'ba, a light shining from him that illuminated all Tihāma. He then spoke, “The earth is aflame and has reached its springtime.” He then gestured towards the idols that were in the ka'ba and they all fell down.’

The Negus said, ‘Let me tell you now what happened to me. I was asleep that same night you mentioned, alone in a pavilion, when out from the ground came a neck and a head which said, “Woe has befallen the warriors with elephants! flocks of birds cast clay stones at them. The criminal aggressor al-Ashram has perished! And the ummi prophet has been born, he from Mecca, from the sacred quarter. Whoever responds to him will be glad; whoever scorns him will be sad.” He then entered the earth and was gone. I tried to scream, but couldn’t say a word. I then tried to get up, but could not do so. I struck the pavilion with my hand and my family heard this and came to me. I told them, “Keep the Abyssinians away from me.” They did so. And then I regained use of my tongue and feet.”

If God Almighty wills it, I will now give accounts, in the stories relating to the birth, concerning the visions of Chosroe of the collapse of 14 balconies of his palace, of the extinguishing of his fires, of the visions of his soothsayer, and Sâti’s interpretation of these through the help of ‘Abd al-Masîh.

The ḥāfiẓ Abû al-Qâsim b. ‘Asâkir related in his history work dealing with the life of al-Ḥârîth b. Ḥanî b. al-Mudlîj b. Ḥîn al-Miqdâd b. Zamal b. ‘Amr al-Udhrî, from his father, from his grandfather, from his father, from Zamal b. ‘Amr al-Udhrî, who said, “The Banû ‘Udhrî had an idol called Ṣâmâm whom they venerated. And it was kept with Banû Ḥind b. Ḥîrâm b. Ḥâbîb b. ‘Abd b. Kaṭîr b. ‘Udhrî, its guardian being a man called Târiq. People used to make sacrifice near it. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) came forth we heard a voice that said, ‘O Banû Ḥind b. Ḥîrâm, the truth has come forth and Ṣâmâm has gone; Islam has done away with idol worship.’ We were very alarmed and awed by this. Nothing more happened for several days, but then we heard a voice saying, ‘O Târiq; the truth-telling Prophet has been sent with spoken inspiration. A man has emerged in the land of Tihāma announcing the truth; those who support him will live secure, while those who desert him will regret it. This now is my farewell until Judgement Day.’

“At that’, Zamal said, ‘the idol fell forward on its face. So I bought a riding camel and rode off to the Messenger of God (SAAS) along with a group of my tribesmen. I recited to him the following verses:

‘To you, O Messenger of God, I directed (my mount), driving it hard over high rough ground and sandy lowlands
To give strong help to the best of men, to tie a rope of yours to my own,
And I testify that there is nothing besides God, and that I will worship Him so long as my shoes weigh down my feet.’

“So I accepted Islam and pledged my allegiance to him. We told him what we had heard, and he responded, “That was demon-spirit talk.”

“He then said, ‘O you Arabs, I am the Messenger of God to you and to all mankind. I call upon you to worship God alone. I tell you I am his Messenger and his servant and that you must make pilgrimage to the ka‘ba, fast for one month out of twelve, that being Ramadān. Those of you who respond to me shall have paradise as your abode. Whoever opposes me will have hell-fire as his final destiny.’
"He went on, 'So we accepted Islam and he made a pact with us. He wrote a document for us as follows: ‘In the name of God, the most Merciful and most Beneficent; this is from Muhammad, the Messenger of God, to Zamal b. ‘Amr and to those in particular who accepted Islam with him. I am sending him to his people intentionally. Whoever accepts Islam is on the side of God and his Messenger. Whoever refuses can have a truce for two months. Witnessed by ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭālib and Muḥammad b. Maslama al-Anṣārī.’’"

Ibn ‘Asākir at this point made the comment, “Very strange!”

Sa‘īd b. Yahyā b. Sa‘īd al-Umawī stated in his history of the Prophet’s wars that Muḥammad b. Sa‘īd—meaning his uncle—told him that Muḥammad b. al-Munkadīr said that he was told that Ibn ‘Abbās said that a demon-spirit called out to Abī Qubays, saying,

“O people of Fihr! May God find your views repugnant; how petty minds and intelligence are

When they disregard those slandering the religion of their fathers, those noble guardians!

He has allied with the spirits, the spirits of Buṣrā against you, along with the men of the palm trees and the forest

You are about to see the horsemen running (right and left) swiftly killing people in sheepskin garments.

Is there any noble man among you, who has the spirit of a free man, a man of illustrious parents and relatives,

A man to strike a blow that will be a warning and a rupture from anxiety and worry?”

Ibn ‘Abbās stated, “This poetry became a refrain for the people of Mecca, and they would recite it to one another. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘This is a devil who speaks to people through the idols; his name is Mis‘ār; and God will confound him.’ Nothing else happened for three days and then a voice cried out on the mountain:

‘We killed Mis‘ār in three days when he disgraced the spirits and advocated evil.
I slashed at his head with a sharp sword drawn because he reviled our Prophet made pure.’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, ‘This is a genie whose name is Samīj; when he believed in me, I renamed him ‘Abd Allāh; he told me he spent three days searching for him (Mis‘ār).’ ‘Ālī said, ‘May God reward him well, O Messenger of God.’” from 'Abd al-Ḥamīd b. Bahrām, from Shahr b. Ḥawshab, from Ibn ʿAbbās, from Saʿd b. ʿUbāda, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent me on a mission to Ḥadramawt before his migration. On the way, during the night, I heard a voice cry out,

‘O Abū ʿAmr, insomnia afflicted me, sleep fled and slumber was impossible
At thought of a group of men who came before and now are gone; and all mankind have their palaces disappear.

They passed away, moving to their deaths, destined (to their graves) not to a watering place.

They left, while I remained behind, alone, with no one to assist me, Futile, unable to even deal with an issue that a child could handle (with ease).
After all, I am not remaining with a people whose tombs are like those of Thamūd And ʿĀd and the centuries are all equal to death, all being mere stalks after harvest.’

“Another voice then called out, ‘O Kharṣab, “soft twig”, has wonder taken your senses? Wonderful, wonderful things are happening between Zahra and Ḍathrib.’

“What’s happened there, ʿO Shāhīb?” He replied, ‘The Prophet of peace has been sent with the best of words to all of humanity. And he has left the holy places for the date palms and forts.’

“He asked, ‘What’s it all about, this Prophet with a mission, the Revealed Scripture and this “chosen” ummi?’ He replied, ‘He is a descendant of Luʾayy b. Ghālib, son of Fihr b. Mālik b. al-Naḍr b. Kinas.’ The second voice replied, ‘O what a pity! I’m too old for this, my time is all gone. Al-Naḍr b. Kinas and I used to aim at the same target, drink cold milk together. Early one cold morning I accompanied him out from Dawḥa; he arose with the sun and set with it too, with him telling what he heard and verifying what he saw. If this man is of his descent then the sword is sheathed, fear has gone, sexual immorality is over, and usury is no more.’

“Then tell me what will be?” He replied, ‘Distress, misery, and hunger are over. Strength and bravery are over, except for what is to remain in the tribe of Khuzāʿa. Oppression, sufferings, along with high character are gone, except for what is to remain in the tribes of Khazraj and Aws. Conceit and arrogance are gone too, along with calumnny and perfidy, except for what is to remain in Banū Bakr, meaning Ibn Hawāzin. Regrettable and sinful deeds are over, except for what is to remain in Khathʿam.’

“Tell me what else will be?” He replied, ‘If goodness is defeated and the free woman suppressed, then leave the land of migration. If the peace is disrupted and family ties are broken, then leave the holy land.’ ‘Tell me what will be?’ He replied, ‘Were it not for ears that hear, eyes that shine, I would tell you what would fill you with dread.' Then he went on, 'Nowhere have I slept in peace, O Ibn Ghawt, without a morning arriving for us.'

"He went on: 'And then he screamed like a woman in labour. Dawn then broke and I went to look. And what I saw was a small iguana and a snake, both dead.

"It was only through this incident that I learned that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had migrated to Medina."

Abū Nu'aym then related this story from Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar, from Ibrāhīm b. ʿAlt, from al-Naḍr b. Salama, from Ḥassān b. ʿUbāda b. Mūsā, from ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd b. Bahram, from Shahr, from Ibn Abbās, from Saʿd b. ʿUbāda, as follows, "After we pledged our allegiance to the Messenger of God (SAAS) on ʿAqaba night, I left for Ḥadramawt on business. That having been concluded, I started back. Some distance along the way I fell asleep and awoke in a fright to hear a voice shouting, 'O Abū ʿAmr, insomnia has afflicted me, sleep has fled and my slumber is interrupted.'" And he recounted the whole incident as given above.

Abū Nu'aym stated that Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar related to him, quoting Ibrāhīm b. ʿAlt, quoting al-Naḍr b. Salama, quoting Abū Ghaziyya Muḥammad b. Mūsā, from al-ʿAttāb b. Khalīd al-Wassābī, from Khalīd b. Saʿīd, from his father, who said that he heard Tamīm al-Dārī say, "I was in Syria when the Messenger of God (SAAS) received his mission. I left on some business and on the way night fell. I said, 'I claim to be under the protection of the chief spirit of this valley for this night.' When I went to bed, I heard someone I could not see calling out, 'Seek God's protection. For no spirit can give anyone protection from God.' By God,' I exclaimed, 'what are you saying?' The voice replied, 'The Messenger of the ummis, the Messenger of God, has come forth. We prayed behind him at al-Ḥajān. We accepted Islam and became his followers. The tricks of the demon-spirits are over, and they have been pelted with shooting stars. Hurry to Muḥammad, the Messenger of the Lord of the worlds, and accept Islam.'"

Tamīm went on, "When morning came I went on to Ayyīb's monastery, where I asked to see a monk and told him what had happened. He said, 'They spoke the truth to you. He is leaving the holy place, and the place where he is migrating is holy. He is the best of prophets. Do not let anyone beat you to him.'"

Tamīm continued, "I took the trouble to travel hurriedly until I reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) and then accepted Islam."

Ḥātim b. Ismāʿīl stated, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Yazīd al-Hudhali, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Saʿīd al-Hudhali, from his father, who said, "We were at our idol named Suwāʿ, having brought some sheep of ours to him. They consisted of 200 ewes that were afflicted with mange. We brought them close to him seeking his blessing. Then I heard a voice calling out from the belly of the idol, 'The tricks of the demon-spirits are no more; we have been pelted with shooting stars—all for a Prophet whose name is Ahmad!’

‘You have misled us, by God!’ I exclaimed. I turned the face of my sheep away, urging them towards my people, and I then saw a man who told me of the appearance of the Prophet (SAAS).’

Abū Nuʿaym mentioned this account as such, without elaboration. He then stated that ‘Umar b. Muhammad b. Ja‘far related to him, quoting Ibrāhim b. al-Sindī, quoting al-Naḍr b. Salama, quoting Muḥammad b. Maslama al-Makhzūmī, quoting Yaḥyā b. Sulaymān, from Ḥakīm b. ʿAṭā al-Zafārī, who is of Banū Sulaym, descended from Rāshid b. ‘Abd Ṭabīh, from his father, from his grandfather, from Rāshid b. ‘Abd Ṭabīh, who said, “The idol known as Suwā‘ was at al-Mi‘lät, one of a group worshipped by the tribes of Hudhayl and Banū Zafar b. Sulaym.” Banū Zafar dispatched Rāshid b. ‘Abd Ṭabīh with a gift for Suwā‘ from Sulaym.

Rāshid went on, “At dawn I attended an idol before the idol Suwā‘. As I did so, all of a sudden a voice rang out from its belly, ‘How strange! How very strange that a prophet should come forth from the family of ‘Aḥd al-Muḥib who would ban fornication, usury and sacrificing to idols! And the skies are being guarded and we are being pelted by shooting stars! How strange! How very strange!’ Then another idol screamed out from deep within itself, ‘Al-Dimār has been abandoned, and he used to be worshipped! The Prophet Ahmad has come forth. He says the prayers, orders the payment of alms, fasting, piety, and kindness to relatives.’ Then another voice shouted from the belly of another idol:

‘He who has inherited the prophethood and the true religion after Mary’s son is of Quraysh, rightly guided

A prophet come to inform of what is past, and what is today the truth, or tomorrow.’”

Rāshid went on: “Next dawn I attended Suwā‘ and there were two jackals licking all around it and eating what had been sacrificed to it. And they were directing their urine on to it.”

At this Rāshid b. ‘Abd Ṭabīh spoke the verse:

“Is this a lord upon whose head two jackals urinate? Whoever has jackals urinate upon him is disgraced!”

“This occurred at the time of the emergence of the Prophet (SAAS), his migration to Medina and his acceptance by the people. And so Rāshid left and made his way to the Prophet (SAAS) in Medina, taking along a dog he had with him. Now at that time Rāshid’s name was Zālim, tyrant, evil-doer, and that of his dog Rāshid, rightly guided. The Prophet (SAAS) asked him what his name was. He replied ‘Zālim’. ‘And what is your dog’s name?’ ‘Rāshid,’ he replied.
‘Well,’ said the Prophet (SAAS), ‘Now your name is Rashid and your dog’s Zalim!’ And the Prophet (SAAS) laughed.

“And so Rashid pledged his allegiance to him and remained in Mecca with him. He then made a request to the Messenger of God (SAAS) to receive the land fees for Wahat, and he described it to him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) gave him the land fees right for the heights above Wahat, along with control over sha’ma al-faras, the ‘horse bridle’, monument and over the rituals there of throwing stones at it three times. He presented him with a waterskin filled with water and spat in it. He told him, ‘Empty it out at the top of the tract, and don’t deny people access to its overflow.’ And so he did. He therefore channelled the water into an open ditch which still flows to this day. Around it he planted palm trees. It is said that all Wahat uses it for their water supply and that the people there call it ‘the water of the Messenger of God (SAAS).’ The people of Wahat also wash in it. Rashid’s stone-casting site was attended by many travelling parties, called the ‘caravans of the stone’. One morning Rashid went to Suwaţ and demolished it.”

Abû Nu’aym stated that Sulaymân b. Aḥmad related to him, quoting ‘Ali b. Ibrâhîm al-Khuzâ‘i al-Ahwâzi, quoting Abû Muḥammad ʿAbd Allâh b. Dâwûd b. Dalhâth b. Ismâ‘îl b. Muṣṣîr b. Yâsîr b. Suwayd, the Companion of the Messenger of God (SAAS), from his father, from his father Dalhâth from his father Ismâ‘îl, that the father of the last-mentioned, ʿAbd Allâh, related to him from his father Muṣṣîr b. Yâsîr that his father Yâsîr related to him, from ʿAmr b. Murra al-Juhannt who used to tell the following, “Once, before Islam, I went on pilgrimage with a party from my tribe. At Mecca, during my sleep, I saw a blinding light emitting from the ka‘ba, so strong that it lit up Mt. Yathrib and the mountains overlooking the town. I heard a voice in the light that said, ‘The shadows have been dispelled, the light now shines bright, and the last of the prophets has been sent.’

“Then another light shone forth by which I could see the castles of al-Ḥîra and Chosroe’s palace. I also heard a voice in the light that called out, ‘Islam has appeared, the idols have been demolished and reconciliation has come.’

“I awoke with a start and said to my people, ‘By God, in this Quraysh quarter something tremendous is going to happen!’ And I told them what I had seen. When we got back home a man arrived who told us that someone named Aḥmad had received a mission. I went to that man, and told him what I had seen. He told me, ‘O ʿAmr b. Murra, I have been dispatched to all mankind to invite them into Islam, to command them not to shed blood, to bring about reconciliation, to worship God, to reject the idols, to make pilgrimage to the ka‘ba, and to fast one month in twelve, Ramadân that is. For those who respond there will be paradise. Whoever disobeys will go to the fire. So you, ʿAmr b. Murra, you believe and God will spare you from the fires of hell.’
“I therefore said, ‘I bear witness that there is no God but God and that you are the Messenger of God. I believe in all you have brought us regarding what is lawful and what is disallowed, even though that will give offence to many people.’ I then recited to him some verses I had composed when I had heard of him. We used to have an idol, and my father was its guardian. I went to it and demolished it and then joined up with the Prophet (SAAS). I recited,

‘I bore witness that God is truth and that I will be the first to abandon the stone idols;
I then hurried to depart to you, travelling over ravines and flat lands towards you.
To attend the very best of men in spirit and in ancestry, the messenger of man’s sovereign above the stars.’

“The Prophet (SAAS) responded, ‘Welcome indeed, 0 ‘Amr b. Murra.’ I replied, ‘O Messenger, may my father and mother be sacrifice for you! Send me back to my own people, so that God may give me to benefit them as he has given you to me.’

“So he did send me to them, saying, ‘Speak only what is right; do not be harsh, nor arrogant, nor envious.’

“When I went to my people, I told them, ‘O you, Banû Rifâ‘a, and you too, Banû Juhayna, I am a messenger to you from the Messenger of God. I invite you to paradise and warn you of the fire. I command you not to shed blood, to encourage reconciliation, to worship God, to reject the idols, to make pilgrimage to the ka’ba, to fast during Ramadân, one month in twelve. Those who respond will go to paradise. Those who disobey will go to the fires. O people of Juhayna, God, all praise be to Him, has made you better than your forebears. He made you hate, in your state of ignorance, the obscene practices which others have found acceptable. They used to unite two sisters, men would marry their fathers’ wives, and they would allow warfare during the sacred month. So respond to this Prophet (SAAS) sent to you from Banû Lu‘ayy b. Ghâlib, and you will attain respect on earth and honour in the hereafter. Hurry! Hurry to do this, so that you will find favour with God.’

“They did all respond, except for one man. He arose and said, ‘O ‘Amr b. Murra, may God embitter your life for you! Do you order us to reject our gods and break apart our community by abandoning the religion of our forefathers in favour of what this Qurayshite from Tihâma advocates? No; and you are neither welcome nor honoured here!’ He then spoke the verses, ‘Ibn Murra has come here and made a speech, but it’s not a speech of someone wanting goodness.

I consider his words and deeds will be one day, however long the wait, mere winds.
Are we to deprecate our elders now gone? Whoever seeks for that will never achieve success.’
“To that ‘Amr b. Murra responded, ‘Whoever is the liar, may God embitter his life, silence his tongue, and blind his sight!’

‘Amr b. Murra went on: ‘And by God, by the time he died his mouth had dropped, he had lost all taste for food, and he was blind and dumb.’

‘Amr b. Murra and those others of his people who had accepted Islam then went to the Prophet (SAAS). He welcomed and honoured them and wrote for them a document, the text of which was as follows, ‘In the name of God, the most Merciful, the most Beneficent, this document is from God through the tongue of the Messenger of God and is a trustworthy document, a spoken truth, (sent) with ‘Amr b. Murra al-Juhani to Juhayna b. Zayd: “You shall have the low-lying flat and fertile lands and the sides and backs of the valleys, and all their vegetation and their pure water to drink. Provided that you forsake one fifth (of the harvest), and perform the five daily prayers. Your rich shall pay alms (to the poor): one ewe for each forty sheep, and one ewe for each five camels, or two ewes for any combination thereof. The rich shall not be eligible to receive charity. The Muslims present here witness this document (written by) Qays b. Shammâs, may God bless them all.’”

That was when ‘Amr b. Murra spoke the following verses,

“Did you not see that God has made his religion apparent and made plain the proof of the Qurâân to ‘Amir,

A document from the Merciful one, a light for our community and our descendants in desert and town alike.

To the best of all walking on the earth, its very best when troubles loom thick.

We obeyed the Messenger of God when the enemy tribes were torn apart by sharp swords and valiant knights.

We are a tribe walled about by our glory, when during warfare the heads of great men are brought in.

We are the warriors, entertain the battle with strong arms and shining swords in the hands of our valiant raiders;

Around him you see the ansâr, his followers, protecting their prince with their spearpoints and the flats of their swords;

When warfare goes on at every great event, grinding with its mill the strongest of lions,

His complexion remains serene, his face gleaming like the light of the full moon amidst the stars.”

Abû Uthmân Sa‘îd b. Yahyâ al-Umawi stated in his Maghâzî collection that ʿAbd Allâh related to him, quoting Abû ʿAbd Allâh, quoting al-Mujâlîd b. Sa‘îd, and al-Ajlâh, from al-Shi‘bî, quoting a sheikh of Juhayna, who said, “One of our men became extremely sick, so ill that we dug his grave and prepared to bury him. He passed out, then opened his eyes and came to again and asked, ‘Have you dug my grave?’ ‘Yes,’ we told him. He then asked, ‘What did al-Fusâl do?’
making reference to a cousin of his. We replied, ‘Ṣāliḥ passed by a while ago and asked after you.’ ‘He’s soon going to be put in my grave; a spirit came to me after I became unconscious and said, “Weep to Hubal; don’t you see your grave is being made ready and that your mother is almost bereft of you? What do you think? Supposing we were to reverse it away from you and then filled the grave with stones and threw in it al-Fuṣal who passed by and said he would take your place, thinking he would not do so. Will you thank your Lord and pray and abandon the religion of those who worship idols and who go astray?” “Yes,” I replied. The voice said, “Get up; you are made healthy.”’”

He went on, “So the man was cured and al-Fuṣal died and was put in his grave.”

Al-Juhayni stated, “And I saw that man of the Juhayna tribe after that; he was praying, cursing the idols and striking them.”

Al-Umawi said that ‘Abd Allāh related to him, saying that once, when Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, God be pleased with him, was in a gathering where they were discussing the spirits Khuraym b. Fāṭir al-Asadi said, “Should I tell you how I came to adopt Islam?” “Yes, do,” he said.

“I was once searching for a young she-camel of mine, following a trail of hers that went up and down till finally I was at Abraq al-‘Azṣaf. There I tied my camel-mount down and spoke the words, ‘I claim protection from the chief spirit of this place; I claim protection from the leader of this valley.’ When I had done so, a voice called out the following verses,

‘Woe to you! Seek protection with the Lord of majesty, glory, exaltation, and precedence
And then recite verses from (sūrat) al-Anfāl, saying that God is One, and do not worry.’

“I was dumbfounded, but once regaining my wits, I said,
‘O voice what is it you say? Is it truth you have, or falsehood? Make plain, may God guide you, what is the way?’

“It spoke again:

‘This is the Messenger of God, he who does good deeds, at Yathrib, who calls to salvation,
Who commands piety, prayer and restrains people from sins.’

“I said, ‘I’ll not rest till I come to him, and believe in him.’ I then set my foot in the stirrup of my mount and spoke the verses, ‘Guide me, guide me on the right course, may you never hunger or lack shelter so long as you live.

May you never cease being a lord of strength; don’t keep the good you were granted from all the spirits as long as you live.’
"He replied,

'May God accompany you and lead your mount; may He enhance your wage and protect your soul;

Believe in Him, may my Lord grant you success, and give him a great victory as he will you.'

"Who are you; may God forgive you. Tell me so I can inform him when I come to him.' He replied, 'I am Malik b. Malik and am his chief over the spirits of Naṣībin. Your camel is being protected until I reunite it with your people, if God wills it.'"

The narrator went on, "So I travelled on till I reached Medina; it was a Friday and people were on their way to the mosque. There the Prophet (SAAS) was upon the minbar, the pulpit, looking wonderful as he addressed the congregation. I told myself I would make my camel kneel at the door of the mosque until he prayed. Then I would go in to him, accept Islam and tell him of it. When I had set my camel down, out to me came Abī Dhar who said, 'Welcome, indeed welcome! We heard of your having become a Muslim, so come on in and pray.'

"I did so, and later went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and he told me of my accepting Islam. I commented, 'Praise be to God!' He said, 'By the way, your friend did keep faith with you, that being his nature. He did lead your camel back to your people.'"

He then recounted it as above except for saying, "Then Abū Bakr al-Ṣiddīq, 'the trusting', came out and said, 'Come inside. We have heard about your accepting Islam.' I replied, 'But I don't know how to cleanse myself properly.' So he taught me how and afterwards I went in to the mosque where I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) looking really happy and saying, 'There is no single Muslim who has performed the ablutions, and done so properly, who then has prayed, learned it by heart and understood it, who will not enter paradise.'

"ʿUmar then told me, 'Bring us some proof of this (your conversion) or I will punish you severely.' So a sheikh of Quraysh, ʿUthmān b. ʿAffān, testified on my behalf and his testimony was accepted."

The same source then related this anecdote from Muḥammad b. ʿUthmān b. Abū Shayba, from Muḥammad b. Taym, from Muḥammad b. Khalīfa, from Muḥammad b. al-Ḥasan, from his father, who said, "ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb said to Khuraym b. Fāṭik, ‘Tell me some hadīth I will enjoy.’” He then related the story exactly as in the first version.

Abū Nuʿaym stated that Sulaymān b. ʿAlāmah related to him, quoting Abū ʿAbd al-Malik ʿAlāmah b. Ibrāhīm al-Qurashi al-Dimashqī, quoting Sulaymān b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān, the son of ʿArabahlī’s daughter, quoting Ismāʿīl b. Ayyāsh, from ʿAlī b. Abī Ṭālib, from Abū ʿAmr al-Shaybānī, from Abū l-ʿAbd Allāh al-Daylami, who said that a man came to Ibn ʿAbbās and said, “We have heard that you, in reference to Saṭīḥ, maintain that God created him. But why would He have created of mankind anyone like him?” He replied, “Yes, God did create Saṭīḥ al-Ghassānī out of flesh over strips of palm bark. He had no bones or sinews except for his skull and his two hands. He was folded over from his feet to his collarbone as a robe is folded; the only part of him that moved was his tongue. When he wanted to travel to Mecca, he was carried on a board and brought there. Four men of Quraysh went out to greet him, they being ‘Abd Shāms and Hāshim, the sons of ʿAbd Manāf b. Qusayy, al-ʿAshāb b. Fīhr, and ʿUqayl b. Abū Wāqqas. They pretended different identities and told him, ‘We are men of Jumāh who have come to you. We heard of your arrival so thought we would come to you; our doing so is a right of yours and a duty of ours.’ ʿUqayl presented him with an Indian platter and a straight Rudaynī lance which were placed by the door of the holy kaʿba to determine whether or not Saṭīḥ would see them.

“Saṭīḥ spoke: ‘O ʿUqayl, give me your hand.’ ʿUqayl did so and Saṭīḥ continued, ‘O ʿUqayl, by the hidden world, by Him whoforgives sins, by the pact that is fulfilled and by the kaʿba that is built, you have presented me with a gift, the Indian platter and the straight Rudaynī spear.’ They replied, ‘You are right, O Saṭīḥ!’ He then said, ‘By Him who brings joy, by the rainbow, by all other joys, by the orphan lying prostrate, by the palm trees, the fresh plants, and by the dates, the crow as it passed by presented itself and made known that your group is not of Jumāh, and that their ancestry is of great Quraysh.’ They replied, ‘You are right, O Saṭīḥ! We are of those who guard the holy kaʿba; we have come to visit you because of what we have learned of your knowledge. So tell us what will happen in this time of ours and what will come hereafter; perhaps you do have knowledge of that.’”

He replied, “Now you are telling the truth! Take the following from me and from what God has inspired me with. You, O Arabs, are in the age of senility; your mental perception is the same as that of the non-Arabs. You have neither knowledge nor understanding. But from your descendants there will come people of understanding who will seek out all kinds of knowledge. They will destroy the idols, reach the dam, kill foreigners, and seek after booty.”

They then asked, “But who will those men be, Saṭīḥ?” He replied, “By the pillared house, by security, and by tranquillity, after you there will be your descendants; it is they who will destroy the idols, forbid the worship of Satan, worship the All-Merciful alone, spread the best of all religions, honour the building (the ka'ba), and ask judgements of the young heroes."

"Whose progeny will they be?" they asked.

"By the most noble of all, by Him who communicates with the nobles, by Him who moves the winding dunes, by Him who multiplies by doubling, thousands will arise from the line of 'Abd Shams and 'Abd Manaf, and there will be disputation over this."

"O Sâthî," they commented, "what misery there will be for them, from what you tell us you know. From what land will those men come?"

He replied, "By Him who will remain everlasting, by Him who will reach eternity, there will come forth from this land a young man who will guide to what is right, who will reject the idol Yaghîth and illusion, who will be innocent of worshipping what is repugnant; he will worship one Lord alone. And then God will cause him to die, with all praise. From the earth he will be missed; in heaven he will be witnessed. After him al-ṣiddiq ("the trusting", i.e. Abî Bakr) will come to rule; when he judges he speaks the truth and in restoring right he is neither foolish nor intemperate. Then he will be followed to power by al-ḥanîf, ("the true believer", i.e. the Caliph Umar), he who puts to the test and is lordly, a man who disavows violent language, who gives hospitality to guests, and who is wise and prudent in his judgements. Then there will follow him a man who will be demanding and invite others to the cause, and various groups and factions will assemble about him. Then they will kill him out of envy and rage; the old man will be seized and hacked to pieces and men will speak orations over him. Then will follow al-nâṣir, "the protector", a man who will confuse right opinion with that of the unfriendly ones. Soldiers will rule over the earth. Then after him his son will reign, and take what he gathers yet gain little praise. He will consume his wealth and eat alone. Those after him of his progeny will expand that wealth. Following him will rule a number of kings; doubtless there will be much blood spilled over them. After them will come the beggars, who will soon be folded up like cloth. Then will come a strong and ruthless man, who destroys justice, subjugates Egypt and conquers the earth with brutality. Then will come a man short of stature, who will have a mark on his back, die violently and so good-bye! Then for a while a young man will rule who will leave the kingdom ruined. His brother will succeed him and continue the same way, concerning himself with wealth-gathering and speech-making. After him a fool will rule, a worldly, comfort-loving and spoiled man. His intimates and family will advise him, then rise up against him, depose him from rule and kill him. Then after him will rule al-sâhî, "the seventh", who will leave the kingdom a wasteland. His sons in his rule will be like those who are deformed, all of them. After that, every destitute fellow will hunger for rule. He will be followed by the greedy one. A group of Qaḥṭān will favour Nizār when they meet at Damascus, in two groups between Bunyān and Lubnān. Yemen at that time will consist of two parties, those engaging in consultation, and those holding back. Nothing will be seen except failure and disintegration, prisoners in chains surrounded by swords and horses. Thereafter dwellings will be demolished, widows will be plundered, pregnant women will miscarry, and earthquakes will occur. Wā’il will seek the Caliphate and Nizār will be furious. Slaves and evil men will be favoured, while the best of men will be in disfavour. Prices will rise, in the month of Safar, and people will kill each other. Then they will move into trenches which will have hair-cloth and trees to block the rivers, and he will defeat them early in the day. The best will appear, but neither sleep nor decision will avail them. (This will continue) until he enters one of the chief cities, where death and fate will overcome him. The archers will come and assemble on foot, to kill the mail-clad warriors and to capture the defenders. The evil-doers will perish; there he will be seized, at the headwaters. Then religion will die out, all things fall into disarray, the Scriptures are disbelieved, the bridges are demolished, and the only ones who escape are those on islands in the seas. Then the seeds will go bad, the bedouin will appear, there not being among them anyone to warn them against what is immoral and sinful, at a time of great difficulty, if people had decency, but alas! Wishful thinking will do no good.”

They asked, “What then, Satīh?” He replied, “Then there will appear a man from the people of Yemen, a man like a strong, thick rope, and through him God will abolish dissension.”

The above material is a strange relic. We have recorded it here for its peculiarity, and for the references to the dissensions and battles it includes.

The story of Shiqq and Satīh with Rabi‘a b. Naṣr, king of Yemen, and how he announced the coming of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) has been given above. Similarly we already recounted the story of Satīh with his nephew ʿAbd al-Maṣīḥ, when the king of the Banū Sāsān sent him when the palace was shaken, the fires were extinguished, and the high priest had his visions. All that occurred on the night of the birth of him who, by his shari‘a, superseded all other religions.

CHAPTER ON THE MANNER OF THE BEGINNING OF THE REVELATION TO THE MESSENGER OF GOD (ṢAAS) AND AN ACCOUNT OF THE FIRST REVELATION TO HIM FROM THE GLORIOUS QUR‘ĀN.

This occurred when he was 40 years of age.

Ibn Jarir recounted, from Ibn ʿAbbās and Saʿīd b. al-Musayyib, that his age at the time was 43.
Al-Bukhari stated that Yahya b. Bukayr related to him, quoting al-Layth, from Uqayl, from Ibn Shihab, from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, from 'A'isha, God be pleased with her, who said, “The first indication of revelation to the Messenger of God (SAAS) came in the form of true visions in his sleep. Every vision he had came like the breaking of dawn.

“He then developed a liking for solitude. He would spend time alone in the cave Hiraz, where he would seek religious purification through devotions. He would stay there many nights and then return to his family for more provisions to continue doing so; then he would come down to Khadija and repeat the same.

“Eventually the truth came to him while he was there in that cave Hiraz.

“The angel came and told him, ‘Read!’ He replied, ‘I don’t read.’ He then said, ‘The angel then overpowered me and choked me until I could bear it no more, and then he released me. Again he said, ‘Read!’ Again I replied, ‘I don’t read.’ Once more he overpowered me and choked me till I could bear it no more, then he released me and said, ‘Read!’ I replied, ‘I don’t read.’ Again he overpowered me and choked me a third time until I could bear it no more. Then he released me and said, ‘Read in the name of your Lord who created; He created man from a clot. Read! Your Lord is the most noble, He who taught by the pen. He taught man what he did not know’ (sura al-'Alaq, XCVI, v.1-5).

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) returned home with this, his heart palpitating. He went in to Khadija, daughter of Khuwaylid, and said, ‘Wrap me up! Wrap me up!’ They did so until the terror left him.

“He then spoke to Khadija, telling her what had happened, saying, ‘I was afraid for myself.’

“Khadija replied, ‘Oh no! I swear by God He would never abuse you. You maintain family ties, you are hospitable to guests, you support the weak, provide for the poor and help out when tragedy strikes.’

“Khadija then hurried off with him to Waraqah b. Nawfal b. Asad b. 'Abd al-Uzza, who was her cousin. He had earlier become a Christian, and used to write the Hebrew script, copying out from the Bible in Hebrew whatever God inspired him to write. He was an old man by then, and he was blind.

“Khadija told him, ‘O cousin! Listen to your nephew!’ Waraqah then addressed him, ‘O nephew, what did you see?’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then told him what he had seen. Waraqah commented, ‘This was the angel Gabriel who used to come down to Moses. How I wish I were a young man again! I hope I am still alive when your people exile you!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) exclaimed, ‘Are they to exile me?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied, ‘no one has ever received what you have without being treated as an enemy. If I am alive when your time comes, I will give you every help.’

“Not long thereafter Waraqah died, and the revelation waned for a period, so that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was so depressed – as we have been told – that he would frequently feel like throwing himself down from the summits of high mountains. Whenever he reached the top of a mountain, to throw himself down, Gabriel would appear and say, ‘O Muhammad, you are in truth the Messenger of God!’ This would relieve his distress and he would return down. And if the inspiration was again long in coming, he would feel and do the same.”

Another account gives the same wording, except that it substitutes the word “when” for the word “whenever” above.

The account is given in full in this way in the Bab al-Ta‘bir (The Chapter on Expression) in al-Bukhari’s work.

Ibn Shihab stated that Abu Salama b. ‘Abd al-Rahman informed him that Jabir b. Abd Allah al-Ansari said, in relating matters concerning the revelation period, that the Prophet (SAAS) said, “While I was walking, I heard a voice from the sky. I raised my sight and there was the angel who had come to me at Hira' seated on a throne between the sky and the earth. I was terrified and returned home, saying, ‘Wrap me up! Wrap me up!’ And so God revealed the verse, ‘O you who are all wrapped up! Arise and give warning! And glorify your Lord! Purify your garments! And shun idolatry!’ (sura al-Muddaththir, LXXIV, v.1–5). And the revelation became stronger and continued uninterrupted.”

Al-Bukhari added that ‘Abd Allah b. Yusuf and Abu Salih gave this tradition a further link, from al-Layth. And Hilal b. Raddad added a link, from al-Zuhri. Yunus and Ma'mar, moreover, gave in the prior text the word bawadir, “emotions”, in place of the word fidad, “heart”.

This tradition was related by Imam al-Bukhari, God be pleased with him, in various parts of his work. We have discussed it at length in our first commentary on al-Bukhari, in the book on The Beginnings of the Revelation, in terms of both its chain of authorities and its text. And to God is all praise and grace.

In his Sahih collection, Muslim derives this tradition from an account of al-Layth, and through Yunus and Ma'mar from al-Zuhri, just as al-Bukhari attributes it to their authority. In our own commentaries we referred to the additions made by Muslim and to his accounts of it. And to God be praise. Muslim’s account of the above goes as far as the above words of Waraqa, “I will give you every help.”

The statement, given above, of ‘A’isha, mother of the believers, that, “the first indication of revelation to the Messenger of God (SAAS) came in the form of true visions. Every vision he had came like the breaking of dawn” corroborates what Muhammad b. Ishaq b. Yasir related from Ubayd b. Umayr al-Laythi, to the effect that the Prophet (SAAS) said, “And Gabriel brought me while I was asleep a piece of silk brocade cloth with writing on it. He told me, ‘Read!’ I replied, ‘What should I read?’ Thereupon he choked me till I thought it meant death. But then he released me.” He related the rest of ‘A’isha’s statement in the same words.
This came as a prelude to the awakening that followed. The Prophet (SAAS) is reported to have expressly stated this in the book on the maghāzi, the military campaigns, by Mūsā b. Uqba, from al-Zuhri; therein it states that he saw all that in a dream, and that the angel appeared to him thereafter when he was awake.

The ḥāfiz Abu Nuʿaym al-ʿAsbahānī stated in his work Dalāʾil al-Nubuwwa (Signs of the Prophethood) as follows, “Muḥammad b. Aḥmad b. al-Ḥasan related to us, quoting Muhammad b. ʿUthman b. Abū Shayba, quoting ʿJanāb b. al-Ḥārīth, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. al-ʿAjlaḥ, from ʿIbrāhīm, from ʿAlqama b. Qays, who said, ‘The first visitation to prophets is during their sleep, so that they will remain calm; revelation comes thereafter.’ This comment comes directly from ʿAlqama b. Qays himself. It is an appropriate one that is substantiated by both what preceded and what followed it.”

Imām Aḥmad stated that Muḥammad b. Abū ʿAdī related to him, from Dāwūd b. Abū Hind, from ʿAmir al-Ṣaḥḥī, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) received his mission when he was 40 years old. The angel Iṣrāʾīl was entrusted with his prophethood for three years, during which he would teach him words and facts; the Qurʿān was not revealed then. After those three years Gabriel was entrusted with his prophethood and the Qurʿān was revealed through his voice over a 20-year period, 10 in Mecca and 10 in Medina. The Prophet (SAAS) died when he was 63 years old.

This chain of authorities back to al-Ṣaḥḥī is a correct one. It establishes that Iṣrāʾīl was entrusted with him for a 3-year period after his age of 40, and that Gabriel came thereafter.

Sheikh Shihāb al-Dīn Abū Shāma, however, has stated, “ʿAʾisha’s account does not refute this. It is possible that first of all he did receive visions, and that Iṣrāʾīl was put in charge of him during the period he spent alone in Ḥīrāʾ, casting words at him at speed and not actually staying with him, and teaching him gradually. This was so until Gabriel came to him and taught him, after having throttled him three times. And so ʿAʾisha related what had happened to him with Gabriel and did not tell what had occurred with Iṣrāʾīl in order to shorten the account. Or she did not know about the story of Iṣrāʾīl.”

Imām Aḥmad stated that Yahyā b. Hīṣām recounted to him, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās who said, “The Qurʿān was revealed to the Prophet (SAAS) when he was 43 years of age. He stayed in Mecca for 10 years and lived in Medina for 10. He died at the age of 63.”

Yahyā b. Saʿīd and Saʿīd b. al-Muṣayyib related the same. Then both Aḥmad b. Ghundar and Yazīd b. Hārūn related from Hīṣām, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn Abū Shāma stated, “The Messenger of God used to see strange visions before his mission.”

On this same subject there is the material in the sahīh collection of Muslim, on the authority of Jābir b. Samura, who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, “I know a rock in Mecca that would greet me before I received my mission. I still know it now.” The statement ended thus.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) only preferred the seclusion and being alone from his people because of the clear error in which he saw them engaged. This was in their worshipping and prostrating before idols. His liking for being alone increased as God’s revelation to him came closer (SAAS).

Muḥammad b. Ishāq recounted, from ʿAbd al-Mālik b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Sufyān b. al-ʿAlāʾ b. Ḥāritha—who was, he said a very attentive listener—from a certain scholar who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) used to go out to Ḥiraʾ for one month every year and pray alone, he being one of those Quraysh men who would, in the ḥijājyya, practise this prayer in seclusion. He would feed the poor who would come to him. Having left there he would not re-enter his own home without first circumambulating the kaʿba.”

This was related similarly from Wahb b. Kaysān, to the effect that he heard ʿUbayd b. Umayr telling ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zubayr a similar account.

This shows that it was a custom for religious-minded men of Quraysh to go and stay on Ḥiraʾ for prayer. This is why Abū Ṭalib spoke the following line in his famous ode:

“By Thawr and by Him who established Thabīr in its place, and by those who ascend to Ḥiraʾ, and then descend.”

This is the correct form for the recitation of this verse, as mentioned by al-Suhaylī, Abū Shāma and our Sheikh, the hāfiẓ Abū al-Ḥajjāj al-Mizzi, God be pleased with them all. Some reciters made a mistake in this verse, making it read, “and by those who go up to ascend in ḥar, ‘heat’, and descend.” This version is weak and incorrect. Though God alone knows best.

The word Ḥiraʾ is sometimes treated as contracted or lengthened, declined or indeclinable. It is a mountain in the heights over Mecca, three miles distant from... it, to the left side of the path to Minā. It has a summit that overlooks the ka'ba to one side, and the cave is on that side. How splendid is the verse of Ru'ba b. al-'Ajja:

“But no, by the Lord of the secure (pigeons) dwelling (at the ka'ba), and by the Lord of a corner Ḥirā', sloping downwards . . .”

The explanation (by al-Bukhārī) that al-Tahannuth means devotion, is one interpreted from the context. Otherwise, the truth of al-Tahannuth, as interpreted from its form, lies in what al-Suhaylī suggested, namely, “entering into al-hinth”, i.e. sin or perjury. However, a few words in the language were heard to mean “the departure from” rather than “entering into”. These words have a form like the verb tahannatha, i.e. “he left the state of hinth”. Examples would be tahawwaba, i.e. “he abstained from crime”, and taharraja, i.e. “he kept away from sin”, and ṭawaththama, i.e. “he abstained from iniquity”. Similarly there is tahaqṣada, a word meaning to give up al-hujūd, sleep to attend prayer. Also there are tanajjasa, “he left an impure state”, i.e. he cleaned himself, and tagadhbara, “he avoided foul actions”. Abū Shāma cited this example.

Ibn al-Aʿrābī was asked about his interpreting yatahannathu as meaning “he performs his devotions”, and he replied, “Well, I don’t actually know that, but there is the example of yatahannafu, derived from the word al-hanifyya, signifying the religion of Abraham, peace be upon him.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “The Arabs say al-tahannuth and al-tahannuf (as having the same meaning), where the letter f has replaced the letter th. This is similar to the change from jaddafa to jadhdafa, both meaning “he rowed a boat”. As Ru'ba's verse goes, “. . . if my stones were with al-ajdāf . . .”, by which he means al-ajdāth (the graves).

Abū Ḫubayda related to me that the bedouin say fumma for thumma, meaning “then”.

I would add that some commentators say wa fumuhā when they mean wa thūmuhā, when referring to thūm, i.e. “garlic”.

The scholars differ over the devotion to prayer of the prophet (ṣaas) before his mission, whether he was following some religion, and what that was.

Some say that it was the religion of Noah.

Others suggest that of Abraham, it being the most similar as well as the most powerful.

Others say that of Moses, yet others that of Jesus.

Others say that all that is established is that he did have a religion, and that he followed and observed it.
For the interpretation of these statements and the circumstances in which they were made, one should look elsewhere in works on the origins of Islamic jurisprudence. But God knows best.

The words “eventually the truth came suddenly to him while he was in the cave Hirā” mean that it came to him abruptly and unexpectedly. As God stated, “And you had no hope that the Book would be delivered to you, but it is a mercy from your Lord” (ṣūrat al-Qaṣaṣ, XXVIII, v.86).

The first portion of this holy chapter, namely “Read in the name of your Lord who created; He created man from a clot. Read! Your Lord is the most noble, He who taught by the pen. He taught man what he did not know” (ṣūrat al-ʿAlaq, XCVI, v.1-5) was the first part of the Qurʾān revealed, as we established in the commentary and in what will follow; it came on a Monday.

It has been similarly affirmed in the sahih collection of Muslim, on the authority of Abū Qatāda, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was asked about fasting on Mondays. He replied, “That is a day on which I was born, and a day on which I received revelation.”

Ibn ʿAbbās stated, “Your prophet Muḥammad (ṢAAS) was born on a Monday, and he was made a prophet on a Monday.”

Ubayd b. ʿUmair, Abū Jaʿfar al-Baqir, and several other scholars similarly stated that he received revelation on a Monday; this is a matter undisputed among them.

It is said, moreover, that that occurred during the month of Rabiʿ al-Awwal; it has also been previously stated from Ibn ʿAbbās and Jābir that he was born on the 12th of Rabiʿ al-Awwal, received his mission on the same date, and also on that day he was raised to heaven.

It is also widely believed that he received his mission in Ramadān, as has been stated by Ubayd b. ʿUmair, Muḥammad b. Iṣhāq and others.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated this, using as evidence God’s statement “the month of Ramadān, during which the Qurʾān was revealed as a guidance to mankind” (ṣūrat al-Baqara, II, v.185). And it is said that this was on the 10th.

Al-Wāqidi attributed to Jaʿfar al-Baqir, to whom his chain of authorities extended, the words, “The beginning of the revelation to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) occurred on Monday, the 17th of Ramadān; others, however, say it was the 24th.”

Imām Aḥmad stated that Abū Saʿīd, a freed-man of the Banū Hāshim, related to him, quoting ʿUmrān Abū al-ʿAwwām, from Qatāda, from Abū al-Malih, from Wāthila b. al-Asqa, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “The tablets of Abraham were revealed on the first night of Ramadān, the Torah on the 6th of Ramadān, and the Bible on the 13th of Ramadān, while the Qurʾān was revealed on the 14th of Ramadān.”

Ibn Mardawayh related much the same in a tradition back to the Prophet.
(ṢAAS) that is based on the authority of Jabir b. 'Abd Allāh.

Therefore, a majority of the Companions and followers of the Prophet (ṢAAS) have concluded that the laylat al-qadr, the “night of destiny”, was the 24th.

Regarding Gabriel’s order “Read!”, the reply was, “I don’t read.” The truth is that this statement, “I don’t read”, is a negation, that is, it implies, “I am not a man who knows how to read well.” Among those who prefer this interpretation are al-Nawawi and, before him, Sheikh Abī Shiima.

Those who interpret this as interrogatory are incorrect, because the prefixed ʿād, as in mā anā biqārī, i.e. “I don’t read”, is not added if the intent is to affirm.

The first interpretation is substantiated by what Abū Nuʿaym related from a ḥadīth that comes down through al-Muʿtamir b. Sulaymān from his father who said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, fearful and shaking, “I have never read a document; I don’t do that well. I neither read nor write.” And so Gabriel seized him and choked him violently. He then released him and told him, “Read!” Muhammad (ṢAAS) then replied, “I don’t see anything to read; and I don’t read, or write.”

It is also read in the form fa ʿgaṭṭant or wa ʿgaṭṭant in the two saḥīḥ collections, or gād ʿgaṭṭant. These all mean “he choked me”. The phrase hattā balagha minni al-juhd, “till I could bear it no more”, is read either with a dāmāma or with a fāthā on the j (i.e. al-juhd or al-jahd); also with a fāthā or a dāmāma on the third letter, ḍ, for either the nominative or the accusative case (i.e. al-juhdu or al-juhda). He, Gabriel, did this to him three times.

Abū Sulaymān al-Khaṭṭābī stated, “Gabriel only did that to test his patience and to discipline him so that he would be agreeable to bear the burdens of prophethood placed upon him. Because of these burdens he would be gripped by a feverish condition and have a high temperature, that is, he would breathe hard and sweat profusely.”

Others say that Gabriel acted in this way for various reasons. He wanted to awaken him to the gravity of what was being placed upon him by treating him in such a distressing fashion. As God Almighty stated, “We are indeed placing upon you a heavy message” (ṣūrat al-Muzzammil, LXXIII, v.5). This is why, when revelation came to him, his face would turn red and he would breathe heavily and fast, like a young camel, while his forehead would stream with perspiration on an extremely cold day.

Regarding the statement quoted above, “The Messenger (ṢAAS) returned home to Khādija with this, his heart palpitating”, there is a variant reading of bawādir for the word ʿawād, “heart”, that is. Abū ʿUbaydā explains this word as referring to the flesh between the shoulder and the neck. Others interpret the word as referring to veins that tremble because of fear.

Some readings substitute the word baʿādiluḥu, singular baʿādila or baʿādil, for that which palpitates. This would refer to the area between the neck and the collarbone. Others interpret it as the base of the breast, or as the flesh of the breast. There are also other interpretations of the word.

Regarding the phrase, "Wrap me up! Wrap me up!", when his terror had calmed he asked Khadija, "What is wrong with me? What was it appeared to me?" and then related what had happened. He then said, "I was afraid for myself." This was because he had witnessed something he had never experienced or imagined before.

That was why Khadija said to him, "Be of good cheer! Oh no! I swear by God, He would never abuse you." The word for "abuse" here is from al-khizy (disgrace); others say the word is from al-huzn, meaning sadness, that is, "He would never sadden you."

This statement relates to her knowledge of the fine behaviour characteristics God had instilled in him, and that those endowed with the qualities of goodness would not be abused in this world or the hereafter.

She then made reference to those exemplary traits that made his fine character. She said, "You maintain family ties, you are truthful." The Prophet (SAAS) was famous for that among those both who agreed and disagreed with him.

The words wa tahnimu al-kalla, i.e, "you carry the burden", that is, you do so for others imply "you provide for those in need what will alleviate their burden of supporting their family."

The phrase wa taksibu al-ma'duma, translated here as "you provide for the poor", means that you hurry to do good by giving to the poor before others do so. The poor are called by the term al-ma'dum because they are lacking in their lives, their existence or "non-existence" (a meaning also of this word) being the same. As a certain poet said,

"He who is relieved by death did not die; there are those who are dead though they are still living."

Abū al-Ḥasan al-Tihāmī said, as was reported from him by al-qādi, the judge, Ḥyād, in the exegesis of Muslim,

"The poor can be considered dead, their clothing a threadbare winding-sheet, their shelter the grave."

Al-Khaṭṭābī stated, "The correct text is tuksib al-ma'dim, meaning 'you give generously to them' or that you provide earnings for the poor by giving them money by which they can live."

Our teacher, the ḥafiz Abū al-Ḥajjāj al-Mizzi, preferred to interpret "al-ma'dim" here as referring to the money being given, that is he gave money to those without it.

Some interpret this phrase to mean, "you earn by doing business with goods that are ma'dim", meaning unavailable, or valuable and scarce. But this is far-fetched and contentious and contrived without basis. Such interpretations are rarely found laudable and Ḥayād and al-Nawawi and others find these interpretations weak. But God knows best!

The words wa taqāri al-dayf translated above as “you are hospitable to guests”, mean that you honour them by offering them food and good accommodation.

The phrase tuʿīnuʿ alā nawāfiḥ al-haqq (the final word here being also given as al-khayr) translated above as “and help them out when tragedy strikes”, means that if someone is struck by misfortune, you assist them; that is, you stand by them till they find some means of livelihood.

Regarding the words, “Khadija then hurried off with him to Waraqa b. Nawfal . . . he was an old man by then, and blind.”

We gave some information concerning Waraqa in material above relating to Zayd b. 'Amr b. Nufayl, God have mercy on him. We told how he had become a Christian before the coming of Islam and how he had left and travelled to Syria accompanied by Zayd b. 'Amr, ʿUthmān b. al-Huwayrith and Ḥubayd Allāh b. Jahsh. All of these became Christians because they found Christianity to be at that time the religion closest to the truth.

Zayd b. 'Amr b. Nufayl, however, considered that there were certain innovations, changes, corruptions and interpretations that had occurred in it that prevented him from embracing it. The rabbis and monks told him, moreover, about a prophet whose time was near.

He therefore returned seeking information about this, while continuing to believe in one God, as he had before. But death cut him down before the mission of Muhammad (SAAS).

Waraqa b. Nufayl did adopt Christianity, and used to try to prognosticate it in the Messenger of God (SAAS) as we have said above, from the way in which Khadija would describe and characterize him. She told Waraqa of the fine, pure qualities he had, and of the signs and indications there were upon him.

Therefore when there occurred as above, she took the hand of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, “O Cousin, listen to what happened to your nephew.” And when the Messenger of God (SAAS) related to him what he had seen, Waraqa replied, “By the All-Glorious God, this was the angel Gabriel who came down to Moses!”

He did not mention Jesus, though he came later, after Moses, because the system of religion of Muḥammad (SAAS) was to be a completion and fulfilment of that sent to Moses, upon both of whom be peace. The valid opinion of the scholars, in what they say on this point, is that the sharīʿa complemented, and also abrogated, certain things in the system of Moses. As God said, “And so that I may make permissible to you some of what was forbidden to you” (sūrat Al-'Imrān, III, v.49).

This comment made by Waraqa is similar to that made by the spirits, namely, “O our people, we have heard a book revealed after Moses verifying what was before it, guiding to the truth and to the straight path” (sūrat al-Aḥqāf, XLVI, v.30).

Waraqa then commented, “How I wish I were a young man again!” This implies, “How I wish I were a lad endowed with faith, useful knowledge, and good work to do.”

The phrase: “I hope I am still alive when your people exile you”, implies “so that I can leave with you and help you”.

To this the Prophet (SAAS) responded, “Are they to exile me?” According to al-Suhayli he said this because to be parted from one’s homeland is very painful. To this Waraqa replied, “Yes, no one has ever received what you have received without being treated as an enemy. If I am alive when your time comes, I will give you every help.” That is, “I will strive hard to help you always.”

The words, “Not long thereafter Waraqa died” mean that his death came shortly after this event; may God have mercy on him and bless him. For what is told of him here constitutes credence in what had occurred, faith in the revelation that had come, and good intent for the future.

The Imām Aḥmad stated that Ḥasan related to him, from Ibn Lahīfa, quoting Abū al-ʿAswad, from Urwa, from Ḥāʾisha, that Khadija asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) about Waraqa b. Nawfal. He replied, “I saw him; and on him I saw white clothing. And if he were among those of hell, he would not have on white clothing.”

This chain of authorities is good, but al-Zuhri and Ḥishām related it from Urwa in an incomplete line. So God alone knows best.

The Ḥāʾīz Abū Yaʿlā recounted, from Shurayḥ b. Yūnus, from Ismāʿīl, from Mujāhid, from al-Ṣaḥḥābi, from Ḥālib b. ʿAbd Allāh, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was asked about Waraqa b. Nawfal and he replied, “I saw him; and I saw on him white clothing. I observed him in the heart of paradise and he was wearing a silken robe.”

He was asked about Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl, and he replied, “He will be resurrected on Judgement Day as one nation by himself.” He was asked about Abū Ṭalib and he replied, “I drew him forth from a deep pool in hell to a shallow shore of it.”

He was asked about Khadija because she died before the rules and ordinances prescribed in the Qurʿān. He said, “I saw her beside a river in paradise in a house made of reeds where there was no noise or hardship.”

The chain of authorities for this is good, and there are testimonies corroborating some of it in the ṣahīḥ collections. But God knows best.

The Ḥāʾīz Abū Bakr al-Bazzār stated that ʿUbayd b. Ismāʿīl related to him, quoting Abū Usāma, from Ḥishām b. Urwa, from his father, from Ḥāʾisha, who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “Do not revile Waraqa; I have seen a garden or two for him.”
Ibn 'Asākir related this similarly from a hadith of Abū Sa‘īd al-Ashajjī, from Abū Mu‘āwiyah, from Hishām, from his father, from ʿĀ'isha, and this chain of authorities is excellent. And it is also told in a similar way through a chain that is incomplete.

The two ḥufūz al-Bayhaqī and Abū Nu‘aym related in both their works entitled Dalā’il al-Nubuwwa (Signs of the Prophethood) from a hadith of Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Yūnus b. ‘Amr, from his father, from ‘Amr b. Sharaḥbil, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said to Khadija, “When I was left to myself, I heard a cry and, by God, I feared that something terrible was going to happen.”

She replied, “God forbid! He would never do anything to you! By God, you behave with loyalty, you maintain the ties of kinship, and speak truthfully.”

And when Abū Bakr came in, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was no longer there so she recounted it all to him, saying, “Good old friend, go with Muḥammad to Waraqa.”

When the Messenger of God came in, Abū Bakr took his hand and said, “Let’s go at once to Waraqa.” He asked, “Who told you?” “Khadija.” And so they went at once to Waraqa and related it to him. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, “When I am all alone I hear a voice behind me saying, ‘Muḥammad! O Muḥammad!’ So I rush off outside.” Waraqa told him, “Don’t do that. When it comes, stay right there to hear what it says to you. Then come and tell me.” And when he was alone, the voice did call out again, saying, “Muḥammad! O Muḥammad! Say, ‘In the name of God the most Merciful, the most Beneficent; praise be to God, Lord of the worlds . . .’” And it continued right on (to the end of the surat al-Fāṭiha; I) to the words, wa lā al-dālîna, ‘nor those who go astray’. It then said, “Say: ‘There is no God but God!’”

So he went to Waraqa and told him that. Waraqa replied, “Rejoice, then rejoice again! I bear witness that you are he of whom the son of Mary spoke. What you have is like what came to the angel Gabriel for Moses. You are a Prophet from God. You will be ordered into the struggle some time hereafter. And if I live that long, I will fight along with you!”

When he died the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “I saw the priest in heaven wearing silken garments, because he believed in me and believed what I said.” He was referring to Waraqa.

This text is from al-Bayhaqī, and its chain of authorities is not fully complete. It is also strange that according to this account it was the surat al-Fāṭiha (Qurʾān, I) that was revealed first.

We have given above some of the poetry of Waraqa that shows his concealed faith in him, his confidence in it and his dedication to it. This was when Khadija told him what had happened when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had been with the youth Maysara, and how the cloud had been sheltering him in the extreme heat. Waraqa spoke some verses on that occasion, as we have already given above. These were:

"I persisted, being determined to recall both a matter that often inspired my tears
And a description from Khadija, following (another) account; my waiting has been long, O Khadija.
In the heart of Mecca, with my hoping because of your words, that I would see some solution.
From what you related as the words of a priest who was a monk, words I would hate to be wrong,
That Muḥammad will one day prevail and defeat whomever opposes him
Making a light appear in the land by which he will bring change to all creation.
Those who oppose him will meet defeat, while those who aid him will achieve success.
Would that I be there to witness, for I'll be the first of them in participating.
Sharing in that which Quraysh will hate, however much they bluster in their Mecca.
I aspire, through him whom they all hate, to reach the Enthroned One, even if they descend, aside.
Is it folly to not disbelieve in Him who chooses, He who raised the stars?
If they and I survive, things will happen at which the disbelievers will be sorely discomfited."

He also spoke the following verses in another ode:

"By news of veracity you foretold of Muḥammad, telling them about him, an adviser being absent, Informing that the son of ‘Abd Allāh, Aḥmad, is sent to all men on earth.
My thought of him is that he will be sent to speak the truth, just as the two slaves Ḥūd and Ṣāliḥ were sent
And Moses and Abraham, so that a brightness will be seen and a clear emanation of the truth.
And there will follow him the two tribes of Lu‘ayy b. Ghālib, both the young men and the lordly greybeards.
And if I survive until his age arrives for man, then I will greet him in joy and love.
If not, then I will certainly, O Khadija please know this, be travelling somewhere above the broad earth."

Yūnus b. Bukayr stated, on the authority of Ibn Ishāq, that Waraqa also spoke the following:

"If it be true, O Khadija, then know that your account to us means that Aḥmad is sent.
And Gabriel will bring to him, Michael being with them both, from God a revelation that relieves the heart sent down.
Through him there will succeed those who have success through repentance, and through him will suffer those in distress, those deceived and led astray."
Two groups of them there will be: one will go to God’s gardens, and the other will be kept in pain within the enclosures of hell.

If they call out in woe therein, iron staffs will be inserted in their heads in succession, and be put in flames.

And so, glory be to Him at whose order the winds blow, and Who in all time does as He wishes,

He whose throne is above all the heavens, and He whose decrees made for those He has created may not be changed.”

And Waraqa also said,

“O for men and the changes of time and fate, though in whatever God decrees there is no change

Until Khadija calls me to tell her of a matter I see will come to people unawares.

She told me of something of which I had in the past, long, long ago already heard,

That Ahmad would be visited by Gabriel and told, “You are sent forth to humankind.”

And I replied,

“Perhaps what you wish for, God will fulfil for you; so hope for good and be patient!

Send him to us that we may question him about what it is he sees asleep, and when awake.”

So when he came to us, he gave a wondrous speech, so as to make the skin creep, and the hair stand tall.

(He said) “I saw God’s trusted servant facing me, in a figure made complete from the most magnificent of forms.

Then he continued on, while fear made me panic for what would save me from the anguish I was in.”

I said, “I think, and I don’t know if what I think will come true, that he will be sent forth to recite chapters to be revealed,

“And it will pain you if you call openly to them to engage in the struggle with neither inducement nor threat.”

In his al-Dalā‘il (The Signs) the ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī gave the text of these verses thus: I have doubts over whether they truly stem from Waraqa. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishāq stated that ‘Abd al-Malik b. ‘Abd Allah b. Abū Sufyān b. al-‘Ala’ b. Jāriyya al-Thaqafi related to him – and he had a fine ear and memory – on the authority of a scholar, that the Messenger of God (SAAS), after God wished to honour him by the beginning of the prophethood, would walk far off to do his business, out of sight of dwellings. As he went off into the pathways of Mecca and deep into its valleys, every rock and tree he passed would greet him, saying, “Peace be upon you, O Messenger of God!” Hearing this, he would turn all around yet see nothing but the trees and rocks. This situation prevailed, with him seeing and hearing as long as God wished, until ultimately Gabriel brought God's honour upon him during Ramaḍān in Ḥiraği.

Ibn Ishaq stated that Wahb b. Kaysan, the freed-man of the Zubayr tribe, related to him, that he heard 'Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr say to 'Ubayd b. 'Umayr
b. Qatāda al-Laythi, "Tell me, 'Ubayd, how was the beginning of the mission of the Messenger of God (SAAS) when Gabriel first came to him?" 'Ubayd replied, in my presence, talking to 'Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr and the others there with him, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) used to take up residence in Ḥirāği in seclusion for one month each year. This practice, known as al-tahānūth, i.e. 'pious devotion', was one performed by Quraysh before the coming of Islam.

"While the Messenger of God (SAAS) was dwelling there for that month of each year, he would feed all the poor who came to him. When the period of that month of devotion was concluded, the first thing he would do was go to the ka'ba, circumambulating around it seven times or so before proceeding to his own home.

"This was so until that month came of the year when God honoured him with his mission. That month, it being Ramaḍān, he went off as usual for his devotions at Ḥirāği, his family accompanying him. Then came the night when God did honour him with his mission, thereby having mercy on all men. Gabriel came to him then with the command of God Almighty.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'He came to me while I was asleep, carrying a brocade cloth with writing upon it. He told me, "Read!" "Read what?" I asked. He then choked me so hard I thought I would die, but he released me and said, "Read!" "Read what?" I asked, so he choked me so hard I thought I would die. He then released me and said, "Read!" I asked, "What should I read?" I only said this to spare myself his doing the same to me again.

"Then he said, "Read; in the name of your Lord who created. He created man from a clot. Read! Your Lord is the most noble, He who taught by the pen.
He taught man what he did not know."

"So I recited this, and then he had finished with me and left me. I awoke from my sleep, and it was as though a document had been inscribed into my heart."

"He went on: 'I then went off into the mountains where I heard a voice from the sky saying, "O Muḥammad, you are the Messenger of God, and I am Gabriel!"

"'I raised my head up to the sky to look, and there was Gabriel in the image of a man, with his feet placed evenly across the horizons of the sky. He was saying,
"O Muḥammad, you are the Messenger of God, and I am Gabriel."

"'I stood there looking up at him, neither advancing nor retreating, and began turning my head in all directions, but wherever I looked I still saw him.
I remained standing there thus, neither advancing nor retreating, until Khadija sent her messengers to look for me. And they went all the way to Mecca and returned again to her while I still stood there where I was. Then he (Gabriel) left me.

I now returned to my family and sat down close beside Khadija. She asked me, "Where were you, O father of al-Qasim? I swear, I sent my messengers all the way to Mecca and back looking for you."

I then told her what I had seen, and she said, "Rejoice and be brave; by Him in whose hands Khadija is, I hope you will be the prophet of this nation."

She then arose, dressed, and went off to Waraqa b. Nawfal to tell him what the Messenger of God (SAAS) had reported to her. Waraqa exclaimed, 'Holy of Holies! By Him in whose hands Waraqa is, if you have told me the truth, Khadija, the Archangel Gabriel has come to him just as he did to Moses. He is to be the prophet of this nation! Tell him to be brave!'

Khadija returned to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him what Waraqa had said.

When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had completed his period of secluded devotion, he did as always, going first to the ka'ba and circumambulating it. There he met Waraqa b. Nawfal who was also performing the circumambulation, and Waraqa asked him, 'O nephew, tell me what you saw and heard.'

He did tell him, and Waraqa commented, 'By Him who bears my soul in His hand, you certainly will be the Prophet of this nation. You have been visited by the Archangel who came to Moses. You will certainly be called a liar, reviled, sent into exile and fought. If I live till that time, I will give God my help, and He will know it.' Waraqa then brought his head down over him, and kissed him on the top of his head. The Messenger of God (SAAS) thereupon went off home.

This is the account given by Ubayd b. Umayr, just as we have told it. It serves as a prelude to the awakening that followed it, and introduces the statement of Khadija, God bless her, who said, "Whenever he saw visions they came to him as the breaking of dawn."

It is probable that this dream came after what he had seen while awake on the morning following that same night. It is also possible it came some time after that. God knows best.

Musa b. Uqba stated, from al-Zuhri, from Sa'id b. al-Musayyab, as follows, "From what we have been told, the first thing he saw - meaning the Messenger of God (SAAS) - were visions God revealed to him while he was asleep. These greatly disturbed him and he told his wife Khadija of them. God protected her from scepticism about them, opening her heart to belief. And so she said, 'Rejoice! For God has never done anything but good.'
"Thereafter he went off, but returned later to tell her how he had seen his stomach split open, and it had been washed and cleaned and all restored as before. To this she said, 'By God, I swear that this is good; so rejoice!'

"Then Gabriel appeared before him while he was on the heights above Mecca, sitting him down on a wonderful seat of honour. The Prophet (SAAS) used to say, 'He sat me down on a rug of durnak, velvet, that was decorated with pearls and precious stones.' Gabriel then announced to him the mission from God the Almighty and Glorious, and put the Messenger of God (SAAS) at ease. Gabriel then said to him, 'Read!' He replied, 'How shall I read?' Gabriel answered, 'Read: in the name of your Lord who created. He created man from a clot. Read! your Lord is the most noble, He who taught by the pen. He taught man what he did not know.'"

He went on, "And people claim that 'O you who are all wrapped up!' is the first sūrat revealed to him. But God knows best."

He went on, "And the Messenger of God (SAAS) accepted the mission from his Lord, and obeyed the commandment Gabriel had brought him from God.

"And when he was returning back home, every tree and rock he passed greeted him. And so he went back to his family in good spirits, convinced that he had seen something stupendous. When he went in to see Khadija, he said, 'You remember what I told you I saw in a vision? Well, Gabriel has now appeared plainly before me. My Lord, Almighty and Glorious is He, sent him to me.' He then told her what Gabriel had told him to do and what he had heard him say. She responded, 'Rejoice! For God will never bring you anything but good. And so accept the order that has come to you from God, for it is the truth. And rejoice, for you are in truth the Messenger of God.'"

"She then left her home and set off to visit a youth who belonged to Utba b. Rabī'ā b. 'Abd Shams, a Christian originally from Nineveh, who was called 'Addās. She said to him, 'I adjure you by God to tell me, do you have any knowledge about Gabriel?' He replied, 'Holy! Holy! How is it that mention is made of Gabriel in this land, all of whose people are idol worshippers?' She replied, 'Tell me what you know of him!' 'Gabriel', he replied, 'is God's trusty servant, God's intercessor between Himself and the prophets. He it was who accompanied Moses and Jesus, upon both of whom be peace.'

"Khadija then came back from visiting him and went to see Waraqa b. Nawfal. She told him of what had happened to the Prophet (SAAS) and what Gabriel had commanded to him. Waraqa said to her, 'O fond daughter of my brother, I just don't know. Perhaps your companion is the prophet who is awaited by the People of the Book (i.e. Scriptures), about whom they find it written in their Torah and Bible. But I swear by God, that if this is he and he openly proclaims his mission while I am still live, I will express my dedication to God by obedience to His Messenger and by giving him every assistance in maintaining fortitude and in achieving victory.'

"Thereafter Waraqa, God have mercy on him, died."

Al-Zuhri stated, "Khadija was the first person to believe in God and to give credence to His Messenger (SAAS)."

The hāfiz al-Bayhaqi stated, after having given the account we have reported above, "The reference here to his stomach being split open probably refers to his relating what was done to him when he was a boy, that is, its being opened while he was with Ḥalima. It is also possible that it was split open a second time, and then again a third, when he was transported up to heaven. But God knows best."

The hāfiz Ibn 'Asākir related in his biography of Waraqa, with a chain of authority back to Sulaymān b. Ṭarkhān al-Taymi, as follows, "We have heard that God Almighty sent Muwād as a Prophet at the start of the 50th year after the rebuilding of the ka'ba.

"The first aspect of God's making him a Prophet and honouring him, was a vision he saw. He related that to his wife Khadija, daughter of Khuwaylid, and she told him, 'Rejoice! For, I swear by God, He will never do you anything but good.'

"One day when he was in the cave Ḥira', where he would seclude himself from his people, Gabriel came down to him. As he approached, the Messenger of God (SAAS) was mightily afraid, so Gabriel placed one hand on his chest and the other on his back between his shoulders and said, 'O God, unburden him, and give him relief! Cleanse his heart! O Muḥammad, rejoice! For you are the Prophet of His nation. Read!' The Prophet of God (SAAS) then replied, trembling with fear, 'I have never read any document; I don't read well. I neither write nor read.'

"At this Gabriel took hold of him and choked him hard, then released him and said, 'Read!' And the same happened as before. Then Gabriel seated him upon a soft rug of the durrāk type of such richness and splendour as to remind him of pearls and precious stones. Gabriel then told him, 'Read: in the name of your Lord who created... and so on to the end of the verses. He then said to him, 'O Muḥammad, do not be afraid. You are the Messenger of God!'"

"Then he left. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was overcome by anxiety and he asked himself, 'What am I to do? And what can I say to my people?'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then arose afraid, but Gabriel appeared before him in all his splendour. And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw a sight that filled him with wonder, and Gabriel told him, 'O Muḥammad, be you not afraid! Gabriel is God's messenger. Gabriel is God's messenger to His prophets and His messengers. Be secure in God's nobility. You are the Messenger of God.'"
As the Messenger of God (SAAS) went home every tree and rock bowed down before him, saying, 'Peace be upon you, O Messenger of God!' And so his soul was calmed, and he was sure of God's having honoured him. When he reached his wife Khadija, she saw from his face that something had happened, and that scared her. She arose to him and, when close, began wiping his face and saying, 'You've probably been seeing and hearing things like those before today.'

He replied, 'O Khadija, you know what I've been seeing in my sleep and the voice I've been hearing while awake and that so disturbed me? It was Gabriel! He has appeared plainly before me, spoken to me and made me read some words that gave me fear. He then came back to me and told me that I am the prophet of this nation. So I came back home and on my way trees and rocks turned to me and said, “Peace be upon you, O Messenger of God!”'

Khadija said, 'Rejoice! For, by God, I well know that God will not do you anything but good. I bear witness that you are the prophet of this nation whom the Jews await. My servant Nasih and the monk Bahira both told me this and advised me more than 20 years ago to marry you.' And she stayed with the Messenger of God (SAAS) until he had eaten, drunk, and laughed.

She then went off to see the monk, who lived close by to Mecca. When she drew near and he recognized her, he said, 'What is wrong, O mistress of all the women of Quraysh?' She replied, 'I have come to you for you to tell me about Gabriel.'

He replied, 'Glory be to God, our most holy Lord! How is it that Gabriel is mentioned here, in this land whose people worship idols? Gabriel is the trusted servant of God, and his envoy to His prophets and to His messengers. It is he who was the companion of Moses and Jesus.'

And so she knew how much God was honouring Muhammad.

Then she went to a slave of Utba b. Rabia called 'Addas, and questioned him. He told her the same as the monk had, and more besides. He said, 'Gabriel was with Moses when God drowned Pharaoh and his men. He was also there when God spoke to Moses on Mt. al-Tur. And he it was who accompanied Jesus, son of Mary, and he through whom God aided Jesus.'

She then left 'Addas and went to Waraqa b. Nawfal whom she asked about Gabriel. He told her the same. He then asked her what was the matter, and she made him swear not to divulge what she would tell him. He so swore, and she told him, 'The son of 'Abd Allaha related to me - and he is truthful and never, I swear it, either told a lie or was accused of lying - that Gabriel came down to him in Hirid, told him he was the prophet of this nation, and made him recite some verses he had been sent with.'

Waraqa was dumbfounded at this, and said, 'If Gabriel has actually placed his feet upon earth, he has done so for the best of people thereupon. And he never came down for anyone except a prophet. For he is the companion of all the prophets and messengers, the one whom God sends down to them. I believe what you tell me of him. Send for `Abd Allāh’s son, so that I may question him, hear what he says and talk to him. I am afraid it may be someone other than Gabriel, for certain devils imitate him and by so doing can mislead and corrupt some men. This can result in a man becoming confused and even crazy whereas before he had been of sound mind.’

‘Khadija arose and left him, confident that God would never do anything but good to her husband. So she returned to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and told him what Waraqa had said. God Almighty then sent down the words: ‘Nūn. By the pen, and what they write! You are not, by grace of God, mad!’ and so on to the end of these verses (ṣūrat al-Qalam, LXIII, v.1). He then told her, ‘Absolutely not, by God! It was Gabriel!’ She told him, ‘I’d like you to go to him and inform him, so that God might give him guidance.’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did go to Waraqa who asked him, ‘Did he who came to you appear in lightness or in the dark?’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) described Gabriel to him and his majesty, and what he had revealed to him.

Waraqa then said, ‘I bear witness that that was Gabriel, and that these were words spoken by God. He has ordered you to convey certain things to your people. It is a matter of prophethood, and if I live on into your era, I will follow you.’ He then said, ‘Rejoice, 0 son of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib!’

The account went on, “And Waraqa’s words became widely known, along with the fact that he had given credence to the Messenger of God. This fact distressed most of his people.

“And thereafter the revelation faltered. So people said, ‘If he had come from God, he would have continued. But God is displeased with him.’ And so God sent down the sūras of al-Duḥā (XCIII) and A Lam Nashrah (al-Inshirāh, XCIV) in all their entirety.”

Al Bayhaqi stated that the ḥāfiz Abū ʿAbd Allāh related to him, quoting Abū al-ʿAbbās, quoting Ahmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbar, quoting Yūnus, from Ibn Ishaq and Ismaʿil b. Abū Ḥakīm, the freed-man of the Zubayr family, who related to him that Khadija, daughter of Khwayyfid, said once to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) regarding his explanation of how God honoured him with his prophethood, “O cousin, can you tell me about this companion who comes to you when he actually does come?” “Yes,” he replied. “Then do tell me when he comes,” she asked.

And while the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was with her, he was visited by Gabriel. When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) saw him, he said, “Khadija, this is Gabriel.” “Do you see him now?” she asked. “Yes, I do,” he replied. “Now come over and sit by my right side.” He changed his position and sat. She asked, “Do you see him now?” “Yes,” he replied. “Now change your position and sit in my lap.” When he did this, she asked, “Well, do you see him now?” “Yes,” he replied. She then exposed her head and removed her veil, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) still sat there in her lap. Then she asked, “Do you see him now?” “No,” he answered. “This is no devil then, cousin; this is an angel! Take heart and rejoice!” She then believed in him and gave witness that it was the truth he brought.

Ibn Isḥaq stated, “I told ʿAbd Allāh b. Ḥasan this story and he commented, ‘I heard my mother Fāṭima relate this account from Khadija, except that I heard her say, ‘She took the Messenger of God (SAAS) inside her shift, and it was then that Gabriel, upon whom be peace, went away.’”

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “This was something that Khadija did to settle the matter, to preserve her faith and affirm her credence.”

The Prophet (SAAS) was secure in what Gabriel had said to him, in the verses he had revealed to him which we have recounted several times, and in the fact of the trees and rocks having made salutation to him.

Muslim stated in his sahih collection that Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba related to him, quoting Yahyā b. Bukayr, quoting Ibrāhīm b. Ṭahmān, and Simāk b. Hārb, from Jaʿbir b. Samura, God be pleased with him, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “I know one rock in Mecca that used to greet me even before I received my mission; I still know it now.”

Abī Dawūd al-Tayalisi stated that Sulaymān b. Muṣādh related to him, from Simāk b. Hārb, from Jaʿbir b. Samura, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “There is in Mecca a rock that used to greet me on the nights when I was receiving my mission; I recognize it when I pass by it.”

Al-Bayhaqi related, from a tradition of Ismāʿīl b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān al-Suddī al-Kabīr, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfar b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Abī Ṭalib, God be pleased with him, who said, “We were with the Messenger of God in Mecca, walking in various parts of the town, and no tree nor mountain received him without saying, ‘Peace be upon you, O Messenger of God.’”

And in another account he said, “When I entered the valley in his company, he would not pass by a single rock or tree without its saying, ‘Peace be upon you, O Messenger of God’; I heard this.”

DIVISION

Al-Bukhārī stated in his account given above, “then the revelation waned, so that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was so depressed, as we have been told, that he would often feel like throwing himself down from the summits of high mountains. Whenever he reached the top of a mountain to throw himself down, Gabriel would appear to him and say, ‘O Muḥammad, you are in truth the Messenger of God. This would relieve his distress and he would return down. And if the revelation was again long in coming, he would feel and do the same. When he would reach the mountain summit, Gabriel would appear and speak to him as before.”

In both the sahih collections there is a tradition from ‘Abd al-Razzāq, from Ma‘mar, from al-Zuhri, who said that he heard Abū Salama ‘Abd al-Rahmān relate from Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh, who said that he heard the Messenger of God (ŚAAS) talking about the intermission in the revelation, say, “While I walked, I heard a voice from heaven. I raised my sight towards the sky and there I saw the angel who came to me in Ḥira, seated upon a throne amidst the sky. I knelt down before him in fear, right down to the ground, then went to my family and said, ‘Wrap me up! Wrap me up!’ And so God sent down, ‘O you who are wrapped up! Arise and give warning! And glorify your Lord! Purify your garments! And shun idolatry!’ (sūrat al-Mudaththir, LXXIV, v.1–5).

“He went on, ‘And then the revelation became stronger and continued uninterrupted.”

The above verse was the first of the Qur’ān sent down after the intermission in revelation, though not the very first of all, which was the verse, “Read: in the name of your Lord who created” (sūrat al-‘Alaq, XCVI, v.1).

It is established on the authority of Jābir that the first verse to be revealed was, “O you who are wrapped up.” It is perhaps appropriate to interpret his words as we have suggested, for in the sequence of what he states, there is evidence for the angel having come down earlier, as he recognized him from earlier. Moreover, in Jābir’s words making reference to the “intermission in the revelation”, there is a proof that revelation did precede this instance. But God knows best.

It is established in both the sahih collections, from an account of ‘Alī b. al-Mubarak, as well as in the works of Muslim and al-Awzā‘i, both of whom also quote Yahyā b. Abū Kathīr as having said, “I asked Abū Salama b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān, ‘Which part of the Qur’ān was revealed before?’ He replied, ‘The verse, ‘O you who are wrapped up.’”

“I asked, ‘And the verse, “Read in the name of your Lord who created?” He replied, ‘I asked Jābir b. ‘Abd Allāh which verse of the Qur’ān came earliest, and he replied, ‘It was ‘O you who are wrapped up.’ So I asked him, ‘What about “Read in the name of your Lord who created?”’ and he answered, ‘The Messenger of God (ŚAAS) said, ‘I spent a month in seclusion in Ḥira and when it was over I went down into the heart of the valley. I heard a voice calling out to me and I looked ahead, behind me and to left and right, but I saw nothing. Then I looked up at the sky and there he was, on a throne in the air. I was seized by a trembling” – or he used the word “anxiety” instead of the word “a trembling” – and went on to Khadija. She ordered them and they wrapped me..." up. And then God revealed the verse, ‘O you who are wrapped up . . .’ and so on till the verse, ‘and purify your garments.’”

According to a variant account he used the words, “And there was the angel who had come to me in Hira2 seated on a throne between the heavens and the earth, and I knelt down before him.”

This is a plain reference to his prior coming to him and to his having made revelation from God to him, as we have stated. But God knows best.

There are some who claim that the first revelation that came after the intermission was the surat beginning, “By the morning hours and by the night when it darkens, your Lord has not forsaken you, nor is He displeased” (surat al-Duha, XCIII, v.1-3) and so on to the end of the surat. This is what Muhammad b. Ishāq stated.

Some Qur'ān reciters state that this is why the Messenger of God (SAAS) said the words “Allāhu Akbar” (“God is most Great!”) when he received the first part of it, out of joy.

This statement is suspect, since it is refuted by the previous account of the two authors of the sahih collections, to the effect that the first to-be revealed of the Qur'ān after the intermission was, “O you who are wrapped up” but that the surat beginning “by the morning hours” came after another intermission of a few nights.

This is established in both sahih collections and elsewhere, as well as from the account of al-Aswad b. Qays, from Jandab b. 'Abd Allāh al-Bajalti, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) was indisposed and did not get up for one, two or several nights. A woman commented, ‘So your spirit soon abandoned you, then!’ And so God revealed the verses, ‘By the dawn and by the night when it darkens, your Lord has not forsaken you, nor is He displeased.’”

And it was thereby that the revelation transpired for mankind, whereas it was by the former circumstances that the prophethood came about.

Some authorities state that the intermission lasted for approximately two years, or two years and a half.

What is apparent — though God alone knows best — is that it was a period comparable to that related to Mika'il; al-Sha'bi and others made this observation.

This does not refute that Gabriel first brought him revelation, in the verses, “Read in the name of your Lord who created.”

Thereafter Gabriel became associated with him, following the revelation of “O you who are wrapped up, arise and give warning! And glorify your Lord. Purify your garments! And shun idolatry!”

Thereafter the revelation intensified and continued; that is, it came uninterruptedly, little by little.

At this time the Messenger of God (SAAS) began devoting himself totally to the mission, with energy and determination. He summoned all to God, both near and far, slaves and free men alike. And all of intelligence, excellence, and good favour believed in him, while all who were stubborn and intransigent continued to oppose and disobey him.

Abū Bakr al-Ṣiddiq, “the trusting”, was the first free man to believe in him, while ʿAli b. Abū Ṭālib was the first youth to do so.

The first woman to believe was Khadija, daughter of Khuwaylid, his wife.

Of the freed men, the mawāli, his own mawla Zayd b. Ḥārītha al-Kalbi was the first. May God be pleased with all the above.

We have previously written about the faith of Waraqa b. Nawfal, and how he reacted to the revelation and died during the intermission period. May God be pleased with him.

Section: On preventing the demons and evil spirits from eavesdropping when the Qurʾān was revealed, so that none of them would acquire any of it, even so much as a syllable, and deliver it through the speech of his human associates, which would have led to complications and a confusion of the truth.

It was God’s mercy, grace and kindness to His creation that He excluded them from heaven. God Almighty spoke of them in His words, “and that we tried heaven, but found it filled with a strong guard and shooting stars. We used to sit in seats there to listen, but now any of us who eavesdrops finds a shooting star in wait. And we do not know whether harm is meant for those on earth, or whether their Lord intends guidance for them” (ṣūrat al-Jinn, LXXII, v.8–10).

The Almighty said, “And the devils have not brought it down. This would not be right for them; and they could not. They are kept away from hearing it” (ṣūrat al-Shuʿarā, XXVI, v.210–12).

The ḥāṣīb Abū Nuʿaym stated that Sulaymān b. Ahmad – he being al-Ṭabarānī – related to him, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. Saʿīd b. Abū Maryam, quoting Muḥammad b. Yūnus al-Fīrāqī, quoting Isrāʿil, on the authority of Abū Ishāq, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “The devils would ascend to heaven to listen to the revelation. Having memorized the statement, they would then make nine additions to it. The statement itself would be true, but their additions thereto would be false.

“When the Prophet (ṢAAS) was given his mission, their seats were denied them. They complained of this to Satan. And prior to that they did not have shooting stars fired at them. Satan told them, ‘This is due to some event on earth.’

“He therefore sent his forces down and they found the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) standing between two mountains and praying. They went back to him (Satan) and told him. He then said, ‘That is what has occurred on earth.’”

Abū ʿUwāna gave an account from Abū Bishr, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ABBAS, who said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) left with others on a trip to the market of Ukaz. At this time the devils were being denied access to information from heaven and shooting stars had been sent against them. The devils had returned to their own people who asked them what was wrong. They replied, 'We’ve been denied access to information from heaven, and shooting stars have been fired at us.' Their people told them, 'This has to be because something has happened. So go and search the ends of the earth!'

"One group set off towards Tihama and passed over a date plantation where he was, while on their way to Ukaz. He was with his Companions there performing the dawn prayer. When the devils overheard the Quran, they listened to it and said, 'It is this that has denied us access to information from heaven.'

"So they returned home and told the rest: 'O our people, we have heard a wonderful Quran that leads to right guidance; we believe in it, and will never associate another deity with our Lord' (Surat al-Jinn, LXXII, v.1–2). And so God revealed to His Prophet (SAAS) the words: 'Say: "It was revealed to me that a group of jinn listened and said, 'We have heard a wonderful Quran'"' (Surat al-Jinn, LXXII, v.1)."

This account was included in both sahih collections.

Abu Bakr b. Abū Shayba stated that Muhammad b. Fuḍayl related to him, from 'Ata b. al-Sa‘ib, from Sa‘id b. Jubayr, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, "Every single tribe of jinn had places where they would sit and listen. When revelation began the angels would hear a sound like that of metal being cast against stone.

"When the angels heard this, they would fall down prostrate and not raise their heads until revelation had come. When it had, they would ask one another, 'What was it your Lord said?' And if it related to matters in heaven, they would say, 'He spoke the truth; and He is the All-High, the Almighty.' But if it related to matters on earth, dealing with the future, with death or other worldly affairs, they would talk about it and say, 'It would be so, and such.' The devils would listen to this and transmit it down to their human companions.

"Now when the Prophet Muhammad (SAAS) received his mission, they were chased away with shooting stars. The first to learn of this were the tribe of Thaqif. Those with livestock began making sacrifice. Those with sheep would slaughter one each day, those with camels would slaughter one similarly. They made haste to their flocks to do this. But some said, 'No, don’t do this. If it is the stars people use to find their way, (then it is right to make sacrifice) but otherwise it is just happening because of some specific event.' When they looked, they found that nothing had happened to the stars used for navigation. And so they ceased making sacrifice.

"And God sent the jinn into motion, and they heard the Quran. When they were there present, they said, 'Listen carefully!'"
"The devils would go off to Iblis (Satan) and inform him. He told them, ‘This is some event that has occurred on earth. Therefore bring me some dust from every part of it.’ And when they brought him some from Tihâma, he said, ‘This is the site of the event.’"

Al-Bayhaqi related this tradition, quoting al-Ḥākim, through Ḥammâd b. Salama, from ‘Abî Ṭârib al-Sâ`ib.

Al-Wâqidi stated that Usâma b. Zayd b. Aslam related to him, from ʿUmar b. ʿAbdân al-ʿAbsî, from Kaʿb, who said, “No stars had been cast since the ascension of Jesus until the time when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) became a prophet. Quraysh then saw sights they never before witnessed. And so they began releasing their flocks and freeing their slaves, thinking that it meant the end of the world. News of these actions of theirs reached the people of al-Ṭā`if, and Thaqif did the same (as Quraysh).

“What Thaqif had done became known to the slave of Yzlayl b. ʿAmr, and he asked them, ‘Why have you done what I see?’ They replied, ‘There have been shooting stars, and we have seen them falling from the sky.’ He observed, ‘But it’s hard to replace properties once they have gone; don’t be in a hurry and observe. If they are stars that are recognized, then it does mean destruction for us. But if they are stars that were unknown stars, then it’s all because of some event that has occurred.’

“So they made observations, found they were unknown stars and told him of this. He commented, ‘Well, there’s still some time left then. This is because of the appearance of a prophet.’

“Soon thereafter Abî Sufyân b. Ḥarb came for his animals and ʿAbd Yzlayl went to him and told him about the stars. Abî Sufyân then commented, ‘Muḥammad son of ʿAbd Allâh has come forth and made a claim that he is a prophet who has been sent.’ ʿAbd Yslayl then said, ‘Well, that’s why there have been shooting stars.’"

Saʿid b. Manṣûr stated, from Khalîd b. Ḥusayn, from ʿAmir al-Shaʿbî, who said, “The stars were not cast until the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) received his mission. People then released their flocks and set free their slaves. So ʿAbd Yzlayl said, ‘Observe; and if it is stars that are known, it means the end of mankind is near. But if they are not known, then it is happening because of some event that has occurred.’ And so they did make observations and found them to be unknown. They therefore ceased what they had been doing and soon thereafter news came to them of the emergence of the Prophet (ṢAAS).”

Al-Bayhaqi and al-Ḥâkim gave the wording of this account through al-ʿAwfî from Ibn ʿAbbâs, he having said: “The world’s heavens had not been guarded over throughout the period between Jesus and Muḥammad (ṢAAS).”

Perhaps what is meant by this negative statement is that the heavens had not been under strict guard. This must be held more likely, because of what is well established in a hadith through ʿAbd al-Razzāq, from Maʿmar, from al-Zuhri, from ʿAli b. al-Ḥusayn, from Ibn ʿAbbās, God be pleased with him, who said, “On one occasion when the Messenger of God was sitting down, a shooting star occurred and it became light. He then asked, ‘What was it you used to say when shooting stars were going on?’ They replied, ‘We would say: ‘A great man has died; a great man is born.’’ He commented, LNo, but . . .’ He then made the statement we reported elsewhere (in part one of the work al-Bidāya wa al-Nihāya (The Beginning and The End), relating to the creation of the heavens and the stars therein at the first Creation. And all praise be to God.

Ibn Ishaq related the story of the shooting stars in his biography of the Prophet (ṢAAS). Of the leader of Thaqif, he said that he used the words, regarding observation of the stars, “(to see) whether they are the most prominent stars of the skies, or other ones”. But Ibn Ishaq named this man as ʿAmr b. Umayya. God knows best.

Al-Suddi stated, “The heavens were only guarded when there was a prophet on earth, or when a religion of God was appearing. The devils, prior to Muhammad (ṢAAS), used to take seats in the skies above the world and overhear what was going on in heaven.

“When God sent Muhammad (ṢAAS) as a prophet, one night they had stars shot at them. This terrified the people of Taʿif, and they told one another that the people of heaven had been destroyed! This was because of the violence of the fires in the sky and the great variety of the shooting stars. So they began setting their slaves free and releasing their livestock. At this ʿAbd Yalayl b. ʿAmr b. ʿUmayr told them, ‘Woe upon you, O people of Taʿif! Secure your property and observe the most prominent stars. If you see them to be still set in their places, then the people of heaven are not destroyed, but it’s all because of the son of Abū Kabsha.74 But if you don’t see them there, then the people of heaven have perished.’

“And when they looked, they did still see them and so they secured their property.

“That night the devils were terrified and went to Satan and he told them, ‘Bring me a handful of earth from every place.’ When they did so, he sniffed it and said, ‘Your man is in Mecca.’

“He then dispatched seven of the spirits of Nashibin and they came to Mecca and found the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in the Harâm (Holy) Mosque reciting the Qurʾān. They approached him so eager to hear it that their bodies almost touched him. They then accepted Islam, and God sent down revelation to his Prophet (ṢAAS) about them.”

74. The unbelievers of Mecca used to refer to the Prophet as “the son of Abū Kabsha".
Al-Waqidi stated that Muḥammad b. Ṣāliḥ related to him, from the son of Abū Ḥakīm – by whom he meant Īsāq – from `Aṭṭā b. Yāsār, from Abū Hurayra, who said, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) received his mission, all the idols were overturned. So the evil spirits went and told him (Satan), ‘Every single idol on earth has been overturned.’ He responded, ‘This is due to a Prophet who has been given a mission. Look for him in villages in the countryside.’ They did so, but reported to him that they could not find him. He then said, ‘I’ll do it.’ And so he went off and looked for him. A voice called out to him, ‘Go to Ḥanbat al-Bāb’ – the ‘gate quarter’ – meaning Mecca. He looked for him there and found him at Qarn al-Tha‘ālib. Satan then went off to the devils and told them, ‘I found him, and Gabriel was with him. What’s your opinion?’ They answered, ‘We’ll make earthly pleasures delightful in people’s eyes and so make them covet them.’ ‘So no problem then,’ he commented.”

Al-Waqidi stated that Ṭālḥa b. ‘Ammr related to him, from Ibn Abī Mulayka, from Ṭālḥa b. ‘Abd Allah b. ‘Amr, who said, “When the day came when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) became a Prophet, the devils were denied access to heaven and shooting stars were fired at them. So they went to Satan and when they told him this he commented, ‘Some event has occurred. This is a Prophet who has come forth to them in the Holy Land, the place where the tribe of Israel came from.’

“So the devils went off to Syria, then returned and told him, ‘There’s no one there.’ Satan responded, ‘I’ll do it.’

“Then he went off to look for him in Mecca. And there was the Messenger of God in Ḥiṣrāṣ, and Gabriel was there with him. Satan returned to his evil spirits and told them, ‘Ahmad has received his mission and Gabriel is with him. What is your opinion?’ They replied, ‘Earthly delights; we’ll make them attractive to people.’ He replied, ‘That will do it.’”

Al-Waqidi said that Ṭālḥa b. ‘Ammr related to him, from ‘Aṭṭā b. ‘Abbās, who said, “The devils used to listen to the revelation. And when Muḥammad (ṢAAS) was assigned to his mission, they were prevented from doing so. They complained about this to Satan, and he responded, ‘Some event has occurred.’ He then went on up above Abū Qubays, the very first mountain placed on the face of the earth, and saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at prayer behind the shrine. He told himself, ‘I’ll go on down and break his neck!’ So he strutted off towards him. But Gabriel was there with him, and charged out at Satan sending him flying in all directions. So the devil took to his heels.”

Both al-Waqidi and Abū Ḥaḍram al-Zubayrī also related this, from Rabbaḥ b. Abū Ma‘rūf, from Qays b. Sa‘d, from Mujāhid. Their account was similar, with the variation, “Gabriel kicked the devil and threw him down to Aden.”
Section: On the manner in which the revelation came to the Messenger of God (SAAS).

It has previously been related how Gabriel came to him on both the first and second occasions.

Mālik stated, from Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, from ʿAʾisha, God bless her, that al-Ḥārith b. Hishām asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) “O Messenger of God, how does revelation come to you?”

He replied, “Sometimes it comes like the ringing of a bell, it being then most painful. When it leaves me I remain conscious of what he spoke. Sometimes the angel appears before me as a man who addresses me, and I am fully aware of what he is saying.”

ʿAʾisha, God bless her, stated, “I saw him (SAAS) when revelation came to him on the extremely cold day. Then it left him, and his forehead was bathed in perspiration.”

The authors of the two sahih collections derived this hadith from the account of Mālik.

Imām Aḥmad related it from ʿAmir b. Ṣāliḥ, from Hishām b. Urwa in a similar manner.

ʿAbda b. Sulaymān and Anas b. ʿIyyād related it similarly from Hishām b. Urwa.

Ayyūb al-Sakhtiyānī related it from Hishām, from his father, from al-Ḥārith b. Hishām who said, “I asked the Messenger of God (SAAS), ‘How does revelation come to you?’” He related the same hadith as above, but made no reference to ʿAʾisha.

In the hadith al-ʾiftik75 she stated, “By God, the Messenger of God (SAAS) did not get up, nor did any member of the family leave, until revelation came down to him. He underwent the agony that used to seize him (on such occasions) with sweat emerging like pearls from him, even though it was a winter’s day, because of the heavy burden of the revelation that came down upon him.”

Imām Aḥmad stated that ʿAbd al-Razzāq related to him, quoting Yūnūs b. Ṣalīm, who said that Yūnūs b. Yazīd dictated to him, from Ibn Shihāb, from ʿUrwa b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. ʿAbd al-Qārī, who said, “I heard ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb say, ‘When revelation came down to the Messenger of God (SAAS), it would be heard like the buzzing of a bee near his face.’”

The tradition in its entirety was recounted in the section76 on the revelation of the Qurʾānic verse, “and the believers have succeeded” (sūrat al-Muʾminūn, XXIII, v.1).

75. ʿAʾisha’s account relating to certain slanderous charges made against her, see Volume III.

Al-Tirmidhi related this, quoting al-Nasā'ī from ‘Abd al-Razzāq.

After giving it, al-Nasā'ī commented, “It is objectionable; we know of only Yūnus b. Sa‘līm as having related it, and him we do not recognize.”

In the sahih collection of Muslim and others, it is recounted by al-‘Āṣim, from Hiyyān b. ‘Abd Allāh al-Raqāshi, from ‘Abd Allāh b. al-‘Āṣim, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would become in pain when revelation came to him, and his face would look very serious.” According to one account, this wording should be “and his eyes would close; we recognized that in him.”

In both sahih collections there is the account of Zayd b. Thābit that relates to the circumstance when the verse “Those of the believers who sit still are not on equality with ...” (ṣūrat al-Nisā’, VI, v.95) was revealed; and when the son of Umm Maktūm complained of his disabilities, the next verse came down: “except for those with disabilities”.

His account states, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was seated with his thigh right next to mine while I was writing. When revelation came, his leg almost crushed mine.”

In the sahih collection of Muslim, there is an account by Ḥammām b. Yaḥyā, from Ṭaḥdhiḥ, from Ya‘lā b. Umayya, who is quoted as saying, “Umar said to me, ‘Would you like to look at the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) while revelation is coming to him?’ He raised the edge of his robe from his face while he was receiving revelation at al-Jîrāna, and he was all flushed. And he would moan like a newborn calf.”

It was established in the two sahih collections from a hadith of ‘A‘isha relating to when revelation came concerning the hijāb (the wearing of the veil) that Sawdā went out thereafter to the privies, by night. ’Umar spoke to her, saying, “We can recognize you, 0 Sawdā!” She then went back to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and questioned him, while he was sitting having supper and holding his milk (mug) in his hand. God then sent down revelation to him, while the milk was in his hand. He then raised his head and said, “You women have been given permission to go out and attend to your needs.”

This shows that revelation did not fully absent his feelings from him. This is proven by his being seated; and the milk, moreover, did not drop from his hand (ṢAAS).

Abū Dāwūd al-Ṭayālīsī stated that Ā‘ībād b. Manṣūr related to him, quoting ‘Ikrima, from Ibn Ā‘bās, who said, “When revelation came down, the body and face of the Messenger of God would become pale; he would ignore those with him, and none of them would address him.”

In the collection of traditions made by Ahmad and others, there is an account of Ibn Lahi‘a in which he states, “Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb related to me, from Ṭāhir b. al-Walīd, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṭāhir, who said, ‘I asked, “O Messenger of God, can you feel revelation coming?” He replied, “Yes, I hear ringing sounds. Then
I recover. And never once did I receive revelation without thinking that my soul was being seized by it.””

Abū Ya’qūb al-Mawsili stated that Ibrāhīm b. al-Ḥajjāj related to him, quoting ʿAbd al-Wāḥid b. Ziyād, quoting ʿĀṣim b. Kulayb, quoting his father, from his uncle al-ʿIlīyān b. ʿĀṣim, who said, “We were with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) when revelation came to him. When this happened, he could still see and his eyes remained open, while his hearing and his heart were made empty for what would come to him from God, Almighty and Glorious is He.”

Abū Nuʿaym related, from a tradition of Qutayba that ʿAlī b. Gharāb related to him, from al-ʿĀhwaṣ b. Ḥakīm, from Abū ʿAwāna, from Saʿīd b. al-Musayyib, from Abū Hurayra, who said, “When revelation came down to the Messenger of God, he would get a headache and would cover his head with the henna plant.”

This is a very strange hadith.

Imām Ahmad stated that Abū al-Naḍr related to him, quoting Abī Muḥāniya Sinān, from Layth, from Shahr b. Ḥawshab, from Asmā, daughter of Yazīd, who said: “I was holding the reins of al-ʿAḍba, the camel of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), when the whole text of the surat al-Māʿida (Qurʾān, V) was revealed to him. The camel’s back almost gave way beneath the weight of it.”

Abū Nuʿaym related this from a hadith of al-Thawrī, from Layth b. Aba Salīm.

Imām Aḥmad also stated that Hasan related to him, quoting Ibn Lahiʿa, quoting Jaʿbr b. ʿAbd Allāh, from Abū ʿAbd al-Rahmān al-Ḥubālī, from ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmr, who said, “The surat al-Māʿida was revealed to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) while he was riding on his camel. It could not carry him, so he dismounted.”

Ibn Mardawayh related, from a hadith of ʿAbdāb b. Sahl, from ʿĀṣim al-ʿĀhwal, who said, “Umm ʿAmr related to me, from her uncle, that he was on a journey with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) when the surat al-Māʿida was revealed to him. The camel’s neck was broken because of the weight of it.”

The implications of this are strange.

It is established, moreover, in both saḥih collections that the surat al-Fath (Qurʾān, XLVII) was revealed to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) when he was returning from al-Hudaybiyya, riding on his camel. It came at various times, according to the circumstances. But God knows best.

We have earlier given an account of the kinds of revelation that came to him (ṢAAS) in the early part of our exegesis of al-Bukhārī’s work, along with the comments of al-Ḥalīmī and other Imāms, God be pleased with them all.

DIVISION

God Almighty stated, “Do not move your tongue with it, to speak it in haste. It is up to Us to put it together, and to recite it. So when We do recite it, follow its recitation. And then, it is up to Us to explain it” (ṣūrat al-Qiyāma, LXXV, v.16–19).
And the Almighty said, “And do not make haste with the recitation, before its revelation to you has been completed. And say, ‘O God, increase me in knowledge!’” (sūrat Tāhā, XX, v.114).

This was in the beginning. Due to his eagerness to receive from the angel what God the Almighty and Glorious had revealed to him, he used to join him through recitation. God Almighty therefore ordered him to listen on until the revelation was completed. He assured him He would store it in his chest and enable him to recite and announce it. God also said He would clarify and explain it and enable him to understand it.

For this reason He stated, “And do not make haste with the recitation, before its revelation to you has been completed. And say, ‘O God, increase me in knowledge!’”

And He said, “Do not move your tongue with it, to speak it in haste. It is up to Us to put it together” – in your chest, that is – “and to recite it.” That is, and you shall recite it. “So when We do recite it” – that is, when the angel recites it to you – “follow its recitation.” That is, listen to it and consider it. And then, “it is up to Us to explain it.” This is equivalent to saying, “O God, increase me in knowledge!”

In both sahih collections there is a tradition of Mūsā b. Abī Ṭālib, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “The Messenger of God would suffer great strain from revelation. He would move his lips and so God sent down to him, ‘Do not move your tongue with it, to speak it in haste. It is up to Us to put it together, and to recite it.’ He said ‘to put it together’ in your breast and then you will recite it. ‘And so when We do recite it, follow its recitation.’ And hear it, and listen to it. ‘And then, it is up to Us to explain it.’”

He went on, “And when Gabriel came to him he would bow his head; and when he left he would recite it just as God the Almighty and Glorious had promised him.”

DIVISION

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Thereafter revelation came frequently to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and he fully believed in what he was receiving from God. He accepted it willingly and because of it received both the approbation and blame of other men.

“Prophethood brings burdens and troubles that can only be borne by messengers who are strong and determined through the power and aid of God. Their burdens arise from the reactions of men to them that result from what it is that God the Almighty and Glorious has brought them.

“The Messenger of God did continue to fulfil God’s orders despite the opposition and harm he met from his people.”
Ibn Ishāq went on, “And Khadija, daughter of Khuwaylid, believed in him and God’s messages to him, and helped him.

“She was the first person to believe in God and His Messenger, and to believe in God’s message to him.

“In this God alleviated His Messenger’s burdens; whenever he suffered some unpleasant reaction or painful rejection, God would comfort him through her. When he came back to her she would give him strength and alleviate his pain. She would express her belief in him and make light of the opposition to him; may God bless and comfort her!”

Ibn Ishāq continued to say that Hishām b. Urwa related to him, from his father, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Ja‘far, who said that the Messenger of God (ṣaṣa) stated, “I was commanded to tell Khadija the glad tidings of a house made of qasab, one where there would be no rancour and no trouble.”

In the two sahih collections this hadith is derived from an account of Hishām.

Ibn Hishām explained that the word qasab in this hadith means hollowed-out pearls.

Ibn Ishāq went on, “The Messenger of God (ṣaṣa) began, in secret, to inform all of his people whom he could trust about all that prophethood with which God had honoured him and His servants.”

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, from al-Zuhri, “Khadija was the first person to believe in God and in His Messenger; and this was even before prayer was made obligatory.”

I make the comment that by this is meant the five daily prayers (that were enjoined) on the occasion of the laylat al-‘isrā, the “night journey”. As for the origin of prayer, it was (already) made necessary during the lifetime of Khadija, God bless her, as we will explain.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Khadija was the first person to believe in God, His Messenger, and the mission he brought.

“Gabriel came to the Messenger of God (ṣaṣa) when prayer was made incumbent upon him; he made a mark with his heel on the side of the valley and a spring of water from zamzam gushed forth. Then Gabriel performed the ablution, along with Muḥammad, peace be upon them both. He then bowed in prayer twice and made four prostrations. Thereafter the Prophet (ṣaṣa) went home, God having much comforted him and brought him what he wanted. He took Khadija’s hand and led her to the well and there performed the ablution as Gabriel had done. He then made two bows in prayer and four prostrations. Thereafter Khadija and he would perform the prayer in secret.”

I wish to comment that Gabriel’s prayer on this occasion was different from the prayers he performed twice at the ka‘ba. Then he explained the five times for prayer to him, from first to last. This came after they had been made obligatory following the laylat al-‘isrā.”
Explanation of this will come later, if God wills it, and in Him is all trust, all reliance.

Section: Concerning the first persons to accept Islam; also reference to those of the Companions and others who were early in becoming Muslims.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “And then ‘Ali son of Abī Talib, God be pleased with him, came the following day while they were both praying. ‘Ali asked, ‘O Muḥammad, what are you doing?’ He replied, ‘It is God’s religion that he has chosen for Himself and sent forth to His messengers. And so I summon you to God alone, He who has no partner, and to pray to Him, and to renounce al-Lāt and al-Uzza.’

‘Ah replied, ‘This is something I never heard before today. I’m not going to decide anything before I tell Abī Talib about it.’

“The Messenger of God was reluctant to have him expose his secret before he himself made it public. So he told him, ‘O Ali, even if you don’t accept Islam, do keep the matter secret.’ ‘Ali therefore did nothing that night. Then God placed Islam in the heart of ‘Ali, and he went next morning to the Messenger of God and asked him, ‘What was it you proposed to me, O Muḥammad?’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, ‘Bear witness that there is no God but God alone; He has no partner. And renounce al-Lāt and al-Uzza, and disavow any peers.’

‘Ali did this and accepted Islam; but he was afraid of Abū Talib’s displeasure whenever he went to the Prophet (ṢAAS) and so he kept his acceptance of Islam a secret he did not divulge.

Ibn Haritha, Zayd that is, then became a Muslim and they went on thus (in secret) for approximately one month, during which ‘Ali frequently visited the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). A favour God had previously granted ‘Ali was his having been brought up in the care of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) before the coming of Islam.”

Ibn Ishaq stated that Ibn Abū Najīh related to him, from Mujāhid, who said, “One matter in which God favoured ‘Ali was that Quraysh had a period of great crisis. Abū Talib had a large family and so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said to his uncle, al-‘Abbās, a man who was among the wealthiest of the Banū Hashim, ‘O ‘Abbās, your brother Abū Talib has a large family, and you know how this crisis has affected everyone. So let us go and relieve him of the burden of some of his family.’ And so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) took ‘Ali and added him to his own family. And he was still living with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) when God sent him his prophethood. And so it was that ‘Ali followed him, and believed in him and his message.”

Yūnus b. Bukayr related, from Muḥammad b. Ishaq, who said that Yahyā b. Abū al-Ashʿath al-Kīndī, a scholar from al-Kūfa, related to him, quoting Ismāʿil
b. Abū ʿĪyās b. ʿAfff, from his father, from his grandfather ʿAfff, this ʿAfff being the brother of al-ʾAshʿath b. Qays on his mother’s side, who said, “I was a businessman and went to Minā during the pilgrimage season. Al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-ʿUṯṭalīb was also a merchant, and I went to him to buy and sell from him.

“While we were engaged in this, a man came out of a tent and began praying towards the kaʿba. And then a woman came out and also began to pray, then a boy emerged and prayed along with the man. I asked, ‘O Ibn ʿAbbās, what is this religion? We don’t know what religion this is.’

“He replied, ‘This is Muḥammad, son of ʿAbd Allāh. He claims that God has sent him and that the treasures of Chosroe and Caesar will be opened up for him. That is his wife, Khadija, daughter of Khuwaylid, and the boy is his nephew ʿAlī, son of Abū Ṭalīb, and he believes in him.’

“ʿAfff then commented, ‘O how I wish I had then believed in him; I would then have been the second!’”

Ibrāhīm b. ʿAṣd gave a similar account, from Ibn Ishaq, which gives the wording, “when a man came out of a tent near by. He looked up at the sky and when he saw the sun declining to set, he began to pray.” He then recounted how Khadija stood there behind him.

Ibn Jarīr stated that Muḥammad b. ʿUbayd al-ʾUṯtarībī related to him, quoting ʿAṣd b. Khuthaym, from Asad b. ʿAbd al-Bajali, from Yaḥyā b. ʿAfff, who said, “I went to Mecca before the coming of Islam and stayed with al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-ʿUṯṭalīb. When the sun rose and hung high in the sky as I was overlooking the kaʿba, a young man approached. He looked up at the sky then went to the kaʿba and stood there facing it. A boy soon arrived and stood there to his right, and shortly thereafter a woman came and stood behind them. The man bowed down and so did the boy and the woman. Then the man stood up straight and so did the boy and the woman. Next the man made a prostration and they both did, along with him.

“It is,” he agreed. ‘Do you know who that is?’ ‘No,’ I replied. ‘That is Muḥammad, son of ʿAbd Allāh, grandson of ʿAbd al-ʿUṯṭalīb, my brother’s son. Do you know who the boy is?’ ‘No,’ I answered. ‘That is ʿAlī son of Abū Ṭalīb, God be pleased with him. Do you know who the woman is standing behind them?’ ‘No,’ I replied. ‘That is Khadija, daughter of Khuwaylid, my nephew’s wife.’

“This man told me that your Lord, the Lord of the heavens and the earth, ordered him to do what you see them performing. By God, I know of no other on the face of the whole earth who engages in this religion except for these three!”

al-Raḥmān, and Abū Ḥāzim and al-Kalbi, all of whom said, “‘Ali is the first man to accept Islam.”

Al-Kalbi stated, “He accepted Islam at the age of nine.”

Ibn Ḥumayd related to us, quoting Salama, from Ibn Iṣḥāq, who said, “The first male who believed in the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and prayed with him was ‘Ali, son of Abū Ṭalib. At the time he was ten years of age and he had been under the care of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) before the coming of Islam.”

Al-Waqī́ḍi stated that Ibrāhīm related to him, from Nāfis, from Ibn Abī Nājīh, from Mujāḥid, who said, “‘Ali accepted Islam when he was ten.”

Al-Waqī́ḍi stated, “Our companions were in agreement that ‘Ali accepted Islam one year after the Messenger of God became a prophet.”

Muḥammad b. Ka'b stated, “The first of this nation to accept Islam was Khadījā. The first two men to do so were Abū Bakr and ‘Ali, ‘Ali having done so before Abū Bakr. ‘Ali hid his faith because of his fear of his father, until his father joined him and asked, ‘Have you accepted Islam?’ ‘Ali replied, ‘Yes.’ ‘Then give your cousin all help and aid,’ he told him.”

Abū Bakr al-Ṣiddīq, “the trusting”, was the first man to openly declare his acceptance of Islam.

Ibn Jarīr related in his work of history, from a ḥadīth of Shu'ba, from Abī Balj, from ʿAmr b. Maymūn, from Ibn ʿAbbas, who said, “The first person to pray was ‘Ali.”

ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd b. Yahyā related to us, quoting Shurayk, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. Uqayl, from Jābir, who said, “The Prophet (ṢAAS) received his mission on a Monday and ‘Ali prayed on Tuesday.” And he related, from a ḥadīth of Shu'ba from ʿAmr b. Murra, from Abī Ḥamza – a supporter from Medina – who said he heard Zayd b. Arqam say, “The first man to accept Islam along with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was ‘Ali son of Abū Ṭalib.”

He went on, “I mentioned this to al-Nakhḵī, but he refuted it and said, ‘It was Abū Bakr who first accepted Islam.’”

He then said that ʿUbayd Allāh b. Mūsā related to him, quoting al-ʿAlāʾ, from al-Minhāl b. ʿAmr, from ʿAbbād b. ʿAbd Allāh, who said, “I heard ‘Ali say, ‘I am the slave of God and the brother of His Messenger. And I am the grand ʿiddīq, ‘trusting one’. No one can say this after me without being a liar and a fabricator. I prayed seven years before the people did.’”

Ibn Maja recounted this similarly, from Muḥammad b. Ismāʿīl al-Rāzī, from ʿUbayd Allāh b. Mūsā al-Fahmi – who was a shīʿa and a man accepted as a fully reliable source for traditions – from al-ʿAlāʾ b. Ṣāliḥ al-ʿAzdī of Kufa, a man also considered reliable. However, Abū Ḥāṭim said of him that he was from the old aristocracy of the shīʿa. And ʿAli b. al-Madhīnī stated, “al-ʿAlāʾ related objectionable accounts. Al-Minhāl b. ʿAmr is trustworthy, while his teacher, Sheikh ʿAbbād b. ʿAbd Allāh – of the Asad tribe and from Kufa – is weak.” Moreover al-Bukhārī stated, “There is some question about him.” Ibn Ḥabbān referred to him as trustworthy.

This tradition is objectionable in any case. ‘Āli, God be pleased with him, would not have said this. How could he have prayed seven years before the people? This is simply unimaginable. But God knows best.

Others said that the first man of this nation to accept Islam was Abū Bakr, “the trusting”. Combining these various accounts we see that Khadija was the first woman to accept Islam, the leader of the pack, as it were, and also she preceded the men. Among slaves, the first to accept Islam was Zayd b. Ḥarītha. And the first boy to accept Islam was ‘Āli b. Abū Ṭālib; he was young then and had not reached puberty – as generally believed. These were then the family of the Prophet.

The first free man to accept Islam was Abū Bakr, “the trusting”. His conversion was more beneficial than that of those mentioned before because he was a highly respected leader, an honoured chief of Quraysh and a man of wealth. He became a missionary for Islam and was very much liked and admired for spending money in the service of God and His Messenger. Details of this activity will follow.

Yunus stated, from Ibn Ishaq, “Then Abū Bakr met the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and asked him, ‘Is it true what Quraysh are saying, Muhammad? About you abandoning our gods, ridiculing our intellects, and calling our ancestors pagans?’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) responded, ‘Yes indeed. I am the Messenger of God, and His Prophet. He sent me to deliver his message and to invite you to God by the truth. For, I swear, God is the truth. I call upon you, O Abū Bakr, to believe in God alone, in Him who has no associate. And I call upon you to worship none but Him, and to devote yourself to obeying Him.’

“He then recited the Qur’ān to him. And he neither confirmed nor refused.

“Then he did accept Islam, disavowed the idols, repudiated the other gods, and affirmed the truth of Islam. When Abū Bakr went home he was a believer, a man of the faith.”

Ibn Ishaq stated that Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Husayn of Tāmīn related to him that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, “I never called upon any man to embrace Islam without him expressing reluctance, hesitation, and argument except Abū Bakr. He did not ‘akam (“hold back”) from Islam when I told him of it, nor did he hesitate at all.”

Here ‘akam means talabbatha, i.e. “he delayed”. That which Ibn Ishaq stated, that “he neither confirmed nor refused”, is objectionable. For Ibn Ishaq and others have told how he (Abū Bakr) was the friend of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) before his mission. He was known for his truthfulness, trustworthiness, fine disposition, and excellent qualities. These prevented him from lying to other mortals, so how could he ever have given the lie to God?
Therefore, from the mere fact of his telling him that God had sent him, Abū Bakr promptly believed him, not holding back or delaying at all.

We have recounted the manner of his becoming a Muslim in the book we devoted to his biography in which we emphasized his many qualities. That book we followed with another biography, of Umar, the fārūq (i.e. he who differentiated truth from falsehood). In these works we recorded the various sayings of each of these men attributed to the Prophet (SAAS) along with legal decisions and pronouncements he made. These writings total three volumes; all praise and credit be to God for these.

In the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī there is a hadith from Abū al-Dardā relating to the feud that existed between Abū Bakr and Umar, may God be pleased with them both. In it he states that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “God sent me to you and you all said, ‘You lie!’ But Abū Bakr said, ‘He spoke the truth.’ And he dedicated himself and his fortune to me. Will you then leave this friend of mine to me?” He said this twice. And afterwards he was done no harm.

This is a direct text that he was the first to accept Islam. God be pleased with him!

Al-Tirmidhī and Ibn Hibbān recounted, from a hadith of Shu'ba, from Sa'īd al-Jarrī, from Abū Naḍra, from Abū Sa'īd, who said that Abū Bakr, “the trusting”, may God be pleased with him, said, “Am I not the most worthy of people for it? Am I not the first person to accept Islam? Is that not my distinction?”

Ibn 'Asākir recounted, through Bahlīl b. 'Ubayd, that Abū ʿIshāq al-Sabī'i related to him, from al-Ḥārith, who said that he heard 'Alī say, “The first man to accept Islam was Abū Bakr, the ‘trusting’. The first man to pray with the Prophet (SAAS) was ‘Alī b. Abū Ṭalib.”

Shu'ba stated, from ‘Amr b. Murra, from Abū ʿAmmāra, from Zayd b. Arqam, who said, “The first man to pray with the Prophet (SAAS) was Abū Bakr, ‘the trusting’.”

Ahmad related this, quoting al-Tirmidhī and al-Nasā'i from a hadith of Shu'ba. And al-Tirmidhī stated, “It is a good and reliable hadith.”

We previously gave Ibn Jarīr’s quotation of this hadith through Shu'ba, from ‘Amr b. Murra, from Abū ʿAmmāra, from Zayd b. Arqam, who said, “The first to accept Islam was ‘Alī b. Abū Ṭalib.”

‘Amr b. Murra stated, “I mentioned this to Ibrāhim al-Nakhṣī, but he denied it. He said, ‘The first to accept Islam was Abū Bakr.’”

Al-Waqīfī stated, giving chains of authority from Abū Arwā al-Dawsī and Abū Muslim b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān, along with a group of authorities, to the effect that the first to accept Islam was Abū Bakr, “the trusting”.

Ya'qūb b. Sufyān stated that Abū Bakr al-Ḥumaydī related to us, quoting Sufyān b. ʿUuyayn, from Malik b. Mighwal, from a man who said, “Ibn ʿAbbas was asked, 'Who was it who first believed?' He replied, 'It was Abū Bakr, 'the trusting'. Have you not heard the lines of Ḥassān (b. Thābit):

> When talking of grief at loss of a man to be trusted, recall your brother Abū Bakr for what he did.
> He was the best of men, the most just and honourable after the Prophet, and the most worthy, for what he bore
> The one who came next, the second, praised was sight of him, he the first of the people to believe in the messengers.
> He lived fully praised, following God's will at the order of his friend who passed away, without deviation.'

Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba recounted this. One of our sheikhs related to us, from Mujālid, from Āmir, who said, "I asked Ibn 'Abbas – or Ibn 'Abbās was asked – which one of the people was the first to accept Islam? He replied, 'Haven't you heard the verses of Ḥassān b. Thābit?' He then recited them."

Al-Haytham b. 'Adi related this account similarly from Mujālid, from Āmir al-Shabī who said, "I asked Ibn 'Abbās, and he referred to it."

Abū al-Qāsim al-Baghawi said that Surayj b. Yūnus related to him, quoting Yūsuf b. al-Majishūn, who said, "Our sheikhs, including Muḥammad b. al-Munkadīr, Rābi'a b. Abū ʿAbd al-Rahmān, Ṣāliḥ b. Kaysān and Uṯmān b. Muḥammad, concluded without any doubt, that the first of our people to accept Islam was Abū Bakr, 'the trusting', God be pleased with him."

My own comment is, that this agreed with the views of Ibrāhīm al-Nakhī, Muḥammad b. Ka'b, Muḥammad b. ʿIrīs and Sa'd b. Ibrāhīm. That is what is generally accepted by the majority of scholars of orthodox religion.

Ibn ʿAsākir recounted of Sa'd b. Abū Waqqās and Muḥammad b. al-Ḥanafīyya, that they both agreed that, "He was not the very first to accept Islam, but he was in fact the best of all in faith."

Sa'd said that five persons accepted Islam before he did.

It is established in the saḥīḥ collection of al-Bukhārī, from a hadith of Hamām b. al-Ḥārith, from ʿAmmār b. Yāsir, who said, "I saw the Messenger of God (ṢAS) and with him there were only five slaves, two women and Abū Bakr."

The Imām Aḥmad and Ibn Māja recounted from a hadith of ʿAṣim b. Abū al-Nujād, from Zīr, from Ibn Masʿūd, who said, "There were seven persons who were first to openly accept Islam. They were the Messenger of God (ṢAS) Abū Bakr, ʿAmmār and his mother Sumayyā, ʾUḥayb, Bilāl, and al-Miqdād.

"Now the Messenger of God (ṢAS) was protected by God through his uncle, and Abū Bakr by God through his tribe. But the rest of them were taken away by the idol worshippers who mounted chains on them and roasted them in the sun. All except Bilāl gave way under this treatment; he, however, attached no importance to himself in suffering in God's cause. His people considered him valueless, so they handed him over to the children who began parading him through the streets of Mecca, while he shouted, 'One! One!'”

Al Thawrī recounted this as such from Manṣūr, from Mujāhid, with an incomplete line of transmission.

Ibn Jarir related that he was informed by Ibn Ḥumayd that Kināna b. Jabala related to him, from Ibrāhīm b. Tāḥmān, from Ḥajjāj, from Qatāda, from Salīm b. Abū al-Ja’d, from Muḥammad b. Sa’d b. Abū Waqqās, who said, “I asked my father, ‘Was Abū Bakr the first one to accept Islam?’ ‘No,’ he replied. ‘More than 50 others accepted Islam before he did. But his Islam was the best of all.’”

This hadith is objectionable in both its content and its chain of authorities.

Ibn Jarir said that others stated that the first person to accept Islam was Zayd b. Ḥāritha. Then he related, moreover, through al-Wāqidi from Ibn Abū Dhī‘b, who asked al-Zuhrī, “Who was the first woman to accept Islam?” “Khadijī,” he replied. “And the first man?” “Zayd b. Ḥāritha,” was his answer.

Urwa, Sulaymān b. Yāsār and others said the same, that the first man to accept Islam was Zayd b. Ḥāritha.

Abū Ḥanīfah, God be pleased with him, responded by combining these statements and concluding that the first free man to accept Islam was Abū Bakr, that Khadijī was the first woman, Zayd b. Ḥāritha the first slave, and ‘Alī b. Abū Ṭalāb the first boy. God be pleased with them all.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated, “When Abū Bakr accepted Islam and announced this fact, he prayed to God the Almighty and Glorious. Abū Bakr was a man admired by his people, a well-liked and easy-going man. He knew more than anyone about the genealogy of Quraysh and of the good and bad in their history. He was a business man of fine character and charity.

“His people would come and consult with him on all kinds of matters because of his knowledge, his business experience and the pleasantness of his company.

“He soon began inviting those he trusted of his friends and associates to join him in accepting Islam.

“I have been told that those who accepted Islam through him were: al-Zubayr b. al-‘Awwām, Uthmān b. ‘Affān, Ṭalḥa b. ‘Ubayd Allāh, Sa’d b. Abū Waqqās and ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. ‘Awf, God be pleased with them.

“They all went, accompanied by Abū Bakr, to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who explained Islam and its correctness to them and recited to them from the Qur’ān; they then believed.

“These eight men were the earliest to accept Islam. They prayed and believed in the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and in the mission he had received from God.”

at Buṣra and there, in his cell, was a monk who called out, ‘Ask the Meccans at the fair whether any man of them is from the holy quarter.’"

Talha stated, “I replied, ‘Yes; I am.’ The monk then asked, ‘Has Ahmad come forth yet?’ I asked, ‘Who is Ahmad?’ He responded, ‘He is the son of ’Abd Allāh b. ’Abd al-Muṭṭalib; this is the month during which he will appear. He is the last of the prophets. He will come forth from the holy quarter and go into exile to a place of date-palms, stony tracts, and salty earth. Be sure not to let anyone precede you to him.’”

Talha went on, “His words deeply impressed me. So I left quickly for Mecca. There I asked, ‘Is there any news?’ People replied, ‘Yes indeed; Muhammad son of Caḥd Allah, “the trustworthy”, has declared himself a prophet. And he has Abī Bakr b. Abū Quḥāfa as a follower.’”

Abū Bakr then took Talha with him and they went in to see the Messenger of God (SAAS). Talha then accepted Islam and told the Messenger of God (SAAS) what the monk had said; he was delighted to hear this.

When Abū Bakr and Talha had accepted Islam they were seized by Nawfal b. Khūwaylid b. al-‘Adawi, who was known as “the lion of Quraysh”. He tied both men together with one rope; and Bānū Taym did nothing to protect them. For this reason Abī Bakr and Talha were known as “the bondsmen”. And the Prophet (SAAS) spoke the words, “O God, save us from the evil of al-‘Adawi’s son.” It was al-Bayhaqi who recounted this.

The ḥāfiẓ Abū al-Ḥasan Khaythama b. Sulaymān al-Aṭrabulsi stated that ‘Ubayd Allāh b. Mūḥammad b. ‘Abd al-‘Azīz al-Umari, the qāḍī, judge, of al-Miṣṣiṣa, related to him, quoting Abū Bakr ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Ubayd Allāh b. Iṣḥaq b. Mūḥammad b. ‘Umrān b. Mūsā b. Talha b. ‘Ubayd Allāh, quoting Abū ‘Ubayd Allāh, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. Mūḥammad b. ‘Umrān b. Ibrāhīm b. Mūḥammad b. Talha, who said that his father Mūḥammad b. ‘Umrān related to him, from al-Qāsim b. Mūḥammad b. Abū Bakr, on the authority of ‘Aṣḥa, God be pleased with her, who said, “Abū Bakr went to see the Messenger of God (SAAS); he had been his friend before the coming of Islam. On meeting him, Abū Bakr said, ‘O Abū al-Qāsim, you have been missed from your tribe’s councils; and people are charging you with disloyalty to your forebears.’

“The Messenger of God replied, ‘I am the Messenger of God and I summon you to God!’ When he had finished speaking Abū Bakr accepted Islam. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then left him, and there was no man between Mecca’s two mountains happier than he was at Abū Bakr accepting Islam.

‘Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad stated that his father Muḥammad b. ʿUmrān related to him, from al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad, from Ḥā’ishah, who said, "When the Companions of the Prophet (ṣaṣ), 38 men in number, met, Abū Bakr urged the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ) to proclaim Islam openly, but he replied, ‘O Abū Bakr, we are only few in number.’

"However, Abū Bakr kept urging until the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ) did appear openly (as a Muslim). Then the Muslims separated off into different areas of the mosque, each man in his own tribe, and Abū Bakr arose to address the assembly, while the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ) remained seated. He was the first man to make a speech calling people to God and to His Messenger (ṣaṣ). The polytheists were very angry at Abū Bakr and the Muslims and caused violent fights all over the mosque. Abū Bakr was trampled underfoot and severely beaten. The sinner ‘Utba b. Rabi‘a went over to him and began beating him with a pair of old sandals with which he cut up his face and then so trampled Abī Bakr’s body that he was badly injured.

"After this Bāntū Taym arrived and engaged in the fight and the idolaters withdrew from Abū Bakr. Men of Bāntū Taym then carried Abū Bakr away in a cloth to his house, convinced that he was dying. After that they went back into the mosque and said, ‘By God, if Abū Bakr dies we are going to kill ‘Utba b. Rabi‘a!’

"They then returned to Abū Bakr. Thereafter Abū Qāfāfa, and the Taym tribesmen kept talking to Abū Bakr until, late in the day, he spoke back. He said, ‘How is the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ)?’ But they upbraided and attacked him verbally and rose to leave, telling his mother Umm al-Khayr, ‘Be sure to give him something to eat or drink.’ When she was alone with him she fretted over him, but he began saying, ‘How is the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ)?’ She replied, ‘I swear, I don’t know anything about your friend.’ He asked, ‘Please go to Umm Jamil, al-Khaṭṭāb’s daughter, and ask her about him.’

"She went out to visit Umm Jamil and said to her, ‘Abū Bakr asks you about Muḥammad b. ‘Abd Allāh.’ She replied, ‘I don’t know Abū Bakr nor Muḥammad b. ‘Abd Allāh. But if you like I will go with you to your son.’ She agreed and took her to where Abū Bakr lay stretched out near death. Umm Jamil went over to him and let out a scream, shouting, ‘By God, they’ve done this to you for the sake of a crowd of sinners and disbelievers! I just hope God takes vengeance for you on them!’"
"He asked, 'How is the Messenger of God (SAAS)?' She replied, 'This is your mother, here listening.' He insisted, 'You need fear nothing from her.' She then said, 'He is safe and sound.' 'Where is he?' Abū Bakr asked. 'In the house of Ibn al-Arqam,' she told him.

"He commented, 'God has made it incumbent on me not to taste food or to drink until I go to the Messenger of God (SAAS).'

"They did nothing until things had quietened down and people were calm again. They then helped him outside, he leaning upon them, and took him in to see the Messenger of God (SAAS) who greeted him with embraces and kisses, as did the other Muslims. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was extremely moved by his state. Abū Bakr commented, 'I swear by my mother and father, 0 Messenger of God, I'm not in bad shape, except for what that sinner did to my face. But here is my mother, who is always so kind to her son. You are blessed by God; please invite her to come to God, and pray to Him for her, to save her, through yourself, from hell-fire.'

"And the Messenger of God (SAAS) prayed for her and invited her to God, and so she did accept Islam.

"They stayed with the Messenger of God (SAAS) there in that house for a month, all 39 men of them.

"Hamza b. 'Abd al-Mu'tṭalib had accepted Islam the day when Aba Bakr was beaten.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) said a prayer for 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb – or for Abū Jahl b. Hishām. 'Umar awoke next morning – the prayer having been made on Wednesday – and that day, Thursday, accepted Islam. The Messenger of God (SAAS) shouted out, along with all the household, the words Allāhu Akbar, 'God is most Great', so loudly at this that they could be heard in the very heights of Mecca.

"Abū al-Arqam, a man who was blind and a disbeliever, then came out saying, 'O God, forgive my young son 'Ubayd al-Arqam, for he has apostacized.'

"Umar arose and asked, 'O Messenger of God, why do we conceal our faith though we follow the truth, while their religion is displayed openly even though they follow falsehood?' He replied, 'O 'Umar, we are but few, and you saw what happened to us.' 'Umar responded, 'By Him who sent you with the truth, I'll never attend a meeting with disbelievers without declaring my faith there.'

"He then left, and circumambulated the ka'ba, passing by some Quraysh men who were waiting for him. Abū Jahl b. Hishām asked, 'So-and-so claims you've turned heretic.' 'Umar responded, 'I bear witness that there is no God but God alone, who has no associate, and that Muḥammad is His servant and His Messenger!'
The polytheists charged at him and he attacked Utba, getting him down and beating him. He poked his fingers into the eye of Utba, who began to scream. The attackers withdrew at this and Umar got up. Whenever anyone came near him he would grab some nearby old chief until the people gave up attacking him. He then attended those meetings he used to frequent, and there gave expression to his faith.

Thereafter he went to the Prophet (SAAS), having vanquished them, and said, 'Do not worry, by my father and mother! By God, I swear I've been to every meeting I used to attend as a polytheist and at every one I've expressed my faith without fear or reservation!'

So the Messenger of God (SAAS) went outside, Umar leading the way, along with Hamza b. 'Abd al-Muttalib, and circumambulated the ka'ba and performed the noon prayer as a believer. He then went back to the house of al-Arqam, Umar accompanying him. After that Umar went off alone and thereafter the Prophet (SAAS) left too.”

But the truth is that Umar only accepted Islam after those who migrated for Abyssinia had left, an event that occurred in the sixth year of the mission. Reference to this will be made in the proper place, if God wills it.

We have examined the manner in which Abī Bakr and Umar accepted Islam, God be pleased with them both, in the volume devoted solely to their biography. There we dealt with the subject fully; all praise be to God.

It is established in the sahih collection of Muslim, from a tradition of Abū Amāma, from ‘Amr b. ‘Abasa al-Sulāmi, God be pleased with him, who said, “I came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the beginning of his mission, while he was in Mecca; he was in hiding at the time. I asked him, ‘What are you?’ He replied, ‘I am a prophet.’ ‘But what is a prophet?’ I asked. ‘God’s Messenger,’ he replied. I asked, ‘Was it God who sent you?’ ‘Yes,’ he answered. ‘With what did he send you?’ I then asked. He replied, ‘With the command: Worship God alone; He has no associate. Destroy the idols. And make firm ties of kinship.’ I commented, ‘Well, that’s fine what he sent you with. Who are your followers in this?’ He replied, ‘A free man and a slave.’”

By this he meant Abū Bakr and Bilāl. He went on, “‘Amr used to say, ‘I thought myself one quarter of Islam.’

“And so I did accept Islam and said, ‘Shall I follow you then, O Messenger of God?’ He replied, ‘No; join your own people. When you are informed I have gone public, then follow me.’”

It is said that the statement of the Prophet (SAAS), “a free man and a slave”, has a generic meaning. To interpret it by reference to Abū Bakr and to Bilāl alone would be doubtful, for a group of men had accepted Islam before ‘Amr b. ‘Absa. And Zayd b. Hārītha had accepted Islam before Bilāl. Perhaps he referred to being “one fourth of Islam” by his own knowledge alone, because the believers were concealing their Islam at this time, few of their close relatives being aware of it, let alone strangers and bedouins from the desert. But God knows best.

In the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī, through Abū Usāma, from Ḥāshim b. Ḥāshim, there is a hadith from Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab, who said, “I heard Abū Ḥishāq Saʿīd b. Abū Waqqās say, ‘No one accepted Islam that same day I did. For seven days I remained one third of Islam.’”

His statement “no one accepted Islam the same day I did” presents only a simple issue. It was recounted by some to read: “except on the day I accepted Islam”. This would be problematic, for it suggests that no one preceded him in accepting Islam. And it is well known that Abū Bakr, ‘Ali, Khadija, and Zayd b. Ḥāritha accepted Islam before he did. Similarly, more than one authority, including Ibn al-Athīr, have reached a consensus that these people did precede in accepting Islam. Abū Ḥanīfa, God be pleased with him, gives textual evidence that each of these did accept Islam before those of his kind. But God knows best.

As for the above statement, “For seven days I remained one-third of Islam”, this is problematic. I do not know how to explain it, except for his having made the statement based on his knowledge alone. But God knows best.

Abū Dāwūd al-Ṭayyālīsī stated that Ḥammād b. Salama related to him, from ʿĀṣim, from Zarr, from ʿAbd Allāh, who is Ibn Masʿūd, who said, “When I was a youth I used to tend flocks for ʿUqba b. Abū Muṣṭafī in Mecca. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and Abū Bakr came out and joined me, having escaped from the polytheists. He said – or they both said – ‘Do you have any milk you could give us to drink, lad?’ I replied, ‘But I'm entrusted with it; I can't give it to you to drink.’ He then asked, ‘Do you have a young ewe that hasn’t yet been served by a ram?’ ‘Yes, I do’, I replied.

“I brought the ewe over to them and Abū Bakr tethered it. Then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) took hold of its udder and said a prayer. The udder filled and Abū Bakr brought a hollowed stone and the Prophet (ṢAAS) poured milk into it. He then drank, quoting Abū Bakr, and poured some for me too. He now spoke to the udder and told it to contract, which it did.

“Later I went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and said, ‘Teach me some of this good speech,’ meaning the Qurʾān. He replied, ‘Consider yourself a well-taught young man.’ I then took from his mouth 70 suras regarding which no one can challenge me.”

This is how Imām Aḥmad related this anecdote, from ʿAffān, from an account of it by Ḥammād b. Salama.

Al-Ḥasan b. ʿArafa also recounted it, from Abū Bakr b. ʿAyyāsh, from ʿĀṣim b. Abū al-Nuʿād.

Al-Bayhaqī stated that Abū ʿAbd Allāh, the ḥāfīz, related to him, quoting Abū ʿAbd Allāh b. Bāṭṭa al-ʿAṣbahānī, quoting al-Ḥasan b. al-Jahm, quoting al-Ḥusayn b. al-Faraj, quoting Muḥammad b. ʿUmar, quoting Jaʿfar b. Muḥammad b. Khālid b. al-Zubayr, from his father — or from Muhammad b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmr b. Uthmān — who said, “The acceptance of Islam by Khālid b. Saʿid b. al-ʿĀṣ was early; he was the first one of his brothers to accept Islam.

“The beginnings of his becoming Muslim was that he saw himself in a dream placed on the brink of a fire, the size of which was so great as only God could have known. In his sleep he had a vision as though someone was pushing him towards it. Then he saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) grip him by his waist-wrappers (so that) he would not fall. He awoke in a fright from his sleep and said, ‘I swear by God that this was a vision of the truth.’

“When he met Abū Bakr b. Abī Qāḥasa, he told him of this and Abū Bakr replied, ‘This was indeed the Messenger of God (ṢAAS): follow him. You will follow him and enter into Islam with him. Islam will prevent you from falling into it (the fire) though your father will do so.’

“And so he joined the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who was at Ajyad, and asked him, ‘O Messenger of God, O Muḥammad, to what do you call (people)?’ He answered, ‘I invite you to come to God, the One, He who has no associate, and (to bear witness) that Muḥammad is His slave and His Messenger, and for you to abandon your practice of worshipping rocks that cannot hear, nor harm, nor see, nor benefit, nor know who it is who worship them and who do not.’

“Khālid said, ‘I do bear witness that there is no God but God, and that you are the Messenger of God.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was delighted at his accepting Islam.

“Khālid then went away and his father learned of his accepting Islam. So he sent after him and had him brought back. His father reprimanded him and beat him with a club he held in his hand so hard that he broke it upon his head. He swore, ‘By God, I’ll prevent you from getting food!’ Khālid responded, ‘If you do so, God will provide me what I shall live by.’

“He then went off to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) whom he served and stayed with.”

An Account of how Ḥamza, son of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, God be pleased with him, the uncle of the Prophet (ṢAAS), accepted Islam.

Yūnūs b. Bukayr quoted Muḥammad b. Ishāq as saying that a man of the Aslam tribe — a man with a fine memory — related to him that Abū Jahl blocked the path of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at al-Ṣafā, and reviled and cursed him, inflictıng insults on his religion. This was reported to Ḥamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, who then went up to Abū Jahl and, standing right there over him, gave him a terrible beating with his bow on the head that fractured his skull.
Quraysh men of Banū Makhzūm tribe approached Ḥamza to give Abū Jahl help against him. They said to Ḥamza, “So, we see you’re turning heretic then!”

“And who’s going to prevent me?” demanded Ḥamza, “when I now see clearly and can testify that he is the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and that what he says is the truth. I’ll not retract, so you just go on and stand in my way, if you’re serious!”

Abū Jahl then spoke up, “Leave Abū Umara alone; I swear, I really did badly insult his nephew.”

When Ḥamza accepted Islam Quraysh knew that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had gained strength and was protected, and so they refrained from some of their previous treatment of him. Ḥamza spoke some verses on this subject.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Then Ḥamza went home where Satan came to him and said, ‘You, a Quraysh chief, have followed this heretic and abandoned the religion of your forefathers! Death is best for you for what you’ve done!’

‘Ḥamza then addressed his inner self, saying, ‘O God, if what I’ve done was right, then make me believe it in my own heart! Or else find me some way out of my predicament!’

‘He then spent a night worse than he ever had before due to the whisperings of the devil.

‘Next morning he went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and said to him, ‘O nephew, I’ve fallen into a trap from which I don’t know how to escape. I don’t know whether continuing as I am is wiser for me, or whether it’s a terrible mistake. Please talk to me. I really need you to talk to me, nephew.’

‘And so the Messenger of God went over to him and talked and preached to him, telling him both what frightened and cheered him. God placed in his heart faith at what he was told by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

‘Ḥamza therefore said, ‘I do truly bear witness that you are telling the truth. Make your faith public, O nephew; for, by God, I would not like to own what is under the sky while keeping to my former religion.’”

So Ḥamza was one of those through whom God fortified the faith.

Al-Bayhaqī related it thus from al-Ḥākim, from al-ʿAṣamm, from ʿAḥmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbar, from an account given by Yanūs b. Bukayr, quoting ʿAbd Allah b. al-Raʾīmī, quoting al-Nadr b. Muhammad, quoting Ikrima b. ʿAmmar, from an account given by Abū Zumayl Simāk b. al-Walid,

An Account of how Abū Dharr, God be pleased with him, came to accept Islam.

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī stated that the ḥāfīz Abū ʿAbd Allāh related to him, quoting Abū ʿAbd Allāh Muḥammad b. Yaʿqūb, also a ḥāfīz, quoting al-Ḥusayn b. Muḥammad b. Ziyād, quoting ʿAbd Allah b. al-Rūmā, quoting al-Naḍr b. Muḥammad, quoting Ikrima b. ʿAmmār, from Abū Zumayl Simāk b. al-Walid, from Malik b. Marthad, from his father, from Abü Dharr, who said, “I was a quarter of Islam. Three persons accepted Islam before myself, and I was the fourth. I went to the Messenger of God and said, ‘Peace be upon you, O Messenger of God. I bear witness that there is no God but God, and that Muḥammad is the Messenger of God.’ I then saw the face of the Messenger of God (SAAS) radiate with pleasure.”

This is an abbreviated account.

Al-Bukhārī stated, regarding the acceptance of Islam by Abü Dharr, that ʿAmr b. ʿAbbas related to him, quoting ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Mahdi, from al-Muthannā, from Abū Jamra, from Ibn ʿAbbas, who said that when news of the mission of the Messenger of God (SAAS) reached Abū Dharr, he said to his brother, “Ride off into that valley and bring me information about this man who claims that he is a prophet to whom information comes from heaven. Listen to what he says, then come back to me.”

The brother then left, came to the Prophet (SAAS), heard his words, then returned to Abū Dharr. He told him, “I saw him advocating ethical behaviour, and delivering speech that was not poetry.”

Abū Dharr told him, “You’ve not solved my problem.”

He then equipped himself for a journey, carrying a large, full waterskin, and left for Mecca. There he went to the mosque and looked for the Messenger of God (SAAS) but did not know how to recognize him and he was reluctant to ask after him. When night came and he lay down to rest, ʿAli saw him and realized he was a stranger. Abii Dharr followed him without either man asking the other any questions. Next morning when he arose, Abii Dharr carried off his water-skin and provisions to the mosque, where he remained all day without the Prophet (SAAS) seeing him. When night came, he set out his bedding. ʿAli passed by and exclaimed, “Isn’t it high time the man knew his house!” He then helped him up and took him home, neither man asking the other any questions.

The third day the same thing happened and again ʿAli accommodated him. But this time ʿAli asked him, “Won’t you tell me what brought you here?” Abū Dharr replied, “I will if you’ll promise faithfully to guide me.” ʿAli agreed and so Abū Dharr explained. ʿAli then told him, “He is truth; he is the Messenger of God (SAAS). Tomorrow morning follow me and if I see anything that makes me fearful for you, I will get up as if I need to urinate. If I leave, follow me and go where I do.”

ʿAli did this and Abū Dharr followed on behind him and accompanied him when he went in to the Prophet (SAAS). Abū Dharr heard him speak and he accepted Islam then and there.

The Prophet (SAAS) then told him, “Go back to your people and tell them; then wait till you hear from me.”
But Abū Dharr replied, “No, by Him who sent you with the truth, I’ll shout it out in full public!”

He then left and went to the mosque, where he shouted at the top of his voice, “I bear witness that there is no God but God, and that Muḥammad is the Messenger of God!” At that everyone there set about beating him till they laid him low.

Then al-ʿAbbās came and, bending over him, exclaimed, “Woe unto you! Don’t you realize that he is from Ghifār, and that your trade route is to Syria?” He then rescued Abū Dharr from them. But the next day Abū Dharr did the same and was again attacked and then saved by al-ʿAbbās.

This is the story as told by al-Bukhārī.

Abū Dharr’s acceptance of Islam is elaborated in the sahīh collections of Muslim and elsewhere.

Imām Ahmad stated that Yazīd b. Hārūn related to him, quoting Sulaymān b. al-Mughira, quoting Ḥumayd b. Ḥilāl, from ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Ṣāmit, who quoted Abū Dharr as saying, “We – that is I, my brother Anis, and our mother – left our tribe of Ghifār because they used to disregard the restrictions of the holy month.

“We took up residence with an uncle of ours who was a man of wealth and status; he honoured us and treated us extremely well. But his family envied us and told him, ‘If you were to go away from your people, Anis would take your place over them.’

“Our uncle then came to us and reported what he had been told. I then said to him, ‘You’ve cancelled out all your prior generosity to us. We’ll have no communion with you henceforth.’

“So we assembled our herd of camels and set off with them, while our uncle covered himself up in his robe and began to weep.

“We rode on until we made camp on the outskirts of Mecca. My brother Anis then made a wager, betting our flock of camels and an additional number equal to our herd. He (and his competitor) then went to a diviner who decided in favour of Anis. Anis returned to us with our herd and a like one.”

Abū Dharr continued, “Now, my nephew, I had been praying for three years prior to meeting the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).” I asked, “To whom?” “To God.” “In which direction?” “Wherever God directed me. And I would pray each evening till deep into the night, when I find myself under my blanket, until the sun would rise.”

“Well any way,” Anis said, “I have business in Mecca; await me until I return.” He left and was away for what seemed a long time, then he came back. I asked him, “What kept you?” He said, “I met a man who claimed that God had sent him with your religion.” “And what do people say of him?” I asked. “They say that he is a poet and a soothsayer.” Anis was himself a poet.
He went on, “Anis commented, ‘I’ve heard soothsayers and he does not speak like them. And I’ve checked his utterances against the measures of poetry and, by God, it doesn’t fit anyone’s tongue as poetry. And, I swear, he is truthful, whereas the rest are liars.’

“I asked him, ‘Could you stand in for me while I leave?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied, ‘but watch out for the Meccans. They have pilloried and berated him.’

“So I left and went to Mecca, where I asked a weak-looking man, ‘Where is the one people refer to as the heretic?’ But he pointed at me and the people of that valley pelted me with clods of earth and bones until I was injured with wounds and fainted. When I got up later, I was like a red pole. I made my way to zamzam, drank its water and washed the blood off myself. I then positioned myself between the ka‘ba and its hangings. And there I stayed, O nephew, for 30 days and nights without sustenance except for water from zamzam. But I gained weight and developed folds of fat on my belly, finding no evidence on my body of the emaciation of starvation.

“One night when the moon was very bright and the Meccans were fast asleep, there were only two women circumambulating the ka‘ba. As they came past me they were saying prayers to the gods Isāf and Na‘ila. I commented, ‘Make one of them have intercourse with the other!’ This did not deter them, so I then said, ‘They’re just like bits of wood, but I’d not lean on them!’

“At this they scurried away, wailing, ‘If only one of our menfolk were here!’

“‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) and Abū Bakr, on their way down from the mountain, met these women and asked them what was the matter. ‘It’s that heretic between the ka‘ba and its hangings.’ They asked them what I had said, and the women replied, ‘He said a real mouthful to us!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) and his Companion then came along, kissed the stone, circumambulated the ka‘ba, then prayed. I went over to him and was the first person to address him with the greeting of the community of Islam. He replied, ‘Peace be upon you, and God’s mercy. Who are you?’ I told him I was from the Ghifār tribe. He brought his hand to his forehead in a gesture of surprise and I told myself, ‘He dislikes my being from Ghifār!’

“I made as if to take him by the hand, but his Companion pushed me away, knowing him better then I did.

“The Prophet (SAAS) then asked, ‘How long have you been here?’ ‘I’ve been here for 30 days and nights,’ I answered.

“‘And who has been feeding you?’ he asked.

“‘There’s been nothing except zamzam water, but I’ve gained so much weight that I developed folds of fat on my belly. And I feel no emaciation from hunger.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘It’s blessed! Wonder food!’

“Abū Bakr then asked, ‘Please, O Messenger of God, permit me to give him some food tonight.’ And he agreed.
“The Prophet (SAAS) then left and I went with them. Abū Bakr opened a gate and began picking some grapes from Ta'if for us. And that was the first food I ate there. I stayed some time in Mecca.

Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) told me, ‘I have been directed to go to a land of palm trees, none other than Yathrib, I believe. Will you go and inform your people about me? Perhaps God will benefit them through you, and give you reward among them too.’

“So I left and rejoined my brother Anis. He asked me, ‘What did you do?’ ‘What I did was, I accepted Islam and believed.’

“He commented, ‘I’ve nothing against your religion. I too accept Islam and believe.’

“We then went to our mother and she said, ‘Well, I’ve nothing against your religion. I accept Islam and believe.’ We then packed up and rejoined our tribe of Ghifār, and some of them accepted Islam before the Messenger of God migrated to Medina. Khufāf b. Aymā' b. Rakhṣa the Ghifārī led them as he was their chief at that time. The remainder of them said, ‘If the Messenger of God (SAAS) comes, we will accept Islam.’

“And the Messenger of God (SAAS) did come and the remainder of them did accept Islam. Then the Aslam tribe arrived and said, ‘O Messenger of God, we’ll accept Islam just as our Ghifar brothers did.’

Muslim related this from Hudba b. Khalid from Sulaymān b. al-Mughīra in much the same words. The story of Abī Dharr’s acceptance of Islam is also told along with strange additions. But God knows best.

The account of the acceptance of Islam by Salmān al-Fārist has been given previously in the book recounting the miraculous signs of the mission of the Prophet (SAAS).

An Account of the acceptance of Islam by Dimād.

Muslim and al-Bayhaqī related a hadith of Dawūd b. Abū Hind, from ‘Amr b. Sa‘īd, from Sa‘īd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said that Dimād came to Mecca, he being a man of the Azd tribe from Shanū’a. He used to say incantations to protect people from those winds. He overheard some Meccan fools saying, “Muḥammad is crazy.” He asked them, “Where is this man? Perhaps God will cure him at my hands.”

He recounted, “I met Muḥammad and said, ‘I use incantations against these winds. And God cures at my hands whomever He wishes. Do come along.’
“Muhammad (SAAS) replied, ‘Praise be to God! We praise Him and seek His help. Whomever God leads aright, no one can lead astray. Whomever God leads astray, no one can lead aright. I bear testimony that there is no God but God alone who has no associates.’ He repeated this three times.”

Dimād said, “I swear, I have heard the speech of soothsayers, sorcerers, and poets, but I never heard the like of these words. Give me your hand and I’ll pledge you my allegiance in Islam.”

The Messenger of God accepted his pledge and asked him, “For your tribe too?” “Yes, for my tribe too,” he agreed.

The Prophet (SAAS) dispatched an army that passed by the people of Dimād. The army commander asked his troops, “Have you seized anything from these people?” One of the men replied, “I did take one strong-backed camel from them.” He ordered the man, “Give it back to them; they are from the tribe of Dimād.”

In another account Dimād said to the Prophet (SAAS), “Repeat these words of yours to me; they are the epitome of oratory.”

Abn Nu'aym devoted a long chapter in his work al-Dalā'il (The Signs) to accounts of the prominent men who accepted Islam. He gave it in fine detail, may God have mercy on him and reward him.

Ibn Ishāq gave a list of the names of the Companions, God be pleased with them, who accepted Islam early on. He stated, “Then Abū Ubayda accepted Islam, as did Abū Salama, al-Arqam b. Abū al-Arqam, Uthmān b. Maẓ'ūn, Ubayda b. al-Ḥārith and Sadıd b. Zayd, along with his wife Fāṭima, daughter of al-Khaṭṭāb.

Also there were Asmā', daughter of Abū Bakr, and Ā'ishah, also daughter of Abū Bakr, when she was young.

Then there were ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaḥsh, Abū Aḥmad b. Jaḥsh, Jaʿfar b. Abū Ṭalib, along with his wife Asmā' daughter of Umays.

Others included Ḥāṭib b. al-Ḥārith and his wife Fāṭima, daughter of al-Mujallil, and also Ḥāṭāb b. al-Ḥārith and his wife Fuhayya, daughter of Yāsār, Maṭmar b. al-Ḥārith b. Maṭmar al-Jumahī, and al-Sāʿīb b. Uthmān b. Maẓ'ūn, al-Muṭṭalib b. Azhar b. ʿAbd Manāf and his wife Ramla, daughter of Abū ʿAwf b. Šubayra b. Saʿīd b. Sahm, al-Nahḥām, whose name was Nuʿaym b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Asid, ʿĀmir b. Fuhayra, the freed-man of Abū Bakr, Khalid b. Saʿīd, Umayna, daughter of Khalaf b. Asad b. ʿĀmir b. Bayada, of Khuza'a, and

Also there were Khalīd b. al-Bukayr, ʿĀmir b. al-Bukayr, ʿAqīl b. al-Bukayr, Iyās b. al-Bukayr b. ʿAbd Yālāyīl b. ʿAḍī. The given name of ʿAqīl (a word meaning “wise”) had originally been Ghāfīl (a word meaning “heedless”) and so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had renamed him ʿAqīl. These were all allied to the tribe of ʿAdī b. Kaʿb.

Also there were ʿAmmār b. Yāṣir and Ṣuhayb b. Sinān.

Thereafter people began accepting Islam in large numbers, men and women both, so that it became a prominent subject of discussion in Mecca.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “God then ordered his Messenger (ṢAAS), after three years of his mission, to announce it openly and to remain firm against the evil of the polytheists.

“The Companions of the Prophet (ṢAAS) would go off along mountain trails when they prayed, to hide this from their people.

“While Saʿd b. Abū Waqqās was at prayer, along with a small group of others, on a mountain trail, some polytheists came at them. They upbraided them, reviled them for what they were doing, and attacked them.

“Saʿd struck one man with a camel’s jawbone and cut him open; this was the first blood spilled in Islam.”

Al-Umawi related this incident at length in his maghāzi study of the early campaigns, through al-Waqqāṣī, from al-Zuhri, from ʿĀmir b. Saʿd, from his father. His account states that the man wounded was ʿAbd Allāh b. Khaṭṭāl, God damn him.

CHAPTER: GOD’S COMMAND TO HIS MESSENGER (ṢAAS) TO ANNOUNCE HIS MISSION PUBLICLY.

This chapter deals with God’s command to his Messenger (ṢAAS) to announce publicly his mission to high and low and how He told him to be patient and stoical, and to oppose those who remain stubborn, mendacious and ignorant even after the evidence had been brought against them and the Messenger had been sent to them. It also mentions the damages they had done to him and to his Companions, may God bless them all.

God Almighty stated, “And warn those of your people closest to you and bring down your wing to protect those believers who follow you. And if they disobey you, say, ‘I am innocent of what you do’. Put your trust in the Almighty and All-Merciful, who sees you when you arise and when you turn about among those prostrating in prayer; He is the All-Hearing, the All-Knowing” (ṣūrat al-Shūʿārāʾ, XXVI, v.214–20).
And the Almighty stated, “It is surely a message to you and to your people, and you will all be questioned” (ṣūrat al-Zukhruf, XLIII, v.44).

Also He stated, “He who imposed the Qurʾān upon you will bring you back to an after life” (ṣūrat al-Qasas, XXVIII, v.85). This means, He who has made a demand upon you and has required you to announce the Qurʾān will return you to the hereafter, which is the maʿād, the afterlife, and He will question you about that. As the Almighty stated, “And, by your Lord, we will question them all for what they have done” (ṣūrat al-Ḥijr, XV, v.92-3).

The verses and statements concerning this are numerous, and we have given these in detail in our Exegesis. We addressed this issue at length in commenting on the verse, “And warn those of your people closest to you” in ṣūrat al-Shūʿarāʾ, XXVI, v.214. There we gave many references to that.

On this subject, Imām Ahmad stated that ʿAbd Allāh b. Numayr related, from al-ʿAʾmash, from ʿAmr b. Murra, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “When God sent down, ‘And warn those of your people closest to you’, the Prophet (ṢAAS), went up on Mt. Ṣafā and called out, ‘Ya Ṣabāḥa!’

“People gathered there around him; they consisted of men who had come to him themselves and others who had sent messengers.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) addressed them, saying, ‘O tribe of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, O tribe of Fihr, O tribe of Kaʿb! If I were to tell you that there were horsemen on the heights of this mountain who planned to attack you, don’t you think you would believe me?’ ‘Yes,’ they replied. He then announced, ‘Well, I am come to warn you of a terrible punishment.’

“ʿAbū Lahab, God damn him! said, ‘Damn you! May you perish all day long! You called us here for this?’

“And so God, the Almighty and Glorious, revealed ‘Damn the hands of ʿAbū Lahab! Damn him!’” (ṣūrat al-Lahab, CXI, v.1).

Both of the sources gave this ḥadīth from an account of al-ʿAʾmash in similar form.

Aḥmad stated that Muʿawiya b. ʿAmr related to him, quoting Zaʿida, quoting ʿAbd al-Malik b. ʿUmayr, from Musā b. Ṭalḥa, from Abū Hurayra, who said that when this verse, “And warn those of your people closest to you” was revealed, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) summoned the people of Quraysh, high and low alike, and told them, “O Quraysh, save yourselves from hell-fire! O tribe of Banū Kalb, save yourselves from hell-fire! O tribe of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, save yourselves from hell-fire! O Fatima, daughter of Muḥammad, save yourself from hell-fire! For I, I swear by God, have nothing to protect you from God, except the fact that you have kinship (to me) for which I shall care.”

Muslim related this from a ḥadīth of ʿAbd al-Malik b. ʿUmayr, and it was published in both saḥīḥ collections from an account of al-Zuhri, from Saʿīd b. al-Musayyib and Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra. The account has other provenances from Abū Hurayra in the musnad collection of Ahmad and elsewhere.

Ahmad also stated that Waki' b. Hishām related to him, from his father, from ʿĀʾisha, God bless her, who said, "When there was revealed the verse, 'And warn those of your people closest to you' the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arose and said, 'O Fāṭima, daughter of Muḥammad! O Ṣafiyya, daughter of Abī al-Muṭṭalib! O family of Abī al-Muṭṭalib! I have nothing to protect you from God; ask whatever you will from my wealth.'" Muslim also related this.

The ḥāfiẓ Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqi stated in his work al-Dalāʾil (The Signs) that Muḥammad b. Abī Ḥūfa related to him, quoting Abū ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. Yaʿqūb, quoting Abī al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. 'Ubayy, quoting Abī al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. Ishāq, who said that someone who concealed his name from him told him that he heard Abī ʿAbbās al-Ḥārith b. Nawfal relate from Ibn ʿAbbās, from ʿAlī b. Abī ʿAbbās, who said, "When there was revealed to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) the verses, 'And warn those of your people closest to you and bring down your wing to protect those believers who follow you', the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, 'I realized that if I announced it to my people I would see from them what I would hate, and so I kept silent. Then Gabriel, peace be upon him, came to me and said, 'O Muḥammad, if you do not act as your Lord has ordered you, He will punish you with hell-fire.'"

ʿAlī continued, "So he called for me and said, 'O ʿAlī, God has commanded me to warn my closest relatives. So prepare for us a sheep on a platter of food, along with a large pot of milk, then assemble Banū Abī al-Muṭṭalib for me.'"

"I did so and they assembled on that day. There were 40 men, more or less; among them there were his uncles Abī Talib, ʿAmmar, and Al-ʿAbbās, along with Abū Lahab, the vile polytheist.

"I served the food platter to them and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) took from it a piece of meat, split it with his teeth and tossed it in all directions, saying, 'Eat, in the name of God!' Everyone ate until satiated, nothing being seen left but the marks of their fingers. No one ate like that ever before! Then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, 'Now give them to drink, ʿAlī!' So I brought the large pot of milk, and they drank it up till they were full. I swear, no one ever drank that way before!

"When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was on the point of addressing them, Abū Lahab, God damn him! forestalled him by saying, 'Well, what a feast your host served to you to eat!' At that they dispersed without the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) addressing them.

"Next day the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, 'Prepare for us the same food and drink as yesterday; that fellow forestalled me by saying what he did before I could address them.'"
I did so, then gathered them for him and the Messenger of God (SAAS) did as he had the previous day. They ate till they were full; I swear, none of them ate like that ever before! Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Give them to drink, ‘Ali!’ So I brought them the pot and they drank of it till they were satiated. I swear, none of them drank like that before!

“When the Messenger of God (SAAS) was about to address them, Abū Lahab, God damn him! forestalled him by saying, ‘Well, what a feast your host served to you to eat!’ So they dispersed without the Messenger of God (SAAS) addressing them.

“Next day the Messenger of God (SAAS) told me, ‘Ali, prepare food and drink for us as you did yesterday. This fellow forestalled me by saying what you heard before I could address the people.’

“I did so and assembled them again. The Messenger of God (SAAS) acted as he had the day before. They ate till they were satiated, and then I served them from the pot until they were full. I swear, I never saw people eat and drink like that!

“Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke, “O Family of ‘Abd al-Mu‘t̄alib, I know of no Arab man, by God, who brought his people anything better than I have brought you. I have brought you what deals with this world and the afterlife as well.”

Al-Bayhaqi related this anecdote in this way through Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Ibn Ishāq, from a sheikh of uncertain identity, from ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Ḥārith.

Abū Ja‘far b. Jarir related it from Muḥammad b. Ḥumayd al-Rāzī, from Salama b. al-FA‘l al-Abraš, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq, from ‘Abd al-Ghaffār Abū Miryām b. al-Qāsim, from al-Minhāl b. ‘Amr, from ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Ḥārith, from Ibn Abbās, from ‘Ali. His account is similar but adds after the words, “I have brought forth for you the good of this world and the next”, “And God has ordered me to call upon you to come to Him. And whoever of you will aid me in this matter I must consider my brother.” And so on.

‘Ali continued, “But everyone drew back from that. Since I was the youngest, had the most bleary eyes, the largest stomach and the shortest legs, I called out, ‘O Prophet of God, I will be your wāzir (i.e. your deputy) in this!’

“The Prophet (SAAS) took me by the neck and said, ‘This is my brother’ and so on and so forth, ‘so listen to him and obey him!’

‘Ali went on, “Everyone began laughing and saying to Abū Ṭalib, ‘He has ordered you to listen to your son and to obey him!’”

Abd al-Ghaffār b. al-Qāsim Abū Maryam is the sole authority for this account, and he was a liar and a shi‘ī whom ‘Ali b. al-Madini and others accused of inventing the hadith; the other scholars consider him a weak source.

But Ibn Abū Ḥātim related, in his work of exegesis of the Qurān, from his father, from al-Ḥusayn b. Ḥaṣā b. Maysara al-Ḥārithi, from ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abd al-Quddūs, from al-A’mash, from al-Munḥāl b. ‘Amr, from ‘Abd Allāh b. al-‘Ijārīth, who said, “‘Ali stated, ‘When the verse “And warn those of your people closest to you” was revealed, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said to me, “Make me a leg of lamb on a platter of food and a beaker of milk, and invite Bani Ḥāshim for me.” I did invite them and on that occasion they were 40, give or take a man.’”

This account is much the same up to the words, “Then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) forestalled them in speaking and asked, ‘Which of you will settle my debt for me, and be my successor for my family?’”

‘Ali went on. “They were all silent. Al-‘Abbās kept quiet because he feared the issue might involve his money. And I kept quiet because of al-‘Abbās’s age.

“The Prophet (ṢAAS) repeated his question and al-‘Abbās kept silent and, witnessing this, I said, ‘I will, O Messenger of God!’ ‘You?’ he replied.

‘Ali explained, “At that time I was the most homely looking person there. I was bleary eyed, had a large stomach and short legs.”

This wording of the anecdote substantiates the previous one, except that it does not have Ibn ‘Abbās as one of the chain of authorities. But God knows best.

Imām Aḥmad related in his musnad collection from a hadith of ‘Abd Allāh al-‘Asadī and Rabi‘a b. Nājīdh from ‘Ali an account approximating to the former, or giving testimony to it. But God knows best.

His statement in this hadith, “Which of you will settle my debt for me, and be my successor for my family” carries the implication “if I should die”. It seems that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) feared that if he announced his mission to the Arab polytheists they might kill him. He therefore wanted to establish that whoever came in his place thereafter would be beneficial to his family and fulfil his obligations. But God removed his concern at that with His words, “O Messenger, announce what has been revealed to you from your Lord. If you do not, then you will not have fulfilled your mission. God will protect you from the people” (ṣūrat al-Mā’ida, V, v.67).

The outcome was that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) continued to call upon people to believe in God Almighty day and night, secretly and openly, without anyone being able to deter, dissuade, or prevent him. He followed people everywhere, into their celebrations, meetings and gatherings, to the fairs and to the pilgrimage stations. Everyone he met, free man or slave, weak or powerful, rich or poor he urged; as far as he was concerned all were equal and alike.

Violent and powerful Quraysh polytheists inflicted harm both verbal and physical upon the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and upon those powerless individuals who followed him.

One of the most violent of those opposed to him was his uncle Ābu Lahab; his full name was ‘Abd al-‘Uzza b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib. His wife, Umm Jamīl, was named Arwā, daughter of Ḥarb b. Umayya, the sister of Ābu Ṣufyān.
Another uncle, Abū Ṭālib b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, was at variance with Abū Lahab, for he favoured the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) above all other men for his fine qualities. He treated him with the utmost compassion and kindness and gave him his support and protection. In doing this he was in opposition to his own people, even though he shared their religion and their friendship. God had, however, put his heart to the test by making him love the Prophet (ṢAAS) by natural disposition rather than for religious reasons.

His persisting in the religion of his people was, in fact, an expression of the wisdom of Almighty God and a factor in the protection He was affording to His Messenger. For if Abū Bakr had accepted Islam, he would have no longer held any weight or leadership among the Quraysh polytheists; they would have held no respect for or fear of him. They would have penalized him and done him verbal and actual harm. For your Lord determines and establishes whatever He wills! And He has divided up His creation into many different types and kinds.

Both these uncles, Abū Ṭālib and Abū Lahab, were infidels. But whereas the former will be at the very surface of the fire, the latter will be deep down in its lowest depths. About him God made revelation in one of the chapters of the Qurʾān to be recited from the pulpit and read in sermons and prayers. It contains information that he will roast in flaming hell-fire, along with his wife, that “firewood hawker”.

Imām ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, from his father who said that a man named Rabiʿa b. Abū al-ʿAbbas related to him, quoting ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Abū al-Zinād, from his father who said that a man named Rabiʿa b. Abū al-Dīl, who had been an idol-worshipper and had accepted Islam, recalled, “I saw the Messenger of God, before the coming of Islam, at the fair of Dhū al-Majāz, and he was saying, ‘O you people, say, ‘There is no God but God’, and you will prosper.’ There were people gathered all around him, while behind him stood a mean-looking, squint-eyed man wearing two plaits who was saying, ‘He’s a lying Sabian!’ This man followed him wherever he went. I asked who he was and was told it was his uncle, Abū Lahab.”

Imām ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, from his father who said that a man named Rabiʿa b. Abū al-Dīl, who had been an idol-worshipper and had accepted Islam, recalled, “I saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at Dhū al-Majāz following people into their dwellings urging them to believe in God, while behind him went a squint-eyed man with scarred cheeks who was saying, ‘O people, let not this fellow entice you away from your religion, the religion of your forefathers!’

“I asked, ‘Who is he?’ And I was told, ‘That’s Abū Lahab.’”

77. A reference to the words of sūrat Abū Lahab, CXI, v.4.
He then related this anecdote through Shu'ba, from al-Ash'ath b. Sa'dim, from a man of Kināña, who said, “I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the Dhū al-Majāz fair. He was saying, ‘O people, say “There is no God but God” and you will prosper.’ There was a man standing there behind him scattering dust on him. It was Abū Jahl, and what he was saying was, ‘O people, let not this fellow entice you away from your religion. He just wants you to give up worship of al-Lāt and al-‘Uzza.’”

This anecdote states it was Abū Jahl, but it is obvious that it was Abū Lahab. We will give details of his biography when we report his death, which occurred after the battle of Badr. If God Almighty wills it, so shall it be.

Abū Tālib, as will be apparent from both his actions and his qualities, was a man of great natural kindness and compassion. He showed this by his support for the Messenger of God (SAAS) and for his Companions, God bless them all.

Yūnus b. Bukayr stated that he was informed from Tālha b. Yahiya, from ‘Abd Allah b. Musa b. Tālha, that Uqayl b. Abū Tālib related, “Quraysh came to Abū Tālib and said, ‘This nephew of yours is disturbing our meetings and our mosque; keep him away from us!’ He asked me, ‘O Uqayl, go and bring me Muhammad.’ So I went off and brought him out from a khanas.’ This word means a “tent”; or he might have used the word khanas, a “hide-out”, or alternatively as some say, a “small house”. He arrived back at midday in the full heat. When he came in, Abū Tālib told him, ‘These relatives of yours charge that you are annoying them in their meetings and in their mosque. Stop annoying them!’

“At this the Messenger of God (SAAS) gazed upwards to the sky and asked, ‘Do you see that sun?’ ‘Yes,’ they replied. He then said, ‘I’m no more capable of stopping that than you are of getting a flame from it.’

“Abū Tālib then said, ‘By God, I swear that my nephew never lied. So go home!’”

Al-Bukhārī related this story in his history, from Muḥammad b. al-‘Ala’, from Yūnus b. Bukayr. And al-Bayhaqī related it from al-Ḥākim, from al-‘Asamm, from Aḥmad b. ‘Abd al-Jabbar in the same words.

Moreover al-Bayhaqī related it through Yūnus, from Ibn Ishāq, who stated, “Ya’qūb b. Utba b. al-Mughīrah b. al-Akhnas related to me that he was told that when Quraysh made this complaint to Abū Tālib, he sent for the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, ‘O nephew, your relatives have come to me and told me this and that. Do right by me and by yourself by not burdening me with what neither you nor I could bear. Stop telling your relatives what they dislike hearing!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) thought that Abū Tālib’s attitude towards himself and his Muslims had changed and that his support for them had weakened. And so he addressed Abū Tālib as follows, ‘O uncle, if the sun were placed in my right hand and the moon in my left, I would not give up this matter until either God gives me success in it, or I perish in its pursuit.’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) then broke down into tears.

“When he turned to leave, Abū Talib said, having seen how deeply the Messenger of God (SAAS) had been moved, said to him, ‘O nephew!’ When he turned to him, he said, ‘Continue as before; do as you like. By God, I will never abandon you for any reason.’”

Ibn Ishāq stated that Abū Talib spoke the following verses on that subject:

“By God, they’ll never get their gang to you until I’m laid to rest, buried in the ground.

Carry on with your work that is beyond reproach; rejoice, and may you be content in doing so.

You invited me, and I knew you were advising well; you spoke the truth, and you were ever trustworthy.

You offered a religion I knew to be the best religion of mankind.

Were it not for people’s blame and anger, you’d find me giving it my favour openly.”

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “Ibn Ishāq related various verses of Abū Talib on that subject.”

All this gives evidence that God Almighty gave the prophet (SAAS) His protection through his uncle, even though he differed in his religion. And God had protected him when his uncle was not there; God’s will is final and unchallenged.

Yūnus b. Bukayr stated that Muḥammad b. Ishāq related to him, quoting a man originally from Egypt some 40 years previously, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, a long anecdote relating what transpired between the polytheists of Mecca and the Messenger of God (SAAS). When the Messenger of God (SAAS) arose, Abū Jahl b. Hishām said, “O Quraysh, Muḥammad is persisting, as you know, in criticizing our religion, reviling our forefathers, ridiculing our values and insulting our gods. I swear by God that I’ll sit and wait for him tomorrow carrying a rock, and if he prostrates in his prayer, I’ll smash his head with it! And let ʿAbd Manāf’s people do whatever they like about it afterwards.”

Next day Abū Jahl, God curse him! took a rock and sat to wait for the Messenger of God (SAAS). That morning, the Messenger of God (SAAS) came as usual; his direction of prayer at that time was towards Syria. When he prayed he positioned himself between the corner (of the kaʿba) with the “black stone” and the Yemeni corner, facing so that the kaʿba was between himself and Syria. By the time he came to pray Quraysh were already sitting in their meeting places, waiting. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) prostrated in prayer, Abū Jahl did pick up the rock and approached him. When he got near him, he retreated in fear, his colour pale in terror. His hands lost their grip on the rock and it fell.
Quraysh men went up to him and asked, "What's the matter with you, Abū al-Ḥakam?" He answered, "When I got up to do as I told you yesterday I would and got near him, a stallion camel blocked my way to him. And, by God, I never saw a stallion so big as it, with a neck and fangs like it had! It was about to devour me!"

Ibn Ishaq related, "It was reported to me that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘That was Gabriel. And if he had come near me, he would have taken him.’"

Al-Bayhaqī stated that Abū ‘Abd Allāh, the ḥāfīz, related to him, quoting Abū al-Nadr, the jurist, quoting ‘Uthmān al-Dārāmī, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. Šāliḥ, quoting al-Layth b. Sa’d, from Ishaq b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Farwa, from Abān b. Šāliḥ, from ‘Aṭī b. ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abbās, from his father, from ‘Abbās b. Abī-Muṭṭalīb, who said, ‘One day I was in the mosque when Abī Jahl, God curse him! arrived. He said, ‘I swear by God, that if I see Muḥammad prostrating in prayer, I’ll stomp on his neck’!”

‘I then left and went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and told him what Abī Jahl had said. He left home in a rage and went to the mosque. He was in a hurry to enter through the door, but he hit the wall instead. I told myself that this was an evil day; I put on my cloak and followed him. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) entered then, recited the verse, ‘Read in the name of your Lord who created, created man from a clot.’ When he reached the passage relating to Abī Jahl: ‘No; man is indeed impious, to see himself self-sufficient’ (sūrat al-‘Alaq, XCVI, v.1, 2; 6, 7), a man said to Abī Jahl, ‘O Abī al-Ḥakam, that’s Muḥammad.’ Abī Jahl replied, ‘Can’t you see what I see? By God, the vistas of heaven have been barred to me!’ When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) reached the end of the sūrat he prostrated himself in prayer.”

Imām Ahmad stated that ‘Abd al-Razzāq related to him, quoting Ma’mar, from ‘Abd al-Karīm, from Ikrima, who said, “Ibn ‘Abbās stated, ‘What Abī Jahl said was, ‘If I see Muḥammad praying at the ka’ba, I will tread on his neck!’”

“This comment reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and he said, ‘If he does any such thing the angels will take him, in full view!’”

Al-Bukhārī related this in the same way from Yahyā, from ‘Abd al-Razzāq.

Dawūd b. Abī Hind stated from Ikrima, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, “Abī Jahl passed by the Prophet (ṢAAS) while he was praying and addressed him with the words, ‘Hey, Muḥammad, didn’t I forbid you to pray? You know there to be no one who can call upon more people in council than I can.’

“The Prophet (ṢAAS) reprimanded him and Gabriel spoke the words, ‘Let him call his henchmen; we will summon the angels of punishment! (sūrat al-‘Alaq, XCII, v.17–18). By God, if he does summon his people, the angels of justice will inflict punishment on him.’”
Aḥmad and al-Ṭirmidḥi related this; and al-Naṣāḥ b. Yazīd authenticated it through Dāwūd.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Ismāʿīl b. Yazīd Abū Zayd related to him, quoting Furāt, from ‘Abd al-Karīm, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “Abū Jahl stated, ‘If I see Muḥammad at the kāʿba praying, I’ll fight him till I tread on his neck!’”

He said that he (the Prophet) also used the words, “If he does so, then the zabāniyya, (the angels of punishment) will take him away in full view.”

“And so God Almighty sent down the verses, ‘Read in the name of your Lord who created’ up to the verse ‘We will certainly smite his forehead, the lying, sinful forehead; let him summon his henchmen, and we will summon the zabāniyya’ (sūrat al-ʿAlaq, XXVI, v.15–18).

“Then the Prophet (ṣaḥḥā) came and prayed and Abū Jahl was asked, ‘Well, what’s stopping you?’ He replied, ‘(The space) between myself and him is black with his squadrons.’”

Ibn ʿAbbās stated, “And, by God, if he had so much as moved, the angels would have seized him, while the people looked on.”

The account continues, “So he said, ‘By al-ʿLāt and al-ʿUzza, if I see him praying like that, I’ll stomp on his neck and I’ll flatten his face down into the dust!’ So he went to the Messenger of God (ṣaḥḥā) while he prayed in order to tread on his neck, but everyone was surprised to see him retreat and put his hands out as if to protect himself.”

He went on, “So he was asked what was the matter, and Abū Jahl replied, ‘Between him and myself there is a trench of fire, terrifying things, and wings.’”

The account continues, “And the Messenger of God (ṣaḥḥā) commented, ‘If he had come near me the angels would have picked him apart limb by limb.’”

He said, “And God Almighty revealed – I don’t know whether or not this is in the ḥadīth from Abū Hurayra – ‘No, man is indeed impious, to see himself self-sufficient’ (sūrat al-ʿAlaq, XXVI, v.6–7), and so on to the end of the sūrat.”

Ahmad, Muslim, al-Naṣāḥī, Ibn Abū Ḥātim and al-Bayhaqī related this from a ḥadīth of Muṭāmir b. Sulaymān b. Ṭārkhan of Taym.

Imām Aḥmad stated that Wahb b. Jarīr related to him, quoting Shuʿba, from Abū Ishaq, from ʿAmr b. Maymūn, from ʿAbd Allāh, who said, “I never saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) say a prayer against Quraysh except on one occasion. He was praying while a group of Quraysh sat there; there was the placenta (salā) of a sacrificed camel near by him. Quraysh asked, ‘Who will pick up that placenta and throw it over his back?’ ‘Uqba b. Abū Mu‘āyṭ replied, ‘I will.’ And he picked it up and threw it over his back. The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained there prostrating until Fāṭima came and removed it off his back. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, ‘God take this crowd of Quraysh! O God, take away ‘Utba b. Rabī‘a! O God, take away Shayba b. Rabī‘a! O God, take away Abū Jahl b. Hishām! O God, take away ‘Uqba b. Abū Mu‘āyṭ! O God, take away Ubayy b. Khalaf – or Umayya b. Khalaf – they’re like a patch of thorns!’’

‘Abd Allāh stated, “And I saw all of them killed at the battle of Badr, and they were carried off to al-Qalīb; except for Ubayy, or Umayya b. Khalaf; he was a very large man and so was kept separate.”

Al-Bukhārī related this tradition in several places in his sahih collection, and Muslim related it with lines of authority from Ibn Ishaq.

The man who should rightly be referred to in this tradition is Umayya b. Khalaf. It was he who was killed at the battle of Badr. His brother Ubayy, however, was killed at the battle of Uḥud, as we will explain hereafter. The word al-salā, “placenta”, used above is what emerges in birth with a baby camel, like the placenta of a woman’s baby.

In some versions told in the sahih collection, when Quraysh did this they laughed so hard they fell right over one another; that is, one would collapse onto the one next to him because of the violence of their laughter. God curse them!

Regarding the same incident, when Fāṭima threw it off him, she drew near Quraysh and insulted them. And also it is said that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) finished his prayer he held up his hands to curse them. And when they saw him do this their laughter died down, fearing his imprecation. They say he cursed all the Quraysh chiefs, singling out in his prayer seven of them. In most accounts six of these are named, they being ‘Utba and his brother Shayba, the two sons of Rabī‘a, al-Walīd b. ‘Utba, Abū Jahl b. Hishām, ‘Uqba b. Abū Mu‘āyṭ, and Umayya b. Khalaf. Ibn Ishaq stated, “I forget the seventh.” But I state that he was ‘Umāra b. al-Walīd; his name is given in the sahih of al-Bukhārī.

The Story of al-Irāshī, the man from Irāsh.

Yūnus b. Bukayr stated, from Muḥammad b. Ishaq, who said that ‘Abd al-Malik b. Abū Sufyān al-Thaqafi stated, “A man from Irāsh brought in to Mecca some camels he owned and Abū Jahl b. Hishām bought them from him. But he was slow in paying for them and so the man from Irāsh came to the place where Quraysh met; the Messenger of God (SAAS) was also there at the time, sitting near the mosque. The man asked them, 'O Tribe of Quraysh, which man of you will give me help against Abū al-Ḥakam b. Hishām? I am a stranger, a traveller, and he has cheated me.'

"The Quraysh council replied, ‘You see that person’ – indicating the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) both to mock him and because of the enmity they knew existed between him and Abū Jahl – ‘go to him. He will help you against him.’

"So the man from Irāsh went and stood before the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and related his story to him. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) got up and left with him. When Quraysh saw him do so they told one of their men to follow and see what he would do.

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then left and went to Abū Jahl’s house and knocked on the door. Abū Jahl said, ‘Who is there?’ He replied, ‘It’s Muḥammad; come outside!’ So Abū Jahl came outside, there being not a drop of blood in his face, his colour having turned pale. The Prophet (ṢAAS) then said to him, ‘Give this man his due!’ Abū Jahl replied, ‘Don’t leave before I give him what I owe.’ He then went back inside and returned with the money he then paid to him. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then left and said to the man from Irāsh, ‘Now, go to your destination.’ The man then went again before the Quraysh council and said, ‘May God reward him well; I have received what was due to me.’

"The man Quraysh had sent to watch came back to them and they asked what he had seen. He replied, ‘It was incredible! I swear, when he knocked on Abū Jahl’s door and he came out, his spirit was not accompanying him! He told him to give the man his due, and Abū Jahl replied, ‘Don’t leave till I bring it out for him.’ He then went back inside, then came out and gave it to him.’

"Soon thereafter Abū Jahl arrived and Quraysh asked, ‘Well, what’s wrong with you? By God, we never saw the like of what you did.’ He replied, ‘It was terrible! As soon as he knocked on my door and I heard his voice, I was filled with terror. Then when I went outside to him, there on his head was a stallion camel more fearful than any I ever saw before; its neck and teeth were unlike those of any camel. I swear, if I had refused, it would have eaten me!’"

DIVISION

Al-Bukhārī stated that ‘Ayyāsh b. al-Walid related to him, quoting al-Walid b. Muslim, quoting al-Awzā‘ī, from Yaḥyā b. Abū Kathīr, from Muḥammad b. Ibrāhím al-Taymī (who said) that Urwa b. al-Zubayr related to him that he asked Ibn ‘Amr b. al-‘Āṣ, “Tell me what the worst thing was the polytheists did to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).”
He replied, "While the Prophet (SAAS) was praying at the hijr (the outer enclosure of the ka'ba) Uqba b. Abi Mu'ayt went up to him, drew his robe around his neck and began choking him hard.

"Abu Bakr, God bless him, approached, took him by the shoulders and pulled him off the Prophet (SAAS) saying, 'Would you murder a man for saying, "God is my Lord; He has brought you clear signs from your Lord" to the end of the verse'' (surat Ghafir, XL, v.28).

Ibn Ishaq gives the same hadith but uses the words "Yahyâ b. Urwa related to me: I asked 'Abd Allah b. 'Amr . . .".

'Abya gives it in the form: "from Hishâm, from his father, who said, 'Amr b. al-'Ash was asked . . .'. And Muhammad b. 'Amr said, 'from Abu Salama, who said, 'Amr b. al-'Ash related to me . . .'"

Al-Bayhaqi stated it, and Sulayman b. Bilal related it, from Hishâm b. Urwa as 'Abda gave it.

Al-Bukhari is the sole authority giving this anecdote; he told it in several places in his sahih collection. In one of these he related it to 'Abd Allâh b. Amr b. al-'Ash. That account is closest to that of Urwa. The fact that it was related from 'Amr (rather than from the son of 'Amr) is more likely, since the incident had occurred so early.

Al-Bayhaqi narrated from al-Ḥakim, from al-Āṣamm, from Aḥmad b. 'Abd al-Jabbar, from Yûnus, from Muḥammad b. Ishâq, who said that Yahyâ b. Urwa related to him, from his father 'Urwa, who said that he asked 'Abd Allâh b. Amr b. al-'Ash, "What is the worst thing you saw Quraysh inflict on the Messenger of God (SAAS)?" He replied, "I saw them once when all their chiefs had gathered at the hijr of the ka'ba and they were discussing the Messenger of God (SAAS). They said, 'We've been extraordinarily patient in putting up with this man; he has ridiculed our values, reviled our forefathers, criticized our religion, made divisions among us and insulted our gods. We've put up with a lot from him.' They used words such as these."

He went on, "While they were thus engaged, the Messenger of God (SAAS) appeared. He approached on foot, kissed the 'black stone', then passed on by them as he circumambulated the ka'ba. They, as I recognized from the face of the Messenger of God (SAAS) then said some insulting things to him. He went on his path but when he came round past them on his second circuit they again, as I saw from his face, insulted him. When he came round for the third time, they did the same.

"He then spoke, 'Are you listening, O Quraysh? By Him in whose hands is my soul, I'm bringing you slaughter!'"

"His words had such great impact on them that they went totally silent. Then those previously most harsh to him addressed him with kindness, saying, 'Why don't you be sensible and leave, Abū al-Qāsim? You've never acted foolishly.'
And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) left.

"Next day Quraysh met again in the hajr and I was there with them. They discussed their interactions with him and said to one another, 'You mentioned what he did to you and what you did to him, until he brought out what you didn't like; so you let him go?"

"While they were engaged in this discussion, the Messenger of God (SAAS) appeared and they leapt upon him as one man and surrounded him, accusing him, 'Haven't you said so-and-so?' making reference to the negative comments they had heard he had made about their gods and their religion.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, 'Yes; I am the one who said that.'

"Then I saw one man grab him by the top fastening of his robe. At this Aba Bakr put himself between them, weeping, and said, 'Shame on you! Would you murder a man for saying, "My Lord is God?"' At this they let him go.

"That incident was the worst treatment he ever had from Quraysh."

Section: On the uniting of the Quraysh chiefs against the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his Companions, and their meeting with his uncle Abū Ṭalib who was protecting and aiding him; their pressure upon Abū Ṭalib to deliver him to them, and how he resisted them in that objective, through the aid and strength of God.

Imām Ahmad stated that Wākiʿ related to him, from Hammad b. Salama, from Thābit, from Anas, who said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, 'I've suffered harm for God, whereas no one should be harmed; I've been frightened for God, whereas no one should be afraid. At one time, 30 days and nights had passed, and neither I nor Bilāl had what any human can eat except what could be concealed by Bilāl's armpit!'"

Al-Tirmidhi and Ibn Māja gave this text from a hadith of Ḥammād b. Salama. Al-Tirmidhi stated, "It is a fine, true tradition."

Muhammad b. Ishāq stated, "His uncle Abū Ṭalib showed his compassion and gave his protection to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and stood in front of him.

"And the Messenger of God (SAAS) continued performing God's work by practising his religion openly and allowing nothing to deter him.

"When Quraysh saw that the Messenger of God (SAAS) would not give up anything they had complained to him about, neither his separating from them nor his criticism of their gods, and they recognized that his uncle Abū Ṭalib was sympathetic towards him and was standing in front of him and refusing to deliver him to them, some of the Quraysh leaders went to Abū Ṭalib. These men were: Utba and Shayba, two sons of Rabīʿa b. ʿAbd al-Shams b. ʿAbd Manāf b. Qūsayy, Abū Sufyān Sākhr b. Ḥarb b. Umayya, Abū al-Bakhtari

“They said, ‘O Abū Ṭalīb, your nephew has cursed our gods, criticized our religion, ridiculed our values and said our forefathers erred. Either you interpose yourself between us – you disagree with us just as we do – or we’ll take care of him for you!’

“Abū Ṭalīb gave them a polite and gracious reply and they then left him.

“Thereafter the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) continued as before, openly practising God’s religion and calling upon people to embrace it. But then things between them became more heated until the men were mutually hostile and alienated from one another.

“Quraysh discussed the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) a great deal, complaining to one another and urging one another on to take action against him.

“They then went again to Abū Ṭalīb, and told him, ‘O Abū Ṭalīb, you have seniority, prestige, and position among us, and we have asked you to keep your nephew away from us, but you have not done so. We can’t any longer put up with his behaviour in reviling our forefathers, ridiculing our values, and criticizing our gods until such time as you make him desist, or we will battle with him and you in this matter, until one or other side perishes.’ They said something of this sort, and then they left.

“It grieved Abū Ṭalīb to be alienated from his people, and he was neither sympathetic to the call for Islam by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) nor to the idea of abandoning him.”

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated that Ya‘qūb b. Utba b. al-Mughīra b. al-Akhnas related to him that he was told that when Quraysh, made these comments to Abū Ṭalīb, he sent a message to the Prophet (ṢAAS) in which he said, “O Nephew, your people have come to me and stated various things” – referring to what they had told him – “so protect me and yourself, and don’t burden me with more than I can bear.” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) thought that Abū Ṭalīb had changed his attitude, and that he had abandoned him and his fellow Muslims, and lacked the strength to help and protect him.

“So the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, ‘O Uncle, if they were to place the sun in my right hand and the moon in my left on condition I abandon this course until God decide it or I perish, I would not abandon it.’

“Then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) broke down in tears and rose to leave.
“As he turned away, Abū Ṭalīb called out to him, ‘Come close, nephew!’ So the Messenger of God (SAAS) approached him and Abū Ṭalīb told him, ‘Go ahead, nephew, and say whatever you wish. I will never give you up for any reason.’”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “When Quraysh learned that Abū Ṭalīb had refused to abandon the Messenger of God (SAAS) and was determined to break with them in enmity because of this, they went to him, bringing ‘Umrā b. al-Walīd with them. They told him, as I have heard, ‘O Abū Ṭalīb, this is ‘Umrā b. al-Walīd, the strongest and best-looking young man of Quraysh. Take him and use his mind and strength and adopt him as your own son; he is yours. And hand over to us this nephew of yours who has opposed your religion and that of your forefathers, broken up the unity of your people and ridiculed our values, so that we may kill him. It will be just one man for another!’

“Abū Ṭalīb responded, ‘By God, what evil is this you ask of me! Will you give me your son to feed for you, while I give you mine for you to kill? This, by God, will never happen!’

“Al-Muṭṭim b. ‘Adī b. Nawfāl b. ‘Abd Manāf b. Quṣayy then said, ‘By God, Abū Ṭalīb, your people have been fair with you and have done their best to avoid offending you. But I don’t see you give them anything in return.’

“Abū Ṭalīb replied to al-Muṭṭim, ‘I swear by God they have not been fair with me. You have agreed to ostracize me and turn the people against me. So do what you think fit.’ Or words to that effect.

“The situation worsened and the conflict became more heated, with the people adopting different sides and expressing mutual hostility.

“Abū Ṭalīb spoke verses about all this criticizing al-Muṭṭim b. ‘Adī and those of Banū ‘Abd Manāf and the other Quraysh tribes who were hostile to him. In these verses he made reference to their request to him and to their alienation:

‘Tell ʿAmr, al-Walīd and Muṭṭim: “Instead of your (worthless) protection I’d rather have a camel calf
That was sickly and ungainly, that moaned a lot, its urine dripping down its legs,
That was left behind the herd and couldn’t keep up, one that looked more like a stoat when climbing the dunes.”

I see both our brothers, sons of our father and our mother, who reply when asked,

No, it is their concern, though they disappeared with the speed of a rock dropping from atop Mt. Dhū ʿAlaq.

I single out ʿAbd Shams and Nawfāl, both having dropped us like hot coals
They have slandered and insulted their brothers (in front of) the people; their hands now hold nothing for them
They have shared their prestige with men whose fathers are unknown except for being of low repute.
Section: Concerning their use of excessive violence against individual, powerless Muslims.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Quraysh then incited each other against those individual tribesmen who were Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) and had accepted Islam.

“Each tribe persecuted the Muslims among them, using violence and trying to seduce them from their faith.

“God gave protection to the Messenger of God (SAAS) against them through his uncle Abii Talib.

“When Abii Talib saw what Quraysh were doing, he called upon Banii Hashim and Banii 'Abd al-Muttalib to join him in aiding and defending the Messenger of God (SAAS). They did join with him and agreed to his request, except for Abii Lahab, that enemy of God.

“He spoke some verses on this subject, praising them and urging them to fulfill their promises of help and support for the Messenger of God (SAAS):

‘If Quraysh were to assemble one day to express their pride, the 'Abd Manaf would be their heart and core

And if the chiefs of 'Abd Manaf were counted, then in Hisham would be their most noble and ancient of line.

If Quraysh do one day express their pride, then Muhammad will be the one chosen from their core, and their noble one;

Quraysh had their men, both high and low, against us, but they have not succeeded and their hopes are dashed.

In former times we never tolerated evil; if people turned their heads down, we straightened them out.

We defended their sanctuary every evil day, knocking from its walls those attacking it.

Through us the withered stalk is renewed, under our care its roots turn moist and grow.’”

Section: Concerning the objections presented by the polytheists to the Messenger of God (SAAS); how they troubled him with their asking of him various kinds of signs and miracles, and how this was due to their obstinacy rather than to their seeking guidance.

They were therefore not granted many of their requests or wishes because The Truth, glory be to Him, knew that if they had seen what they wanted, they would have continued straying in their tyranny, error and sin.
God Almighty stated, “And they swear by God, with their mightiest oaths, that if a sign came to them they would believe in it. Say: ‘Signs are with God alone.’ And what would make you perceive that if such came, they would still not believe? Supposing we turn their hearts and their vision upside down, they will not believe, as at the first time. So we will leave them straying in their tyranny. Even if we sent down the angels to them, and even if the dead spoke to them, and even if we gathered together all things from before, they would not believe unless God wished it. But most of them are foolish” (ṣūrat al-An‘ām, VI, v. 109-11).

And He said, “Even those against whom God’s word has proved true will not believe, even if all signs were to come to them until they see the painful punishment” (ṣūrat Yūnūs, X, v. 96-7).

The Almighty spoke, “Nothing prevented us from sending the signs except the fact that the earlier peoples disbelieved in them; We did give Thamīd the she-camel in full view, but they used it for evil. We do not send signs for any purpose but to warn” (ṣūrat al-Isrā‘, also known as ṣūrat Banū Isrā‘īl, XVII, v. 59).

And the Almighty said, “And they said, ‘We will not believe in you until you break forth a spring from the earth for us. Or until you have a garden of date-palms and grapes amidst which you make streams gush forth. Or until you make the sky fall upon us in pieces, as you have claimed you will. Or until you bring God and the angels before us. Or until you have a house of gold cloth. Or until you rise up to heaven. And we will not believe in your ascension until you bring down for us a book we can read.’ Say: ‘Glory be to God; am I anything but a mortal man, a messenger?’” (ṣūrat al-Isrā‘, XVII, v. 90-3).

We have discussed these verses and those similar to them in their places in the Ṭafṣīr (Exegesis). And all praise be to God.

Yūnūs and Ziyād related, from Ibn Ishaq, and from a certain scholar, namely a sheikh from Egypt named Muḥammad b. Abū Muḥammad, from Sa‘īd b. Jubayr and ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “Leaders from Quraysh chiefs met – and he enumerated their names – after sunset at the rear of the ka‘ba. Some said, ‘Send for Muḥammad and speak with him and argue with him so you will find excuse for him.’

“So they sent a message to him, saying, ‘The chiefs of your people have assembled to speak with you.’

“The Messenger of God (ṣa‘īd) came to them quickly, believing that there had been a change in their attitude to him. He was eager for them to accept the truth for their error, which was painful to him. He sat down with them.

“They said, ‘O Muḥammad, we sent for you to reconcile with you. By God, we know of no Arab man who has ever brought his people as much trouble as you have. You have reviled the forebears, criticized the religion, ridiculed the values, cursed the gods, and divided our community. Every unpleasant thing possible you have done to make a rift between you and us.

"If you had come to say these things merely to seek wealth, we would have collected money for you from our own until you were the richest among us. If what you wanted was prestige, we would have placed you in leadership over us. If you had wanted sovereignty, we would have made you king over us. If what you were bringing us was because of a spirit that had possessed you (they used the word ra'ī for tābil meaning spirit) and that may be the case, we would expend our resources seeking a potion to free you from him, or we would excuse you."

"The Messenger of God replied, 'What you have said does not apply to me. I have not brought you my message seeking your money, nor honour among you, nor sovereignty over you. God has sent me to you as a Messenger; He has revealed a document to me and has ordered me to bring you good news and to warn you. I have brought you a message from my Lord and have given you counsel. If you accept what I have brought you, then that is for your good on earth and in the hereafter. If you reject it, I will await God's decision, until He decides between myself and you.' The Messenger of God used some such words.

"They responded, 'O Muhammad, if you will not accept what we are offering you, then you will realize that there are no people with less land than us, nor any less wealthy, nor any with a more difficult life. So ask for us your Lord who has sent you with whatever he has sent you, to level out for us these mountains that close us in, and spread out our country and give us some rivers here that flow like those in Syria and Iraq. Ask him to resurrect for us some of our dead forefathers, including among them Qusayy b. Kilâb, since he was a truth-telling sheikh. We will then ask them whether what you say is true or false.

'If you do what we ask and they believe you, we will believe you and recognize your status with God, and that he has sent you as a messenger, as you say.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, 'This is not why I have been sent. I have only brought you from God what He has sent me with. I have informed you of what I was sent to convey to you. If you accept it, then that is your good fortune on earth and in the hereafter. If you reject it, I must wait patiently for God's decree and for Him to judge between us.'

"They responded, 'If you won't do this for us, take something for yourself. Ask your Lord to send us down an angel who will verify what you say and make us leave you alone. Ask him to provide for us some gardens, some castles and treasures of gold and silver, and to take care of those needs we see you have, for we see you engage in business and earn your living like us. That way we will know the favour and prestige you have with your Lord - if, that is, you are a messenger as you claim.'
“He replied, ‘I’m not going to do so. I’m not one to ask such things of his Lord. That is not why I have been sent to you. God has sent me to announce and to warn. If you accept my message, then that is your good fortune here on earth and in the afterlife. If you reject it, then I must be patient and leave the matter up to God, until He decides between myself and you.’

“They replied, ‘Well then, make the sky fall down as you have claimed your Lord can do if He wishes. We’ll not believe in you unless you do this.’

“He answered, ‘That is up to God. If He wishes, He will do that to you.’

“They commented, ‘O Muḥammad, did your Lord not know we would sit with you and ask you questions as we have asked and make requests we have made, and so come forward to you and inform you how to respond to us, and tell you what He would then do about us if we did not accept the message from you?’

“We have learned that you just receive this instruction from a man in al-Yamāma known as al-Raḥmān; we will never, by God, believe in that al-Raḥmān! We’ve made every excuse for you, Muḥammad, but, by God, because of what you’ve done to us we’ll not leave you alone until we destroy you or you destroy us!’

“One of them said, ‘We worship the angels who are God’s daughters.’ Another said, ‘We’ll not believe in you till you bring us God and the angels beforehand.’

“When they had said this, the Messenger of God (-SAAS) arose to leave them. ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Umayya b. al-Mughira b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmar b. Makhzūm, who was his cousin, being the son of his aunt ʿĀtika, daughter of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, got up with him and said to him, ‘O Muḥammad, your people have made certain offers to you that you have not accepted. Then they made requests for themselves so that they could discover your status with God, but you did nothing. Then they asked you to send promptly some punishment that would scare them. By God, I’ll never believe in you until you put up a ladder to heaven then climb it, with me watching, until you reach there, bring back with you a copy of a document accompanied by four angels who testify that you are as you claim! And yet, by God, even if you did that, I think I’d not believe you!’

“He then left the Messenger of God (-SAAS), who went off home sad and regretful at his failure to achieve what he had expected when his people had summoned him, and at the alienation he had seen them express towards him.”

This assembly where those leaders met with him had been one of injustice, antagonism, and stubbornness. Divine wisdom and God’s mercy decreed that they not be granted what they had requested, because God knew that they would not have faith thereby, and that it would hasten their punishment.

78. Apparently a reference to the “false prophet” Musaylima.
Imām Ḫāmad stated that ʿUthmān b. Muḥammad related to him, quoting Jarir, from al-ʿAʾmah, from Jaʿfar b. Iyās, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “The people of Mecca asked the Messenger of God (SĀAS) to turn Mt. al- Ṣafā into gold for them and to move away the mountains so that they could grow crops. He was told, ‘It is up to you whether you give them respite, or what they ask, and then if they disbelieve they will perish as did those nations who came before them.’"

“He replied, ‘No; I will give them respite.’

“And so God Almighty sent down, ‘Nothing prevented us from sending the signs except the fact that the earlier peoples disbelieved in them; We did give Thamūd the she-camel in full view, but they used it for evil. We do not send signs for any purpose but to warn’” (ṣārat al-Īsraʾ, XVII, v.59).

Al-Nasāʾī related this tradition from Jarir:

Ahmad stated that ʿAbd al-ʿRahman related to him, quoting Sufyān, from Salama b. Kuhayl, from Umrān b. Ḥakīm, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “Quraysh said to the Prophet (SĀAS), ‘Pray to your Lord for us to turn Mt al- Ṣafā into gold and we will believe in you.’ ‘You would really do so?’ he asked. ‘Yes,’ they replied.

“So he did pray and Gabriel came to him and spoke, saying, ‘Your Lord greets you and tells you, ‘If you wish, then al- Ṣafā will become gold for them. But all those who disbelieve thereafter I will either punish as I never have any humans before, or, if you wish it, I will open up for them the door of forgiveness and repentance.’”

“He replied, ‘No, let it be forgiveness and repentance.’”

Both these two chains of authority are excellent and were transmitted by a group of followers of the Prophet (SĀAS) including Saʿīd b. Jubayr, Qatāda, Ibn Jurayh and others.

Imām Ahmad and al-Tirmidhī recounted from a hadith of ʿAbd Allāh b. Mubārak, who said that Yahyā b. Ayyūb related to him, from ʿUbayd Allāh b. Zaḥr, from ʿAlī b. Yazid, from al-Qāsim, from Abu Umāma, from the Prophet (SĀAS) who said, “My Lord, Almighty and All-glorious is He, proposed to me that he would transform the Mecca valley into gold. But I replied, ‘No, O God, one day I am satisfied, the next hungry, or something close thereto; and when I am hungry, I humble myself before you and think of You, and when satisfied I give praise and thanks to You.’” (Imām) Ahmad gave this tradition without comment. Al-Tirmidhī stated, “This hadith is good.” And ʿAlī b. Yazid considered it weak.

Muhammad b. Ishaq stated that an Egyptian sheikh, who came to him some 40 years before, related to him from Ikrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “Quraysh sent al-Nāṭr b. al-Ḥarīth and Uqba b. Abū Muʿayyāt to the Jewish rabbis at Medina, telling the two men, ‘Ask them about Muhammad; describe him to them and relate to them what he says. They are the people of the first scriptures. They have knowledge we don’t possess about prophets.’

“So al-Nadr and ‘Uqba went off to Medina and asked the rabbis about the Messenger of God (SAAS), describing him and what he said to them. The two men told them, ‘You are the people of the Torah; we have come for you to tell us about this countryman of ours.’

“The rabbis told them, ‘Ask him about three subjects we will inform you about. If he responds, he is a prophet with a mission. If he does not, he is a pretender for you to treat as you will.

‘Ask him about the young warriors who passed away in earlier times and what happened to them. They had a very strange experience.

‘Also ask him about the great traveller who went far out to the east and far to the west, and what became of him. Then ask him what the rūḥ (soul or spirit) is.

‘If he answers these questions, then he is a prophet and so follow him. If he does not, then he is a fake and you should do with him what seems right to you.’

‘Al Na&r and ‘Uqba returned to Quraysh and told them, ‘0 Quraysh, we bring you the means to decide the issue between yourselves and Muhammad. The rabbis told us to ask him certain questions.’ They then told Quraysh what these were.

“So Quraysh went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said to him, ‘O Muhammad, answer us these.’ They then questioned him as they had been told. The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘I will tomorrow give you the answer to what you have asked.’ But in saying this, he omitted the phrase, ‘if God wills it’.

“They then left him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) thereafter remained for 15 days without revelation or any visitation from Gabriel. And so the Meccans spread rumours, saying, ‘Muhammad promised us it would be the next day, but it’s been 15 now without him having answered any one of the matters we asked him.’ The cessation of revelation greatly troubled the Messenger of God, and he was hurt by what the Meccans were saying about him.

“Then Gabriel, peace be upon him, brought him from God, the Almighty and All-Glorious, the surat al-Kahf (XVIII). In this there is reprimand for his sadness about them and information on the matters concerning the ancient warriors and the mighty traveller about whom they had questioned him. God Almighty also stated, ‘And they ask you about the rūḥ (the soul). Say, the rūḥ is by order of my Lord. And you are given but little knowledge’ (surat al-Isrā‘ (or Banū Isrā‘il), XVII, v.85).

“We have spoken about that at length in the Tafsir (Exegesis); the reader wishing more information on this will find it there.

“Also revealed was God’s statement, “or did you think that the men of the cave and the inscription were a wonder from among our signs?” (surat al-Kahf, XVIII, v.9).
He then proceeded to detail their story. In the course of this God interjected by his commanding the use of “the exception” as a matter of determination, not comment, in His words, “And do not say of anything, ‘I will do that tomorrow,’ unless God wills it. And remember God when you are forgetful” (sūrat al-Kahf, XVIII, v.23–4).

He then made mention of the story of Moses, because it is related to that of al-Khadr, and then he proceeded to tell about Dhū al-Qarnayn. God then said, “They will ask you about Dhū al-Qarnayn. Say, I will relate you an account of him” (sūrat al-Kahf, XVIII, v.83). He then explained all about him and what happened to him.

God stated in the sūrat (beginning with) Subhān: “And they ask you about the rūḥ (i.e. soul or spirit). Say: the rūḥ is by order of my Lord” (sūrat al-Isrā’, XVII, v.85). That is, the rūḥ, is a strange and marvellous part of His creation, something God ordained; He said “Be” (Let there be rūḥ), and so it “was”. And it is not up to you to scrutinize all He has created. To represent or portray real nature and essence would be too difficult for you. It is something related to the power and (ultimate) wisdom of the Almighty. This is why He stated: “And you are given but little knowledge” (sūrat al-Isrā’, XVII, v.85).

It is well established in both sahih collections that the Jews asked this of the Messenger of God (ṣAAS) when he was in Medina, and so he recited this verse to them.

This verse was either revealed a second time or he made reference to it as a response, even though its revelation came previously. Those who maintain it was revealed only at Medina and exclude it from the sūra Subhān (i.e. sūrat al-Isrā’) are wrong. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When Abū Ṭalib feared that the crowds of Arabs would overwhelm him and his people, he composed his ode in which he claimed refuge at the Mecca sanctuary because of his position there. In it he expressed his friendship for his people’s leaders, but told them and others in his poem that he was not surrendering the Messenger of God (ṣAAS) and that he would never abandon him for any reason, even if it meant dying in his defence. Abū Ṭalib spoke the verses:

‘Having seen that the people are without friendship and that they have severed all ties and connections
And have openly expressed their enmity, inflicted harm and obeyed the orders of the implacable enemy
And have allied with a people against us who are suspicious, and bite their fingers in rage at us behind our backs,
I have remained firm towards them, my spear flexible, my sword sharp and of royal provenance.
I assembled my brothers and kin at the ka'ba and gripped the ropes of its covering,
Standing together and facing its doors, the place where those having made oaths fulfil them,
The area where pilgrims kneel their mounts and where the flow of blood comes from the gods Isâf and Na'îl,
Their mounts branded on their shoulder or neck base, prime pampered beasts between seven and nine years old.
On them you see ornaments of cowry shells and marble tied to their necks which are like fronds heavy with dates.
I seek sanctuary with the Lord of men from all aggressors seeking evil and men who persist in lies,
From those who hate and strive to harm us and from those who attach to the religion what we have not attempted.
By Thawr and by Him who set Thabîr in its place and by those who both ascend Hîrâ and descend,
By the ka'ba, the true House in Mecca's valley, and by God, I swear, God is never unaware.
By the "black stone" when it is touched by those who move around it at morn and evening,
By Abraham's tread upon the moist rock, both feet bare and wearing no sandals,
By the courses run between al-Marwatayn and al-Sâfâ and by the images and statues at both places.
By all those who ride in to pilgrimage at God's house and all who make vows and all who come on foot.
By the furthest shrine they head for, for Mt. 'Arafât, and the place where the streams meet and flow
And the places where they halt at evening above the mountains, where they make their mounts stop by placing their hands on their animals' foreparts.
By the night of the assembly at the Minâ stations; are there any shrines or stations above them?
And by the crowding when the horses swiftly pass by as if they are escaping a falling rain.
By the great Jamra, the mound of stones, when pilgrims approach it, casting their stones at its top.
By Kinda tribe when at evening at al-Ḥisâb and the pilgrims of Banû Bakr b. Wâ'il pass them by.
Both allies who have affirmed the bond between them, and referred back to it all kinds of relationships
And by their breaking down the very tallest of trees and bushes as they race by, like swift-paced ostriches,
Is there after this any better refuge for one seeking it? Does anyone offer refuge who is just and fears God?
Our enemies had the best of us and wished we were used to block the gates to Turk and Kabul.
You have lied, by God's House; we leave Mecca and our land without you being confounded?
You have lied, by God's House; we subdue Muhammad, not fight and resist in his defence?
We give him up before we are piled up dead around him, and leave behind our children and our wives?
A people will rise up with steel against you, like camels rising when they bear waterskins, Until we see our enemy stretched out from his wounds, all awry, like a cripple.
We will, by God, if what I see is in earnest, have our swords become mixed with others like them
In the hands of a young fighter like a flame, a brave man, trustworthy, defending the truth, heroic.
And so months, days, a year become inviolate for us, and then will come another season, after the next.
How, curse you, could a people abandon a chief who protects his honour, not some foul-mouthed coward
And a noble for whom the clouds are made to rain, the provider for orphans and supporter of widows?
The most needy of the Hashim tribe resort to him; with him they find mercy and respect
By my life, Usayd and his first born led us to being hated, and they cut us up for anyone to eat.
Neither Uthman nor Qunfudh had sympathy for us, but obeyed the order of those tribes
They obeyed Ubayy and the son of their 'Abd Yaghuth, neither of them caring what others said of us
We fared the same from Subay and Nawfal, and all turned away in opposition, not acting kindly.
If they both should be discovered or God take hold of them, we'll take revenge measure for measure
And that Abû 'Amr insisted on hating us, to drive us out to join herdsmen of sheep and camels
Whispering about us at morning and evening; whisper away, O Abû 'Amr, and then deceive!
He swears to us by God, he'll not deceive us; but yes, we perceive him obviously untrustworthy.
His hate for us has made all the high ground between Akhshab and Majudil too constrained for him.
Question Abû al-Walid, "How did you benefit us by coming to us, then turning away, like a deceiver?"
"You used to be a man whose opinion and kindness had influence over us, for you were once no fool.
"And so, Utba, do not listen to those who secretly hate us, envious, mendacious, hate-filled slanderers."
As Abū Sufyān passed by me he looked away, as though he were a royal prince of a great line.

He gets away to high Najd and its cool waters, claiming, “No, I’m not abandoning you.”

He tells us, as though a true counsellor, that he is sympathetic but he hides his innate ill-will.

O Muṭʿim, I did not desert you when needing help, nor any critical time needing deeds of valour

Nor on that day of conflict when they attacked you violently, fierce men, implacable enemies.

O Muṭʿim, the people have entrusted a task to you, and I, when given a task, don’t shun it;

May God punish ʿAbd Shams and Nawfal for us, soon, not delayed, and harsh.

In proper measure, not a grain-weight less, it being testimony about itself, not that of some miscreant.

Fools are they who would exchange in barter the Banū Khalaf and al-Ghayāṭal for us.

We are the very heart of the essence of Hāshim and the tribe of Quṣayy in all prime regards.

Sahm and Makhzūm have biased and incited against us in enmity every scoundrel and sinner.

O ʿAbd Manāf, you men are the best of your people, so do not ally in your affairs with every sponger.

By my life, you have gone weak and ineffectual, failing badly in the view of anyone of good judgement;

Till recently you were the firewood for one pot, but now you’re the fuel for various pots and cauldrons.

Let Banū ʿAbd Manāf enjoy our plight and abandonment, and our being forsaken in our refuge.

If indeed a tribe, we will have revenge for your acts and you will taste the fruits of indiscriminate warfare.

Tell Quṣayy that news of us will spread, and announce to Quṣayy that after us they will be defeated.

Yet if great misfortune had one day befallen Quṣayy, we would not have stood away, forsaking them;

If they had fought valiantly amidst their homes, we would have helped them with their women and children.

So all we considered friends or relatives we’ve found, I swear, of no avail Excepting a group of the Kilāb b. Murra tribe who are innocent of the fault of falseness to us.

The finest of the tribe is our nephew Zuhayr, without dispute, a sharp sword, alone, unsheathed,

The tallest standing of the pride of the chieftains, a fine man, belonging to a line at the very centre of glory.
By my life, I am utterly devoted to Ahmad and his brethren, with all the constancy of a close admirer.

For who of all is like him, who could be hoped to compete when judges assess him for superiority?

He is mild-tempered, intelligent, just, stable, the ally of a God of whom he is ever aware.

Noble in his work, noble and noble-born, a man with an inheritance of glory, constant and unbroken

And the Lord of men has aided him with victory, and he has brought forth a religion the truth of which shall stay.

By God, were I not thereby to cause disgrace that would be brought out against our sheikhs in the assemblies

We would have followed him regardless of fate, in all seriousness, not mere talk.

They know that our son is not thought a liar by us, nor does he pay attention to silly nonsense.

Among us Ahmad is so deeply rooted that the best efforts of upstarts fall short of him.

I cared for him myself, protected him, and defended him by our heads and chests."

Ibn Hishām commented, "These seem to me the verses of this poem that are genuine. But some scholars expert in poetry reject most of them."

I would say that this ode is truly fine and very effective. No one but he to whom it is ascribed could have spoken it; it is more perfect than the seven mu‘allaqat odes! It is more effective in conveying its meaning than all of them are.

Al-Umawi gave its text in his maghāzi history at greater length, with additions. But God knows best.

DIVISION

Ibn Ishāq stated: "They then became aggressive towards those who had accepted Islam and followed the Messenger of God (SAAS).

"Each tribe attacked all the defenceless Muslims in them, imprisoning them or persecuting them by beating them, depriving them of food and drink and by putting them out on the burning hot ground of Mecca when the heat was most extreme. They were trying to deter them from their religion.

"Some, due to the severity of their suffering, were dissuaded from it, while others stood up to them, God giving them His protection.

"Bilal, who became Abū Bakr’s freed-man, at that time belonged to Banū Jumah, being one of their slaves born to a foreign mother. His name was Bilal b. Rabah and his mother’s name was Ħamāma. He was sincere in Islam, a man pure of heart. Umayya b. Khalaf would place him outside at heat of noon, then order that a huge rock be placed on his chest. He would then tell him, ‘By God, you’ll stay like this till you die, unless you disavow Muhammad and pray to al-Lāt and al-Uzza!’

“Bilāl, while in this state, would say only, ‘One! One!’”

Ibn Ishaq stated that Hishām b. Urwa related to him, from his father, who said, “Waraqa b. Nawfał used to pass by Bilāl when he was being persecuted in this way as he was saying, ‘One! One!’ Waraqa would then say to Bilāl, ‘One! One! by God, O Bilāl!’

“Waraqa would then go to Umayya b. Khalaf and the others of the Banū Jumāḥ who were doing this and say, ‘I swear by God, that if you murder him I’ll use his tomb as a shrine!’”

I observe that some consider this hadith as dubious, since Waraqa died directly after the Prophet (ṢAAS) received his mission, during the period of intermission of the revelation. Those who first accepted Islam did so following the revelation of the verse, “O You who are all wrapped up” (ṣūrat al-Muddaththir, LXXIV, v.1). And so how could Waraqa pass by Bilāl as he was being tortured? The tradition is doubtful.

Then Ibn Ishaq recounted how Abo Bakr passed by Bilāl as he was under torture and bought him from Umayya by exchanging a black slave he owned. Thereafter he manumitted Bilāl and so saved him from persecution.

He then related how Abo Bakr purchased a number of slaves, both male and female, who had accepted Islam. These included, with Bilāl, Āmir b. Fuhayra, Umm ‘Umayys and Zinnīra, who lost her sight but had it restored by God Almighty. Also there were al-Nahdiyya and her daughter, both of whom he bought from Banū ‘Abd al-Dār; their mistress had sent them both to mill some flour, and Abo Bakr heard her say to them, “By God, I will never free either of you!” Abo Bakr then told her, “Retract that, Umm so-and-so!” The woman replied, “I retract. Now you have spoiled them, so you free them!” “How much are they?” he asked. She named a price and he agreed, “All right, I’ll take them. They are free now. So return her flour to her.” They asked, “Shouldn’t we finish milling it, and then give it back to her?” “That’s fine, if you want to.”

He purchased a slave-girl of Bana Mu’ammil, a clan of the Banū ‘Adī; ‘Umar used to strike her over Islam.

Ibn Ishaq continued to say that Muḥammad b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Abo ‘Atīq related to him, from Āmir b. ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr, from one of his family, who said, “Abo Quḥafa said to his son Abo Bakr, ‘Son, I see you are setting free people who are powerless. If you want to do this, why don’t you free some powerful men who could protect and defend you?’

“Abo Bakr replied, ‘I’m only doing what it is I want.’”

Ibn Ishaq went on: “And it is related that the following verses were revealed specifically about him and what his father had said, ‘To those who give, are pious and believe in goodness we will provide ease and facilitate’ and so on to the end of the ṣūrat’ (ṣūrat al-Layl, XCII, v.5–7).

We have previously given the account of Imam Ahmad and Ibn Maja, from Ḍāsim b. Bahdala, from Zarr, from Ibn Masʿūd, who said that, “The first who openly became Muslims were seven persons: the Messenger of God (SAAS), Abū Bakr, ‘Ammār and his mother Sumayya, Ṣuhayb, Bilāl, and al-Miqdād.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) was protected by God through his uncle, and Abū Bakr was protected by his tribe. The others were seized by the polytheists, bound in chains and set in the hot sun. All ultimately complied with their persecutors’ wishes except for Bilāl; he subjugated himself to God Almighty. His people did not care for him, they ultimately gave him over to the guards who paraded him in the quarters of Mecca while he repeated, ‘One! One!’”

Al-Thawrī related this from Manṣūr, from Mujahid, but it lacks a complete chain of early authorities.

Ibn Isḥaq stated, “Banū Makhzūm used to set ‘Ammār b. Yāsir and his father and mother, all of whom had become Muslims, outside at heat of noon, torturing them with the hot ground of Mecca. The Messenger of God (SAAS) would pass by them and say to them, as I have heard, ‘Be patient, O family of Yāsir; you are destined for paradise.’”

Al-Bayhaqī related, from al-Ḥakim, from Ibrāhim b. Iṣmat al-ʿAdl, who said that Al-Sarri b. Khuzayma related to him, quoting Muslim b. Ibrāhim, quoting Hishām b. Abū Ubayd Allāh, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) passed by ‘Ammār and his family while they were being tortured. He said, “Be of good cheer, O family of ‘Ammār, O family of Yāsir; you are destined for paradise.”

His mother, however, they actually did kill, for she refused anything but Islam.

Imām Āḥmad stated, “Wakī related to us, from Sufyān, from Manṣūr, from Mujahid, who said, ‘The first martyr to meet her death early in Islam was ‘Ammār’s mother Sumayya. Abū Jahl thrust a spear into her heart.’”

This account lacks a complete chain of early authorities.

Muḥammad b. Iṣḥaq stated, “That sinner Abū Jahl was the one who incited the men of Quraysh against them. When he heard of a man of status and influence who had accepted Islam he would upbraid and insult him, saying, ‘You have abandoned the religion of your father, a man better than you. We will deprecate your values, deride your opinions, and destroy your reputation.’ If the Muslim were a merchant, he would say, ‘We will, by God, boycott doing business with you and will ruin you.’ If the Muslim were defenceless, Abū Jahl would beat him and incite others against him. May God damn and punish him!”
Ibn Ishaq also said that Hakim b. Jubayr related to him, from Sa'id b. Jubayr, who said, “I asked 'Abd Allâh b. 'Abbâs, ‘Did the polytheists so persecute the Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) that they were forgiven if they gave up the faith?’

“‘Oh yes,’ he replied. ‘They would so beat people and so deprive them of food and water that they would be unable to sit up. Eventually they would do whatever their persecutors incited them to. If they were asked, ‘Are al-Lât and al-'Uzza gods in their own right, other than God?’ they would reply, ‘Yes; they are!’ This was just to avoid their torture.”

I here observe that it was concerning this that God sent down, "Whoever disavows God after having believed in Him, except for those who are compelled (to do so) while their hearts are content in the faith, but whoever allows himself to accept disbelief shall have God’s wrath upon them, and they shall receive terrible punishment" (sûrat al-Nahl, XVI, v.106).

These people were forgiven because of the contempt and extreme pain they suffered; may God, in all his power and strength, preserve us from the like.

Imâm Ahmad stated that Abu Mu'âwiya related to him, quoting al-'A'mash, from Muslim, from Mas'rûq, from Khabbab b. al-Aratt, who said, “I was a chieftain and I was owed money by al-'Âs b. Wâ'il. So I went to him to get payment but he told me, ‘No, by God, I’ll not pay you until you express disbelief in Muhammad!’ I replied, ‘I will never, by God, express disbelief in Muhammad until you die and then are resurrected!’ He responded, ‘Well, if I do die and am resurrected and you come to me and I then have property and sons, then I’ll pay you!’ And so God Almighty sent down: ‘And have you seen him who disbelieves in our signs yet says: “I will certainly be given wealth and sons . . .” and so on, to the verse ending “and he shall come to us alone’”’ (sûrat Maryam, XIX, v.77–80).

In both sahih collections and elsewhere this tradition is given in various lines of transmission from al-'A'mash.

According to al-Bukhârî’s text, the wording should be “I was a chieftain in Mecca, and I made a sword for al-'Âs b. Wâ'il and went to him for payment.”

Al-Bukhârî stated that Al-Humaydî related to him, quoting Sufyân, quoting Bayân and Ismâ'il, both of whom said that they heard Qays say that he heard Khābāb say, “I went to the Prophet (SAAS) when he was using his cloak as a pillow in the shadow of the ka'âba; we had recently suffered violence from the polytheists. I asked him, ‘Aren’t you praying to God?’

“He sat up, his face flushed red, and said, ‘Those who came before you did would be combed with metal down through their flesh and sinews to the bone, but that would not deter them from their religion. They would have saws put on their hair parting and have their heads split in two, but would not be deterred from their religion. God will certainly so conclude this matter that a person will be able to ride from Yemen to Ḥadramawt and fear only God, Almighty and All Glorious is He.’”

Another statement is also added “and wolves attacking his sheep”. And in one account there are also the words, “But you are impatient”.

Al-Bukārī alone, and not Muslim, gives this tradition. It was also reported from another line of transmission from Khabbāb, but in a shorter form than this. But God knows best.

Imām Aḥmad stated that ʿAbd al-Raḥmān related to him, from Sufyān and Ibn Jaʿfar, that Shuʿba related to them, from Abū Ishāq, from Saʿīd b. Wahb, from Khabbāb, who said, “We complained to the Prophet (SALLAH) at the intensity of the heat of the ground, but he would not make a complaint for us; that is, in prayer.” Ibn Jaʿfar said “but he would not listen to our complaint.”

He also said that Sulaymān b. Dāwūd related to him, as did Shuʿba, from Abū Ishāq, who said that he heard Saʿīd b. Wahb say that he heard Khabbāb say, “We made complaint to the Messenger of God (SALLAH) about the intensely hot ground, but he would not listen to our complaint.”

Shuʿba stated, “that is, at the heat of midday”.

Muslim related this, quoting al-Nasāʾī and al-Bayhaqī from a hadith of Abū Ishāq al-Sabīṭī, from Saʿīd b. Wahb, from Khabbāb, who said, “We made a complaint to the Messenger of God (SALLAH) about the intense heat of the ground” – to this al-Bayhaqī added the words “on our faces and palms” – “but he would not listen to our complaint.”

Ibn Miṣṣa related it, from ʿAlī b. Muḥammad al-Ṭanāfusī, from Wāqq, from al-Aʿmash, from Abū Ishāq, from Ḥarīthah b. Madriḥ al-ʿAbdī, from Khabbāb, who said, “We complained to the Messenger of God (SALLAH) about the intense heat of the ground, but he would not listen to our complaint.”

It occurs to me – though God knows best – that this hadith is abbreviated from the former one. That is, they complained to him at the treatment they were receiving from the polytheists. They were being tortured on the intensely hot ground and so using their hands to protect themselves while being dragged along on their faces, as well as being given those other forms of torture mentioned by Ibn Ishāq and others. They therefore requested him to pray on their behalf that God might punish the polytheists, or to seek help against them. He promised to do so, but did not fulfil this for them in the current circumstances, but reminded them of those who had preceded them. Those people had received treatment far worse than they were getting, but this had not deterred them from their religion. He cheered them by assuring them that God would bring this matter to a conclusion, and would do so openly, clearly and decisively over an area far and wide, so that a traveller would be able to go from Ṣanʿa to Ḥadramawt and have nothing to fear but God, and nothing to fear for his sheep from wolves. But, he told them, they were being impatient.
For this reason, he stated, “We made complaint to the Messenger of God (SAAS) about the intense heat of the ground on our faces and palms, but he would not listen to our complaint”, i.e. he would not pray for us at that time.

As for those who see evidence in this for not deferring the midday prayer until it is cooler, or on the need to touch the place of prayer with the palms, as is a judgement reached by al-Shafi`i, these views may be debated or considered. But God knows best.

CHAPTER: THE ARGUMENTATION OF THE POLYTEISTS AGAINST THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS), AND THE COGENT ARGUMENTS THAT REFUTED THEM; HOW WITHIN THEMSELVES THEY RECOGNIZED THE TRUTH, EVEN THOUGH THEY EXPRESSED DISAGREEMENT OUT OF STUBBORNNESS, ENVY, MALICE AND DENIAL.

Ishaq b. Rähawayh stated that 'Abd al-Razzâq related to him, from Ma‘mar, from Ayyûb al-Sakhtiyâni, from ʻIkrima, from Ibn ʻAbbâs, that al-Walid b. al-Mughira went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) who recited the Qurân to him. Al-Walid seemed to be impressed by it, and this fact reached Abû Jahl. He therefore went to al-Walid and told him, “Uncle, your people want to collect for you some money.” Al-Walid asked why, and he went on, “To give it to you. Because you went to Muḥammad to oppose his influence!”

Al-Walid replied, “But Quraysh know that I am one of their wealthiest men.”

Abû Jahl said, “Well, do make some statement telling your people that you disavow him.”

He replied, “What should I say? By God, there’s not one man among you with a better knowledge than myself of poetry, of its various metres and odes, or of the verses by spirits. But, I swear, what he speaks is nothing like these; by God, there is a spendour in what he says. There’s a gracefulness about him. He is effective and productive at all levels. He achieves greater heights than anyone. He overwhelms all beneath him.”

Abû Jahl commented, “Your people will not be pleased with you until you make a statement about him.”

“Well”, al-Walid asked, “leave me alone till I can give it some thought.”

When he had done so, he said, “This is nothing but sorcery brought him by others.” And so God revealed the verses, “Leave Me (to deal with) him whom I created, alone; and I made for him extensive wealth, and sons to be seen” (sûrat al-Muddaththir, LXXIV, v.11–13).

Al-Bayhaqi related it thus, from al-Ḥākim, from ʻAbd Allâh b. Muḥammad al-Sanâ‘i at Mecca, from Ibn Ishaq’s account. Ḥammad b. Zayd related it from Ayyûb, from ʻIkrima, but with an incomplete chain of early authorities. That account states that the Prophet recited to al-Walid the verses, “God enjoins justice, kindness and charity to one’s kinsfolk, and prohibits immorality, evil and wickedness. He admonishes you, so that you may take heed” (sūrat al-Nāhīl, XVI, v.90).

Al-Bayhaqi stated, from al-Ḥākim, from al-Āṣamm, from Aḥmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbār, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Muḥammad b. Išāq, who said that Muḥammad b. Abī Muḥammad related to him, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, or ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, that al-Walid b. al-Mughira met with a group of men of Quraysh. He was, at that time, one of their respected elders. The time was that of the pilgrimage. He addressed them, saying, “Delegations of Arabs will now be coming to you, and they will have heard of this associate of yours. So unite in one opinion about him, without dissension between you that would make you contradict one another.”

He was told, “O Abū ʿAbd Shams, you tell us; you establish a position for us that we can uphold.”

He replied, “No; you must speak, and I will listen.”

They responded, “We say he is a soothsayer.”

He replied, “No; he is no soothsayer. I have seen soothsayers and he doesn’t engage in the rhymed mumbling doggerel they use.”

They commented, “Well, then we say he is crazy, possessed by spirits.”

“No,” he replied, “he is not crazy; we have seen and known those who are crazy, and he has none of their choking, erratic movement and mumbling.”

“Then we say he is a poet.”

“No,” he disagreed, “he is no poet. We know poetry in all its metrical forms, and what he speaks is not poetry.”

“Then we say he is a sorcerer.”

“No,” he said, “he is no sorcerer. We’ve seen sorcerers and their magic and he doesn’t do any of their tying and untying.”

“What are we to say then, O Abū ʿAbd Shams?”

He replied, “By God, there is a splendour in what he speaks. In essence he is like a palm tree whose branches give much fruit. All you have been saying will be recognized as false. The closest thing is for you to say, ‘This man is a sorcerer who comes between a man and his religion, a man and his father, a man and his wife, a man and his brother, and a man and his tribe.’”

They then dispersed and set about taking seats (and waiting) for people when they arrived for the festivities. They would warn them about the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) whenever they passed by, and told them all about him.

And God revealed concerning al-Walid, “Leave Me (to deal with) him whom I created, alone; and I made for him extensive wealth, and sons to be seen” (sūrat al-Muddaththir, LXXIV, v.11–13). And concerning those men who had rendered the Qur’ān into disparate parts, God stated, “And so, by your Lord, we will certainly question all of them concerning what they have been doing” (sūrat al-Ḥijr, XV, v.92–3).

And I comment that God Almighty also stated, indicating their ignorance and lack of wisdom, “And they even said, ‘A jumble of dreams! He just made it up! He’s a poet! So let him bring us a sign, like those that former (prophets) were dispatched with!’” (sūrat al-Anbiyā’, XXI, v.5). And so they were at a loss what to say of him; everything they did say was false. For he who deviates from the truth is mistaken in all he says. God Almighty stated, “See how they made comparisons to you! They have gone astray, and they will find no path” (sūrat al-İsrā’, XVII, v.48).

Imām ʿAbd b. Humayd stated in his musnad collection of hadīth that Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba related to him, quoting ʿAli b. Mishar, from al-Ajlāh, the son of ʿAbd Allāh al-Kindī, from al-Dhayyāl b. Harmala al-Asadī, from Jābir b. ʿAbd Allāh, who said, “Quraysh met one day and agreed to determine who among them was the most knowledgeable in magic, sorcery, and poetry. That person would then approach the man who had caused dissension and division amongst them and had found fault with their religion, talk to him and decide how to respond to him. They agreed that Utba b. Rabiʿa was the obvious choice, and they approached him and told him, ‘It is to be you, 0 Abū al-Walid.’

“Utba then went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, ‘O Muḥammad, who is better, you or ʿAbd Allāh?’ The Messenger of God (SAAS), remained silent.

“Then he said, ‘Who is better, you or ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalīb?’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained silent.

“Utba then said, ‘If you claim those men to be better than you, the fact is they worshipped the gods you have criticized. If you claim to be better than them, then speak so we can hear what you say. By God, we’ve never seen any fool more harmful to his people than you; you have caused division and dissension among us, criticized our religion and so disgraced us in the eyes of the Arabs that the rumour is current among them that there is a magician or a sorcerer amidst Quraysh. By God, fellow, it seems all we have to await is the cry of a pregnant woman for us all to be at one another with swords till we wipe ourselves out! If it is need that is your problem, we’ll make a collection for you till you’re the wealthiest man in Quraysh; if it is status you want, choose any women of Quraysh you like and we’ll marry you to ten of them.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, ‘Are you done?’ ‘Yes,’ replied Utba. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then spoke: ‘In the name of God, the Most Merciful and Beneficent. Hā Mim. A revelation from the Most Merciful and Beneficent. A book whose verses have been detailed in an Arabic Qurān for a people who are aware . . .’ and so on until he reached the verse, ‘But if they turn aside, say: “I warn you of a terrible punishment like that which destroyed ʿAd and Thamūd”’ (sūrat Hā Mim, also called sūrat al-Fussilat, XLI, v.1–13).
“Utba said, ‘That’s sufficient. You’ve nothing else?’

‘No,’ he replied.

‘Utba then went back to Quraysh and they asked what had happened. He replied, ‘I didn’t omit saying to him anything you talked about.’

‘And did he respond?’ they asked. ‘Yes,’ he answered. Then he stated, ‘Well, no; by Him who erected it as a building, I didn’t understand anything he said, except that he warned you of a terrible punishment like that of ‘Ad and Thamūd.’

‘They commented, ‘Woe upon you! The man speaks to you in Arabic, but you don’t know what he said?’

‘He replied, ‘I swear, I didn’t understand a thing, except for the reference to the terrible punishment.’’

Al-Bayhaqi and others related this from al-Ḥākim, from al-Asa’mī, from ʿAbdās al-Dūrī, from Yahyā b. Maʿṣīn, from Muḥammad b. Fuḍayl, back to al-Ajlāh. There is some dispute about it.

This version added “and if all you want is leadership, we’ll swear allegiance to you, and you can be our chief for life.”

And in that version, when he had finished speaking the verse, “But if they turn aside, say: ‘I warn you of a terrible punishment like that which destroyed ‘Ad and Thamūd’”, Utba put his hand over the mouth of the Prophet (ṢAAS) and implored him for mercy to stop. Utba, moreover, did not return to his people, but hid himself from them.

And so Abū Jahl said, “By God, 0 Quraysh, Utba must have been quite taken by Muḥammad, and enjoyed himself with him. If you’re in need, we’ll collect money for you so you can dispense with Muḥammad’s food.”

Later Abū Jahl said, “Well, Utba, I swear, we concluded you must have been quite taken by Muḥammad, and enjoyed yourself with him. If you’re in need, we’ll collect money for you so you can dispense with Muḥammad’s food.”

“Utba became angry and swore he would never speak to Muḥammad again. He told Abū Jahl, ‘You well know I’m one of the wealthiest men of Quraysh. I did go to him and . . .’ He then related the story to them and concluded ‘and he responded to me with something I swear was not magic, not poetry and not sorcery. He recited, “In the name of God, the Most Merciful and Beneficent. ʾHā Mim. A revelation from the Most Merciful and Beneficent,” until he reached, “But if they turn aside, say: ‘I warn you of a terrible punishment like that which destroyed ‘Ad and Thamūd.’” I then put my hand over his mouth and implored him for mercy to stop. And you all well know that Muhammad does not lie in whatever he says. I was afraid that punishment would descend upon you.’”

Al-Bayhaqi then stated, from al-Ḥākim, from al-Asa’mī, from Aḥmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbār, from Yūnus, from Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq, who said that Yazīd b.
Abū Ziyād, a freed-man of the Banū Hashim, told him from Muḥammad b. Ka'b, who said that it was related to him that ʿUtba b. Rabīʿa, who was a wise leader, said one day while he was sitting in the Quraysh meeting hall and the Messenger of God (SAAS) was sitting alone in the mosque, “O Quraysh, should I not go to this fellow and make him offers, some of which he might accept, and then leave us alone?”

“Yes, do that Abū al-Walid!” they told him.

ʿUtba then arose and sat next to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and gave him his speech—as given above—and offered him wealth, leadership and so on.

Ziyād b. Ishaq stated that ʿUtba said, “O Quraysh, should I not go to Muḥammad and talk to him and make him offers, some of which he might accept, so we give them to him and he would leave us alone?” That occurred when Ḥamza had accepted Islam and Quraysh recognized that the followers of the Messenger of God (SAAS) were increasing and expanding. So they said, “Yes, Abū al-Walid, do go and talk to him.”

ʿUtba then arose and sat down near the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, “O nephew, you know the status and respect your people give you, and the nobility of your lineage, but you have caused much trouble to your people. By this, you have destroyed their unity, ridiculed their values, criticized their gods and their religion, and claimed that their forefathers were unbelievers. Listen to me now, as I make you some offers to consider; perhaps you might be able to accept some of these.”

The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, “I am listening, Abū al-Walid.”

ʿUtba went on, “O nephew, if all you want by bringing up this matter is wealth, we will collect money from ourselves for you and so you will be the richest of us all. If what you are seeking by it is honour, we will make you our leader and never make decisions without you. If what you want by it is sovereignty, we will make you our king. If whatever comes to you is some spirit you see but can’t remove by yourself, we will seek out a potion for you and spend our own money to free you from it. A spirit may well take possession of a person until he is cured of it.” His words were similar to these.

When he had finished, the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, “Well, Abū al-Walid, are you done?”

“Yes,” he replied.

“Then listen to me.”

“I will,” said ʿUtba.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) then spoke, “In the name of God, the Most Merciful and Beneficent. ʿIšāʾ ʾMīm. A revelation from the Most Merciful and Beneficent. A book whose verses have been detailed in an Arabic book for a people who are aware...” He went on reciting it, while ʿUtba listened, placing his hands behind his back and using them as a support as he did so.
"When the Messenger of God (SAAS) came to the ending where prostration is sought, he prostrated himself, then asked, "Well, did you hear, Abū al-Walid?"

"Yes, I heard," he replied.

"Now it's up to you," observed the Messenger of God (SAAS). Utba then arose and went to his associates who told one another, "By God, Abū al-Walid looks quite different now from what he did before he left."

When they sat down with him, they asked, "Well, what happened to you, Aba d-Walid?" "What happened, by God," he replied, "was that I heard speech such as I never did before. I swear, it was not poetry, nor sorcery; obey me and do as I shall. Keep away from him and what he does; avoid him. For, by God, what I heard him speak is going to cause a stir. If the Arabs destroy him, others will have taken care of him for you. But if he betters the Arabs, his dominion will also be yours, his power your power, and you will be most pleased with him."

They replied, "By God, he has bewitched you with his tongue, O Abū al-Walid."

"Well, that's my advice to you; do with it as you see fit," Utba told them.

Yūnus then related, from Ibn Ishaq, some poetry Abū Ṭalib spoke in which he praised Utba.

Al-Bayhaqi stated that Abū Muḥammad ʿAbd Allāh b. Yūsuf al-ʿAshbahānī informed him, quoting Abū Qutayba Salama b. al-ʿAnf al-ʿAdāmī of Mecca, quoting Abū Ayyūb Aḥmad b. Bishr al-Ṭayalīstī, quoting Dāwūd b. ʿAmar al-Ḍabbī, quoting al-Muṭḥanā b. Zurʿa, from Muḥammad b. Ishaq, from Nāfīʿ, from Ibn ʿUmar, who said, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had recited 'Hā Mim. A revelation from the Most Merciful and Beneficent', he went to his people and told them, 'O people, obey me now in this matter, though you may oppose me later. For, by God, I heard from this man words the like of which my ears never heard before. I didn't know what to reply to him.'"

This hadīth is very strange to come from such a source.

Al-Bayhaqi then related, from al-Ḥakīm, from al-ʿAṣamm, from Aḥmad b. Ṭābārī, from Yūnus, from Ibn Ishaq, who said that al-Zuhrī said to him, "I was told that Abū Jahl, Abū Sufyān and al-Akhnas b. Shartīq went out to overhear the Messenger of God (SAAS) as he prayed at night in his home. Each of them sat down to listen to him, none knowing where the others were sitting. They spent the night listening to him until dawn when they left individually. On the way back they met and each criticized the other, saying, 'Don't do that again. For if some foolish person were to see you, he'd have his suspicions about you.' They then parted.

"The next night each of these men returned to where he had sat and they spent the night listening to him. When dawn came they dispersed, but met on the way. They said to one another what they had before and then left."
The third night each again took his seat and spent the night listening to him. At dawn they dispersed and met on the way home. ‘This time’, they told one another, ‘let’s not leave without making a pact not to return.’ They made this promise to one another and parted company.

‘That morning al-Akhnas b. Shariq took his stick and went off to see Abū Sufyān at home. He told him, ‘Abū Ḥanṣala, give me your views on what you have heard from Muḥammad.’ He replied, ‘Abū Thaqla, I swear, I’ve heard certain things I know, and I also know what was implied by them, but others I’ve heard I don’t know, nor what was implied by them.’ Al-Akhnas commented, ‘Me too, I swear!’

‘Al-Akhnas then left and went to see Abū Jahl at home. He asked him, ‘Abū al-Ḥakam, what’s your view on what you’ve heard from Muḥammad?’ ‘You mean what have I heard? We and Bana ‘Abd Manāf have been rivals for status. They feed the poor, and so do we. They help people, and so do we. They give to charity, and so do we. We’ve kept pace with them like two racehorses. Then they say, one of us will be a prophet who receives revelation from heaven! How can we compete with that? I swear, we will never listen to him, nor believe him.’ Having heard this, al-Akhnas b. Shariq left.’

Then al-Bayhaqī stated that Abū ‘Abd Allāh, the hāfiz, related to him, quoting Abū al-ʿAbbās, quoting Aḥmad, quoting Yūnus, from Hishām b. Saʿd, from Zayd b. Aslām, from al-Mughīra b. Shuʿba, who said, “The first day I knew the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was when I was walking along an alley in Mecca accompanied by Abū Jahl b. Hishām. When we met the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), he said to Abū Jahl, ‘Abū al-Ḥakam, come to God and to his Messenger. I invite you to God!’

‘Abū Jahl replied, ‘Muḥammad, have you stopped cursing our gods? Don’t you just want us to testify that you have fulfilled your mission? We testify that you have. And, I swear, if I knew that what you say is the truth, I would follow you.’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then left, and Abū Jahl came over to me and said, ‘By God, I really do know that what he says is true, but something is holding me back. Banī Qusayy have said, “We want the privilege of the ḥūṣba” (the placing of the cloth over the kaʿba). We agreed. Then they said, “We want the privilege of the ṣaqāya” (the provision of drink for the pilgrims). We agreed. Then they said, “We want the privilege of the nadwa” (feasting the pilgrims). We agreed. Then they said, “We want the privilege of the liwā” (the ceremonial unfurling of the banners). We agreed. They provided food, and we did too. Then, when we were running neck and neck, they said, “We have a prophet among us!” By God, I’ll not do it!’”

Al-Bayhaqī stated that Abū ‘Abd Allāh, the hāfiz, informed him that Abū al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. Yaʿqūb al-ʾAsamm related to him, quoting Muḥammad
b. Khalid, quoting Ahmad b. Khalaf, quoting Isrā'il, from Abū Ishāq, who stated, "The Prophet (SAAS) passed by Abū Jahl and Abū Sufyān while they were both seated. Abū Jahl said, 'This is your prophet then, O Banū 'Abd Shams.' Abū Sufyān replied, 'You're surprised that one of us could be a prophet? A prophet could arise among those fewer in number and lower in status than us!'

"Abū Jahl commented, 'I'm surprised that a young man among sheikhs of age and maturity could be a prophet!'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) overheard them and approached. He addressed them, 'As for you, Abū Sufyān, it's not because you care for God and His Messenger that you became angry; you're just burned for the lineage. As for you, Abū al-Ḥakam, you are going to laugh very little and weep a great deal.' Abū Jahl commented, 'So, nephew, what an evil you promise me coming out of your being a prophet!'

This hadīth is lacking early links in its chain of authorities, and it is somewhat strange; equally strange are the comments of Abū Jahl, God curse him! In reference to him and people like him, God Almighty stated, "And when they see you, they take you for a joke, saying, 'Is this fellow he whom God sent as a messenger? He might almost have enticed us away from our gods, if we had not stayed patiently with them.' They will know when they see the punishment who it is who strays furthest from the path" (ṣūrat al-Furqān, XXV, v.41-2).

Imām Ahmad stated that Hushaym related to him, quoting Abī Bishr, from Sa'īd b. Jubayr, from Ibn 'Abbās, who said, "This verse was sent down while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was in hiding in Mecca, 'and do not speak the prayer loudly, nor speak it too softly'" (ṣūrat al-Isrā', XVII, v.110).

He went on, "When he prayed with his followers, he would raise his voice as he recited the Qurān. On hearing this, the polytheists would curse the Qurān, along with him who sent it down and him who conveyed it. And so God Almighty told his Prophet Muhammad (SAAS), 'and do not speak the prayer loudly' that is, when you recite it, lest the polytheists hear it and curse the Qurān. And 'nor speak it too softly' lest your followers won't hear the Qurān and learn it from you. And so 'seek a path between these'" (ṣūrat al-Isrā', XVII, v.110).

This tradition is similarly given by both authors of the saḥīḥ collections, from a hadīth of Abū Bishr Ja'far b. Abū Ḥayya.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated that Dawūd b. al-Ḥusayn related to him from Ikrima, from Ibn 'Abbās, who said, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke the Qurān loudly as he prayed, people would move away and refuse to listen to him. If anyone did want to hear any of what the Messenger of God was reciting as he prayed, he had to strain his ears away from the rest. And if he knew that they were aware that he was listening he would have to leave, for fear of harm from them. And so he would not listen. But if the Messenger of God (SAAS) were to lower his voice, those who were listening would hear nothing. Therefore God Almighty revealed, ‘and do not speak the prayer loudly’ or they will disperse away from you. And also ‘nor speak it too softly’ or those trying hard to hear it, believing it may be beneficial to them, will not be able to do so. And so, ‘seek a path between these.’”
ABBREVIATIONS AND NAME-RELATED TERMS

Abū means father. According to Arabic grammatical rules, this word changes to Abi when governed by a preceding word. While, therefore, Abū Ṭalib would mean Ṭalib’s father, when the word Ibn, son, is prefixed to the name, the form changes to Abī, and so Ibn Abī Ṭalib, would mean ‘the son of Ṭalib’s father’. To avoid confusion in this text, however, the term is left here universally as Abū.

The letters ‘al-’ before a noun represent in Arabic the definite article, ‘the’.

The letter b. when part of a name represents a shortened form of the word ‘Ibn’, ‘son’. Thus, the name ‘Ya‘qūb b. Ṣūba’ means ‘Ya‘qūb, son of Ṣūba’.

In a composite name, as are often given in this text, such as ‘Ya‘qūb b. Ṣūba b. al-Mughīra b. al-Akhnas’ the names of Ya‘qūb’s father, grandfather, and great-grandfather are given.

The letters bt, a shortened form of the Arabic bmt, indicates ‘girl’ or ‘daughter’. Thus the name ‘A‘īsha bt. Abū Bakr refers to ‘A‘īsha, daughter of Abū Bakr.

The letters SAAS are inserted after mention of the Prophet Muhammad. These letters stand for the Arabic words sallā Allāhu ʿalayhi wa sallam; this invocation, recited by Muslims after every reference to the Prophet, whether by name or inference, is normally translated as ‘May God’s peace and blessings be upon him’.

GLOSSARY ITEMS

Words defined in footnotes associated with the text are not generally included in this glossary.

afkhadh: plural of fakhdh (q.v.).

ahādīth: plural of ḥadīth (q.v.).

agnatic: related through descent on the father’s side.

ʿālim (pl. ʿulamāʾ): scholars or theologians of Islam.

ansār: the plural of nāṣir, helper, or victor. Most commonly met, in this text, in the plural form, it refers to the early Medinan allies of the Prophet who officially fraternized with the muhājirīn, those Muslims who had initially gone into exile from Mecca to Medina in their support for Islam.

\textit{‘arab al-\textsuperscript{c}āriba}: the original Arabs, who are assumed to have spoken the language of Ya'rub b. Qahtān.

\textit{‘arab al-musta‘riba}: ‘the arabized Arabs’, initially referring to those who spoke the Arabic of Ishmael, the dialects of the Hijāz, that is. The term is also applied to those not descended from the Arabs of Arabia, but who have been assimilated into Arab culture and who speak Arabic as their native tongue.

\textit{‘Arafāt} (also \textit{‘Arafa}): a plain some 13 miles east of Mecca. Essential parts of the \textit{hājj} pilgrimage ceremonies occur there, centered on a small granite hill, also known by the same name.

\textit{‘ashīra} (pl. \textit{‘ashā‘ir}): an agnatic group. The word is commonly translated as tribe. An \textit{‘ashīra} is composed of several \textit{afkhādh} (q.v.), while several \textit{‘ashā‘ir} form a single \textit{qabīla} (q.v.).

\textit{badana}: an animal, commonly a camel, to be offered for sacrifice by a pilgrim at the \textit{hājj} (q.v.).

\textit{baraka}: blessing, in particular that divine force that enables prosperity and happiness. Persons of great piety or holiness are believe suffused with \textit{baraka}, which radiates from them to those around them.

\textit{Bakka}: an ancient alternative or original name for Mecca. In legend, the name comes from the Arabic verb \textit{bakā}, he wept, applied to Adam’s sadness at descending to the barren environment of Arabia after his expulsion from paradise.

\textit{ba‘n} (pl. \textit{butn}): an agnatic group smaller than a \textit{qabīla} (q.v.) but larger than a \textit{fakhdh} (q.v.).

\textit{daf}: the word used to denote the act of departure from \textit{‘Arafāt} during the pilgrimage rites.

\textit{fakhdh} (pl. \textit{afkhādh}): a group of several families claiming descent from the same ancestor.

\textit{al-fajr}: the dawn; also the superogatory prayer, recommended but not required, performed immediately after dawn. It consists of two \textit{rakīt} (q.v.) to be recited audibly.
fasīla (pl. fasā'ila): an agnatic group consisting of the nearest members of one’s ĉashīra (q.v.).

ghazwa (pl. ghazawāt): armed engagements in which the Prophet Muḥammad participated personally. Those he initiated but without his own direct participation are known as sarāyā (pl. of sariyya).

hadīth (pl. āhādīth): a saying, reported action or anecdote relating the words or deeds of the Prophet Muḥammad. An isnād (q.v.) precedes the hadīth and lists the persons by whom the reported material was transmitted.

hadīth marfū’: a hadīth related by one of the Companions of the Prophet (see šāhīb) and quoted directly from the latter.

hafiz (pl. hufāz): a person who has memorized the entire Qurān. Also one of the sacred attributes – the Guardian, the Protector – by which God is known.

haj: the pilgrimage to the holy places of Mecca set annually to take place in the first half of the month of Dhū al-Ĥiǧja.

hanīf: 1) a devout pre-Islamic monotheist. 2) a person sincerely searching for the ancient religion practised by Abraham, with whom the word is particularly associated.

hanīfiyya: the religion of Abraham and the hanīfs.

haram (or harām): a term denoting what is sacred, forbidden or inviolable.

hijāba: the office of the custodian of the kaʿba; he is known as the ĥājīb.

hiṭra (or hegira): the emigration of the Prophet Muḥammad and his supporters from Mecca into exile in Medina. The date of this event was later adopted as the commencement of the Muslim era, calculated as 622 AD.

ijāza: 1) rendering something legal or permissible. 2) the act of transmitting a hadīth and attributing the same to an authority without actually having heard that person recite it.

ifāda: the movement or departure or pilgrims from ‘Arafāt following their performance of the wuqūf, ‘the standing’.

ihrām: 1) the rendering sacred or inviolate. 2) the name given to the clothing donned by Muslims entering the ihrām state prior to their participation in the pilgrimage.
isonad: the prefatory material to a hadith (q.v.) that lists the sequence of scholars or witnesses who transmitted the account from the time of the Prophet Muhammad up to the time when it was written down.

izār: the cloth that covers the pilgrim from waist to knees when he commits himself to the sacred state of ihram.

jāhiliyya: denoting childlike foolishness or ignorance, the word is commonly applied to the period prior to the advent of Islam.

jamra (pl. jamrāt): ancient stone pillars symbolizing Satan at Mina. These are pelted with pebbles during the pilgrimage rites, the stones being known as jamrāt.

ka'ba: the ancient cube-like structure within the great mosque in Mecca positioned some feet from the sacred spring zamzam (q.v.). It is towards this site that Muslims direct their prayers (see qibla).

al-Khalīl: 1) a town, also known as Hebron, some 32 miles south of Jerusalem and the site of the Tomb of the Patriarchs, sacred both to Jews and to Muslims. 2) a name or attribute implying close friend or confidant; the word is particularly associated with Abraham.

liwa': 1) a flag, banner or signpost. 2) the issuance of this to those making the pilgrimage to the ka'ba.

maqām Ibrāhīm: the ‘station’ of Abraham. A sanctuary positioned a few feet from the ka'ba where Abraham and his co-religionaries would stand for prayer during the summer months.

maghrib: the west or direction in which the sun sets. Also, the fourth canonical Islamic prayer performed at dusk. It consists of three rak'āt; at the first two of these the prayers are spoken audibly, the third in silence.

masjid: the place where the Muslim prostrates in prayer, usually a mosque.

Minā: a location some four miles east of Mecca on the road to ʿArafāt.

hadith mursal: a hadith which is considered by scholars to have a fault or inconsistency in the chain of its transmission.

al-Muzdalifa: a location some half way between Minā and ʿArafāt. It is there that pilgrims returning from ʿArafāt spend the night.
nadwa: the act of presiding over assemblies of pilgrims at the ka'ba.

parasang: a Persian term for a unit of length, also known as a farsakh. One parasang equals approximately one league, some three miles, that is.

qabila (pl. qabā'il): a large agnatic group whose members trace descent from a single ancestor. Often translated as tribe. A qabila is larger than an 'ashīra (q.v.) but smaller than a šā'īb (q.v.).

qādi: a judge appointed by a Muslim community to administer and adjudicate issues of Islamic law.

qibla: the direction to which a Muslim faces when praying. Initially towards Jerusalem but later changed by the Prophet Muhammad so that Muslims would face Mecca and the ka'ba there.

rak'a (pl. rak'āt): a unit of prayer consisting of a variety of gestures and postures. These rak'āt total 17 each day, divided between the five canonical prayer periods.

al-raḥīm: The All-Compassionate; one of the sublime epithets applied to God.

al-raḥmān: the All-Merciful; one of the sublime epithets applied to God.

Ramadān: the ninth month of the Muslim lunar calendar. The month of fasting, it was during Ramadān that divine revelation first came to the Prophet Muhammad, and it is therefore particularly venerated.

ridā: a length of unsewn cloth that is draped over the left shoulder and around the torso of the pilgrim. This garb is donned by the pilgrim when he enters the ihram state.

rifāda: the provision of pilgrims with wheat and raisins by certain members of Quraysh of Mecca.

al-sa'y: the ritual rapid walk or jog performed during the pilgrimage between al-Ṣafā and al-Marwa.

saba': the community and kingdom ruling South-West Arabia for centuries prior to the mission of the Prophet Muhammad.

ṣahib (pl. asḥāb, saḥāba): companion; that community of men who knew and supported the Prophet Muhammad during his mission.
sahih: a hadith (q.v.) the chain of transmission of which is considered by Muslim scholars to be reliable beyond any reasonable doubt; also, a collection comprised only of such ahadith.

sam'an: the receipt of a hadith (q.v.) from a scholar by listening to him or her recite it and then repeating it back. This method of transmitting and receiving a hadith was considered the most trustworthy of all.

sha'b (pl. shu'âb): a tribal group larger than a qabîla (q.v.); a nation, race or people.

shahâda: the profession of faith in Islam by reciting in Arabic the words: 'There is no God but God and Muhammad is His Messenger'.

shaykh (pl. shuyukh): an elderly man; a tribal or spiritual leader; a distinguished and devout scholar.

shi'a: the doctrine and its adherent, a shîra, that considers 'Ali, son of Abû Tâlib and husband of the Prophet Muhammad's daughter Fâtîma, was the legitimate spiritual and political heir to the Caliphate of Islam.

sunna: the body of recorded words, actions, gestures and practices of the Prophet Muhammad. This material constitutes the second foundation of Islam and its legal system, the holy Qur'ân being the first and prime source. In the plural form, sunan, reference is made to the compilation, by various authorities of the reported words and actions of the Prophet.

tafsir: exegesis and commentary, particularly applied to the Qur'ân.

tasmiyya: the enunciation by a Muslim of the formula: 'In the name of God, the All-Merciful, the All-Compassionate' prior to any act or activity in which he or she might engage.

tawâf: ritual circumambulation of a religious site, normally the ka'ba.

tubba' (pl. tabâbî'a): the title applied to the kings of pre-Islamic Yemen.

wudu': the ritual ablution necessarily practiced by Muslims prior to their performance of prayer.

zamzam: the sacred well positioned close to the ka'ba (q.v.) within the harâm al-sharif, the sacred enclosure encompassing the great mosque in Mecca. Muslims believe the well to have been miraculously opened through the agency of Gabriel to provide water for Abraham's wife Hagar and their son Ishmael.
This index gives the names of all persons and places mentioned in the text, except for those to whom only passing and minimal reference is made. In some cases Ibn Kathir refers to an individual by several different names. For example, Abû Umar b. 'Abd al-Barr is sometimes referred to by that name, and elsewhere by the abbreviation Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, or even Abû Umar. These alternative referents are listed here with cross references where appropriate.

In some cases Ibn Kathir gives an honorific – for example, Abû Ţalib (Talib's father) – by which that person, usually of great fame, was commonly known, sometimes without further full designation anywhere in the text. Such names are listed in this index as they appear in the body of the work. Place names are listed here in full, with the exceptions of Mecca and Medina, to which cities there are innumerable references throughout.

It has been seen as unnecessarily cumbersome to index certain prime sources for Ibn Kathir's work – such as Ibn Is̄haq – to whom reference is made on almost every page. Similarly, quotations given from the Qur'ān are cited in full in the text, but without separate listings in this index.

The Center for Muslim Contribution to Civilization, a non-government, non-profit making cultural organization, strives to lead Muslims and non-Muslims alike to a better understanding of the Muslim contribution to civilization and to a better knowledge of Islam.

Located in Doha, State of Qatar, the Center has the warm support of its patron, the Emir of Qatar, H.H. Sheikh Hamad Bin Khalifa Al-Thani. Presenting accurate translations of some of the best known works of the most eminent Muslim savants, spanning the 800 years of the classical period of Islamic civilization (c. 620 AD to c. 1500 AD), since its establishment in 1983 the Center has produced nine volumes covering five major works in different fields of knowledge.

For further information on the work of the Center, all correspondence should be directed to

Chapter: Concerning the migration of those Companions of the Prophet (SAAS) who escaped from persecution with their faith from Mecca to Abyssinia. Umar b. al-Khattab accepts Islam. 1

Those who mocked. 32

AN ACCOUNT OF THE DETERMINATION OF ABU BAKR, “THE TRUSTING”, TO EMMIGRATE TO ABBYSSINIA. 41
The Story of A’sha b. Qays. 52
The Story of the contest with Rukāna and how the Prophet (SAAS) showed him a tree that he summoned and it came to him. 54
SECTION: CONCERNING THE ISRĀ’, THE NIGHT JOURNEY, OF THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) FROM MECCA TO JERUSALEM, HIS ASCENT FROM THERE TO HEAVEN, AND THE SIGNS HE SAW THERE. 61
SECTION: ON HIS MARRIAGE AFTER THE DEATH OF KHADIJA, GOD BLESS HER, TO ‘A’ISHA, DAUGHTER OF ABU BAKR, AND TO SAWDA, DAUGHTER OF ZAM‘Ā, GOD BLESS THEM BOTH. 92
SECTION: ON HIS DEPARTURE TO THE PEOPLE OF TĀ’IF TO CALL THEM TO ALMIGHTY GOD, AND TO COME TO THE AID OF HIS FAITH; HOW THEY REFUSED HIM THIS AND HE RETURNED TO MECCA. 99
SECTION: ON THE CALL OF THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) TO THE ARAB TRIBES DURING THE PILGRIMAGE SEASONS TO HELP AND SUPPORT HIM
AGAINST THOSE PERSECUTING AND DENYING HIM. NONE OF THEM AGREED, SINCE GOD ALMIGHTY HAD RESERVED THAT GREAT HONOUR TO THE ANSĀR (THE "HELPERS" OR "PARTISANS") OF MEDINA, MAY GOD BE PLEASED WITH THEM.

AN ACCOUNT FROM SUWAYD B. ŠĀMĪT, THE ANSĀRĪ.

Chapter: The commencement of the acceptance of Islam by the ansār, the " Helpers" of Medina, God bless them.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE SECOND MEETING AT AL-′AQABA.

Section: That gives the names of those who attended the second meeting at al-′aqaba, their number, according to Ibn Ishaq, totalling seventy-three men and two women.

Chapter: The beginning of emigration from Mecca to Medina.

Section: On the cause of the emigration of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Chapter: The emigration of the Messenger of God (SAAS) from Mecca to Medina accompanied by Abū Bakr "the Trusting", God be pleased with him.

The Story of Umm Maʿbad al-Khuzaʿiyya.

Section: On the entry of the Messenger of God (SAAS) into Medina, and where he established therein his dwelling, comprising matters related thereto.

THE EVENTS OF THE FIRST YEAR OF THE HEGIRA: AN ACCOUNT OF THE MAJOR EVENTS AND HAPPENINGS IN THE FIRST YEAR FOLLOWING THE EMIGRATION OF THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS).

Section: On the acceptance of Islam by ʿAbd Allāh b. Salām, may God be pleased with him.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE SERMON OF THE MESSENGER OF GOD (SAAS) THAT DAY.

Section: On the building of the holy mosque during the period of the residence of the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the home of Abu Ayyūb, may God be pleased with him.

Indications of the excellence of this noble mosque and this exalted place.

Section: On the establishment of friendship between the Emigrants and the Helpers through the document he had drawn up between them. On the nature of that brotherly relationship he made between them, and on the friendly relations he established with the Jews who were in Medina.

Section: On the establishment by the Messenger of God (SAAS) of a pact of brotherhood between the Emigrants and the Helpers so that they would be friends.

Chapter: On the birth of 'Abd Allah b. al-Zubayr in the month of Shawwāl in the year when the emigration occurred.

Chapter: On the call to prayer and its legitimacy upon the arrival of the Prophet (SAAS) in Medina.

Chapter: On the expedition of Ḥamza b. 'Abd al-Murtalib, may God be pleased with him.

Chapter: On the expedition of 'Ubayda b. al-Ḥārith b. 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib.

An Account of what happened in the second year of the Hegira.

The Book of Military Expeditions.

An Account of the first military expedition, that of al-Abwā', also called Waddān, and the first of the delegations sent.

The expedition to Bawālīt, in the neighbourhood of Raḍwān.
The expedition to al-ʿUshayna.
The first expedition to Bādhr.

Chapter: On the expedition of 'Abd Allah b. Jahsh that was the cause for the great engagement at Bādhr.

Section: Concerning the change in the prayer direction in 2 AH before the battle of Bādhr.

Section: On the institution of the fasting month of Ramaḍān in 2 AH, before the battle of Bādhr.
The great battle of Bādhr; the day of the Furqān, the differentiation between good and evil, the day the two hosts met.
The death of Abū al-Ḥakām b. Ḥishām.

The death of Abu Jahl, God damn him!
How the Prophet (SAAS) replaced Qatada's eye.
Another similar account.

An Account of how the heads of the unbelievers were thrown into the well at the battle of Bādhr.
The deaths of al-Naḍr b. al-Ḥārith and Uqba b. Abū Muṭayt, God damn them!

An Account of the joy of the Negus, God bless him, at the outcome of the battle of Bādhr.

Chapter: On the arrival of the news of those stricken at Bādhr to their families in Mecca.
The Names of those at Bādhr arranged alphabetically.

FOREWORD

The interrelationship and interaction of human cultures and civilizations has made the contributions of each the common heritage of men in all ages and all places. Early Muslim scholars were able to communicate with their Western counterparts through contacts made during the Crusades; at Muslim universities and centres of learning in Muslim Spain (al-Andalus, or Andalusia) and Sicily to which many European students went for education; and at the universities and centres of learning in Europe itself (such as Salerno, Padua, Montpellier, Paris, and Oxford), where Islamic works were taught in Latin translations. Among the Muslim scholars well-known in the centres of learning throughout the world were al-Rāzi (Rhazes), Ibn Sīnā (Avicenna), Ibn Rushd (Averroes), al Khwārizmī and Ibn Khaldūn. Muslim scholars such as these and others produced original works in many fields. Many of them possessed encyclopaedic knowledge and distinguished themselves in many disparate fields of knowledge.

In view of this, the Center for Muslim Contribution to Civilization was established in order to acquaint non-Muslims with the contributions Islam has given to human civilization as a whole. The Great Books of Islamic Civilization Project attempts to cover the first 800 years of Islam, or what may be called Islam's Classical Period. This project aims at making available in English a wide selection of works representative of Islamic civilization in all its diversity. It is made up of translations of original Arabic works that were produced in the formative centuries of Islam, and is meant to serve the needs of a potentially large readership. Not only the specialist and scholar, but the non-specialist with an interest in Islam and its cultural heritage will be able to benefit from the series. Together, the works should serve as a rich source for the study of the early periods of Islamic thought.

In selecting the books for the series, the Center took into account all major areas of Islamic intellectual pursuit that could be represented. Thus the series includes works not only on better-known subjects such as law, theology, jurisprudence, history and politics, but also on subjects such as literature, medicine, astronomy, optics and geography. The specific criteria, used to select individual books, were these: that a book should give a faithful and comprehensive account of its field; and that it should be an authoritative source. The reader thus has at his disposal virtually a whole library of informative and enlightening works.

Each book in the series has been translated by a qualified scholar and reviewed by another expert. While the style of one translation will naturally differ from another, the translators have endeavoured, to the extent it was possible, to make the works accessible to the common reader. As a rule, the use of footnotes has been kept to a minimum, though a more extensive use of them was necessitated in some cases.

This series is presented in the hope that it will contribute to a greater understanding in the West of the cultural and intellectual heritage of Islam and will therefore provide an important means towards greater understanding of today’s world.

May God Help Us!

ABOUT THIS SERIES

This series of Arabic works, made available in English translation, represents an outstanding selection of important Islamic studies in a variety of fields of knowledge. The works selected for inclusion in this series meet specific criteria. They are recognized by Muslim scholars as being early and important in their fields, as works whose importance is broadly recognized by international scholars, and as having had a genuinely significant impact on the development of human culture.

Readers will therefore see that this series includes a variety of works in the purely Islamic sciences, such as Qur’ān, hadith, theology, prophetic traditions (sunna), and jurisprudence (fiqh). Also represented will be books by Muslim scientists on medicine, astronomy, geography, physics, chemistry, horticulture, and other fields.

The work of translating these texts has been entrusted to a group of professors in the Islamic and Western worlds who are recognized authorities in their fields. It has been deemed appropriate, in order to ensure accuracy and fluency, that two persons, one with Arabic as his mother tongue and another with English as his mother tongue, should participate together in the translation and revision of each text.

This series is distinguished from other similar intercultural projects by its distinctive objectives and methodology. These works will fill a genuine gap in the library of human thought. They will prove extremely useful to all those with an interest in Islamic culture, its interaction with Western thought, and its impact on culture throughout the world. They will, it is hoped, fulfil an important role in enhancing world understanding at a time when there is such evident and urgent need for the development of peaceful coexistence.

This series is published by the Center for Muslim Contribution to Civilization, which serves as a research centre under the patronage of H.H. Sheikh Hamad bin Khalifa al-Thani, Amir of Qatar. It is directed by a Board of Trustees chaired by H.E. Sheikh Muhammad bin Hamad al-Thani, the former Minister of Education of Qatar. The Board is comprised of a group of prominent scholars. These include H.E. Dr Abul-Wafa al-Taftazani*, Deputy Rector of Cairo University, and Dr Yusuf al-Qaradhawi, Director of the Sira and Sunna Research Center. At its inception the Center was directed by the late Dr Muhammad Ibrahim Kazim, former Rector of Qatar University, who established its initial objectives.

The Center was until recently directed by Dr Kamal Nagi, the Foreign Cultural Relations Advisor of the Ministry of Education of Qatar. He was assisted by a Board comprising a number of academicians of Qatar University, in addition to a consultative committee chaired by Dr Ezzeddin Ibrahim, former Rector of the University of the United Arab Emirates. A further committee acting on behalf of the Center has been the prominent university professors who act under the chairmanship of Dr Raji Rammuny, Professor of Arabic at the University of Michigan. This committee is charged with making known, in Europe and in America, the books selected for translation, and in selecting and enlisting properly qualified university professors, orientalists and students of Islamic studies to undertake the work of translation and revision, as well as overseeing the publication process.

INTRODUCTION

The work at hand in its original Arabic is, in a sense, the product of two minds: the author himself, Abū al-Fīdā' Imād al-Dīn Ismā'īl b. 'Umar b. Kathīr, and, to a lesser extent, its editor, Muṣṭafā ʿAbd al-Wāḥīd. In his introduction to the Arabic, ʿAbd al-Wāḥīd points out that this work is in fact the culmination of a search for a biography of the Prophet Muhammad to which Ibn Kathīr makes reference in his celebrated exegesis of the Qur'ān. There is, however, no extant copy of any such independent biographical study traceable to Ibn Kathīr. That such a study did exist is questionable, notwithstanding Ibn Kathīr's own allusion thereto. Given the unavailability of this particular work, ʿAbd al-Wāḥīd offers the theory that the biography in question is none other than that which appears in Ibn Kathīr's chief work, his opus on history, the al-Bīdāya wa al-Nihāya. He argues that the ṣīra section of the latter work is so comprehensive in its analysis of the life and times of the Prophet Muhammad as to almost obviate the need for any independent study of the same topic. The biography at hand, therefore, is the same as found in the al-Bīdāya. Nevertheless, ʿAbd al-Wāḥīd must be commended for the not inconsiderable task of editing and publishing this particular section as an independent unit, and appropriately titling it al-Ṣīra al-Nabawīyya li Ibn Kathīr.

Ibn Kathīr, whose ancestors are said to have been from Iraq, was himself born around the year 1313 CE/700 AH in the Boesra district of eastern Damascus. He died 74 years later, shortly after suffering a total loss of vision. He counts as his tutors such illustrious personages as the eminent historian Shams al-Dīn al-Dhahabi, the Mālikī jurist Abū Mūsā al-Qarāfī, and the celebrated Damascene polemicist and jurist Ibn Taymiyya al-Ḥarrānī.

Ibn Kathīr's was an era of the great political and social upheavals that posed many challenges to the Muslim world at large, and in particular, to its scholars. What with the scourge of the Tartars threatening the very existence of Islam as a socio-political entity from the outside and the sectarian and ethnic strife created by the Mamluk revolution doing much the same from within, Ibn Kathīr and his

Ibn Kathir, true to the pre-eminent tendencies of the academic milieu within which he functioned, brings to his study of the Prophet of Islam the method of the muḥaddith, the scholar of hadith traditions, more assiduously than he does that of the traditional historian. In doing so, however, he has, I believe, substantially succeeded in combining two of the three sources available for the pursuit of the historical Muḥammad: the hadith literature and the sira; the Qurʾān, being the third such source, features less prominently, if not altogether rarely, in his study. Given the very extensive usage of hadith material in this particular work, a word about the classical nature of such material and its contemporaneous validity would be appropriate at this point.

Early historical studies of Muslim society and culture, as A. A. Duri points out, “followed broadly two lines that were distinct from each other – that of hadith, and that of the tribes (i.e. the ayyām anecdotes as narrated by the akhbāris and the rumāt), which is in a sense a continuation of pre-Islamic activities. “These two lines”, he explains, “reflect the two major currents in early Islamic society – the Islamic and the tribal lines which influenced all aspects of life.” 4 According to Muslim tradition, the learning and transmission of the sayings and actions of Muḥammad, his tacit approvals and disapprovals of the actions of others, and his general behaviour had religious significance second only to that of the Qurʾān. To that end Muslim scholars began the collection of such data as was related to the Prophet and his era even while he was still alive. At first, the system of oral retention was popular, but by the middle of the first century of the Muslim era, written compilations of hadith traditions began to appear. By the end of the third quarter of that century, “a pattern was fixed for the learning and teaching of the hadith which flourished in the second and third centuries.” 5 A system of sorts for verifying the authenticity of such prophetic traditions was allegedly extant from the earliest of times – albeit in a rather rudimentary manner. That system, however, was neither systematized nor rigorously applied until the advent of the civil wars (fitna), whereupon sources were no longer regarded, prima facie, as trustworthy, but were instead increasingly scrutinized to establish authenticity. Thus evolved the elaborate isnād system where every hadith was scrutinized from two perspectives: the text (matn) containing the information transmitted as such, and the chain of transmitters (sanad) giving the names of all those responsible for transmitting such information from the Prophet himself.

4. Professor Duri’s article is in large measure an elucidation of what he calls “the tribal type of history.” See in this regard “The Iraq School of History to the Ninth Century”, in Historians of the Middle East, ed. B. Lewis and P. M. Holt (Oxford University Press, 1962).

As indicated earlier, Ibn Kathir’s method in this particular work is more that of the hadith scholars than it is of the historian; al-Bukhārī, Muslim and more so, al-Bayhaqi, Aḥmad b. Ḥanbal, and Abū Nuʿaym thus feature more prominently as sources for his biography than do historians such as Ibn Isḥāq, Ibn Hishām or al-Ṭabarī. But, as ʿAbd al-Wahid rightly points out, Ibn Kathir, on occasion, is not averse to using some rather obscure historical works, some even that are no longer extant: the rare historical tractate of Mūsā b. Uqba, and the al-Rawḍ al-Anf of al-Suyūṭi are examples thereof.

True to tradition, if not quite on the same scale as, for instance, Ibn Hishām, are Ibn Kathir’s copious citations of poetry, host all of which seem to have been taken from Muḥammad b. Isḥāq’s biography of the Prophet. The poems deal with a variety of themes and styles: there is, for instance, the unmistakable sarcasm of Kaʿab b. Zuhayr as reflected in his lampooning of the Prophet, followed by his subsequent retraction and apology as in the much celebrated poem, Bānāt Suʿād; there is also the occasional celebration of pre-Islamic Arabian chivalry, as in the haunting ode of Abū al-Bakhtārī b. Hishām, when he speaks so movingly of his virtual self-immolation for the love of a friend. Then, of course, there are the evocative panegyrics of Ḥassān b. Thabit in defence of Islam, its Prophet, and his Companions.

Ibn Kathir, oddly enough for someone who has plumbed the depths of hadith methodology, frequently paraphrases, not just the many references to scholars such as Ibn Isḥāq, but also, at times, the very hadith material he so often quotes. He thus takes almost the same liberties with such material as he does with works on history, and the reader, particularly of the Arabic text, sometimes searches in vain for all but the gist of the traditions that he ascribes to, say, the sahih of Bukhārī or that of Muslim. ʿAbd al-Wahid offers two possible reasons for this anomaly; the one I believe to be somewhat more plausible than the other. It may well be, he suggests, that Ibn Kathir was simply quoting from memory, seeing no need for any further textual verification, or it may also be that he is, in fact, using sources unavailable to us today. This latter hypothesis is, I believe, somewhat unconvincing for it requires, amongst other things, that Ibn Kathir possessed not one, but an entire set of hadith works unique to his library alone!
The text itself suffers from a singular lack of the literary cadence that makes the historical works of al-Tabari, for instance, more of a pleasure to read. This seems to result from Ibn Kathir's efforts to present an authentic description of the life and times of the Prophet of Islam, and to submit such data as is found in the popular biographical works to the scrutiny of hadith literature. The flow of his text is, without question, a casualty of this exercise. But, as has been pointed out by a scholar of the Bible, "If we read biblical narrative (or in this case the sirah material) as a story, we abandon its historical truth. If we read it as literature, we will often find literary art in it, but this art takes us further from truth." Not that the method of Ibn Kathir is altogether without its redeeming features: it certainly provides useful information to scholars, particularly those of the traditional schools, who would prefer to have the classical sources for sirah studies close at hand.

The contents of works such as Ibn Kathir's sirah are today regarded by many scholars of Islam as largely proto-historical, focusing, that is, on an era whose source documentation falls short of contemporary historiographical standards. It is, some say, the stuff of myth and legend, entwined in places with real historical data. For modern historians of Islam and the Middle East such as Maxime Rodinson, Patricia Crone et al., sirah material contains, in the first instance, virtually "nothing of which we can say for certain that it incontestably dates back to the time of the Prophet." And so, "when doing research about the life and work of the Prophet Muhammad", Rudi Paret warns, "we on principle distrust the traditional statement and explanation of facts given by later generations, in so far as they cannot be verified by internal evidence or in some other way."

In addition, the work at hand may be seen by some to be no more than the product of one who had a variety of interests in the topic: one who was, at one and the same time, a historian, a scribe of "sacred biography", and also a devotee; the results of an endeavour such as Ibn Kathir's, therefore, risk being perceived as less than the product of dispassionate scholarship.

This critical approach to Islamic historiography emerged gradually in the 18th and 19th centuries. It was, understandably, only a matter of time before Albert Schweitzer's "quest of the historical Christ" would be appropriated by scholars of Islamic history in their search of the demythologized Muhammad; after all, this kind of appropriation of the analytical tools indigenous to studies of Christianity for the unravelling of the Islamic historical experience has become almost a convention in Islamic and Middle Eastern studies. Yet the entire process is, I believe, fraught with questionable hypotheses, broad generalizations and a certain disregard for the spatio-temporal factors that shape ostensibly similar events. The application of New Testament heuristic tools such as Form and Redaction criticism to the corpus of information pertaining to the sira seems to betray a casual disregard for the Sitz im Leben of that very corpus. The life and work of Jesus is clearly different from that of Muḥammad; the former’s mission— if it can be described as such— is, for example, singularly devoid of the political and socio-economic objectives that informed that of the latter. It is, therefore, hardly surprising, as F. E. Peters in his recent article “The Quest of the Historical Muhammad” points out, that “even though a great deal of effort has been invested in research into the life and times of Muḥammad, the results do not seem at all comparable to those achieved in research on Jesus, and the reasons are not at all clear.”

Ever since Gustav Weil presented his Mohammad der Prophet, sein Leben und seine Lehre in 1843, scholars have endeavoured to unravel the historical Muḥammad using a variety of tools and strategems. Initially the material offered by Muslim historians such as Ibn Ishāq, Ibn Hishām and more, importantly, al-Ṭabari was used almost unquestioningly by Christian scholars who, as Holt characterizes them, belonged mainly to “holy orders”. Their primary purpose, it would seem, was to provide a spirited defence of Christian theology and dogma against the claims of Islam and its adherents. The polemics that ensued were, in the main, reflective of the attitude that there “not any rational inducement in all (that Muslims) believe or practice; insomuch that common sense must he discarded in order to embrace their system.” As for Muḥammad, he was for many in that era “so coarse and barbarous an imposter, that there is not a man, who does not or cannot perceive plainly his cheating and corruption.” Humphrey Prideaux, the 17th-century lecturer in Hebrew at Oxford, captured rather succinctly the disposition of scholars vis-à-vis the study of Muḥammad, in the rather long-winded title of his work, The true nature of imposture fully display’d in the life of Mahomet. With a discourse annex’d for the vindication of Christianity from this charge. Offered to the consideration of the Deists of the present age. Later Simon Ockley, the somewhat less acerbic and brusque vicar of Swavesey in Cambridgeshire, authored The History of the Saracens, a "much more solid contribution to historical knowledge" as Holt puts it, but one that nonetheless did "not fail to follow common form by stigmatizing Muhammad in his first line, as 'the great Imposter' and then describing the Arab conquests as 'that grievous calamity'." The liberalism that swept across Europe in the 18th century helped create a relatively less hostile attitude among European scholars towards Islam and its leader. We thus find during that era scholars such as Henri de Boulainvillier emerging. Boulainvillier, his theological affinities notwithstanding, assumed a decidedly more conciliatory tone in his biography of Muhammad, La vie de Mahomet. For him, Christianity is undoubtedly superior to Islam but he is, none the less, quite charitable in his evaluation of his subject, and says: "With respect to the essential doctrines of religion, all that (Muhammad) has laid down is true; but he has not laid down all that is true; and that is the whole difference between our religion and his." The quest itself began in earnest in the writings of the Belgian Jesuit, Henri Lammens. Whereas Theodor Noeldeke, prior to him, had largely failed in his attempts to unravel "the historical person of Muhammad", Lammens plodded on, and succeeded to some extent, in demonstrating "the possibility of the critical analysis of the sira". Lammens' efforts, however, were directed, not at a biographical study of Muhammad per se, but rather on the search for the secret of his personal appeal and the rapid expansion of his message. "Muhammad to him, was a historical problem as well as a symbol of Islam's obstinacy and insensitivity to the missionary influence."

Lammens also happened to be among the first to argue, with some conviction, that the hadith traditions as well as the sira material on the Prophet are, on the whole, fictitious. This inaugurated a new perspective on Islamic history: the emphasis shifted from a critique of the actors in that history to the questioning of the source material itself.

In the 19th century, the Hungarian scholar Ignaz Goldziher concluded that much of the hadith material was but a "pious fraud . . . invoked by every group (in early Islam) for every idea it evolved; . . . through solid chains (ismād) of tradition, all such matters acquired an unbroken tie to the 'Companions' who had heard those pronouncements and statutes from the Prophet or had seen him act

15. Ibid., 311.
INTRODUCTION

in pertinent ways." Later Professor J. Schacht further explored the foregoing hypotheses by subjecting the isnād of a few legal traditions to an exhaustive scrutiny. He concluded that "hardly any of these traditions, as far as matters of religious law are concerned, can be considered authentic; they were put into circulation . . . from the first half of the second century onwards." From this others were quick to extrapolate that even the biographical material is fraudulent. Crone thus states: "that the bulk of the sira . . . consists of second century hadiths has not been disputed by any historian, and this point may be taken as concededa.

Not all Western scholars, however, were as eager to jettison the classical material. W. M. Watt, writing in his Muhammad at Mecca, is clearly more reluctant than Crone, for example, to reject out of hand all such material, simply on the strength of Schacht's conclusion. He thus maintains that "In the legal sphere there may have been some sheer invention of traditions, it would seem. But in the historical sphere, in so far as the two may be separated, and apart from some exceptional cases, the nearest to such invention in the best early historians appears to be a 'tendential shaping' of the material . . ."

It must be remembered, however, that traditional Muslim scholars display little awareness of the foregoing conundrum. The classical methodology of hadith criticism as practised by early Muslim scholars, with its close scrutiny of the isnād and the mutātun of prophetic traditions, has, in the main, not been discredited, or even questioned, by Muslim scholars. If anything, that methodology has today been given a new lease of life by scholars such as Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī, who, for example, regard the re-evaluation of the early sources as integral to what they call the Islamic renaissance (al-Nahḍa al-Islāmiyya). Such a renaissance, Albānī argues, will fall far short of its goals, without a thoroughgoing purge of what remains of the spurious material that had crept into hadith and sira works during the turbulent epoch of early Islamic history. He thus set himself the task of appraising scholars and the Muslim laity alike to those traditions that were deemed spurious by the regimen of classical hadith studies. His findings, which were first published under the title "al-Aḥādith al-Dā'ifah wa al-Mawdū'ah" in a weekly column in the magazine al-Tamaddun al-Islāmi, now comprise a multi-volume work, appropriately titled Silsilah al-Aḥādith al-Dā'ifah wa al-Mawdū'ah.a

Clearly not all contemporary scholars are as eager as Schacht et al. to ring the death knell on hadith literature as a tool for unravelling early Islamic history. Azami for one, in his studies on early hadith literature has attempted to show that hadith literature is indeed the richest source for the investigation of that era, for it provides, among other things, material for the understanding of the legal, cultural and religious ideas of those early centuries. He maintains that the theories of Margoliouth, Goldziher and more recently, Schacht can no longer be incontestably accepted given the recent discoveries of manuscripts or research. According to him:

"In the period referred to, works on the biography of the Prophet and on other historical topics were in a very advanced stage. We find that work on the biography of the Prophet was begun by the Companions. 'Abd Allah b. 'Amr b. al-'Aṣ recorded many historical events. It is possible still to trace his work in the ahadith narrated by 'Amr b. Shu'ayb (d. 118 AH) as he utilized his great grandfather 'Abd Allah b. 'Amr's books. Urwah (d. 93 AH) in his biography of the Prophet names his authority and most probably he had obtained the information in writing. There are works mentioned here and there on a single topic of the Sirah, e.g. Memorandum on the Servants of the Prophet, a book on the ambassadors of the Prophet to different rulers and chieftains with their negotiations. There are references to the collections of the Prophet's letters in a very early period."24

But it is, in fact, these very sources that Azami cites that have, through the use of contemporary literary and hermeneutical tools, been relegated to no more than "the rubble of early Muslim history". For Patricia Crone therefore, the "inertia" of material such as appears heretofore "comes across very strongly in modern scholarship on the first two centuries of Islam."25 "The bulk of it", she argues, "has an alarming tendency to degenerate into mere rearrangements of the same old canon – Muslim chronicles in modern languages and graced with modern titles."26

Others, such as Juynboll, have strived to arrive at the inevitable solution intermédiaire, "a conceivable position that could be taken between the two points of view represented respectively by Muslim and Western scholarship."27 For him therefore, the hadith traditions "taken as a whole" do provide a fairly reliable rendition of early Islamic history, and "a judiciously and cautiously formulated overall view of what all those early reports . . . collectively point to, may in all likelihood be taken to be not very far from the truth of 'what really happened'."28

28. Ibid., 7.
Finally, the true value of this particular work probably resides outside the context of the foregoing academic debate, for as Gadamer explains in Truth and Method, "The meaning of a literary work is never exhausted by the intentions of its author; as the work passes from one cultural or historical context to another, new meanings may be culled from it which were perhaps never anticipated by its author or contemporary audience."

TRANSLATOR’S PREFACE

As has often been observed, translation is impossible, since the associations and emotive content of words in one language and culture differ from those of all others. Attempts at translation, therefore, inevitably represent strivings for compromise. While accuracy and precision are prime objectives, the ultimately necessary requirements for clarity and comprehension in the host language may require simplification or even omission from the original text. The dilemmas inherent in these conflicting objectives are at times irreconcilable, and this is particularly true when one is dealing, as here, with languages and cultures so far removed as ancient Arabic and modern English. This translation, composed in everyday, contemporary English, gives no impression of the ubiquitous rarities, oddities and archaisms of vocabulary and syntax that make the original extremely challenging to comprehend. It is hoped, of course, that the innumerable compromises that this translation represents will be accepted as good-faith attempts to convey the spirit and purpose of the original in a form that readers of English will not find impossibly daunting.

In some instances Ibn Kathir repeats anecdotal ahādīth with differing chains of authority that are almost identical in content; often, as will be seen, the accounts differ in only very few of their words and these are typically vocabulary rarities. While such variations between accounts may seem of scant interest to the Western reader, they have nevertheless been left complete and intact in this translation. Including them in full, as in the original work, gives a strong impression of the care with which these anecdotes have been handed down and the impression of their likely authenticity is therefore enhanced. This seems especially the case where the discrepancies involve vocabulary rarities that are synonymous. It seems that it would be just such words that would have been subjected to dispute, change or loss from memory.

Ibn Kathir’s objective was to appear authoritative and discriminating in his choices of inclusion and discussion of specific ahādīth; to him the listing of all the names of his authorities and his comments on their reputations was an essential component of this lectures. The give-and-take of oral lecturing — of which this work is essentially a record — would have enabled immediate verbal clarification. Our English text, in contrast, has to stand by itself, and to present an inherent and visible logic and clarity; it must also give some impression of the reliability of the Arabic text that is indicated by its complexity, and by the care with which the names of quoted sources are given and at times evaluated.

have been included in full, since their identities were of prime importance for the initial ‘readership’ of this work as well as to students and researchers today. However, the exact nature and relative value of the means of transmission from authority to authority and the suggestions implied of Ibn Kathir’s preference for certain sources over others, have not been conveyed with exactitude, since common English vocabulary is unable to convey some of the subtleties of the Arabic technical terms employed for this purpose. The essential completeness of the original text in this translation does, however, enable serious students of early Islamic materials to bring their own differentiation to bear by their knowledge of the reputations of the persons quoted.

Certain words common in this text — such as Abū and sūrat — change in their form in Arabic to accord with basic grammatical rules. Here, however, to avoid confusion for those readers who do not know Arabic, they have been left in the form in which they are most commonly met. Initial hamza, moreover, has been omitted. Since early Arabic manuscripts, like the Arabic printed version of this text, are devoid of quotation marks, the identity of the narrator is sometimes unclear. Similarly, it is occasionally difficult to discern whether comments at the end of an account are those of the transmitting authority or of Ibn Kathir himself. Footnotes referring to these and similar textual difficulties have been kept to a minimum, while brief parenthetical explanatory comments have sometimes been inserted to aid the general reader.

Discriminating and knowledgeable readers and reviewers will no doubt find discrepancies and perhaps inaccuracies in this lengthy and demanding text, especially in the extensive poems quoted. For these the translator — and his reviewers, text editors and typesetters — apologize. But since this work offers intimate details not elsewhere available in English about Arabian history and the inspiration and leadership of Islam in its earliest formative period, it would seem unsatisfactory to leave it in a language and form accessible only to a small coterie of scholars. The evident religious historical and philosophical interest of this text suggests that all those associated with its production may properly take refuge and find consolation from criticism in the knowledge that ‘to err is human’. To attempt the impossible, moreover, while perhaps foolhardy, is surely more laudable than to make no attempt at all.

Chapter: Concerning the migration of those Companions of the Prophet (SAAS) who escaped from persecution with their faith from Mecca to Abyssinia.

It has been recounted above how the polytheists abused those believers who lacked power or protection and treated them with severe violence and great humiliation.

God, Almighty and Glorious is He, had kept them away from His Messenger (SAAS), and had given him the protection of his uncle, Abü Țalib, as was mentioned above. And all praise and recognition is due to God.

Al-Waqidi has related that their passage to Abyssinia occurred in the month of Rajab in the fifth year of the Mission, and that the first group to migrate consisted of eleven men and four women. He told how they made their way to the sea, either on foot or riding, and there they hired a boat to Abyssinia at a cost of one-half of one dinar.

These persons were: 'Uthmân b. ʿAffân and his wife Ruqayya, daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS), Abu Ḥudhayfah b. ʿUtba and his wife Sahla, daughter of Suhayl, al-Zubayr b. al-ʿAwwām, Muṣʿab b. ʿUmayr, ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAwf, Abū Salama b. ʿAbd al-Asad and his wife Umm Salama, daughter of Abū Umayya, ʿUthmân b. Maẓʿūn, ʿAmir b. Rabiʿa al-ʿAnzi, his wife Laylā, daughter of Abū Ḥathma, Abū Sabra b. Abū Ruhm, Ḥāṭib b. ʿAmr, Suhayl b. Bayḍa and ʿAbd Allah b. Masʿūd. God bless them all! Ihn Jarir stated, "Others say, however, that the group consisted of 82 men, not counting their women and children. About ʿAmmār b. Yāsir we have doubts; if he was among them, they totalled 83 men."

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS), witnessed the trials descending upon his Companions, he compared this with his own good state that derived from his own status with God and from his uncle Abī Ṭalib, and, recognizing that he was unable to prevent the evil befalling them, he told them, 'I wish you would go forth into the land of Abyssinia, for there is a king in whose realm no one is harmed, where truth prevails. Stay there until God gives you relief from your plight.'

"The Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS), thereupon left for Abyssinia, fearing the unrest and fleeing with their faith unto God. This was the first emigration that occurred in Islam. The first Muslim to depart was ʿUthmān b. ʿAffān along with his wife Ruqayya, daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS)."

Al-Bayhaqī related, similarly, from a hadīth of Yaʿqūb b. Sufyān, from ʿAbdās al-ʿAnbārī, from Bishr b. Mūsā, from al-Ḥasan b. Ziyād al-Burjumi, who said, Qatada stated to us, ‘The first man to emigrate to God Almighty along with his family was Uthman b. `Affan, God be pleased with him.’

I heard al-Nadr b. Anas state, ‘I heard Abū Ḥamza (by whom he meant Anas b. Mālik) say, “Uthman b. `Affan, along with his wife Ruqayya, daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS), left for Abyssinia. A long time elapsed without the Messenger of God (SAAS), having news of them, until a Quraysh woman came to him and said, ‘O Muhammad, I saw your son-in-law with his wife in his company.’ ‘In what state did you see them?’ he asked.

‘She replied, ‘I saw him leading a decrepit old donkey on which his wife was mounted.’

‘The Messenger of God (SAAS), exclaimed, ‘May God be with them both! Uthman is the first man since Lot, upon whom be peace, to take himself and his family into exile.’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “And (they also included) Ābū Hudhayfa b. Utba and his wife Sahla, daughter of Suhayl b. `Amr; and in Abyssinia she bore him a son, Muhammad b. Abū Hudhayfa.

And there were al-Zubayr b. al-`Awwām, Muṣṭafā b. `Umayr, Ābū al-Rahmān b. `Awf, Abū Salama b. `Abd al-Asad, along with his wife Umm Salama, daughter of Abū Umayya b. al-Mughira, to whom Zaynab was born there. Also travelling were Uthmān b. Maz`ūn, and Āmir b. Rabī`a, who was allied to the al-Khaṭṭāb family; he was from the tribe of `Anz b. Wāfīl. His wife was Laylā, daughter of Abū Ḥathna. Then there was Abū Sabra b. Abū Ruhm al-`Amīrī, with his wife Umm Kulthūm, daughter of Suhayl b. `Amr; the latter is also known as Abū Ḥāṭib b. `Amr b. `Abd Shams b. `Abd Wudd b. Naṣr b. Malik b. Ḥisl b. Āmir. He is also said to have been the first to arrive there.

Also there was Suhayl b. Baydā?.

These ten men, so I have been told, were the first Muslims to leave for Abyssinia.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “Uthmān b. Maz`ūn was in command of them, according to some scholars.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Then Ja`far b. Abū Ṭalib left, accompanied by his wife Aṣmā?, daughter of Umayys. ‘Abd Allāh b. Ja`far was born to him in Abyssinia.”

The Muslims followed on after one another, eventually being reunited in Abyssinia.

Mūsā b. `Uqba has claimed that the first migration to Abyssinia occurred when Abū Ṭalib and those who had allied with him in support of the Messenger of God (SAAS), went into the sḥīb.1 There are differing views on this. But God knows best.

He also claimed that the departure of Ja`far b. Abū Ṭalib came only in the second migration to Abyssinia, after the return of some of those who had gone there initially. (They returned) when they heard that the polytheists had accepted Islam and were praying. When they arrived in Mecca, Uthmān b. Maz‘ūn among them, they did not find it true that the polytheists had accepted Islam, as they had been told. Some of them then returned to Abyssinia, while others remained in Mecca. Other Muslims also went to Abyssinia at the time of the second migration. This will be explained hereafter.

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, “Ja‘far b. Abū Ta‘līb was among those who left the second time.” But Ibn Isḥāq’s referring to his having gone on the first migration is very plain, as will be shown. But God knows best.

However, he clearly was in a second group of the emigrants who went on the first migration; he acted as their spokesman and translator before the Negus and others. We will report this at length.

Then Ibn Isḥāq went on to list those who left in the company of Ja‘far, God be pleased with them all.

They were: 'Amr b. Sa‘īd b. al-‘Ās and his wife Fāṭima, daughter of Ṣafwān b. Umayya b. Muḫarrith b. Shiqq al-Kinānī.

And his brother Khālid, accompanied by his wife Umayna, daughter of Khalaf b. As‘ād al-Khuzā‘ī; she bore him Sa‘īd and Amma, the latter ultimately marrying al-Zubayr by whom she gave birth to ‘Amr and Khālid.

Also there were ‘Abd Allāh b. Jāḥsh b. Ri‘āb and his brother ‘Ubayd Allāh, who was accompanied by his wife Umm Ḥabība, daughter of Abū Sufyān.

And Qays b. ‘Abd Allāh of the Banū Asad b. Khazīma along with his wife Barakā, daughter of Yāsār, the freed-woman of Abū Sufyān.

And Mu‘ayqib b. Abū Fāṭima, a freed-man of Sa‘īd b. al-‘Ās. Ibn Hishām stated, “He was of (the tribe of) Daws.”

And Abū Mūsā al-Asbā‘ī, that is ‘Abd Allāh b. Qays, an ally of the family of ‘Utbā b. Rabi‘a; we will discuss this later and also the authority.

Also there were ‘Amr b. Uthmān b. ‘Amr b. Ka‘b b. Sa‘d b. Taym b. Murra and Shammās b. Uthmān b. al-Sharīd al-Makhzūmī. He (Ibn Isḥāq) stated that he was named “Shammas” (i.e. perhaps “Sunny”, tr.) because of his good looks; his original name was Uthmān b. ‘Uthmān.

Also included were Qudāma and ‘Abd Allāh, the two brothers of Uthmān b. Maṣ‘ūn, al-Sa‘īb b. Uthmān b. Maṣ‘ūn, Ḥatīb b. al-Ḥarīth b. Ma‘mar, accompanied by his wife Fāṭima, daughter of al-Mujallil and his two sons by her, Muḥammad and al-Ḥarīth. Also there were Ḥatīb’s brother Khāṭāb, accompanied by his wife Fukayha, daughter of Yasār, Sufyān b. Ma‘mar b. Ḥabib and his wife Ḥasana, along with his two sons by her, Jābīr and Junāḍa, as well as a son of hers by another husband. This son’s name was Shurahbīl b. ‘Abd Allāh, a member of the family of al-Ghawth b. Muzāḥim b. Ṭāmīm; he was known as Shurahbīl b. Ḥasana.

Also there were Abū Qays b. al-Ḥarīth b. Qays b. ‘Adī, along with his brothers al-Ḥarīth, Ma‘mar, al-Sa‘īb, Bishr and Sa‘īd, all sons of al-Ḥarīth, along with the brother of Sa‘īd b. Qays b. ‘Adī on his mother’s side, his name being Sa‘īd b. ‘Amr al-Tamīmī.

2. Ibn Hishām adds this link.
Ibn Ishaq stated, “The number of those Muslims who migrated and went to Abyssinia, not counting the little children and those born there, totalled 83. This assumes that 'Ammar b. Yāsir was among them, but there is some doubt about him.”

I would comment that the inclusion by Ibn Ishaq of Abū Mūsā al-Asḥārī among those who migrated from Mecca to Abyssinia is very strange.

“Then Quraysh dispatched to him ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ and ʿUmār b. al-Walīd with a gift.

“When they went in to the Negus, they bowed down before him. Then they took up positions to the left and right before him and said, “A group of our people have taken up residence in your land, after having turned away from us and from our religion.”

“‘Where are they?’, he asked.

“‘In your land. Send for them,’ they suggested.

“‘He did so and Ja‘far said, “I will be your spokesman today.” And they followed him.

“‘He made salutation, but did not bow down. They asked him, “What is wrong with you, not bowing down before the king?”

“‘He replied, “We bow down only before God, the Almighty and Glorious.”

“‘What is this all about?’ he was asked.

“‘He answered, “God has sent a messenger to us and told us to bow down to no one but God, the Almighty and Glorious. He also ordered us to pray, and to give alms.”

“‘Amr commented, “They differ with you about Jesus, son of Mary.”

“‘He (the Negus) asked, “What do you say about Jesus son of Mary and His mother?”

“‘He (Ja‘far) replied, “We say as God did: He is His word and His spirit which He cast into the Virgin whom no man had touched and no child had been inside.”

“The Negus then picked up a stick from the ground and said, “O people of Abyssinia, and you, priests and monks; by God, they are not so much as the size of this stick away from what we say! Welcome to you and greetings to him from whom you come! I bear witness that he is the Messenger of God, and that it is him we find in the Bible. He is the Messenger of whom Jesus, son of Mary, made prophecy. You may reside wherever you wish; and, by God, were it not for my role as king, I would go to him so that I could be the one who carries his shoes for him!”
"He then commanded that the present the two messengers had brought be returned to them.

"Abd Allah b. Mas'ud hurried forth thereafter, and lived to take part in the battle of Badr.

"He claimed that the Prophet (SAAS) prayed for forgiveness for him (the king) when news of his death reached him."

The chain of authorities for this is excellent, and the narrative is good. It gives evidence that Abū Mūsā was among those who migrated from Mecca to Abyssinia, even though this ḥadith is not recorded by some authorities. But God knows best.

This event is related on the authority of Abū Ishāq al-Sabīṭī from another chain.

"Also, Abī ʿĀhmād related to us, from ʿAbd Allah b. Muḥammad b. Shṭrawayh, from Iṣḥāq b. Ibrāhīm, he being Iḥbād b. Rāhawayh, from ʿUbayd Allah b. Mūsā, from Isrāʿīl, from Abū Ishāq, from Abū Burda, from Abū Mūsā, who said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered us to depart with Jaʿfār b. Abū Ṭalīb, to the land of the Negus.'

"Quraysh heard of this and so they sent ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ and Umāra b. al-Walīd, having obtained a gift for the Negus.

"They went in to the Negus with the present, which he accepted, and they made obeisance before him.

"Then ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ said, 'Certain people from our land have abandoned our religion. They are here in your country.'

"'In my country?' the Negus asked.

"'Yes,' they replied.

"So he sent for us and Jaʿfār told us, 'Let none of you speak. I will be your spokesman today.'

"And so we went to the Negus when he was seated on his throne, with ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ on his right, Umāra on his left, and the priests seated in two ranks. ʿAmr and Umāra had told the king, 'They will not make obeisance to you.'

"When we arrived, some of his priests and monks there with him hurried to us and told us to bow down before the king. But Jaʿfār replied, 'We bow down only before God, the Almighty and Glorious.'

"When we reached the Negus, he asked, 'What prevents you from bowing down?'

"Jaʿfār replied, 'We bow down only before God.'

"The Negus then asked him, 'Well, what is this all about?'
"Ja'far explained, 'God sent a messenger among us; he is that same Messenger Jesus, son of Mary, God's prayers and peace be upon Him, said would come after himself, his name being “Ahmad”. He ordered us to worship God and to associate no god with Him, to perform the prayers, to pay alms, to be good, and to abstain from what is forbidden.'

"His speech astonished the Negus.

"When 'Amr b. al-'Aṣ saw this, he exclaimed, 'May God save the king! They disagree with you concerning Jesus, son of Mary.'

"The Negus then asked Ja'far, 'What does your master say about the son of Mary?'

"Ja'far replied, 'He says of Him what God stated – that he is God's spirit and His word, and that He brought him forth from the Virgin whom no man had approached and in whom there had been no child.'

"The Negus then picked up a stick from the ground and raised it up, saying, 'Ye priests and monks, these people do not add so much as the weight of this to what we say about the son of Mary.'

"'Welcome to you,' he continued, 'and greetings to him from whom you have come. I bear witness that he is the Messenger of God and that it is he of whom Jesus made prophecy. Were it not for the duties of my kingdom, I would go to him to kiss his shoes. Stay in my land as long as you wish.'

"He then ordered that food and fine garments be brought for us. And he said, 'Give back to those other two their gift.'

"'Amr b. al-'Aṣ was short, while 'Umāra was a handsome man. While at sea, they had been drinking. 'Amr had his wife with him and, after they had been imbibing, 'Umāra said to 'Amr, 'Tell your wife to kiss me!' 'Amr replied, 'You should be ashamed!' Then 'Umāra picked up 'Amr and flung him into the sea. 'Amr kept calling out to 'Umāra until he brought him back on to the boat.

"'Amr hated him for this, and told the Negus, 'If you were to leave, 'Umāra would take your place with your wife.' At that the Negus summoned 'Umāra and had air blown into his urethra so that he flew away with the wild birds.'

The hāfiz al-Bayhaqi related it thus in Dalā'īl (The Signs), through Abū 'Ali al-Hasan b. Sallām al-Sawwāq, from 'Ubayd Allāh b. Mūsā. He relates it similarly, with the same chain of authorities, up to the words, "He then ordered that food and fine garments be brought to us."

He then stated, "This chain of authorities is good; what it apparently shows is that Abū Mūsā was at Mecca, and that he did go with Ja'far, son of Abū Ṭalib, to Abyssinia.

What is true according to Yazid b. 'Abd Allāh b. Abū Burda, on the authority of his grandfather Abū Burda, from Abū Mūsā, is that the departure of the Messenger of God (SAAS) became known to them while they were in Yemen. They therefore went out into exile along with some 50 persons in a boat that took them to the Negus in Abyssinia. They found that Ja'far b. Abū Ṭalib and his companions were already living there. Ja'far told them to stay, and they did stay.
with him until they joined the Messenger of God (SAAS), at the time of Khaybar.

He stated, "Abu Musa witnessed what took place between Ja'far and the Negus and reported this."

He also said, "And perhaps the narrator was using his imagination in saying, "The Messenger of God (SAAS), ordered us to depart." But God knows best.

This is how al-Bukhari related this in his chapter on the migration to Abyssinia: "Muhammad b. al-'Ali related to us, quoting Abu Usama, quoting Burayd b. 'Abd Allah from Abu Burda, from Abu Musa, who said, 'The departure of the Messenger of God (SAAS) became known to us while we were in Yemen. So we embarked on a boat which took us to the Negus, in Abyssinia. There we found Ja'far b. Abu Talib, God bless him, and we stayed there with him until we left and joined the Prophet (SAAS), when Khaybar was conquered. And so the Prophet said, "For you people of the boat there are two migrations."'" Muslim related this in this way from Abu Kurayb and Abu Amir 'Ahd Allah h. Barrad, both of whom used Abu Usama as a source. They both related this at length in other places. But God knows best.

This narrative concerning Ja'far and the Negus was also related by the hafiz Ibn 'Asakir in his biography of Ja'far b. Abu Talib. His account is on his own authority and that of 'Amr b. al-As, both of whom related the hadith. It is also recounted by Ibn Mas'ud, as given above, and by Umm Salama, as will be shown later.

This following account given by Ja'far is extremely valuable. Ibn 'Asakir related it from Abu al-Qasim al-Samarqandi, from Abu al-Husayn b. al-Naqir, from Abu Tahir al-Mukhallis, from Abu al-Qasim b. al-Baghawi, who said, "Abu 'Abd al-Rahman al-Ju'i related to us, from 'Abd Allah b. Umar b. Aban, quoting Asad b. 'Amr al-Bajali, from Mujahid b. Sa'id, from al-Sa'ib, from 'Abd Allah b. Ja'far, from his father, who said, 'Quraysh sent 'Amr b. al-As and 'Umara b. al-Walid with a gift from Abu Sufyan to the Negus. They told him -- and we were there with him -- 'Some low-class and silly people of ours have come to you. So hand them over to us.'"

"He replied, 'No, not until I hear what they have to say.'"

Ja'far went on, "So he sent to us and asked, 'What's all this they say?'"

"We replied, 'These are people who worship idols. God sent a messenger to us in whom we believed and trusted.'"

"The Negus then asked them, 'Are these people slaves of yours?'"

"'No,' they replied.

"'Do they have debts owing to you?' he then asked.

"'No,' they answered.

"'Then leave them alone,' he said.

"At this we left his presence, but 'Amr b. al-As told him, 'These people speak different things of Jesus from what you do.'"
He replied, 'If they do not say about Jesus as I do, I will not allow them to stay in my land a single hour of the day!'

And so he sent for us, this second invitation being harder upon us than the first.

The Negus asked, ‘What does your master say about Jesus, son of Mary?’

We replied, ‘He says that He is the spirit of God and His word that He cast to a chaste virgin.’

He then dispatched a messenger, saying, ‘Summon to me such-and-such a priest, such-and-such a monk.’

Some men of theirs came and he asked, ‘What do you say concerning Jesus, son of Mary?’

They replied, ‘You are the most knowledgeable of us; what do you say?’

The Negus replied, having picked something up from the ground, ‘Jesus is no more different from what these people say than this much.’

He then asked, ‘Is anyone harming you people?’

They replied, ‘Yes.’

So then a crier announced, ‘Whoever harms any one of them is to be fined four dirhams.’

Then he asked, ‘Is this enough for you?’

We replied, ‘No.’ So the king doubled the fine.

Ja'far went on: “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) emigrated to Medina and proclaimed himself there, we told him (the Negus) ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) has proclaimed himself and gone to Medina; he has killed those we told you about. We wish to travel to him, so send us back.’

‘Yes, I will,’ he replied. He gave us mounts and provisioned us, then said, ‘Inform your master how I have treated you. This man, my friend, will go with you. I bear witness that there is no god but God and that he is the Messenger of God. Ask him to pray for forgiveness for me.’

Ja'far went on: “So we left and went to Medina where the Messenger of God (SAAS) met us. He embraced me, then said, ‘I don’t know what pleases me more – the victory at Khaybar, or the arrival of Ja'far!’”

This coincided with the victory at Khaybar. He then sat down.

The envoy of the Negus then said, “This man, Ja'far, ask him how our master treated him.”

So he, Ja'far, said, “Yes, he acted in such-and-such a way, then gave us mounts and provisions and bore witness that there is no god but God and that you are the Messenger of God. He also told me, ‘Ask him to pray for forgiveness for me.’”

The Messenger of God (SAAS) then arose, performed the prayer ablutions and prayed three times: “O God, forgive the Negus!” And the Muslims present said, “Amen”.

Then Ja'far said, “I then told the envoy of the Negus, ‘Leave now, and tell your master what you saw of the Messenger of God (SAAS).’” Ibn 'Asākir commented after this hadith: “It is hasan gharib (good but unique).”

Regarding the narrative given by Umm Salama, Yūnus b. Bakayr stated, on the authority of Muḥammad b. Ishaq, who said, “Al-Zuhri related to me, from Abū Bakr b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Ḥārith b. Hishām, that Umm Salama, God bless her, said, ‘When events turned threatening and even violent in Mecca for the supporters of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and actual harm was done to them because of their faith, while the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was unable to defend them, being himself under the protection of his family and his uncle, so that he experienced none of their sufferings, he told them, “In Abyssinia there is a king who allows no one to be persecuted in his domain. So go to his country until such time as God provides for you some relief and solution to your troubles.”’

“And so we did set out in groups and rejoined one another there. We found hospitality, friendship and security to engage in our religion in Abyssinia, and had no fear of harm.

“When Quraysh saw that we had gained accommodation and security there, they were angered and agreed to make representations to the Negus to remove us from his country and send us back to them.

“They therefore dispatched ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ and ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Rabīʿa. They gathered gifts for the king and for all his generals, without exception. They told their two envoys, “Give a present to each general before you speak among them, and then give the king his gifts. And if you are able to have him hand over the exiles to you without him speaking to them, then do so.”

“The envoys did go to the king, not having omitted giving the presents to each of his generals. They then addressed them, saying, “We have only come to see the king about some fools of ours who have abandoned their people and their religion, and who have not joined your faith. Their people have sent us to have the king return them to them. When we speak with him, then indicate that he should do so.” They agreed to this.

“The envoys then gave their gifts to the Negus. The most favoured of their gifts from Mecca to him were leather products.’”

Mūsā b. ʿUqba related that they presented to him a mare, a gown and a silk garment.

Umm Salama continued, “When they took their gifts in to him, they told him, ‘O king, some of our foolish young have abandoned their people’s religion and have not entered your faith. They have come here with a fabricated religion we do not know and have taken refuge in your land. Their tribes, their own fathers and uncles, have sent us to you so that you will return these people to them. They know them best. They will not adopt your faith, and you should prevent them from doing so.’

“The king was angered at this and replied, ‘No! By God’s life, I will not return them to them before summoning these people and talking to them to discover their views. They are a group who have taken refuge in my land and have chosen my company above that of all others. If they are indeed as your people say, I will return them to them. But if they are otherwise, I will protect them, give their people no access to them and no satisfaction.”

Musa b. Uqba related that his generals indicated to him that he should return them to their people, but the king refused, saying, “No! By God, I will not, not until I hear what they have to say and what their position is.”

Umm Salama went on, “When the exiles came before him, they greeted him by saying, ‘Peace be upon you’, but they did not bow down before him. He addressed them, ‘Will you not tell me why you do not greet me in the same manner as others of your people who have come to me? And tell me what it is you say about Jesus and what your religion is. Are you Christians?’

“No,’ they replied.

‘Are you Jews then?’

‘No.’

‘Do you worship in your people’s religion?’

‘No.’

‘What is your religion?’

‘It is Islam.’

‘What is Islam?’

‘We worship God,’ they replied, ‘and we associate no other god with Him.’

‘Who was it brought you this faith?’

‘A man from among ourselves, whose face and genealogy we know. God sent him to us as He sent messengers to those who came before us. He ordered us to behave with kindness, honesty, trustworthiness and good faith. He forbade us to worship idols and ordered us to worship God alone who has no associate. We believed him and recognised God’s words. We realized that what he presented came from God. But when we did all this our people behaved with enmity towards us and towards the truthful Prophet; they disbelieved in him and wanted to kill him. They wanted us to worship idols, and so we fled to you, bringing our faith and our blood to you away from our own people.’

‘By God,’ he exclaimed, ‘this is the very niche from which Moses’ affair emerged!’

‘And regarding our greeting,’ Ja’far explained, ‘the Messenger of God (SAAS) told us that the people of paradise greet one another with a wish for peace and he ordered us to do the same. We greeted you the same way we greet one another.

‘And regarding Jesus, son of Mary, he was the servant and messenger of God, His word that He cast to Mary and also His spirit. He was the son of the chaste Virgin.’

The king then picked up a stick and said, ‘By God, Mary’s son did not add to this the weight of this stick more!’
“The Abyssinian leaders then said, ‘By God, if the Abyssinians heard this they would depose you!’

‘By God,’ he responded, ‘I will never say anything about Jesus different from this; God did not acquiesce to the people about me when He restored my kingdom to me. Shall I then obey the people concerning God’s religion? God forbid such a thing!’”

Yûnus stated, from Ibn Ishaq, “And so the Negus sent for them and assembled them, nothing being more distasteful to ʿAmr b. ʿAṣ and ʿAbd Allah b. Abu Rabîʿa than that he should hear their words.

“When the Negus’s messenger came to them, the exiles assembled and asked one another what to say.

“What can we say?” they asked, and decided, ‘By God, we will tell what we know and all about the religion we follow, what it was our Prophet (ṣaas) brought to us, come what may!’

“When they went in to him their spokesman was Ja’far b. Abu ʿAlîb, God be pleased with him. The Negus asked him, ‘What is this religion you follow? Have you left the faith of your people without entering either Judaism or Christianity?’

“Jaʿfar replied, ‘O king, we were a people of polytheism. We worshipped idols, ate the meat of animals that had died, offended rules of hospitality and permitted things forbidden, as in the shedding of one another’s blood and so on. We completely ignored matters of right and wrong. And so God sent to us a prophet, from among ourselves, whose honesty and trustworthiness we knew well. He summoned us to pray to God alone and without associate, told us to respect rights of kinship, to honour rights of hospitality, to pray to God the Almighty and Glorious, to fast for Him and to worship none other than Him.’”

Ziyâd stated, from Ibn Ishaq, “And so he called us to God, to affirm His oneness, to worship Him, and to tear down all the other stones and idols we and our forefathers had worshipped apart from Him. He ordered us to be truthful in our speech, to keep to our trust, to respect kinship ties and hospitality rights and to abandon things forbidden and the shedding of blood. He forbade us to do anything immoral, to tell lies, to misuse the funds of orphans, or to make false accusations against women of virtue. He ordered us to worship God and to associate no other god with Him. He told us to pray, to give alms and to fast.” He stated, “And he enumerated for him all aspects of Islam.

“And so we believed in him and trusted him, following him in the instructions he brought from God. We worshipped God alone, without partner and associating no one with Him. We forbade what he had forbidden and considered permissible what he allowed us.

“But our people aggressed against us and harmed us, seeking to draw us out of our faith, to return us to the worship of idols instead of God, and to have us again consider permissible the abominations we had previously allowed.
“When they treated us with violence and persecution, besieged us and prevented us from performing our religion, we left for your country and chose you above all others. We desired your hospitality and hoped we would not be harmed in your domain, O king.”

She (Umm Salama) went on to state, “The Negus replied, ‘Did you bring anything with you from what he brought?’

“Ja’far then recited to him a passage from KHYṢ (ṣūrat Maryam: XIX) and, I swear, the Negus wept so hard his beard was soaked! And all his bishops cried so hard they wet their bibles!

“He then said, ‘These words certainly come from the niche that Moses brought with him! Pass on, rightly guided! No, by God, I will not return them to you and I will not give you satisfaction.’

“So we did leave his presence. The more sensible of the two envoys, in our view, was ‘Abd Allah b. Rabi’a, for ‘Amr b. al-‘Ās said, ‘By God, I will go to him tomorrow and tell him something that will turn them all upside down: I will tell him that they claim that the god he worships, Jesus, son of Mary, is a servant (of God)!’ But ‘Abd Allah b. Rabi’a told him, ‘No, don’t do that; even if they have opposed us, they are related to us and have a certain right.’

“But he insisted, ‘By God, I will do it!’

“The next day he went in to the king and said, ‘O king, they say terrible things about Jesus. Send for them and question them about him.’

“He did indeed do so, and nothing like this had happened to us before. We asked one another what we should say about Jesus if he were to ask about him. All agreed that we should definitely say about him what God had said and our Prophet had told us to say.

“The exiles then went in to the king who had his generals with him. He asked, ‘What is it you say about Jesus, son of Mary?’

“Ja’far replied, ‘We say he is God’s servant, His messenger, His spirit and His word that He cast into Mary, the chaste Virgin.’

“The Negus stretched his hand down to the ground and picked up a stick between two fingers, saying, ‘Jesus, son of Mary is not more than the size of this little stick different from what you say.’

“His generals grumbled at this and he responded, ‘Grumble away, by God! You people may leave now and you are shuyūm in my land! (The word shuyūm means in their language: those who are secure, i.e. those whose life is safe.) Whoever reviles you will be fined! (He repeated this phrase three times.) I’d rather not have dabr than that I harmed one man among you! (Dabr in their language means: gold.)’”

Ziyād stated, on the authority of Ibn Ishaq, that what he said was, “I’d rather not have a dabr of gold.” Ibn Hishām stated that others say the word zabr was used, meaning a mountain in their language.
The Negus then said, “I swear, God took no bribe from me when He returned my kingdom to me. And He did not acquiesce to the people about me; so am I to acquiesce to them about him? Return their presents to the two envoys. I don’t need them. And, you two, get out of my country!”

The two men did depart in disgrace, with what they had brought having been returned to them.

Umm Salama continued, “And so we stayed on there in comfort and security. “But soon a certain Abyssinian rose in revolt and challenged the rule of the Negus. And, I swear, nothing had ever caused us so much grief as this, since we feared that that rebel would defeat him and then there would be a king who might not recognise our rights as the Negus had done.

“And so we began saying prayers to God, supplicating Him to give victory to the Negus who went out to do battle.

“The Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked one another which one of them should go and witness the engagement to see which side would be victorious.

“Al-Zubayr, one of the youngest of them, volunteered.

“They then blew air into a skin which they attached to his chest and he set off on it, swimming across the Nile. He came out on the other bank, went to the site where the two sides were meeting and witnessed the battle.

“God defeated and killed that rebel leader, giving the Negus victory over him.

“Al-Zubayr then returned to us, waving his shirt and yelling, ‘Rejoice! God has given victory to the Negus!’ ”

Umm Salama concluded, “I swear by God we were never happier than at the Negus’s victory. Thereafter we remained there with him, until some of us returned to Mecca while others stayed there.”

Al-Zuhri stated, “I related this hadith on the authority of Umm Salama to Urwa b. al-Zubayr and he asked, ‘Do you know what was meant by the Negus’s words? “I swear, God took no bribe from me when he returned my kingdom to me; so am I to accept a bribe about Him? And He did not acquiesce to the people about me; so am I to obey them about him?”’

“I replied, ‘No; Abū Bakr b. Abd al-Raḥmān b. al-Ḥārith b. Hishām, relating on the authority of Umm Salama, did not tell me that.’

“Urwa explained, ‘Well, Aḥishā related to me that his father had been the king of his people and had a brother who had fathered twelve sons. Whereas his own father had only one son, the Negus himself. The Abyssinians discussed this among themselves and decided to kill the father of the Negus and to appoint his uncle over them in his place. For since the uncle had twelve sons of his own who would inherit the kingship, then Abyssinia would remain for a long time free from unrest. They therefore attacked and killed the father of the Negus and made his brother king.
"The Negus then went to live with his uncle; eventually he had such influence over him that no one but he could direct his affairs. He was intelligent and judicious. When the Abyssinians saw his status with his uncle, they told one another, "We have seen how this young man ranks with his uncle, and we could never be safe if he ruled over us, because he knows we killed his father. If he became king, he would not fail to kill every nobleman among us. Let us therefore speak to the king about him so that he will kill or exile him from our land."

"So they went to his uncle and told him, "We have seen how this young man ranks high with you, but you know that we killed his father and put you in his place. We could never be safe if he ruled over us, for he would kill us. You should either kill him or exile him from our land."

"What?" he responded, "You killed his father yesterday and today I am to kill him! No, but I will exile him."

"So they took him out and stood him in the market where they sold him to a certain merchant for 600 or 700 dirhams who put him aboard a ship and sailed away with him.

"When evening came, autumn storm clouds arose and his uncle went outside beneath them to pray for rain; he was struck by a thunderbolt which killed him.

"They then went in fright to his sons but they turned out all to be idiots, with not a good one among them. The Abyssinians were most disturbed at this and some said to others, "You realize, by God, that the only king fit to solve your problems is the man you sold this morning. If you are concerned about Abyssinia, then go and get him before he leaves."

"So they did set off to find him, located him and sat him on the throne and declared him king.

"The merchant then said, "Return to me my money since you have taken my slave from me."

"The Abyssinian replied that they would not and he said he would talk directly to the king.

"He went to him and said, "O king, I bought a slave and those who sold it received the price for him. But then they acted unjustly with me regarding the slave by seizing him and not returning my money."

"The first thing told about the stability and justice of his rule was that he replied, "Let his money be returned to him or let the hand of his slave be placed in his own so that he may take him wherever he wishes."

"His people replied, "No, we will give him his money." And so they did.

"That is why he said, "God did not take a bribe from me, so am I to take a bribe when He returns my kingdom to me? And He did not acquiesce to the people about me; so am I to obey the people about him?""

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, "The father of the Negus had been the king of Abyssinia but died when the Negus was a small boy. The king had entrusted him to his own brother, saying, ‘You rule your people until my son comes of age; thereafter, he shall be king.’

“But the king’s brother wanted to rule and so he sold the Negus to a merchant. However, the uncle died that night and the Abyssinians restored the Negus, placing the crown on his head.”

He then related it in brief. But Ibn Ḩishāq’s account is better and fuller. But God knows best.

Umāra was one of the seven persons against whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke prayers when they ridiculed him on the occasion when they put the placenta of the sacrificial animal on his back when he was bent over in prayer at the ka‘ba.

Similarly they were named in the previous accounts given by Ibn Masciid and Abī Miṣa al-Ash’ari.

What is implied is that when they left Mecca, ‘Amr’s wife was with him and also that Umāra was a handsome young man. They were together in the boat and Umāra was attracted to the wife of ‘Amr b. al-‘Āṣ. So he threw ‘Amr into the sea to kill him, but he swam back to the boat. Umāra then told him, “If I’d known you could swim so well, I wouldn’t have thrown you in!” ‘Amr consequently hated him.

Having failed to achieve their objective with the Negus regarding the Emigrants, Umāra ingratiated himself with some of the Negus’s people. But ‘Amr warned the Negus of this and the latter had Umāra bewitched so that he lost his mind and wandered off into the desert with the wild beasts.

Al-Umawi related his story at very great length, to the effect that he lived on into the time of the reign of ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, when some of the Companions hunted him down and seized him. He then began saying, “Dispatch me! Dispatch me! Or I will die!” Since they did not dispatch him, he died right then and there. But God knows best.

It has been said that Quraysh sent twice to the Negus regarding the Emigrants. The first occasion involved ‘Amr b. al-‘Āṣ and Umāra, the second ‘Amr and ‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Rabī‘a. Abū Nu‘aym gives such a text in Dalā’il (The Signs). But God knows best.

It is said that the second mission occurred after the battle of Badr. Al-Zuhri stated this. Its purpose was to gain vengeance through the Emigrants there. But the Negus, God bless him, did not grant them any part of their request. But God knows best.

Ziyād related, from Ibn Ishāq, that when Abū Ṭalib saw Quraysh engaged in this he wrote to the Negus some verses urging him to act with justice and kindness towards those of his people who were living with him:
"Would that I knew how it is so far off for Ja'far and 'Amr, and it is relatives who can be the most bitter enemies.

And whether the actions of the Negus towards Ja'far and his companions are still kind, or whether some mischief-maker has hindered that.

You should know, may you avoid disaster, that you are noble, and that no alien would have complaint to you.

We know that God has given you much abundance, and that the means of all goodness is attached to you."

Yūnus stated, from Ibn Ishaq, "Yazid b. Rūmān related to me that Urwa b. al-Zubayr said, 'It was really 'Uthmān b. 'Affān, God bless him, who spoke with the Negus and it is well-known that it was Ja'far, God bless him, who was the translator.'"

Ziyād al-Bakkār stated, from Ibn Ishaq, "Yazid b. Rūmān related to me from Urwa, that 'A'isha, God bless her, said, 'After the Negus died, it was said that a light could still be seen at his grave.'"

Abū Dāūd related this from Muḥammad b. 'Amr al-Rāzi, from Salama b. al-Fadl, from Muḥammad b. Ishaq, as follows, "When the Negus, God bless him, died, we used to say that a light could still be seen at his grave."

Ziyād related, from Muḥammad b. Ishaq, "Ja'far b. Muḥammad related to me that his father said, 'The Abyssinians gathered together and told the Negus, 'You have abandoned our faith.' Then they revolted against him.'

'He sent to Ja'far and his companions and prepared boats for them, telling them, 'Embark on these, and remain as you are. If I am defeated then leave for wherever you want. If I am victorious, then stay.'

'He then made his way to a document and wrote down the words, 'He testifies that there is no god but God and that Jesus is His slave, His messenger, His spirit and His word that he cast unto Mary.' He then placed the document inside his gown at his right shoulder.

'He then went outside to the Abyssinians who were lined up before him and said, 'O Abyssinians, am I not your rightful leader?' 'Yes,' they replied.

'And how,' he asked, 'do you rate my conduct towards you?'

'As fine conduct,'

'So why are you discontented?'

'You have abandoned our faith and claimed that Jesus is His slave and His messenger.'

'And what is it you say of Jesus?' he asked them.

'We say that he is the son of God.'

'Placing his hand across his chest over his gown, he then gave his testimony that, 'Jesus, son of Mary, was no more than this.' But he meant what he had written.

'His people were satisfied and left.
“This reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), and when the Negus died he prayed for him and sought God's forgiveness for him.”

It is established in both sahih collections, on the authority of Abū Hurayra, God be pleased with him, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) lamented the death of the Negus on the day he died and went with others to the place of prayer. There he lined up with them and four times recited the litany, Allāhu Akbar, God is most great. Al-Bukhārī stated: “The Death of the Negus. Abī al-Rabi‘ related to us, as did Ibn ‘Uyayna, from Ibn Jurayj, from ‘Āṭa‘, from Jābir, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated on the day when the Negus died, “Today a good man died; arise and pray for your brother Ašhama.”’”

This is also related from a hadith of Anas b. Mālik, Ibn Mas‘ūd, and others.

In some accounts he is named Ašhama, though in one it is Mašhama. His name was Ašhama b. Bahr. He was an honest, devout and intelligent man, just and honourable. May God be pleased with him.

Yūnus stated, from Ibn Ishaq, “The name of the Negus was Mašhama.” In one manuscript al-Bayhaqi has corrected this to Ašhama. ‘The name means in Arabic ‘atyya; gift. The word ‘Negus’ is the title for a king, equivalent to using the word ‘Chosroe’ or ‘Heracleius’.”

This, I observe, is how this text reads; no doubt he meant “Emperor”, the title used for all kings who rule Syria along with the Roman peninsula. “Chosroe” is the title of those ruling Persia, “Pharoah” that for those ruling all Egypt, “al-Muqawqis” for he who rules Alexandria, “Tubba” for those ruling Yemen and al-Shahr, the “Negus” for those ruling Abyssinia, “Batlimus” for those ruling Greece, and, it is said, India, and “Khāqān” for those ruling the Turks.

Some scholars said that he only prayed for him because he kept his faith hidden from his people and there was no one there with him to pray for him the day he died. These scholars thus maintain that for someone not present, if the funeral prayers were said for him in the place where he died, then such rites are not ordained for him in another country. This is why funeral prayers were said for the Prophet (SAAS) only in Medina and not by the people of Mecca or elsewhere. The same was true of Abū Bakr, Umar, Uthmān and others of the Companions; it is not reported that funeral prayers were said for them in towns other than the ones in which they died. But God knows best.

I add the comment that the fact that Abū Hurayra, may God be pleased with him, witnessed the prayers for the Negus points to his having died after the conquest of Khaybar, the year when the remainder of the Emigrants to Abyssinia arrived along with Ja‘far b. Abū Ṭalib, God bless him, namely on the day of the conquest of Khaybar.

It is therefore related that the Prophet (SAAS) said, “By God, I don’t know which makes me happier – the conquest of Khaybar or the arrival of Ja‘far b. Abū Ṭalib!”
They brought with them presents and treasures from the Negus, God be pleased with him; and accompanying them as passengers on their Yemeni boat were the followers of Abū Mūsā al-As‘ārī and his people the As‘āris, may God be pleased with them.

And with Ja‘far and the presents of the Negus were the nephew of the Negus, Dhū Nakhtar, or Dhū Mikhmar, whom he had sent to serve the Prophet (SAAS) instead of his uncle.

Al-Suhayli stated that the Negus died in Rajab in the year 9 of the hijra, though there is dispute about that. But God knows best.

He (al-Bayhaqī) then stated, “And Abū Muḥammad ʿAbd Allāh b. Yūsuf al-Asbahānī informed me, quoting Abū ʿAbd Allāh b. al-ʿArabī that Hīlāl b. al-ʿAṣār related, quoting my father, quoting Ṭalḥa b. Yazīd, from al-Awzāʿī, from Yaḥyā b. Abū Kathir, from Abū Salama, from Abū Qatāda, who said, ‘The delegation from the Negus went in to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and he arose to serve them. His Companions said, ‘We’ll do that for you, O Messenger of God.’ He replied, ‘They honoured my Companions and I wish to repay them.’’”

Ṭalḥa b. Yazīd narrated this, from al-Awzāʿī.

Al-Bayhaqī stated, “Abū al-Ḥusayn b. Bishrān related to us, quoting Abū ʿAmr b. al-Sammāk, quoting Ḥanbal b. ʿIsḥāq, quoting al-Ḥumaydī, quoting Sufyān, quoting ʿAmr, as follows, ‘When ʿAmr b. al-ṣāḥib arrived from Abyssinia he sat at home. Since he would not go out to them, people wondered why this was. ʿAmr then said, ‘Aṣḥama claims your man to be a prophet.’’”

‘UMAR B. AL-KHAṬṬĀB ACCEPTS ISLAM.

Ibn ʿIsḥāq stated, “When ʿAmr b. al-ṣāḥib and ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Rabīʿa arrived back to Quraysh, having failed to achieve their aims with the supporters of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and having been rudely rejected by the Negus, ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb accepted Islam. He was a forceful man, capable of defending his supporters, and the Companions of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had protection through him and through Ḥamzā, so that they could stand up to Quraysh.

“ʿAbd Allāh b. Masʿūd used to say, ‘We were unable to pray at the kaʿba until ʿUmar accepted Islam; having done so, ʿUmar battled Quraysh until he was able to pray at the kaʿba, and we prayed with him.’”
I comment that it is well established in the sahih collection of al-Bukhārī, that Ibn Mas‘ūd said, “We have been powerful ever since ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb accepted Islam.”

Ziyād al-Bakkaʾi stated, “Misʿar b. Kidām related to me, from Saʿd b. Ibrāhim, who said, ‘Ibn Masʿūd stated, “The acceptance of Islam by ʿUmar was a victory, his migration was a help, and his reign was a mercy. We could not pray at the kaʿba until he accepted Islam; when he did so ʿUmar battled Quraysh until he was able to pray at the kaʿba, and we prayed with him.”’

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The acceptance of Islam by ʿUmar occurred after the departure of some of the supporters of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to Abyssinia.

ʿAḥd al-Rahmān b. al-Hārith b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṭayyār related to me, from ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. ʿAbd Bāḥr, from his mother Umm ʿAbd Allāh, daughter of Abū Ḥathma, who said, “We were preparing to depart for Abyssinia – ʿĀmir having gone off to get something we needed – when ʿUmar came along and stopped, he being a polytheist at the time. We had suffered violence and harm from him.

“ʿHe said, “So you’re leaving then, Umm ʿAbd Allāh?”

“‘Yes,” I replied. “We’re leaving for one of God’s countries, since you have so maltreated and harmed us, so that God may provide us some way out.”

“‘He commented, “Well, God be with you!”

“‘I saw in him a gentleness I never had before. He then left, our departure, so it seemed to me, having saddened him.

“ʿĀmir then arrived with our things and I commented, “O father of ʿAbd Allāh, I wish you could have seen ʿUmar just now, his gentleness and concern for us.”

“‘He asked, “Do you look to his accepting Islam?”

“‘Yes, I do,” I replied.

“‘He commented, “That man you saw won’t accept Islam before al-Khaṭṭāb’s donkey does!”

“‘He said this in despair at him, for all his harsh opposition to Islam that had been seen.”

I comment that this refutes the claim of those who maintain that he brought the number of Muslims to 40. For the Emigrants to Abyssinia were more than 80 persons. Unless, that is, it be said that he was the 40th to convert after the departure of the Emigrants.

This is supported by Ibn Ishāq’s report here concerning the acceptance of Islam by ʿUmar, God bless him, individually, and the account of that.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The acceptance of Islam by ʿUmar, so I have been told, came about as a result of the conversion of his sister Ṣāfīya, daughter of al-Khaṭṭāb, who was married to Saʿīd b. Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Nufayl. Her husband had also converted, and they were concealing their conversion from ʿUmar.
"Nu'aym b. 'Abd Allah al-Nahham, a member of the Banu 'Adi tribe, had also converted but concealed this fact from his people.

Khabbab b. al-Aratt was attending the home of Fatima, daughter of al-Khaṭṭāb, to read the Qur'an to her. One day 'Umar went out, his sword at his waist, looking for the Messenger of God (SAAS) who, along with a group of his followers, he had been told, were in a house at al-Safā. The group with him, including men and women, totalled some 40 persons. Among these, along with the Messenger of God (SAAS), were his uncle Ḥamza, Abū Bakr b. Abn Quhafa, al-Siṣiq, "the Trusting", and 'Ali b. Abū Ṭalib, God be pleased with them, along with other Muslim men who had stayed behind in Mecca and not departed for Abyssinia.

"Nu'aym b. 'Abd Allah met him and enquired, 'Where are you heading, 'Umar?'

He replied, 'I'm looking for Muhammad, that Šabian who has disunited Quraysh, ridiculed their dreams, criticized their religion and slandered their gods. I'm going to kill him!'

"Nu'aym told him, 'By God, you've lost your mind, 'Umar! Do you think that Abū Manāf would allow you to walk on the face of the earth once you killed Muhammad? Why don't you go home and sort out your household!'

"What about my household?'

"Your brother-in-law and nephew Saḥd b. Zayd and your sister Fatima. They have accepted Islam and become followers of Muḥammad (SAAS) in his religion. Look to them!'

'Umar then returned to his sister Fatima where Khabbab b. al-Aratt was; he had with him a manuscript of surat Tāhā that he was reading to her.

When they heard 'Umar's approach, Khabbab hid inside a bedroom, or somewhere else in the house, and Fatima took the manuscript and hid it under her thigh. But 'Umar had heard Khabbab reciting it as he approached the door.

"As he came in, he demanded, 'What was that murmuring sound I heard?'

"I heard nothing,' they both replied.

"Well I did,' he insisted. 'And I've been told you are following Muḥammad in his religion.'

He then struck out at his brother-in-law Saḥd b. Zayd, and when his sister Fatima rose to defend her husband he hit her and wounded her.

"When he did this, his sister and brother-in-law admitted, 'Yes, we have accepted Islam and do believe in God and in His Messenger. Do whatever you want!'

"When 'Umar saw the blood on his sister he was sorry for what he had done and repentant and he told her, 'Give me that document you were just reading so that I can see what it is Muḥammad brings.' 'Umar was literate.

"When he said that, she replied, 'We don't trust you with it.'

"Don't be afraid,' he told her, and swore by his gods to return it to her when he had read it.
"When he said this she had hopes of his accepting Islam and so she said, 'But being a polytheist you are unclean, and only the purified may touch it.'

"So 'Umar arose and washed himself, and she gave him the sheet on which surat Tāhā was written. When he had read a passage of it, he said, 'How fine, how wonderful these words are!'

"When Khabbāb b. al-Aratt heard this he came out and said, 'By God, 'Umar, I do so hope that God has selected you because of the prayer of His Prophet (SAAS), for yesterday I heard him say, 'O God, give help to Islam through Abū al-Hakam b. Hishām, or through 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb!' So come now to God, 'Umar!'

"At that 'Umar said, 'Khabbāb, lead me to Muḥammad so that I can accept Islam.'

"'He is in a house at al-Šafā with a group of his Companions,' Khabbāb replied.

"'Umar picked up his sword and put it on then left for the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his Companions. He knocked on the door and when they heard his voice, one of the Companions got up and looked outside through a chink in the door. He saw 'Umar, wearing his sword, then went back in to the Messenger of God (SAAS) in a fright and exclaiming, 'O Messenger of God, it's 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, armed with his sword!'

"Hamza said, 'Well, let him in. If he has come with good, we'll reciprocate, but if he's come in evil, we'll kill him with his sword.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) also said, 'Let him in!'

"So the Companion did so, and the Messenger of God (SAAS), got up and went across the room to meet him, taking him by his waist or by the place where his cloak joined, and giving him a strong pull, saying, 'What brings you, Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb? By God, I don't see you stopping until God sends down a thunderbolt upon you!'

"'Umar replied, 'O Messenger of God, I come to you to believe in God, in His messenger, and in what has come down from God!'

"At this the Messenger of God (SAAS) let out a great cry of Allāhu Akbar, and the people in the house all knew that 'Umar had accepted Islam.

"The Companions of the Messenger of God left their places elated that now 'Umar had accepted Islam along with Ḥamza, knowing that these two men would protect him and help them obtain justice from their enemies.'

Ibn Ishāq concluded, "This then, is the account given by the hadith scholars of Medina concerning the acceptance of Islam by 'Umar, God bless him."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "'Abd Allāh b. Abū Najīh al-Makki related to me, from his Companions 'Aṭā, Mujāhid and others, that regarding 'Umar's acceptance of Islam, he himself would say, 'I used to be very remote from Islam. Before Islam I used to be a great man for wine; I loved drinking it. We used to have a place at al-Ḥazwara where we would meet.
“One night I went out looking for my drinking partners, but found not one of them there. So I told myself I should go off to a wine dealer named so-and-so to get some for myself to drink.

“But I could not find him. So I told myself I might as well go to the ka‘ba and circumambulate it seven or seventy times.

“So I went to the mosque and there, standing praying, I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS). When he prayed he would face towards al-Shām, placing the ka‘ba between himself and it. The spot he prayed at was between the two corners, al-asmus (the one with the ‘black stone’) and al-yamāni (the one towards Yemen).

“When I saw him, I told myself I might just as well spend the evening listening to Muḥammad. If I came too close to him to listen I might scare him, so I approached from the hijr side, passing beneath its covering and walking slowly while the Messenger of God (SAAS) continued standing there reciting the Qur‘ān. Eventually I stood facing towards him with nothing there between us but the covering over the ka‘ba.

“When I heard the Qur‘ān my heart was touched by it, I wept and Islam entered within me.

“I stayed where I was until the Messenger of God (SAAS) had finished his prayer and departed. When he left he would pass by the home of Ibn Abū Husayn, whose dwelling happened to be at Dār al-Ṛaqṭā‘, which was owned by Muṣṭawiya. I followed him until, as he went between the house of ‘Abbās and that of Ibn Azhar, I caught up with him. When he heard my voice he recognized me and thought I had followed him only to harm him. So he told me to keep away, then said, “What brings you here at this hour, Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb?”

“I replied, “I have come to believe in God and in His messenger, and in what has come down from God.”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) expressed thanks to God at this and then he said, “God has guided you, ‘Umar!” He then touched my chest and prayed for me to be constant.

“After that I left and the Messenger of God (SAAS) went inside his house.”

Ibn Ishaq then commented, “God alone knows best which of these versions really happened.”

I point out that I have investigated the manner in which Umar, God bless him, accepted Islam and related all the statements and evidence thereto at length in the first part of the biography I devoted to him alone. All praise and credit be to God!

Ibn Ishaq said, “Naft, the freed-man of Ibn Umar, related to me that ‘Umar’s son said, ‘When Umar accepted Islam, he asked, “Which man of Quraysh is best at making announcements?”

“‘Jamil b. Ma‘mar al-Jumahī,” he was told.

“Next morning Umar went to the man.” Ibn Umar continued, ‘So I followed him to see what he would do; I was a lad at the time, but understood all I saw.
‘When ‘Umar reached him, he asked, “Jamil, do you know that I have accepted Islam and entered into the faith of Muḥammad (ṢAAS)?”

‘Ibn ‘Umar went on, ‘Well, I swear, he had no sooner told him this than off he went, his gown trailing. ‘Umar followed him and I did so too until he stopped at the mosque gate, where he shouted at the top of his voice, “O Quraysh!” (They were there at that time in their chambers around the ka‘ba.) “Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb has become a Sabian!”

‘‘Umar, standing right behind him, yelled, “He lies! But I have become a Muslim. I do testify that there is no god but God and that Muḥammad is the Messenger of God!”

‘People were most enraged against him and soon he was battling hard against them, they against him. They kept up this fighting until the sun was high over their heads.

‘At last he was exhausted and sat down, while they stood all around him. He told them, “Do what you want! But I swear by God that if we were 300 men strong, either we’d have left the battlefield to you or you would have to us!”

‘While they were so engaged, a Quraysh sheikh finely dressed in a robe from Yemen and an embroidered shirt came up and stood there. He asked, “What’s going on with you?”

‘‘‘Umar has become a Sabian,” they replied.

‘‘So what? If a man chooses to do something, what’s it got to do with you? Do you think his tribe, the Banū ʿAdī, will give him over to you like this? Let the man go!’"

‘Ibn ‘Umar went on, ‘And I swear, they drew back like a garment being stripped from him.’

‘And when my father ‘Umar went off into exile to Medina, I asked him, “Father, who was that man who drove the people away from you at Mecca who was fighting you the day you accepted Islam?”

‘‘That, my son,” he replied, “was al-ʿĀṣ b. Wāʾil al-Sahmāt.”’’

This chain of authorities is extremely strong. It points to the tardiness of ‘Umar’s acceptance of Islam. This is because Ibn ‘Umar fought at Uhud for the first time, when he was 14. That battle, Uhud, occurred in the year 3 AH. He was at the age of discrimination on the day his father accepted Islam, an event that must have occurred some 4 years before the emigration to Medina. And that is some 9 years after the beginning of the mission of the Prophet (ṢAAS). But God knows best.

Al-Bayhaqī said, “Al-Ḥakim related to us, al-ʿAṣamm informed us, quoting Aḥmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbar, and Yūnus related to us, all from Ibn ʿĪshāq, who stated, ‘Then 20 men came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) while he was in Mecca, or nearby; these were Christians, news having spread about him to them from Abyssinia. They found him at the meeting place and spoke with him and asked him questions, while the men of Quraysh were in their chambers there around the ka‘ba.
“‘When they had finished putting the questions they wanted to ask the Messenger of God, he invited them to come to God, the Almighty and Glorious, and he recited the Qur’ān to them. When they heard it, their eyes overflowed with tears. They then responded positively to him, believed in him and accepted and trusted him, recognising what had been described to them about him in their scripture.

“‘When they arose to leave him, Abū Jahl and a group of Quraysh blocked their path and told them, “What a hopeless party you are! You were sent here by your co-religionaries back home to undertake an investigation for them and to return with information about this fellow, yet no sooner did you sit down in comfort with him than you abandoned your faith and believed all he told you. We’ve never known a group more foolish than you.” Or words to that effect.

“‘They replied, “We do not denigrate you; peace be upon you! We act as we see fit, as do you as you see fit. We spare no pains to attain what is good.”’

It is said that the group of Christians were from Najrān; but God alone knows whether that was so.

It is also said, though God alone knows, that the following verses were revealed about them, “And those to whom we gave the book before it do believe in it. When it is recited to them, they say, ‘We do believe in it; it is the truth from our Lord. We were accepting (its message) even before it came.’ Those shall receive their reward twice, for they have been steadfast and repay evil with good and expend from what We have given them. And when they hear idle gossip they turn away from it and say, ‘We act as we see fit, as do you as you see fit. Peace be upon you; we do not desire the ignorant and foolish?’” (sūrat al-Qaṣaṣ, XXVIII, v.52–5).

DIVISION

Al-Bayhaqī in his book Dalā'il (The Signs) entitles a chapter “On the contents of the document sent by the Prophet (SAAS) to the Negus.”

He then relates, from al-Ḥakim, from al-ʿAsāmm, from Ahmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbār, from Yūnus, from Ibn Ishaq, as follows, “In the name of God, the most Merciful and Compassionate: this is a document from Muḥammad, the Messenger of God (SAAS), to the Negus, al-ʿAshām, the great leader of Abyssinia: Peace be upon those who follow guidance, believe in God and His messenger, and testify that there is no god but God alone, Who has no partner, Who took no female partner for Himself, and Who has no child, and they testify that Muḥammad is His servant and His messenger. I call out to you in God’s name, for I am His messenger. So submit (to Him) and be at peace! O People of the Book, come to an agreement that is equal between us both; that we will worship none but God and associate no other god with Him; that we will not take one another as masters to the exclusion of God. But if they do turn aside, then say, 'Bear witness that we are Muslims' (ṣūrat ʿĀl-ʿImrān; III, v.63). But if you refuse, then upon you is the sin of those of your people who are Christians.'

Al-Bayhaqī related it thus after the narrative of the migration to Abyssinia. There are various opinions concerning this account. It is clear that this document was to the Negus who, in addition to being a Muslim, (was also) the friend of Ja'far and his companions.

It relates to the time when he (Muḥammad) wrote to all the rulers on earth inviting them to God, the Almighty and Glorious, shortly before the conquest (of Mecca). He wrote to Heraclius, the head of the Romans and the Caesar of Syria, to Chosroe, the king of the Persians, to the ruler of Egypt as well as to the Negus.

Al-Zuhri stated, 'The letters to them from the Prophet (ṢAAS) were all the same, i.e. copies, and all quoted this same verse which comes from ṣūrat ʿĀl-ʿImrān, a chapter that is incontrovertibly from the Medina period. The verse comes from the early part of the ṣūrat.'

Eighty-three verses of this ṣūrat, from its beginning, relate to the delegation from Najrān, as I asserted in my Tafsīr (Exegesis). And to God belong all praise and credit.

And so this document was to the second Negus, not to the first.

Regarding the words therein, "To the Negus al-Aṣḥām ..." perhaps the word "al-Aṣḥām" is an interpolation by the narrator, based on his understanding. But God knows best.

More relevant here than this is what al-Bayhaqī also narrated, from al-Ḥākim, from Abū al-Ḥasan b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Faqīh, of Merve, who stated, "Ḥammād b. ᾱḥmad related to us, quoting Muḥammad b. ʾIṣḥāq and Ṣalāma b. al-Faḍl, all from Muḥammad b. ʾIṣḥāq, who said, 'The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent ʿAmr b. ᾱmāraya al-Ḍamrī with a letter he wrote to the Negus concerning Jaʿfar b. Abū Ṭālib and his companions: "In the name of God the most Merciful and Compassionate: from Muḥammad, Messenger of God, to the Negus al-Aṣḥām, king of Abyssinia: Peace be upon you. I express to you my praises for God the King, the All-Holy, the Faithful, and the Protector; I testify that Jesus is the spirit of God and His word that He cast unto Mary, the good, chaste, unviolated Virgin. And so she bore Jesus, whom He created from His spirit and His breath, just as He created Adam by His hand and breath. I call upon you to believe the One God Who has no associate. To Him all obedience is due. (I call upon you, tr.) to follow me, to believe in me as well as in that which has come down to me. For I am the Messenger of God. And I have sent to you my nephew Jaʿfar along with a group of Muslims. When they come to you receive them hospitably. Do not be haughty, for I invite you and your forces to God the Almighty and Glorious. I have conveyed my message and given advice. So accept my advice. And peace be upon those who follow the true path."
“The Negus wrote back to the Messenger of God (SAAS) as follows: “In the name of God, the most Merciful and Compassionate: To Muhammad the Messenger of God from the Negus al-Asham b. Abjar: Peace be upon you, O Prophet of God, from God, along with the mercy and blessings of God. There is no god but Him who guided me to Islam. Your letter, O Messenger of God, in which you made reference to Jesus, has reached me. And, by the God of the heavens and the earth, Jesus is no more than what you stated. We recognize what you have been sent with to us. We have received your nephew and his friends with hospitality. And I do testify that you are the Messenger of God, that you speak the truth and are to be believed. I pledge my allegiance to you and to your nephew, accepting Islam at his hands for God, the Lord of the universe. I have sent to you, O Prophet of God, Arība b. al-Asham b. Abjar, for I possess nothing but myself. If you wish for me to come to you, I will do so, O Messenger of God, for I testify that what you say is truth.”’”

An Account of the disagreement of the Quraysh tribes of the Banū Ḥāshim and the Banū Ṭālib ibn Mutṭalib in helping the Messenger of God (SAAS). Also concerning their confinement of them in the quarter of Abū Ṭālib for a lengthy period and their writing an evil, brazen document to that effect. And the signs of the prophethood and proofs of the truth that became evident regarding all this.

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, from al-Zuhri: “The polytheists thereafter became so violent in their actions against the Muslims that the plight of the latter became extreme. And Quraysh so united in their evil intent as to agree to kill the Messenger of God (SAAS) in full view.

“When Abū Ṭālib realized their purposes, he gathered the Banū Ṭālib and told them to include the Messenger of God (SAAS) in their enclave and to protect him against those wishing to murder him.

“The Muslims and non-believers of the tribe did agree to this, some out of a desire to uphold traditions of protection, others out of their faith and conviction.

“When Quraysh realized that these were in agreement to protect the Messenger of God (SAAS), the polytheists among them made a pact not to sit down with, nor to do business with them, nor to enter the homes of these people until they surrendered the Messenger of God (SAAS) to execution. They cunningly drew up agreements and pacts to the effect that they would never accept peace or reconciliation with the Banū Ḥāshim until they delivered him up for death.

“The Banū Ḥāshim therefore remained for three years confined to their enclave, suffering great deprivation. Their markets had been cut off; no food was allowed into Mecca for them, and all their business dealings were interrupted.
"Their purpose in all this was to spill the blood of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

"When it was bed time, Abū Ṭalib would tell the Messenger of God (SAAS) to sleep on the former's bed, and he would do the same, the intent being that anyone wishing to harm or assassinate him would be unaware of this. And while people slept, Abū Ṭalib made sure that one of his sons, brothers or nephews would lie on the bed of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he would tell the latter to take their places instead.

"At the start of the third year certain men of the tribes of 'Abd Manāf and Qūṣayy, along with others whose mothers were from the Banū Ḥāshim, became critical of this and recognized that they were breaking the bonds of kinship and disregarding what was right. They therefore decided one night to revoke what they had previously agreed to, and to free themselves thereof.

"They discovered, however, that God had dispatched woodworm to attack their documents; they devoured everything making reference to their pact.

"It is said that these documents were hung from the ceiling of the temple. Every reference to God's name was devoured; all that remained was material relating to polytheism, injustice and destruction of ties of kindred.

"God, the Almighty and Glorious, made His messenger aware of what He had done to their documents, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) told this to Abū Ṭalib.

"But Abū Ṭalib responded, 'No! May the stars never mislead me!'

"He then hurried off with a band of the Banū 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib and went to the mosque which was full of Quraysh. When the latter saw them heading for them they were surprised, believing them to be doing so because of the extent of their suffering and that they were coming to deliver the Messenger of God (SAAS) to them.

"Abū Ṭalib spoke to them as follows: 'Various things we don't need to tell you of have occurred between you. Bring now your deeds referring to the pacts you have made; perhaps now there can be peace between us all.'

"The reason he said this was because he was afraid they might look at the deeds before bringing them.

"They did now bring them down, proud of them and not doubting that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was to be delivered to them. They placed them down, saying, 'Well, the time has come for you to proceed to a reconciliation with your people. Only one man has caused this rupture between us. You have placed him in a position where he has brought the danger of destruction and corruption to your people.'

"Abū Ṭalib responded, 'I have only come to you now to offer you justice. My nephew has informed me – and he never lied to me – that God will have no part of that document there before you and that He has erased all of His names from it, leaving only references to your treachery, your breaking of the bonds of kinship and your unjust public demonstrations against us.
"If what my nephew has said is so, then you should recognize that and, by God, we will never surrender him to you before the last of us is dead!

"But if what he said is false, then we will deliver him to you for you to kill or to spare his life."

"We'll agree to that", they replied.

"They then opened up the deed and found that he (Muhammad), the truthful and the trustworthy (SAAS) had proved correct. When Quraysh saw it to be as Abū Tālib had said, they said, 'By God, this has to be some magic done by your man!'

"They then reneged and reverted to even worse impiety and violence against the Messenger of God (SAAS) than before, doing their best to destroy him as they had formerly compacted.

"That group of men of the Banū ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib responded by saying, 'It is others, not us, who are more blameworthy in telling lies and using magic. We very well know that the boycott of us you agreed on was closer to sorcery and magic than what we did. If you had not agreed to use magic the deeds before you would not have been spoiled and God's name would not have been erased while reference to your evil was retained. Is it we who rely on magic, or you?'"

"Thereafter some men of ʿAbd Manāf and Quṣayy, along with those of Quraysh born to women of the Banū Hashim, including Abū al-Bakhtūr, al-Muṭṭām b. ʿAdi, Zuhayr b. Abū Umayya b. al-Mughira, Zam'a b. al-Aswad and Ḥishām b. ʿAmr, of the Banū ʿAmir b. Luʿayy (the last-mentioned having had charge of the deed), along with other prominent members of their community, stated that they disavowed the action.

"To this Abū Jahl, God damn him, responded, 'But this matter is not revocable!'"

"Abū Tālib spoke verses regarding their deed and praised the men who had disavowed their former agreement, and he also commended the Negus."

Al-Bayhaqī stated, "Our sheikh, Abū ʿAbd Allah, the hāfiz, also related it thus, that is through Ibn Lahī'a, from Abū al-Aswad, from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, meaning in the same context as that given by Mūsā b. ʿUqba, God bless him."

We have previously told of Mūsā b. ʿUqba that he stated, "The migration to Abyssinia only occurred following their entry into the enclave, and was the result of the Messenger of God (SAAS) having told them to do so." But God knows best.

I observe that it is most likely that Abū Tālib spoke his lāmiyya, his ode rhyming in 'l', as previously quoted, also only after they went into the enclave. And so making reference to it here is most appropriate. But God knows best.

Thereafter al-Bayhaqī related, through Yūnus, from Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq, as having said, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) set out to fulfil the mission entrusted to him, the Banū Hashim and the Banū al-Muṭṭalib undertook to protect him and refused to deliver him. Even though they were opposed to him and were engaged in the same religion as their people at large, they were none the less reluctant to humiliate themselves and deliver him over, conscious of the loathing Quraysh had for him.

“The Bani Hashim and the Banu al-Mu‘taylib having taken their stand and Quraysh having recognized that they had no access to Muhammad, they met and agreed to write a document defining their relationship to the Banu Hashim and the Banu ‘Abd al-Mu‘taylib. They agreed that they would not marry them nor allow their women to marry them, nor engage in buying or selling with them. They wrote a document to that effect which they hung up in the ka‘ba.

“They then attacked the Muslims, restricting their movements and subjecting them to violence. Their plight and insecurity became extreme.”

Thereafter Ibn Ishaq related the story in full, telling of their entry into the enclave of Abn Taliib and of the severe trouble they suffered there, to such a degree that their children would be overheard inside writhing with the pangs of hunger.

Eventually most Quraysh regretted their plight and expressed their hatred for their accursed document. They then told how God, in His mercy, sent down woodworm against the document and these demolished every word relating to God, leaving therein only what referred to evil, to the boycott and to slanderous talk. Also related was how God Almighty informed the Messenger of God (SAAS) of this and how he told this to his uncle Abu Taliib.

He then went on to mention in full the remainder of the story as narrated by Musa b. Uqba.

Ibn Hishâm stated, from Ziyâd, quoting Muhammad b. Ishâq, “And when Quraysh saw that the supporters of the Messenger of God (SAAS) had gone to live in a land where they had attained security and where the Negus had offered his protection to those seeking refuge with him, that Umar had accepted Islam and had now, along with Hamza, joined the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his Companions, and that Islam was spreading out into the tribes, they met and decided to write down a document. This would record their mutual agreement concerning the Banu Hâshim and the Banu ‘Abd al-Mu‘taylib. It specified that they would neither marry with them nor offer their womenfolk into marriage with them nor engage in any buying or selling with them. Having agreed to this, they wrote it down in a deed to which they gave their solemn pledge. They then suspended the document inside the ka‘ba in affirmation of this.

Ibn Hishâm said, “He was also named as al-Na‘îr b. al-Hârith. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said prayers against him and he lost the use of some of his fingers.”
Al-Waqidi stated, “The man who wrote down the agreement was Țalḥa b. Abū Țalḥa al-’Abdari.” My own view is that it is well established that the man was Mansūr b. Ikrima, as Ibn Ishāq related. It was he who lost the use of a hand; Quraysh used to say among themselves, “Look what happened to Mansūr b. Ikrima!”

Al-Waqidi said, “And the document was suspended in the middle of the ka'ba.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “When Quraysh had done this the Banū Ḥāshim and the Banū al-Muṭṭalib allied with Abū Ṭālib and entered his enclave and joined forces with him.

“But Abū Lahab b. Ābd al-‘Uzza b. Ābd al-Muṭṭalib left the Banū Ḥāshim and gave his support to Quraysh.

“Husayn b. Ābd Allah related to me that Abū Lahab met Hind, daughter of Ṭub'a b. Rabi'a when he parted with his own people and gave his support to Quraysh against them. He asked her, ‘O daughter of Ṭub'a, have I not given my support to al-Ľāt and al-‘Uzza and broken with those who have abandoned them and given their support against them?’

“Yes, indeed,’ she replied. ‘And may God reward you well, O Abū Ṭub'a!’”

Ibn Ishāq continued, “I was told that one of the things he would say was, ‘Muḥammad promises me things I do not see that he claims to exist after death. What apart from that had he put in my hands?’

“He then blew into his hands and addressed them thus: ‘May you both perish! I see nothing in you of what Muḥammad talks!’

“And so God Almighty sent down His words: ‘May the hands of Abū Lahab perish, and may he perish too!’” (ṣūrat al-Lahab; CVI, v.1).

Ibn Ishāq went on, “When Quraysh had agreed in this way and acted towards him as they did, Abū Ṭālib spoke the following verses:

‘O do announce our disagreement to the Lu‘ayy, to those Lu‘ayy of the Banū Ka‘b:
Do you not know that we have found Muḥammad to be a prophet like Moses of whom it is written in the very first books?
And that among men there is love for him and that none is better than those endowed by God with love,
And that the document you have put up is an evil thing, like the raging young camel? ³
Wake up, wake up before the moist earth is dug (for your graves) and those without sin will be just like sinners.
Do not follow the orders of those who lie, and so cut your ties with us after friendship and kinship, Drawing on an endless warfare; and the milk of war can turn very bitter to those who taste it.

³. Apparently a reference to the camel of Šāliḥ which was killed by his people, Thamūd, contrary to his express wish. See ṣūrat al-Shu‘arā'; XXVI, v.155–8.
We will not, by the Lord of the temple, deliver up Ahmad because of the tribulations of time or the agony,

And when our necks and hands and yours will otherwise be cut by glinting blades of Qussai steel.\footnote{4}

In a narrow battlefield where broken spears will be seen, over which vultures hover, like drinkers at a party,

And the space where the horsemen gallop and the heroes cry out will make it like a battle in a war.

Was our forefather Hashim not courageous, and did he not advise his sons to thrust and to strike?

We do not tire of warfare before it tires of us, nor do we complain at whatever misfortunes may strike.

We are people who stay firm and prudent at times when the spirits of brave men fly off in terror."

Ibn Ishāq stated, "And they remained under those conditions for two or three years in the utmost distress, with nothing getting into them unless secretly, from those members of Quraysh who wanted to keep ties with them.

"Abū Jahl b. Hishām, so they say, met Ḥākim b. Ḥizām b. Khūwaylid b. Asad with whom was a slave bearing wheat for Ḥizām's aunt Khadija, daughter of Khūwaylid, who was in the enclave along with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Abū Jahl took hold of him and said, 'Are you taking food to the Banū Hashim? I swear, you'll not go, you and your food, without me making a scandal about you in Mecca!'

"Abū al-Bakhtari b. Hishām b. al-Ḥārith b. Asad then came up to him and asked, 'What's going on between you and him?'

"He replied, 'He's carrying food into the Banū Hashim.'

"Abū al-Bakhtari commented, 'This is food belonging to his aunt that she had sent him and he had at home. Would you prevent him from taking to her her own food? Get out of the man's way!'

"But Abū Jahl, God damn him, refused and they began to fight. Abū al-Bakhtari picked up a camel's jawbone and struck him with it, giving him a head wound. He then stomped on him.

"Hāmza b. 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib was nearby and saw all this. But they did not like to tell the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his Companions of this incident lest they gloat over them."

\textit{THOSE WHO MOCKED.}

The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) continued as before, calling upon his people by day and night, secretly and openly, calling out the commands of God Almighty, fearing no man.

4. Swords of Qusas were reknowned for their high quality.
God having provided the Messenger of God (SAAS) with protection against Quraysh through the aid of his uncle and his relatives of the Banū Hashim and the Banū ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib, Quraysh were unable to treat him with the violence they wished. Consequently they set about mocking, ridiculing him and disputing with him.

The Qurʾān then began coming down concerning the evil deeds of Quraysh and those who had declared themselves to be his enemies.

Some of these were mentioned by name to us, while others were inferred among those polytheists to whom general reference was made.

Ibn Ishaq mentions Abī Lahab and the revelation of a chapter concerning him; also, he referred to Umayya b. Khalaf and the revelation of the words of the Almighty, “Woe to every defaming slanderer!” (sūrat al-Humaza; CIV, v.1). The whole sūrat refers to the latter man.

Also there was reference to al-‘Āṣ b. Wā‘il in the revelation, “And have you then seen him who disbelieved in our signs and who said, ‘Certainly I will be awarded wealth and children’” (sūrat Maryam; XIX, v.77). Some part of this has been quoted previously.

And then there was Abū Jahl h. Hisham and his saying to the Prophet of God (SAAS), “You had better stop insulting our gods, or we will insult your God whom you worship.” Regarding this, God’s revelation came: “Do not insult those whom they worship besides God, for they, in enmity and without knowledge, will insult God” (sūrat al-An‘ām; VI, v.108).

Also, there was al-Nadr b. al-Harith b. Kalada b. ‘Alqama, or ‘Alqama b. Kalada according to al-Suhayli and others, who used to sit down after the Prophet of God (SAAS) had finished one of his sessions in which he would recite the Qurʾān and pray to God. Al-Nadr would then narrate tales of Rustum and Isfandiyār and the wars between them in ancient Persia. Then he would comment, “I swear by God, Muḥammad is no better a story-teller than me. His talk is only of ancient legends from which he borrows, just as I do.”

And so God Almighty sent down: “And they say: ‘These are only legends of the Ancients that he has borrowed; they are dictated to him morning and evening’” (sūrat al-Furqān; XXV, v.5). And also: “Woe to every sinful liar” (sūrat al-Jāthiya; XLV, v.7).

Ibn Ishaq stated, “One day, so we have been told, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sat down in the mosque with al-Walīd b. al-Mughira. Al-Nadr b. al-Hārith came over and sat with them; also present were several men of Quraysh.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke, but al-Nadr argued with him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then addressed al-Nadr and ultimately silenced him. Having done so, he then recited to them all, ‘You, along with that which you worship besides God, are the firewood for hell; you are on your way there. Were these gods they would not be ending up there; and all there will remain therein forever. Therein wailing is their lot, and therein they hear not’ (sūrat al-Anbiyā; XXI, v.98–100).
"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then arose just as 'Abd Allāh b. al-Ziba'rā al-Sahmi approached and sat down.

'Al-Walid b. al-Mughīrā spoke to him, 'I swear, al-Nadr b. al-Ḥārīth's foregoing argument with Ibn 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib (i.e. Muḥammad) was indeed short lived! Muḥammad (silenced him by) claiming that we and those gods of ours we worship are to be firewood for hell-fire!'

'Abd Allāh b. al-Ziba'rā replied, 'If I'd found him saying that, I'd have disputed with him. Ask Muḥammad: 'Is everything besides God that is worshipped, along with those who worship them, to be firewood for hell? We worship angels, the Jews worship ʿUzayr, and the Christians worship Jesus.'

'Al-Walid and those with him at the meeting were impressed by what Ibn al-Ziba'rā had said, and thought he had made a cogent and winning argument.

'This was reported to the Messenger of God (SAAS) who replied, 'All those wanting to be worshipped aside from God will be there in hell with those who worship them. Those people merely worship devils, and those they (the devils) have ordered them to worship.'

'God Almighty then revealed, 'Those to whom good has already gone from us will be kept far away from it (hell). They will not hear its slightest sound, but will remain forever in what it is they have so desired' (ṣūrat al-Anbiyāʾ; XXI; v.101–2).

This verse is referring to Jesus, ʿUzayr and those rabbis and monks who lived in obedience to God Almighty. And regarding their assertion that they were worshipping angels and that these were the daughters of God, He sent down: "And they say that God the Beneficent has taken a son for himself. All glory be to Him! No, (not that) but they are honoured servants" (ṣūrat al-Anbiyāʾ; XXI, v.26).

And then there were the verses following that.

Concerning the good impression made upon the polytheists by what al-Ziba'rā said, God sent down: "And when the son of Mary is mentioned as an example, your people make a great outcry. They ask, 'Are our gods better, or is he?' They only raise this objection for argument's sake. They really are contentious people!" (ṣūrat al-Zukhruf; XLIII, v.57–8).

This argumentation they pursued was futile.

And they were aware of that, because they were an Arab people. It is part of their language that mā, i.e. "that which," in the above quotation implies in Arabic something that does not think. The statement: "You, along with that which you worship besides God are the firewood for hell; you are on your way there" (ṣūrat al-Anbiyāʾ; XXI, v.98) refers to the rocks fashioned as idols. It does not include the angels that they claimed to be worshipping inside these images. Nor does it include Jesus, ʿUzayr or any of the holy persons because that item of language, mā, cannot include them, directly or by implication.

They well knew that the comparison they were making to Jesus, son of Mary, was futile. As the Almighty stated, "They only raise this objection for argument's sake. They really are contentious people" (ṣūrat al-Zukhruf; XLIII, v.57–8).
God also stated, “He”, (meaning Jesus) “was merely a servant whom We favoured” (that is, by prophethood) “and We made him an example for the people of Israel” (sūrat al-Zukhruf; XLIII, v.59). That is, as an indication of the totality of God’s power to achieve His wishes, having created him from a female without a male. Similarly, God created Eve from a male without a female, and Adam without either, while He created all the rest of mankind from both male and female.

As God stated in another verse, “And certainly We are creating him as a sign for all mankind.” That is, as a proof and an indication of His evident power, and as a “mercy from Him”, by which He gives mercy to those He wishes.

Ibn Ishāq also mentions al-Akhnas b. Sharif and Almighty God’s revelation regarding him: “And do not obey every base oath-maker” (sūrat Nūn or al-Qalam; LXVIII, v.10).

He referred also to al-Walid b. al-Mughira as having said, “Does God make revelation to Muḥammad and not me, even though I am chief and leader of Quraysh and also ignores Abū Mas‘ūd ‘Amr b. ‘Amr al-Thaqafī, lord of Thaqif, even though we are the greatest men of the two towns?”5 Regarding this statement, God sent down: “And they say, ‘Why was this Qur’ān not revealed to some great men of the two towns?’” (sūrat al-Zukhruf; XLIII, v.31), along with other verses thereafter.

Ibn Ishāq also referred to Ubayy b. Khalaf who said to Uqba b. Abū Mu‘ayt, “Have I not heard that you sat down with Muḥammad and listened to him? I’ll never set eyes on you again unless you spit in his face!” And ‘Uqba, that enemy of God, God damn him, did that! And so God sent down, “And a day (will come) when the evil-doer will bite his hands and say, ‘Would that I had taken my path with the Messenger; woe is to me! How I wish I had not taken so-and–so as my friend!’” (sūrat al-Furqān; XXV, v.27, 28), along with following verses.

He also related, “And Ubayy b. Khalaf took an old, disintegrating bone to him and said, ‘O Muḥammad, do you claim that God can restore this after it has disintegrated?’ He then crumbled it in his hand and blew it into the air towards the Messenger of God (S.A.W.). He replied, ‘Yes, I do say that. God will restore it and you too, even after you are like that. And then He will place you in the fire!’ And God revealed, ‘He coins a metaphor for us, forgetting his own creation, saying, “Who will give life to bones that are rotten?” Say, “He will give life to them who first created them! He has knowledge of all creation”’” (sūrat Yāsīn; XXXVI, v.78–9) to the end of that sūrat.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “I have been told that once, when the Messenger of God (S.A.W.) was making a circumambulation of the ka‘ba, near its doorway, he was obstructed by al-Aswad b. al-Muṭṭalib, al-Walid b. al-Mughira, Umayya b. Khalaf and al-‘Āṣ b. Wāṭil. They said to him, ‘O Muḥammad, come on! We’ll worship what you do if you'll worship what we do. Let's just co-operate, you and us, in the whole thing!

"Regarding them God revealed, 'Say: 'O you disbelievers! I will not worship what you worship''' (sūrat al-Kāfīrūn; CIX; v.1–2).

"When Abū Jahl heard reference to the al-zaqqūm tree, he said, 'Do you know what this al-zaqqūm is? It is dates mashed in butter!' He added, 'Bring it along; we'll enjoy it!'

"And so God revealed, 'The zaqqūm tree is the food of sinners'" (sūrat al-Dukhān; XLIV, v.43–4).

Ibn Ishāq also related, "Al-Walīd b. al-Mughīra was standing talking with the Messenger of God (SAAS) who was addressing him, wishing to convert him to Islam, when Ibn Umm Makkūm, that is, the son of 'Āṭīka, daughter of 'Abd Allāh b. 'Ankatha, passed by. Ibn Umm Makkūm, who was blind, addressed the Messenger of God (SAAS) and began asking him to recite the Qur'ān. This so upset the Messenger of God (SAAS) as to anger him, and this was because he was interfering with his efforts to convert al-Walīd to Islam as he was hoping.

"When the blind man persisted, he turned away from him frowning and ignored him. And so God Almighty sent down, '... and he frowned and turned away when the blind man came to him ...' up to the words, '... exalted, purified'" (sūrat 'Abasa; LXXX, v.1–14).

It is also said that the person who was talking to the Messenger of God (SAAS) when Ibn Umm Makkūm came along was Umayya b. Khalaf. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishāq then related the names of those who returned to Mecca from the migration to Abyssinia. They did so when news reached them of the adoption of Islam by the Meccans. This information was incorrect, though there was a reason for it.

What is well established in the sahih collections of traditions and elsewhere is that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sat down one day with the polytheists and God revealed to him, "By the star when it sets, your companion has not gone astray" (sūrat al-Najm; LI, v.1–2). When he had recited this sūrat completely, he prostrated in prayer as did the Muslims, polytheists and spirits all.

But that (the prostrations of the polytheists along with the Muslims) had a reason which is mentioned by exegetes in their commentary on the words of Almighty God, "And we did not send before you any messenger or any prophet without him wishing something and the devil then influencing his wish; and so God annuls whatever the devil has inspired, and affirms His own signs. And God is knowledgeable, wise" (sūrat al-Ḥajj; XXII, v.52). They then refer to the story of the gharāniq.6

6. The word seems to have two possible connotations. It can mean either a high-flying crane or a particularly attractive young person, male or female. At issue here are two verses said, in the
We preferred to refrain from mentioning it openly here lest it come to the attention of those unable to place it in context. The origins of the story are, however, present in the sahih collections.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Abū Ma‘ṣmar related to us, quoting ʿAbd al-Wārīth, quoting Ayyūb, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, ‘The Prophet (ṢAAS) prostrated himself in prayer having recited sūrat al-Najm, and all the Muslims, the polytheists and men and spirits alike prostrated too.’”

Al-Bukhārī is unique in giving this tradition; Muslim does not relate it.

Al-Bukhārī also stated, “Muḥammad b. Bāshshār related to us, as did Ghundar and Shu‘ba, from Abū Ishāq, who said, ‘I heard al-Awsad say, quoting ʿAbd Allāh, ‘The Prophet (ṢAAS) recited sūrat al-Najm in Mecca and prostrated in prayer. And those there with him also prostrated except for one old man who picked up a handful of dust or dirt which he raised to his forehead, saying, ‘This suffices for me.’ And later I saw him killed as an unbeliever.’’” Muslim related this, as did Abū Dāūd and al-Naṣārī, from a hadith from Shu‘ba.

Imām Ahmad (b. Hanbal) stated that Ibrahīm recounted to him, saying, “Rabbāḥ related to us, from Ma‘ṣmar, from Ibn Tāwus, from ʿIkrima b. Khalīd, from Jaʿfar b. al-Muṭṭalib b. Abū Wadāʾa, who heard his father say, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) recited sūrat al-Najm in Mecca and then prostrated, and all those there with him did the same. But I lifted up my head, declining to prostrate.’ Al-Muṭṭalib had not then accepted Islam. After that he never heard anyone recite sūrat al-Najm without him prostrating along with the reciter.”

Al-Naṣārī related this from ʿAbd al-Malik b. ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd, from the account of Ahmad b. Ḥanbal.

It may be gathered from this account and the preceding one that this man did prostrate, but then raised his head in pride. However, the old man whom Ibn Masʿūd considered an exception did not prostrate at all. But God knows best.

What is implied here is that when the narrator saw that the polytheists had prostrated themselves in imitation of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) he believed that they had accepted Islam, made peace with him and that there was no longer any dispute between them.

The news of that quickly spread and reached the Emigrants in Abyssinia, and they believed it to be true. A group of them, hoping that was so, came back, while another group remained there. Each of them was well intentioned and correct in acting as they did.

Ibn Ishāq gave the names of all of them that returned. These were: ʿUthmān b. ʿAffān and his wife Ruqayya, daughter of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), Abū Ḥudhayfa b. ʿUtba b. Rabiʿa and his wife Sahla, daughter of Suhayl, ʿAbd Allāh works of tradition, to have immediately followed the reference to the goddesses of pre-Islam, al-Lat, al-Uzza and Manār, in sūrat al-Najm, v.19, 20. These extra verses, not in the Qurʾān but preserved in the tradition literature, suggest that these goddesses are gharānīq and that their intercession is to be hoped for on judgment day.
THE LIFE OF THE PROPHET MUHAMMAD

Also there were Salama b. Hishām and ʿAyyāsh b. Abū Rabīʿa who were imprisoned in Mecca until after the battles of Badr, Ḫud and al-khandaq.

There is some dispute over ʿAmmār b. Yāsir, as to whether or not he ever went to Abyssinia.

There also returned Muʿattib b. ʿAwf, ʿUthmān b. Māzʿūn, his son al-Ṣāib, along with his two brothers Qudāma and ʿAbd Allāh, both sons of Māzʿūn. Then there were Khunays b. Ḥudhafā and Hishām b. al-ʿĀṣ b. Wāḍīl, the latter being imprisoned in Mecca until after the battle of al-khandaq. ʿAmīr b. Rabīʿa and his wife Laylā, daughter of Abī ʿAbd Allāh al-Ḥathma, also returned, as did ʿAbd Allāh b. Makhrama.

ʿAbd Allāh b. Suhayl b. ʿAmr also returned, but he was imprisoned until the battle of Badr, when he joined the Muslims and fought on their side.

Also Abū Sabra b. Abū Ruhm returned, along with his wife Umm Kulthūm, daughter of Suhayl. As did al-Sakrān b. ʿAmr b. ʿAbd Shams and his wife Sawdā, daughter of Zamʿa. He died in Mecca before the migration to Medina and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), thereafter married his widow.

They totalled 33 men; may God be pleased with them!

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Aʾisha reported that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘I was given a vision of your abode in exile, a place of date-palms between two tracts of black stones.’”

Some (of those who had returned from Abyssinia) then migrated to Medina, while the rest of those who had remained in Abyssinia did so as well.

And there is a report to this effect from Abū Mūsā and Asmāʾ, God be pleased with them both, from the Prophet (ṢAAS).

Already mentioned above is the account of Abī Mūsā, that being in both sahīth collections. The account of Asmāʾ, daughter of ʿUmays, will come later, if God wills it, and in Him is all trust. Her story relates to what happened after the battle of Khaybar, when the latecomers from among the emigrants to Abyssinia arrived.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Yahyā b. ʿĀmmār related to us, quoting Abū ʿAwāna, from Sulaymān b. Ibrāhīm, from ʿAlqama, from ʿAbd Allāh, who said, ‘We used to greet the Prophet (ṢAAS), while he prayed, and he would reply to us. But when we came back from the land of the Negus we would greet him the same way, but he would not reply. So we said to him, ‘O Messenger of God, when we used to greet you, you would reply to us. But since our return from the land of the Negus, you don’t reply.’”
“He responded, ‘Prayer keeps one engrossed.’”

Al-Bukhari also related this, as did Muslim, Abū Dā'ūd and al-Nasā’ī, by different chains of authority, from Sulaymān b. Mahrān, from al-‘A’mash.

This substantiates the interpretation of those who explain the authentic account of Zayd b. Arqam that is in both sahih collections: “We used to talk during the prayer, until God’s revealed verse was sent down, ‘Stand up before God in humility’ (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.238). And so we were ordered to remain silent and were forbidden to talk.”

However, those referred to here were the “Companions of the Prophet” generally, for Zayd himself was a “Companion”, (but) from Medina, and the prohibition against speaking during the prayer was established in Mecca. And so the report is being applied to what had gone before.

Regarding his reference to this particular verse which is of the Medina period, it is indeed difficult to explain. Perhaps he believed that it was this verse that prohibited speaking during the prayers, when in fact there were other prohibitions of it along with it. But God knows best.

Ibn Isḥaq stated, “Among those emigrants who returned under an agreement of protection, or named to us as such, were Uthmān b. Maẓ‘ūn, protected by al-Walīd b. al-Mughira, Abū Salama b. ʿAbd al-Asad, protected by his uncle Abū Ṭalib; his mother was Barra, daughter of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib.

“Regarding Uthmān b. Maẓ‘ūn, Šāliḥ b. ʿIbrāhim b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Awf related to me from someone who was told the following about Uthmān, ‘When Uthmān b. Maẓ‘ūn saw the plight of the followers of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), while he himself was able to come and go freely under the protection of al-Walīd b. al-Mughira, he said, ‘By God, here I am moving about freely under the protection of a polytheist while my friends and followers in religion suffer harm and insult for God that do not afflict me, and this constitutes a great deficiency in me!’”

“So off he went to al-Walīd b. al-Mughira and told him, ‘O Abū ‘Abd al-Shams, you have fulfilled your pledge, but now I’m giving back to you your protection.’

‘Why is that, cousin?’ he asked. ‘Has any one of my people harmed you?’

‘No,’ he replied, ‘it’s just that what I want is the protection of God, the Almighty and Glorious. I don’t want the protection of anyone else.’

‘Well then,’ al-Walīd said, ‘you should go to the mosque and give me my protection back in public, just as I declared my protection over you.’

“And so they both did go to the mosque, where al-Walīd b. al-Mughira announced, ‘This is Uthmān, and he has come to relieve me of my protection of him.’

“Uthmān said, ‘He speaks the truth. I have found him to be trustworthy and honourable in his protection, but I prefer to be protected only by God. I have given him back his pledge of protection.’
"Uthmān, God bless him, then left and joined an assembly of Quraysh who were being addressed by Labid b. Rabī‘a b. Malik b. Ja‘far. Uthmān sat down with them. Labid spoke a verse:

‘Is not all but God vanity?’

‘Uthmān commented, ‘You speak the truth!’

‘Labid then said,

‘And all pleasures must fade.’

‘At this Uthmān protested, ‘You lie! The pleasures of paradise will last forever!’

‘Labid commented, ‘O men of Quraysh, those who sat with you used not to be so insulted; when did this come about so?’

‘One man replied, ‘This is just one of those fools allied with him; they have abandoned our faith. Don’t take to heart what he says.’

‘Uthmān spoke back to this man and they became angry with one another. The other man then got up and hit Uthmān in the eye, making it black. Al-Walid, who was nearby and saw what had happened to Uthmān, commented, ‘Well, nephew, your eye didn’t need to suffer so; earlier you were fully protected!’

‘Uthmān replied, ‘Not so; I swear the only problem is that my good eye is in need of what the other one suffered for God’s sake! Actually I am under the protection of One stronger and more capable than yourself, O Abū ‘Abd al-Shams!’

‘To this al-Walid replied, ‘Come on now, nephew, just come back under my protection.’

‘No,’ Uthmān told him.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Regarding Abū Salama b.‘Abd al-Asad: my father, Ishaq b. Yasār related to me that Salama b.‘Abd Allāh b. Abī Salama told him that when Abū Salama sought the protection of Abū Ṭalib some men of the Banū Makhzūm went to the latter and asked him, ‘O Abū Ṭalib, you’ve already given protection from us to your nephew Muḥammad; how is it you are now doing the same for one of our own men?’

‘Abū Ṭalib replied, ‘He sought out my protection, and he is my sister’s son. And if I am not to protect my sister’s son, how could I protect my brother’s son?’

‘Abū Lahab then arose and said, ‘O men of Quraysh, you’ve treated this sheikh harshly, and you’re constantly attacking him for giving protection to his own people. Either put an end to this, or let’s all take his side in this so he attains his goal.’

‘They replied, ‘All right, Abū Lahab, we’ll stop behaving contrary to your wishes.’ He had been their ally and assistant against the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and they wanted to maintain that.

‘Abū Ṭalib had high hopes of him when he heard him speak thus and anticipated his aid regarding the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). And so he spoke the following verses urging Abū Lahab to support himself and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS):

'A man with Abū Utayba as his uncle is secure from harm as in a pasture;
I tell him - though how could my advice benefit him - O Abū Mu'tib, hold your ground firmly,
And do not as long as you live accept a course you'll be blamed for, whenever you attend a gathering,
Leave the path of the weak to others than yourself, for you were not created to stay weak,
And fight, for fighting is just and you will never see a real warrior humbled until he surrenders.
And why is it, when they have done you no great harm, nor abandoned you when having victory or defeat?
May God punish ʿAbd Shams, Nawfal, Taym and Makhzūm for us with disaster and death,
For their deserting our alliance after friendship and affection in order to attain things forbidden.
You lie, by God's temple! Us dispossess Muhammad? Not even at the enclave did you see (us) turn against (him).''

Ibn Hishām stated, "We have omitted one verse from this poem."

An Account of the determination of Abū Bakr, "the Trusting", to emigrate to Abyssinia.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "I was told by Muḥammad b. Muslim al-Zuhri, from ʿUrwa, from ʿA'isha, that when Abū Bakr, 'the Trusting', God be pleased with him, experienced suffering in Mecca and witnessed the antagonism of Quraysh for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his own supporters, he asked permission from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to move away and he granted him this request.

"And so Abū Bakr, God bless him, did leave and, having travelled a day or two away from Mecca, was met by Ibn al-Daghina, brother of the Banū al-Ḥarīth b. Bakr b. ʿAbd Manāţ b. Kināna, who was at that time the leader of the Aḥābīsh."

Al-Waqidi gave this man's name as al-Ḥarīth b. Yazid, he being of the tribe of Bakr b. ʿAbd Manāţ b. Kināna. Al-Suhayli, however, gave his name as Malik.
(ʿA'isha continued) "'What are you heading for, Abū Bakr?' the man asked. Abū Bakr replied, 'My people have offended me, treated me badly and forced me to leave.'

"'Why is that? By God, you're a credit to the tribe, aiding those in distress, and you are kindly towards the needy. Go back; you are under my protection!'

"He did return with him and, back in Mecca, Ibn al-Daghina stood up with him and stated, 'O Quraysh, I have placed the son of Abū Quḥāfa under my protection. Let no man do anything but good to him.'"
"And they did leave him alone."

'A'isha went on, "Abū Bakr used to have a mosque at the gate of his home among the Banū Jumāh and there he would pray. He was a very sensitive man and would shed tears when reciting the Qurʾān. Young men, slaves and women would stand nearby astonished at his behaviour.

"Some Quraysh men went to Ibn Daghina and told him, 'O Ibn Daghina, surely you didn't protect this man to harm us? When he prays and recites what Muhammad brought he is moved (to tears) and he then attracts attention; we fear that he may influence our young men, women and the weak. Go and tell him to go inside his house, where he can do as he wishes.'"

She went on, "So Ibn al-Daghina did go to Abū Bakr and told him, 'I didn't give you protection so that you could do your people harm. They take offence at the place you attend and feel that you are harming them. Go inside your house and do there whatever it is you want.'

"(Abū Bakr asked) 'So shall I give you back your protection and rely on God?'

"'Do return my protection.'"

"'Consider it returned.'"

"Ibn al-Daghina then stood and stated, 'O Quraysh, the son of Abū Quḥāfa has given me back my protection over him. Do with him whatever you wish.'"

The Imam al-Bukhārī alone gives an account of this hadith and his account is nicely expanded. He stated, "Yahyā b. Bukayr related to me, quoting al-Layth, from Uqayl, Ibn Shihāb stated, and Urwa b. al-Zubayr informed me, that 'A'isha, the wife of the Prophet (SAAS) said, 'I have no consciousness of my parents not actively participating in the faith. Not a day would pass for us without the Messenger of God (SAAS) coming to us, either early in the day or late.

"'And when the Muslims were being persecuted Abū Bakr left, travelling in the direction of Abyssinia. When he reached Bark al-Ghimād, he was met by Ibn al-Daghina, who was chief of the Qāira. The latter asked him where he was heading. Abū Bakr replied, 'My people expelled me, and so I want to travel in the land praying to my Lord.'"

"'Ibn al-Daghina commented, 'But men like you, Abū Bakr, neither leave nor are expelled. You are charitable, maintain family ties, make sacrifices for others, are hospitable, and help out in times of disaster. I shall be your protector. So go back and worship your Lord in your own land.'"

"'So he went back and Ibn al-Daghina travelled with him. At evening Ibn al-Daghina made the rounds of the Quraysh chiefs and told them, 'The like of Abū Bakr does not leave, nor is he expelled! Would you exile a man who is charitable, maintains family ties, makes sacrifices for others, is hospitable to guests, and helps out in times of disaster?'

"'Quraysh did not deny Ibn al-Daghina's right to give protection, but asked him, 'Tell Abū Bakr to worship his Lord inside his house; there he can recite..."
what he likes without harming us or advertising it. We’re concerned that he might subvert our women and sons.”

“Ibn al-Daghina told that to Abū Bakr and the latter did therefore pray to his Lord in his house, without announcing what he was doing, and he recited only at home. But later Abū Bakr decided to build a mosque in the courtyard of his house and there he would pray and recite the Qurʾān. The women of the polytheists and their sons would crowd around staring at him in wonder; Abū Bakr was a man prone to tears, and he could not restrain his eyes when he recited the Qurʾān.

“This upset the polytheist Quraysh leaders and they sent for Ibn al-Daghina. When he came, they told him, “We’ve acknowledged your protection of Abū Bakr on the understanding that he would worship his Lord in his house. But he has gone beyond that, built himself a mosque in his courtyard and openly prays and recites there. We’re concerned that he will subvert our young men and our womenfolk. Make him stop. If he will restrict himself to worship at home, then well and good. But if he insists on so doing only in full view, then ask him to give back to you your protection. We don’t want to break with you, but we cannot agree for Abū Bakr to advertise.”

“‘A’isha went on, ‘Ibn al-Daghia then went to Abū Bakr and told him, “You know what it was I agreed to with you. Either you restrict yourself to that, or give me back my protection. I don’t want the Arabs to hear it said that I’ve had my covenant broken because of a man to whom I had given my protection.”

“‘Abū Bakr replied, “Then I give you back your protection and will rely on that of God, Almighty and Glorious is He.”’

Al-Bukhārī then recounted the rest of the tradition concerning the emigration of Abū Bakr, God bless him, with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), as will be described hereafter.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Abd al-Raḥmān b. al-Qāsim related to me, from his father al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad, the son of b. Abū Bakr, ‘the Trusting’, as follows: ‘He was confronted — that is Abū Bakr was confronted — after he had left the protection of Ibn al-Daghina, on his way to the kaʿba by some fool from Quraysh who tossed dirt up over his head. Then al-Walid b. al-Mughira — or perhaps it was al-ʿĀṣ b. Wā’il — passed by Abū Bakr, who spoke as follows: “Don’t you see how this idiot is behaving?” He was told, “You brought this on yourself.” Meanwhile Abū Bakr kept repeating, “O God, how forbearing You are!”’

DIVISION

Ibn Ishaq made mention of these incidents to show the contradiction between the pact made by Quraysh with the Banū Ḥashim and the Banū al-Muṭṭalib, and their drafting of that damnable document against the latter and their confinement to the enclave, with all the resultant consequences. These are matters appropriate for consideration in this era. Al-Shāfiʿi, God be pleased with him, therefore stated, "He who wishes to know about the maghāzī, the early military engagements, is reliant upon Ibn Ishaq."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "While the Banū Hashim and the Banū al-Muṭṭalib were living in their house assigned to them by Quraysh in the document they had written, a certain group of Quraysh set about abrogating that document.

"No one took more pains to do this than Hishām b. ʿAmr b. al-Ḥārith b. Ḥabīb b. Naṣr b. Mālik b. Ḥisīl b. ʿĀmir b. Luʿayy; this was because he was the nephew of Naḍla b. Hishām b. ʿAbd Manaf by his mother, and Hishām had close ties to the Banū Ḥāshim. He was, moreover, deemed highly by his people.

"When, at night, the Banū Ḥāshim and the Banū al-Muṭṭalib were restricted to their building in the enclave, he would, as I have been told, bring up a camel loaded down with food. When he reached the entrance to the enclave he would release the halter from the camel’s head and strike its side to send it on down to them. Next time he would bring it loaded with wheat and do the same.

"He went to Zuhayr b. Abū ʿUmayya b. al-Mughīra b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmr b. Makhzmūm, whose mother was ʿĀṭīka, daughter of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, and said, ‘Zuhayr, does it please you to eat and dress well and to marry women while your uncles are where you know them to be, engaging in no buying nor selling, arranging no marriages, nor having any arranged with them? For my part, I swear that if they were the uncles of Abū al-Ḥakam b. Hishām and you were to ask him to treat them as you have been asked to do, he would never have agreed to your request."

"‘Shame on you, Hishām! What can I do? I’m just one man. If someone else would join me, I’d set about abrogating it.’

"Hishām replied, ‘You have found one such man.’ ‘Who is that?’ he asked. ‘Myself,’ came the answer. ‘Well,’ Zuhayr went on, ‘find us a third then.’

"And so Hishām went to al-Muṭṭim b. ʿAdī and told him, ‘Muṭṭim, are you pleased to have two clans of the Banū ʿAbd Manaf suffer while you look on, in agreement with Quraysh about that? By God, if you enable them to do this they will soon be treating you the same way.’

"‘Damn it! What am I to do? I’m just one man,’ Muṭṭim commented.

"Hishām replied, ‘I have found you a second.’ ‘Who?’ ‘Myself.’

"‘Then find a third,’ Muṭṭim asked. ‘I already have.’

"‘Who is that?’

"‘Zuhayr b. Abū ʿUmayya.’

"‘Then find us a fourth,’ asked Muṭṭim.

"So Hishām went to Abū al-Bakhtari b. Hishām and told him what he had said to Muṭṭim b. ʿAdī.

"Abū al-Bakhtari asked, ‘Can you find anyone else to help in this?’

"‘Yes, I can,’ Hishām replied.

"‘Who?’ he asked.

"‘Zuhayr b. Abū ʿUmayya, Muṭṭim b. ʿAdī and myself are with you.’

"‘Find us a fifth,’ he asked.
“And so Hisham went to Zam'a b. al-Aswad b. al-Mu'talib b. Asad, spoke to him and reminded him of their kinship and their rights.

‘Is there anyone else helping in what you are inviting me to do?’ asked Zam'a.

‘Indeed yes,’ Hisham replied, naming the others.

And so they agreed to meet at night on the promontory of Mt. al-Ḥajjun on the upper outskirts of Mecca. There they met and agreed to defy the document until they were able to revoke it. Zuhayr told them, ‘I will begin and be the first to speak out.’

Next morning they went off to their assembly meeting and Zuhayr attended wearing a ceremonial robe. He made seven circumambulations of the ka'ba then went before the gathering and said, ‘O people of Mecca, shall we eat all kinds of food and dress at will while the Banū Hashim are in distress, unable to engage in any trade? By God, I won’t take my seat until this damnable boycott document is torn up!’

Abū Jahl, who was over to one side of the mosque, retorted, ‘By God, it will not be torn up!’

Zam'a b. al-Asad then said, ‘By God, you are the worst liar! We weren’t pleased with the document when it was written.’

‘Zam'a speaks the truth,’ Abū al-Bakhtari joined in. ‘We do not like or agree to what is written there.’

Al-Mu'tim b. 'Adī then spoke up, ‘You are both right, and anyone denying that is a liar. We are innocent before God of the document and what is written on it.’

Hisham b. 'Amr then stated something similar.

Abū Jahl observed, ‘This is something decided at night, something discussed elsewhere.’

Meanwhile, Abū Talib was seated to one side of the mosque.

Al-Mu'tim b. 'Adī then arose to tear up the document but discovered that worms had already consumed it, all except for the words, ‘In your name, O God!’

‘It was Mansūr b. Ḥikrīma who had written it and, so they say, his hand had become paralysed.’

Ibn Hisham stated, ‘Some scholars relate that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told Abū Ṭalib, ‘Uncle, God has sent worms to work upon the document of Quraysh and they have left alone only names relating to God and have removed the evil, boycott and lies from it.'

Abū Ṭalib asked, ‘Is it your Lord who told you this?’

‘Yes,’ he replied.

‘Well, I swear by God,’ Abū Ṭalib commented, ‘no one has come in to you.'

Abū Ṭalib then went out to Quraysh and asked, ‘O Quraysh, my nephew has informed me of such-and-such things. Bring your document, and if it is as he says, then withdraw and remove the boycott. But if he is lying, I will hand my nephew over to you.’
“‘We’ll agree to that,’ they said, and so compacted.

“They then looked and found it as the Messenger of God (SAAS) had said. But this only increased their malice.

“Thereupon the group of Quraysh men took their action to revoke the document.”

Ibn Ishâq stated that when it had been torn up and its contents revoked, Abû Ṭâlib spoke the following verses in praise of those who had taken action to annul the document:

“Has our Lord’s action reached our men at sea, despite their distance, for God is most kind to people,

And will tell them that the document has been torn up, and that all things that displease God come to nought.

Falsehood and deceit alternated and conjoined in it, but ultimately deceit is not bound to prevail.

Those uninvolved in it gathered together on a level plateau, while its fate remained undetermined.

It was an incident so worthy of being considered evil as to have arms and necks severed for it.

And for the people of all Mecca to leave in flight, their hearts quaking in fear of its evil,

The ploughman was left to ponder his options, whether because of it to head for low ground or for high,

So let him of Mecca’s people whose prestige intoxicates him know that our glory in Mecca’s heart is longer lived.

We grew up there when those there were few and we have always had our prestige and praise for us increase.

We fed our guests until they were forced to leave leftovers, and till the hands of those inundated with food began to give out.

God reward that group who united at al-Ḥâjûn behind a chief who guides rightly and decisively,

Who sat on the heights at al-Ḥâjûn as though they were kings, though even more noble and glorious than that.

Each hero helping in that, though walking with difficulty and impeded by his chainmail,

Courageously moving to great deeds, like a flame flaring in a torchbearer’s hands

Men of the most noble of Lu’ayy b. Ḥâlib whose faces burn in anger if they are insulted,

Men tall in stature, their swords reaching to the middle of their shanks, men for whom the clouds receive rain and bring joy.

Generous lords and sons of lords, urging their guests to eat, piling the food, Constructing safety and paving the way for their tribesmen when we travel the country.

Every blame-free man strives to keep this peace; (every) leader of great renown for that reason.

They spent part of the night asleep then awoke quietly, while the rest still slept.
They sent back Sahl b. Bayḍāʾ well pleased, and Abū Bakr and Muḥammad were delighted by it.

When was it that other clans helped out in our affairs, though of old, before that, we have been well liked?

In former times we never acquiesced in injustice, and achieved our aims without using violence.

O Tribe of Qusayy, will you not consider, and do you want what tomorrow will bring?

The relationship between you and me is like the saying, ‘O Mt. Aswad, you could explain it, if only you spoke.’”

Al-Suhaylī stated, “Aswad is the name of a mountain where a man was killed without anyone discovering his murderer. And so the relatives of the dead man recited the line, ‘O Mt. Aswad, you could explain it, if only you spoke.’ That is, ‘O Mt. Aswad, if you spoke you could explain to us who it was killed him.’”

At this point Ibn Ishāq quoted poetry of Ḥassān in praise of al-Muʿtim b. ‘Adi and Hishām b. ‘Amr for their having torn up that damnable, sinful and iniquitous document.

And here too al-Umawī quoted many lines of verse, whereas we have thought what Ibn Ishāq transmitted to be sufficient.

Al-Waqīdī stated, “I asked Muḥammad b. ʿAṭīaḥ and ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz, ‘When did the Banū Hashim come out from the enclave?’ They replied, ‘In the tenth year, after the beginning of the mission that is, three years before the migration.’”

I add that in that year, following their release, Abī Ṭālīb, uncle of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) died, as also did his wife Khadija, daughter of Khuwaylid, God bless her. An account of all this will come hereafter, if God, Almighty is He, so wishes.

DIVISION

Muḥammad b. Ishāq related, following the account of the revocation of the document, many stories involving the enmity of Quraysh for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and how the Arab tribes and those making the lesser or the full pilgrimage to Mecca, or coming for some other reason, were driven away from (Muḥammad by the enemy). He also recounted how God made miracles happen through him to give proof of the veracity of the signs and guidance he brought, as well as to put to the lie the charges they were making against him of immorality, aggressiveness, deception and trickery, and accusations that he was mad, a magician, a soothsayer or a forger. But God was to give him victory.

Ibn Ishāq then related the story of al-Ṭufayl b. ʿAmr al-Dawsī, but with an incomplete chain of authorities.
Al-Ṭufayl was an honoured and respected man of Daws. He came to Mecca where he was met by the Quraysh chieftains, who warned him about the Messenger of God (SAAS), and forbad him to meet with him or to listen to him talk.

Al-Ṭufayl related, “By God, they kept on at me until I agreed not to hear him nor to speak to him. I even stuffed my ears with cotton when I went to the mosque to prevent myself hearing anything he said; I didn’t want to listen to him.

“I went to the mosque, and there was the Messenger of God (SAAS) standing in prayer at the ka♭ba. I went over near to him, and God required me to hear some of what he said.

“And I heard wonderful speech. So I told myself, ‘May my mother not be bereft! I swear, here am I, a man who is intelligent and a poet, and someone who can well distinguish good from bad! What prevents me from hearing what this man is saying? If what he says is good, I will accept it; if bad, I will reject it.’”

He went on, “So I stayed there until the Messenger of God (SAAS) went off home and I followed him till he went inside his house. Then I went in to him and said, ‘O Muḥammad, your people have told me such-and-such.’

He continued, “And I swear, they so scared me that I stuffed my ears with cotton so as not to hear what you say. But then God insisted on making me hear your words. And I heard fine speech. So explain your situation to me.’

Al-Ṭufayl continued, “And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) explained Islam to me and recited the Qur’an to me and, I swear, I never heard words more sweet than those, nor any matter more just.

“And so I accepted Islam and bore true witness, saying, ‘O Prophet of God, I am a man who is obeyed by his people. I am now returning to them and will invite them to Islam. Pray to God to give me a sign that will help me with them when I do so.’

“And so he said, ‘O God, give him a sign.’

“I then left for home and travelled till I came to a pass that enabled me to look down on to my village. But then there appeared between my eyes a light like that of a lamp. I said to myself, ‘O God, not right in my face, for I fear that they will think it some exemplary punishment that has struck my face for my abandoning my faith.’

“Then the light moved and alighted on the head of my whip. And the villagers watched that light atop my whip that resembled a suspended candle, and they continued to do so as I was descending to them from the pass, right until I was there among them.

“When I dismounted, my father, an aged sheikh, came over to me, but I told him, ‘Off with you, father; you and I must have nothing to do with one another.’

“‘Why is that, my son?’ he asked.

“‘I have accepted Islam, and adopted the religion of Muḥammad (SAAS).’

“‘Well, son, your religion shall be mine.’
"'Then go and wash yourself, clean your clothing and come to me so that I can instruct you in what I have been taught.'

'He did go and wash himself and cleaned his clothing. When he returned, I explained Islam to him and he accepted it.

'Then my wife came to me and I told her, 'Go away; you and I can have nothing to do with one another.'

'Why is that, my father and my mother be your ransom?'

'Islam has divided me from you; I have adopted the religion of Muḥammad (ṢAAS).'

'Well, your religion is mine,' she said.

'I told her, 'Go to the ḥimā, the sacred shrine, of Dhū al-Sharā and purify yourself of it.' Dhū al-Sharā was an idol of Daws and the ḥimā was a shrine around it that they kept sanctified; it had a stream whose water descended from a mountain.

'She replied, 'May my father and mother ransom you, don't you fear something will happen to the children because of Dhū al-Sharā?'

'Not at all; I guarantee that,' I replied.

'She did go and wash herself and, when she returned I explained Islam to her and she accepted it.

'I then called upon the Daws tribe to accept Islam, but they resisted. I went to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in Mecca. I told him, 'O Messenger of God, fornication has defeated me with Daws; say a prayer to God for them.'

'He said, 'O God, lead Daws aright.' Then he said to me, 'Return to your people, preach to them and be kind to them.'

'And so I remained in Daws territory asking them to embrace Islam until the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), emigrated to Medina. Then the battles of Badr, Uhud and the khandaq, the trench, took place. Thereafter I went to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), taking those of my people who had become Muslims, while he was at Khaybar. I set up camp, with some 70 or 80 tents of Daws families at Medina, and then we joined the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at Khaybar; there he gave us an equal share of the spoils, along with the other Muslims.

'I remained with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) until God conquered Mecca through him. Then I asked him, 'O Messenger of God, dispatch me to burn Dhū al-Kaffayn, the idol of 'Amr b. Ḥumāma.'"

'And he did leave to do so. As al-Ṭufayl set fire to the idol he spoke the verse,

'O Dhū al-Kaffayn, I am not one of your worshippers; our history is older than yours;
I have stuffed your heart with fire.'

'He then returned to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and remained at Medina with him until the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) died.
“When the Arabs apostatized, al-Ṭufayl campaigned with the Muslims until they had subdued Ṭulayḥa and all of Nejd. Then he travelled with the Muslim forces to al-Yamāma, his son ʿAmr b. Ṭufayl accompanying him.

“On his way to Yamāma he had a vision and he asked his companions to interpret it to him. He recounted, ‘I saw that my head had been shaved, a bird came forth from my mouth, and a woman met me and placed me in her vagina. Then I saw my son frantically searching for me, but he was withheld from me.’

“‘Let’s hope it’s a good omen,’ they told him.

“He said, ‘I’m going to interpret it myself.’

“What, then?” they asked.

“He explained, ‘The shaving of my head means its being laid down. The bird exiting it is my soul. The woman who placed me in her vagina is the earth that will be dug out for me, and into which I will disappear. As for my son’s searching for me, and then his being kept from me, I see him striving to have happen to him what has happened to me.’

“He was killed, God bless him, as a martyr in al-Yamāma, and his son was severely wounded but later recovered. Eventually he was martyred in the year of the battle of al-Yarmūk, during the caliphate of ʿUmar. God bless him.”

That was how Muḥammad b. Ishaq recounted the story of al-Ṭufayl b. ʿAmr, with an incomplete chain of authorities. There is testimonial to his account to be found in authenticated hadith collections.

Imām ʿAbd al-Muṭṭaqqī al-Bukhārī related this from Abū Nuʿaym, from Suwayn al-Thawrī.

Imām ʿAbd al-Muṭṭaqqī also stated, “Yazīd related to us, Muḥammad b. ʿAmr informed us, from Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra, God be pleased with him, as follows, ‘Al-Ṭufayl b. ʿAmr al-Dawsi arrived with his companions and they said, ‘O Messenger of God, Daws are being disobedient and difficult; say a prayer for them.’”

“Abū Hurayra said, ‘And so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) raised up his hands and I commented, ‘Well, Daws are destroyed!’ But he spoke, ‘O God, give guidance to Daws and bring them (to Islam).’”

The chain of authorities for this is excellent, but the (other) scholars did not narrate it.

The Imām Ahmad stated, “Ṣulaymān b. Ḥarba related to us, quoting Ḥammād b. Zayd, from Ḥajjāj al-Sawwaf, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, that al-Ṭufayl b. ʿAmr al-Dawsi came to the Prophet (ṢAAS) and said, ‘O Messenger of God, don’t you wish you had an impregnable, inaccessible fortress?’ He replied, ‘Daws had a fortress during the jāhiliyya.’”
The Messenger of God (SAAS) rejected that idea because of the rewards God had in store for the ansār, “the Helpers”.

“When the Prophet (SAAS) emigrated to al-Medina, al-Ṭufayl b. ʿAmr joined him, along with another of his people. They hated the town and (the second man, tr.) fell ill and, depressed, took an arrow head and used it to cut between his fingers. Blood streamed from his hands and did not stop until he was dead.

“Al-Ṭufayl saw the man in a dream in pleasant circumstances and observed that he had his hands covered. So he asked him, ‘What did your Lord do?’ He replied, ‘He forgave me because I had gone to join His Prophet (SAAS).’ Al-Ṭufayl asked, ‘Why do I see you covering your hands?’ He answered, ‘I was told that what I had spoiled would never be restored!’”

The account continued, “And al-Ṭufayl recounted this to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who spoke the words, ‘O God, do forgive him for his hands.’”

Muslim related this from Abu Bakr b. Abu Shayba and Ishaq b. Ibrāhim, both of them giving as their source an account of Ibn Harb.

If it were asked, “What is the connection between this hadith and what is established in both canonical collections from al-Ḥasan, from Jundub”, he replied, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘Among those who preceded you there was a man who became afflicted and depressed and so he took a knife and cut open his hand with it, the blood streaming out until he died. And God, Almighty and Glorious is He, said, “He foisted himself too hastily on Me, so I denied him paradise.”’”

And so the answer could have several aspects. One is that the one man might have been a polytheist, the other a believer.

And God may have made of this one action an independent cause of his entering hell. And though his disbelief might have been self-sufficient (to confine him to hell), God none the less made reference to this act so that His people give heed. The second possibility is that the one could have been knowledgeable of what was forbidden, while the other was not, since he had so recently accepted Islam.

The third is that the one could have been doing what he did thinking it permissible, while the other did it knowing it to be impermissible, and, indeed, in error.

The fourth is that the one could have intended to kill himself by his aforementioned action, whereas the other, in contrast, might not have intended to kill himself but have had some other purpose.

The fifth is that the one might have been someone of few good deeds which did not measure up to the gravity of his aforementioned sin and so went to hell, while the other might have been a man of many good deeds which did equal his sin and therefore he did not go to hell but was forgiven because of his having joined the Prophet (SAAS).

The damage, however, did remain, though only in his hands. The rest of his form was good and he only covered the damaged part of it. And so when al-Ṭufayl b. ʿAmr saw him covering his hands and asked him what was the matter with him, he replied, "I was told that what I had spoiled would never be restored." When al-Ṭufayl told this story to the Messenger of God (SAAS) he prayed for him in the words, "O God, do forgive him for his hands." That is, "Do restore of them whatever was damaged."

What is certain is that God did respond to the Messenger of God (SAAS) concerning the companion of al-Ṭufayl b. Ḍamr.

The Story of Aṣḥā b. Qays.

Ibn Hishām stated, "Khallād b. Qurra b. Khalīd al-Sudūsī, and other sheikhs of Bakr b. Wā’il told me, from certain scholars, that Aṣḥā b. Qays b. Tha’labā b. Ṣukāba b. Ṣa‘b b. ‘Ali b. Bakr b. Wā’il went to see the Messenger of God (SAAS) intending to accept Islam. He spoke the following verses in praise of the Messenger of God (SAAS), ‘Did your eyes not close that night, O bleary-eyed one? You lay awake all night through restlessness.

And the sleeplessness was not for love of a woman, for before that you had forgotten your lover of Mahdad,
But I see that fate, that traitor, spoils what my hands restore.
I have thus lost age, youth and wealth, for by God this fate, how it changes!
I have constantly pursued wealth throughout my progression from childhood to youth to maturity to old age.
Daily I raced fast red-grey camels across the distance between al-Nu‘ayr and Sarkhada.
O you enquiring where she has gone, she has an appointment with the people of Yathrib.
And if you enquire about me, then (know that) there are many kind-hearted ones who ask about Aṣḥā, enquiring where he went.
My mount stretches her swift legs and draws them back, carefully turning out her hooves, not splaying them.
Sprightly she is, even in noonday heat, when you would imagine even the afternoon chameleon bending its neck.
I swore I’d not assuage her fatigue nor her sore feet until she reached Muḥammad.
When she should kneel at Ibn Ḥashim’s door, only then would it rest and receive, through his munificence, some generosity.
(He is) a prophet who sees what you do not, whose fame, I swear, has spread high and low in the land.
He has gifts and favours that do not end, and his giving today does not prevent him giving tomorrow.
Did you not, I repeat, hear the advice of Muḥammad, the Prophet of God, when he preached and testified?
If you did not travel with cargo of piety and after death met with others who have done so,
You will surely regret not being like them; so, therefore, prepare for a fate that is definitely arranged.
Beware of carrion; do not approach it, and do not take the share of that which some weapon has already allotted (to others)

And do not venerate raised monuments, nor worship idols, but pray to God alone.

Do not go near a free woman; her privacy is forbidden you; marry or be celibate.

Do not cut off ties with your relatives for some motive, nor take them as captives under restraint.

And glorify God at evening and at morning; do not praise the devil; praise only God. Do not ridicule those suffering poverty, and do not consider wealth man's way to eternity.'

Ibn Hishām stated, "And when al-Ă’shā was in Mecca or near thereto, some Quraysh polytheists stopped him and asked what business he had there. He told them that he had come seeking the Messenger of God (SAAS).

"One of the Quraysh commented, 'But Abī Başīr, he is forbidding sex!' Al-Ă’shā responded, 'I swear, that's no desire of mine.'

"'But he's also forbidding wine,' the man objected.

"'Well, that's something I do hold dear; I'll go off and have my fill of it for a year, then I'll come back and accept Islam!'

"And leave he did. But he died that same year without returning to the Messenger of God (SAAS)."

Thus does Ibn Hishām tell this story here. He extracts a great deal from Muhammad Ibn Ishaq, God bless him, and this is one thing added to his account by Ibn Hishām, God bless him!

Wine was not in fact forbidden in Medina until after the fighting with the Banū al-Nādīr, as will be explained hereafter.

It is apparent that the decision of al-Ă’shā to accept Islam was taken only after the migration. There is evidence for this in his poetry. One verse reads,

"0 you enquiring where she has gone, she has an appointment with the people of Yathrib."

It would have been more appropriate for Ibn Hishām to have recounted this anecdote within material relating to the post-migration period, rather than here. But God knows best.

Al-Suhayli stated, "This is an error on the part of Ibn Hishām and those who follow him, for everyone agrees that use of wine was only prohibited in Medina after the battle of Uhud."

He has also stated, "It is said that the person who spoke to al-Ă’shā was Abū Jahl b. Hishām in the house of Ṣūba b. Rabī‘a."

Abū Ubayda, however, related that the one who spoke to him thus was Āmir b. al-Tufayl in Qays territory while he was on his way to the Messenger of God (SAAS).

He stated, "And his saying '... then I will come to him and accept Islam' definitely does not bring him out of a state of disbelief. But God knows best."
Ibn Ishaq at this point recounted the story of the man from Irash and how he appealed to the Messenger of God (SAAS) against Abu Jahl over the price of a camel he had sold him, and how God abased Abu Jahl and forced him to make payment for it at the agreed time.

We recounted this in the material relating to the beginning of the revelation and the consequent harm done by the polytheists.

The Story of the contest with Rukana and how the Prophet (SAAS) showed him a tree that he summoned and it came to him.

Ibn Ishaq quoted his father, Ishaq b. Yasar, as having related to him as follows:

"Rukana b. 'Abd Yazid b. Hashim b. al-Muttalib b. 'Abd Manaf was the strongest man of Quraysh.

"Once he was alone in one of the defiles of Mecca with the Messenger of God (SAAS), who asked him, 'Rukana, won't you fear God and accept my invitation to you?'

"He replied, 'If I knew that what you say is true, I would follow you.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked him, 'If I were to wrestle you down would you know that what I say is true?'

"'Yes, I would,' Rukana replied.

"'Come on then, let's wrestle,' the Messenger of God (SAAS) said.

"And so Rukana did wrestle with him and when the Messenger of God (SAAS) went after him, he threw him down, powerless.

"Rukana then said, 'Another round, Muhammadi!'

"Once again he threw him. Rukana then said, 'Muhammadi, I swear, Muhammadi, this is amazing! Can you really throw me?'

"He replied, 'I'll show you something even more amazing, if you like, if you will fear God and follow me.'

"'What is it?'

"'I'll call out to that tree you see and it will come to me.'

"'Call for it then.'

"He did so and it came and stood there right before the Messenger of God (SAAS). Then he told it, 'Go back to your place!' And it did so.

"And so Rukana went to his people and told them, 'O Banu 'Abd Manaf, you could have your man compete in magic with the whole world. I swear I've never seen a better magician than him.' He then recounted to them what he had seen and what he had done."

Ibn Ishaq related this story thus, with an incomplete line of transmission.

Abu Da'ud al-Tirmidhi related, from an account of Abu al-Hasan al-Ashkalanî, from Abu Ja'far b. Muhammadi b. Rukana, from his father, Rukana, who said he had wrestled the Prophet (SAAS) who had defeated him. Then al-Tirmidhi commented, 'Strange! We know nothing of Abu al-Hasan, nor of Rukana's son.'
My comment is that Abū Bakr al-Shāfi‘ī related, with an excellent chain of authorities, from Ibn ‘Abbas, God bless them both, that Yazīd b. Rukāna wrestled the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who threw him three times, each time for a wager of 100 sheep. The third time Rukāna said, ‘Muhammad, no one has ever put my back on the ground before you, and no one was more hateful in my sight before this than you! I testify that there is no god but God, and that you are the Messenger of God.’ At that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stood up from him and gave him back his sheep.

As for the story of his calling out to the tree and its going to him, many accounts of that, from several excellent sources, will appear in the chapter on “Proofs of Prophethood” after this biography, if God wills it, and in Him is our trust.

Earlier on, it was reported from Abī al-Ashdin that he (Rukāna) wrestled the Prophet (ṢAAS) who threw him.

After this Ibn Ishaq related the story of the arrival in Mecca of the Christians from Abyssinia, some 20 riders in number. They all embraced Islam. We gave this earlier, after the story of the Negus. And to God be all praise and credit.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) used to have some of his most vulnerable Companions sit close by him in the mosque, such Muslims as Khabbab, ‘Ammār, Abū Fukayha Yūsuf, the freed-man of Ṣafwān b. Umayya and Ṣuhayb. Quraysh would ridicule these people, telling one another, ‘These are his companions, as you see, but has God really chosen them from among us to receive guidance and the true religion? If what Muhammad brought were any good, they would not have joined him first; God would certainly not have put them before us.’”

And so God, Almighty and Glorious is He, revealed, “Do not drive away those who pray to their Lord morning and night seeking His face. You are not accountable for them in the least, nor are they for you. If you repulse them you will be acting unjustly. Thus have we put some to the test through others, so that they would say, ‘Are they those of us whom God has favoured?’ ‘Does God not know best who gives thanks?’ And when those who believe in our revelation come to you then say, ‘Peace be upon you; your Lord has prescribed for Himself mercy so that if one of you does wrong in ignorance, then later repents and reforms – He is indeed merciful, forgiving’” (ṣūrat al-An‘ām; VI, v.52–4).

He went on: “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) used often to sit at al-Marwa near the shop of a young Christian named Jabr, a slave of the Banū al-Hadrami. People would say, ‘By God, it is merely Jabr who teaches Muhammad most of what he says!’

“And so God Almighty revealed about their saying that, ‘It is merely some mortal who teaches him. The language of him to whom they allude is foreign; yet this language is plain Arabic’” (ṣūrat al-Naḥl; XVI, v.105).
Then Ibn Ishāq recounts how surat al-Kawthar (CVIII) was revealed concerning al-Ṣāḥib b. Wā'il when he said of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), “He is without a male child, that is, he has no male offspring. If he dies, memory of him will be gone.” And so God Almighty stated, “He who hates you shall be childless.” That is, he would not be remembered after his death, even if he were to have thousands of offspring. For remembrance, reputation and credibility do not depend on multiplicity of children and offspring. We discussed this surat in our Tafsir (Exegesis). And to God be all praise.

It has been related from Abū Ja‘fār al-Baqir that al-Ṣāḥib b. Wā’il said the above following the death of al-Qāsim, the son of the Prophet (ṢAAS). He had reached an age when he could ride a mule and sit on a thoroughbred mount.

Ibn Ishāq then related the revelation of the verse “... and they say, ‘Now if only an angel had been sent down to him.’ If We had sent down an angel, it would all have been finished!” (surat al-An‘ām; VI, v.8).

This referred to Ubayy b. Khalaf, Zaynāb b. al-Aswad, al-Ṣāḥib b. Wā’il and al-Nadr b. al-Ḥārith having said, “If only God had sent down for you an angel to tell the people about you.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS), so we have been told, passed by al-Walid b. al-Mughira, Umayya b. Khalaf and Abū Jahl b. Hishām, and they insulted and mocked him. This angered him, and at that God Almighty revealed about them, ‘Prophets before you were mocked, but it was their mocking that trapped them’” (surat al-An‘ām; VI, v.10).

I observe that God Almighty also stated, “Prophets before you were mocked. Yet they bore with fortitude the falsehoods and persecutions until Our help came to them. No one can change the words of God. And you have received information about the messengers sent” (surat al-An‘ām; VI, v.34). And the Almighty also said, “We will protect you against those who mock” (surat al-Ḥajar; XV, v.95).

“He then pointed out to him al-Aswad b. al-Muṭṭalib and Gabriel gestured towards his neck, saying, ‘So much for him!’

“He then pointed out al-Aswad b. Abū Yaghūth and Gabriel gestured to his head, saying, ‘So much for him!’

“He then pointed to al-Ḥārith b. ‘Ayṭil and Gabriel gestured to his stomach, saying, ‘So much for him!’

“Then al-Ṣāḥib b. Wā’il passed by and Gabriel gestured towards the sole of his foot, saying, ‘So much for him!’

“As for Al-Walid, he later stopped by a man from Khuzā‘a who was mounting feathers on an arrow for him, but the arrow struck his fingertips and severed them.
“Al-Aswad b. 'Abd Yaghuth had ulcers grow out of his head, and he died of them.

“Al-Aswad b. al-Muṭṭalib went blind. The cause of that was that he once dismounted under a gum tree and began calling out, ‘O Son, help, can’t you protect me! I’m dead!’ His companions responded that they could see nothing, but he repeated, ‘O Son, can’t you protect me? I’m perishing! I’m being pricked with thorns in my eyes!’ Again they said they saw nothing, but he kept saying the same until his eyes were blind.

“Al-Ḥārith b. 'Aytil was afflicted with yellow bile in his stomach until his excrement emerged from his mouth and he died of that.

“Al-Ḳāṣ b. Wā'il one day had a thorn enter his head and caused it to be filled (with pus), and he died of this.’

Others, however, narrate this account thus: ‘... and he rode to Ta'if on a donkey that let him down on to a thorn and it pierced the sole of his foot and killed him.’

Al-Bayhaqi related this tradition in much the same way.

Ibn Ishāq stated, ‘The chief men who engaged in ridicule, as I was told by Yazid b. Rawmān, from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, were five in number. They were all men of maturity and highly regarded among their people. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) spoke a curse against al-Aswad b. al-Muṭṭalib Abū Zam'a: ‘O God, blind his sight and make him bereft of his son!’

“The others were al-Aswad b. 'Abd Yaghuth, al-Walīd b. al-Mughīra, al-Ḳāṣ b. Wā'il, and al-Ḥārith b. al-Ṭalāṭil.’

He also recounted that Almighty God revealed about them, ‘Announce what you have been ordered, and turn aside from the polytheists. We will take care of the mockers for you, those who establish another god alongside God. They shall learn!’ (ṣūrat al-Ḥajar; XV, v.94–6).

He related, ‘Gabriel came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), while these men were circumambulating the ka'ba. Gabriel stood up, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at his side, while al-Aswad b. al-Muṭṭalib went by. Gabriel threw a green leaf into his face and he became blind.

“Al-Aswad b. 'Abd Yaghuth next passed and Gabriel pointed at his stomach. It became swollen and so he died of dropsy.

“Al-Walīd b. al-Mughīra went by and Gabriel pointed at the scar of a wound at the base of his ankle that he had suffered years before when he had passed by a man of Khuzā'a re-feathering an arrow, the head of which had caught on his robe and slightly cut him. After this, however, it burst open and so he died.

“Al-Ḳāṣ b. Wā'il passed and Gabriel pointed to the underside of his foot. Al-Ḳāṣ later left on a donkey for Ta'if. The donkey threw him on to a thorn which pierced his foot and killed him.

“Al-Ḥārith b. al-Ṭalāṭil went by and Gabriel pointed at his head. It filled with pus and so killed him.’
Ibn Ishaq then stated, “When al-Walid b. al-Mughira felt the approach of death he made a request of his three sons Khalid, Hisham, and al-Walid by name. He told them, ‘Sons, I charge you with three tasks. My blood is on Khuzâ‘a, and do not leave it unreveled. I well know that they are innocent of it, but I fear that you may be maligned by it later. Thaqîf have debts owing me. Don’t leave them alone until you get paid. And my dowry money is with Abu Uzayhir al-Dawrî; don’t let him keep it from you.’ Abu Uzayhir had married al-Walid to a daughter of his but later had kept her from him and had not let him in to her up to the time he died. And he had taken the money al-Walid had paid for her, which was her dowry.

“When he died the Banû Makhzûm hastened to Khuzâ‘a seeking from them blood money for al-Walid. They said, ‘It was an arrow of one of your men that killed him!’ Khuzâ‘a refused and they spoke angry poetry against one another, and the situation deteriorated greatly between them. But then Khuzâ‘a did pay some of the blood-money, and they made peace and reconciled.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Then Hisham b. al-Walid attacked and killed Abu Uzayhir while he was at the Dhu al-Majzû market.

“He was a chief of his tribe and his daughter was Abu Sufyân’s wife. This happened after the battle of Badr. Yazid b. Abu Sufyân went out and gathered his men against the Banû Makhzûm since his father was then absent. When Abu Sufyân returned he was angered by what his son Yazid had done and berated and struck him for it. He then paid the blood price for Abu Uzayhir and told his son, ‘Did you plan to have Quraysh kill one another over one man from Daws?’

‘Hassan b. Thabit wrote an ode goading Abu Sufyân over the spilling of Abu Uzayhir’s blood. Regarding this poem, Abu Sufyân commented, ‘It’s a really bad idea of Hassan that we should kill one another, now, after our chiefs died at the battle of Badr.’

“When Khalid b. al-Walid accepted Islam and was present at Ta‘if with the Messenger of God (SAAS), he asked the latter for payment of the interest due his father from the people of Ta‘if.”

Ibn Ishâq went on, “Some scholars informed me that the following verses were revealed about this, ‘O you who believe, fear God and give up whatever interest payments are due, if you are indeed believers’” (surat al-Baqara; II; v.278).

Ibn Ishâq stated, “And we know of no vengeance taken by Abu Uzayhir’s people up to when Islam put an end to conflict between these men. Although Dirar b. al-Khaṭṭab b. Mirdâs al-Aslami left with a group of Quraysh men into Daws territory. There they stayed with a woman named Umm Ghaylân, a freed-woman of Daws. She would comb the women’s hair and prepare brides for marriage. The Daws wanted to kill the Quraysh for killing Abu Uzayhir, but Umm Ghaylân and some women who were with her stood in their way and protected the Quraysh men.”

Al-Suhayli said, “It is said that she hid him inside her clothing.”
Ibn Hisham said, “In the days when 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb ruled, Umm Ghaylān came to him, believing that 'Dirār was his brother. 'Umar told her, ‘I am only his brother in Islam. I know of your favour to him. He gave her a gift as though she were a traveller.’”

He went on, “'Dirār b. al-Khaṭṭāb met up with 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb at the battle of Uhud, and began striking him with the flat of his spear, saying, ‘Save yourself, Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, I shall not kill you!’ 'Umar thus acknowledged this act of his after Islam. God bless them both.

DIVISION

Al-Bayḥaqī related at this point the imprecation of the Prophet (ṣaṣ) against Quraysh when they withheld from him, resulting in seven years similar to the seven in Joseph’s case.

His account tallies with those in the sahih collections narrated through al-ʾA ḥam, from Muslim b. Ṣubayh, from Masrūq, from Ibn Musʿūd. He (the Prophet (ṣaṣ)) said, “Five things have come to pass; al-lizām, the punishment, the Romans, the ‘smoke,’ the conflict, and the moon.”

There is an account from Ibn Musʿūd saying, “When Quraysh rejected the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ), and refrained from accepting Islam, he (the Prophet (ṣaṣ)) said, ‘O God, bring down upon Quraysh for me the seven years like those for Joseph!’

The account went on, “And they were afflicted for a year until everything was completely ruined. They were reduced to eating carrion, and some, out of hunger, hallucinated so that they would imagine seeing smoke all the way to the heavens. Then he prayed, and God gave them relief. ʿAbd Allāh (b. Musʿūd) thereafter recited the following verse, ‘We are withdrawing from you the punishment for a while; but you will revert’ (sūrat al-Dukhān; XLIV, v.15). They did revert and disbelieved, and so were put off till Judgement Day. Or he said, ‘and they were put off till the battle of Badr.’ ʿAbd Allāh said, ‘If the reference were really to Judgement Day, he would not have exposed them to the words, ‘... the day when we confront them with the great conflict. We will take revenge!’ (sūrat al-Dukhān; XLIV, v.16). He said, ‘At the battle of Badr.’

In (another) account from him, he said, “When the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ) saw the people backing away, he said, ‘O God, (inflict) seven years (of calamity) like those of Joseph.’ And so they suffered a year so bad that they ate carrion, leather and bones. Abū Sufyān and other Meccans came to him and said, ‘O Muḥammad, you claim to have been given your mission of mercy. Here your people are perishing. Pray to God for them.’

“And so the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ) did say a prayer and profuse rain descended on them. It poured down on them for seven days and people complained about the volume of rain. And so he said the words, ‘O God, around us, but not upon us!' The clouds were then withdrawn from above his head, and the people around them were watered."

He said, "The verse of surah al-Dukhān was mentioned earlier and it referred to the starvation that had afflicted them. This refers to God's statement, 'We are withdrawing from you the punishment for a while; but you will revert.' And the verses of surah al-Rūm (XXX), and those referring to the 'grievous hold' (of surah al-Dukhān; XLIV, v.16), and the 'splitting of the moon' (of surah al-Qamar; LIV, v.1), all came true at the battle of Badr."

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "What he means, though God alone knows best, is that the 'grievous hold', 'the smoke' and the verse relating to the lizām, God's punishment, all these (prophecies) came true at the battle of Badr."

He said, "Al-Bukhāri made reference to this account. He then mentioned it through 'Abd al-Razzāq from Ma'amār, from Ayyūb, from 'Ikrima, from Ibn 'Abbās, in the words, 'Abū Sufyān came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) seeking relief from the hunger because they had nothing to eat, even consuming spoiled meat. God Almighty then revealed the words, 'We brought punishment down on them, but they would not submit to their Lord, nor were they humble' (surah al-Mu'minīna; XXIII, v.76). And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) said a prayer for them, so that God gave them relief.'

The hāfiz al-Bayhaqi stated, "There is given in the story relating to Abū Sufyān material suggesting that it applied to the period after the migration. Perhaps it happened twice. God knows best."

DIVISION

Then al-Bayhaqi related the story of the Persians and the Byzantines and Almighty God's revelation of the verses: "Alif. Lam. Mīm. The Byzantines have been defeated in the neighbouring territory, yet after their defeat they will overcome, after a few years. God makes the decision, both before and after. And on a certain day the believers will rejoice at God's assistance. God assists whomever He wishes, for He is the Almighty, the Merciful" (surah al-Rūm; XXX, v.2).

He then related through Sufyān al-Thawrī, from Ḥālib b. Abū 'Amr, from Sa'id b. Jubayr, from Ibn 'Abbās, who said, "The Muslims would have liked the Byzantines to be victorious over the Persians because the former were the 'People of the Book'. The polytheists wanted the Persians to overcome the Byzantines because the former were idol worshippers. The Muslims mentioned this to Abū Bakr, who spoke about it with the Prophet (SAAS). The latter commented, 'They will prevail.' Abū Bakr related this to the polytheists who said, 'Set a term for us and if they do prevail, then you get so-and-so while if our side wins we get so-and-so.' Abū Bakr then related this to the Prophet (SAAS), who said, 'So now I've made it a wager!' He went on, 'In less than ten (days).’ And thereafter the Byzantines were victorious."
We gave various lines of transmission for this hadith in our Tafsir (Exegesis) and recounted that the one who engaged in the wager with Abū Bakr was Umayya b. Khalaf, that the bet was for five young ostriches and that it had a time limit. To this “the Trusting”, Abū Bakr, made an increased bet on the orders of the Messenger of God (SAAS). The victory did go to the Byzantines over the Persians and it occurred on the day the battle of Badr was fought. Or it may have been the day of the Ḥudaybiyya truce. God knows best.

It is also related through al-Walid b. Muslim, who said, “Usayd al-Kilābī related to us that he heard al-‘Al‘ā’ b. al-Zubayr al-Kilābī relate from his father, as follows, ‘I saw the victory of the Persians over the Byzantines and then that of the Byzantines over the Persians. I then saw the victory of the Muslims over both Rome and Persia, and their conquering of Syria and Iraq. And all of that over a period of 15 years!’”

Section: Concerning the isrā’, the night journey, of the Messenger of God (SAAS) from Mecca to Jerusalem, his ascent from there to heaven, and the signs he saw there.

Ibn ‘Asâkir related traditions about the night journey in materials telling of the early beginnings of the mission. Ibn Ishaq, however, gave them in this location, some ten years after the mission.

Al-Bayhaqi related, through Mūsā b. Uqba, from al-Zuhri whom he quoted as saying, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) was taken on the night journey one year prior to his departure to Medina.”

He said, “And Ibn Lahi‘a related it thus, from Abū al-Aswad, from Urwa.”

Also, Al-Ḥākim related, from al-Asamm, from Ahmad b. ‘Abd al-Jabbar, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Asbāt b. Naṣr, from Ismā‘il al-Suddi, who said, “The five daily prayers were enjoined upon the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Jerusalem the night of his journey there, 16 months prior to his emigration.”

According to al-Suddi’s statement, then, the night journey occurred in the month of Dhū al-Qa‘da, whereas the reports of al-Zuhri and Urwa place it in Rabi‘ al-Awwal.

Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba stated, “Uthmān related to us, from Sa‘d b. Mīnā, that Jābir and Ibn ‘Abbās said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) was born in the year of the elephant, Monday the 12th of Rabi‘ al-Awwal, and on that same day and month he was appointed Prophet, was taken up to heaven, emigrated, and died.’”

The chain of transmission of the aforementioned hadith is flawed. The ḥāfiz ʿAbd al-Ghānī b. Sūrīr al-Maqdisī, however, included it in his biography, and he also quoted a tradition whose chain of authorities is unsound. We made mention of it in the material relating to the virtues of the month of Rajab. This tradition states that the night journey took place on the night of the 27th of Rajab. But God knows best.
There are some who claim that the night journey took place on the first Friday night of Rajab, this having been the “night of the al-ragha’ib”, the night of the great gifts, wherein the common system of prayer was first established. But there is no foundation for that. But God knows best. Some recite the following line concerning this:

“It was a Friday night when the Prophet was made to ascend, the night of Friday, the first of Rajab.”

This poetry is somewhat weak, but we have quoted it merely as testimonial for those who maintain this.

We gave reference to the traditions relating to this in detail regarding God’s words, “Glory be to Him who carried His worshipper on a journey by night from the masjid al-haram, the ‘sacrosanct mosque’, to the masjid al-aqṣā, the ‘further mosque’, whose precincts We had blessed that We may show him Our signs. He it is who hears all, sees all” (surat al-Isrā; XVII, v.1).

Let us then record herewith the lines of authority and the sources and the support for or criticism of these. This will be convincing and sufficient in itself. And all praise and credit goes to God.

We will give here the gist of the words of Ibn Ishaq, God bless him. Having recounted the earlier sections, he went on, “Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) was taken by night from the masjid al-haram to the masjid al-aqṣā, the latter being the holy temple of Aelia. By then Islam had spread in Mecca into Quraysh and all the Arab tribes.”

He continued, “Concerning the night journey of the Messenger of God (SAAS), I learned what follows from a hadith that came down from Ibn Mus‘ūd, Abū Sa‘īd, ʿĀlīsha, Mu‘āwiya, Umm Hānī, daughter of Abū Ṭalib, God bless them all, and al-Ḥasan b. Abū al-Ḥasan, Ibn Hishām al-Zuhri, Qatāda and other scholars. Individually they gave information that combines in this account.

“The night journey of the Messenger of God (SAAS) was filled with trials and tribulations and (instances) of God’s power and authority; it provides a lesson for men of intelligence, a guidance, a mercy and an affirmation for those with faith and belief. It was certainly an act of God.

“He carried him on this journey as and how He wished, to show him those of His signs He so desired. He thus surveyed some of the might of God, His will, power and authority by which He accomplishes His purposes.

“ʿAbd Allah b. Mas‘ūd would say, as I have been informed, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS), was brought al-Burāq, that being the name of a mount on which previous prophets were carried; its stride was such that it could place its hooves as far as it could see. He was borne away on it.

“His companion (Gabriel) then took him off to see the signs between heaven and earth. Eventually he reached Jerusalem, where he found Abraham, Moses and Jesus, in a company of prophets assembled for him. He led them in prayer.
“Then he was brought three vessels, containing milk, wine and water. He said that he drank the vessel of milk and was told by Gabriel, ‘You have been given guidance, and so has your nation.’”

Ibn Ishaq related through al-Hasan al-BAṣrī, but with an incomplete line of transmission, that Gabriel woke him up then conducted him to the door of the masjid al-ḥarām, where he set him upon al-Burāq, a white mount that was a cross between a mule and a donkey; on its flanks it had wings with which it set its feet in motion. It could place its hooves as far ahead as it could see. The account quotes the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) as saying, “He placed me upon it and then took me away, he not out-distancing me, nor I him.”

I may add that in the hadith, which came down from Qatāda, as related by Ibn Ishaq, it says that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was about to mount al-Burāq, it became restive and so Gabriel placed his hand upon its neck where the mane grows and said, “Now Burāq, aren’t you ashamed to do that? I swear, no servant of God more noble than Muhammad has ever ridden you.” He commented, “And it was so ashamed it burst out in sweat, then quietened down until I mounted it.”

Al-Hasan stated, in his hadith, “And so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) departed, Gabriel accompanying him, until they reached Jerusalem. There he found Abraham, Moses and Jesus among a group of prophets. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) acted as their Imam and led them in prayer.”

He then explained his choice of the vessel of milk over that of the wine, and how Gabriel told him, “You have been given guidance, as has your nation, and you have been forbidden wine.”

He went on, “And then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) departed for Mecca and set about telling Quraysh of all that.”

He recounted that most of the people disbelieved him and that one group reneged after having previously accepted Islam.

Abū Bakr, “the Trusting”, responded by expressing his belief and said, “I give him credence in communication from heaven, early in the day or in the evening, so how should I not believe him regarding Jerusalem?”

(In his account al-Hasan) recounts that Abū Bakr asked him to describe Jerusalem, and that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did so.

And, he states, “From that day on Abū Bakr was known as al-Ṣiddīq, ‘the Trusting’.”

Al-Hasan said, “And on that subject God revealed, ‘And we rendered the visions we showed you nothing but a way of testing people’” (sūrat al-Isrā’; XVII, v.60).

Ibn Ishaq related, quoting Umm Ḥanīfah as his source, that she said, “It was from nowhere but my home that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) made his night journey. He slept that night after having made the final evening prayer. When it was just before dawn he woke us up and when it was morning we prayed together and he said, ‘O Umm Hānē?’ last evening I prayed with you in this valley, then I went to Jerusalem and prayed there. And now here I am having said the morning prayer with you, as you see.’

‘He then arose to leave, but I took hold of the hem of his cloak and said, ‘O Messenger of God, do not make that statement to people; they will surely disbelieve you and do you harm.’

‘But he replied, ‘By God, I will certainly tell it to them!’ And he did tell them and they did disbelieve.’

Ibn Ishaq went on (and the Prophet (ṢAAS) told the sceptical, tr.) “And the proof of this is that I passed by the caravan of such-and-such a tribe in such-and-such a valley, and the sound of the animal (al-Buraq) startled them and so one of their camels ran away. I led them to it, being then on my way to al-Shām.
Then I continued on until I reached Dajanān, where I passed a caravan of such-and-such a tribe. I found the people asleep. They had a vessel with water in it that they had covered over with something. I took off the cover and drank the water and replaced its cover. And the proof of this is that their caravan is now making its way down from the pass at al-Tanīm al-Bayḍa. Leading it is an ash-coloured camel on which are two sacks, one of which is black, the other black and white.

‘On hearing this, people hurried to the pass. The first camel, which was as he had described to them, was insufficient proof for them, so they asked about the vessel and the camel, and those in the caravan did tell them just as the Prophet (ṢAAS) had recounted.”

Yūnus b. Bukayr related, from Asbāt, from Ismā‘īl al-Suddi, that the sun had almost set before that caravan arrived and so he prayed to God, Almighty and Glorious is He, who slowed it down until they came, just as he had described it to them.

He stated, “And the sun was never slowed for anyone except on that day for him, and also for Yūsha‘ (Joshua) b. Nūn.”

Al-Bayhaqi related this account.

heard the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) say, “When I had finished in Jerusalem, the mirāj, the ladder, was brought to me. Never before did I see anything finer; it is that to which your dying turn their eyes at the point of death.

“‘My companion (Gabriel) led me up it until I reached one of the gates of heaven known as the bāb al-hāfi?‘, ‘the guards’ gate’. It is overseen by an attendant who is an angel, and his name is Ismā‘īl. He commands 12,000 angels, each of whom controls 12,000 more.’”

“He (Abū Sa‘īd) stated, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) whenever he tells this hadith recites, “And no one but He knows the armies of your Lord” (ṣūrat al-Muddaththir; LXXIV, v.34).
He then recounted the remainder of the hadith and it is very lengthy. We gave it in full with all its lines of transmission in our Tafsir (Exegesis), and discussed it there. It is one of the strangest of hadiths, and there is some weakness in its line of transmission.

The same is true of the text of the hadith of Umm Hani. What is well established in the sahihayn is the account of Shurayk b. Abii Nimr, from Anas, that the "night journey" took place from the mosque (the ka'ba), at the hijr, the sacred enclosure.

There are also several peculiarities in that text which we have discussed there. One such is his statement, "And this occurred before he received revelation." The fact is that their (the angels) coming on the first occasion was before he received revelation, but on that night nothing occurred. Then, on another night, the angels did come to him. So, he was not referring to the latter occasion when he said, "And that was before revelation came to him." In fact, he (Gabriel) came to him after he had received revelation.

The "night journey" certainly occurred after revelation (began), either shortly thereafter, as one group maintains, or much later, perhaps by as much as ten years, as others claim. And the latter is more likely.

The cleansing of his chest (by the angel) before the night journey was the second, or some say the third cleansing, and it was a prerequisite for the assembly on high and the Divine Presence.

He then rode upon al-Burāq, this being in veneration and honour of him. When he came to Jerusalem, he (Gabriel) inducted him into that circle by which the prophets were joined. He then entered Jerusalem and prayed at its prayer niche in salutation to that mosque.

Hudhayfa, God be pleased with him, denied his entry into Jerusalem, his tying up his mount, and his praying there. And this is strange. And a text that is affirmative is preferable to one that is negative.

There is also disagreement over his meeting the prophets and leading them in prayer, as to whether it was prior to his ascent to heaven, as the preceding account shows, or after his descent from there, as some accounts indicated. We will state that this latter view is to be preferred. But God knows best.

It is also said that his prayer with the prophets took place in heaven. Also there is disagreement over whether his making a choice between the vessels of milk, wine and water occurred in Jerusalem, as given above, or in heaven, as established in authentic traditions.

What is implied is that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) finished in Jerusalem the miraj, the ladder, was set up for him; this was the ladder he used to ascend to heaven. The ascent was not upon al-Burāq, as some people imagine. Al-Burāq was tethered at the door of the mosque in Jerusalem to take him back to Mecca.
He rose one heaven to another on the ladder until he passed over the seventh heaven. Whenever he reached a heaven its favoured attendants and the most important angels and prophets therein would meet him.

He made reference to major persons from among the mursalin, the messengers of God, like Adam in the nearest heaven, John and Jesus in the second, Idris in the fourth, Moses in the sixth, and Abraham in the seventh, leaning his back against the bayt al-ma'mur, the "eternal abode", that is entered each day by 70,000 angels who worship therein in prayer and circumambulation, and they do not return there again until Judgement Day.

He then ascended above their ranks and reached a level where the squeaking of pens could be heard. There the sidrat al-muntahā, the "lote tree at the boundary", stood high before the Messenger of God (SAAS); its leaves were like the ears of an elephant, its fruit like summits of Mt. Hidjr, and covered all about by great deeds and many splendid colours, with angels perching upon it as numerous as starlings on a tree. And there was a canopy of gold, bathed in the light of our Lord, All-Glorious is He.

There also he saw Gabriel, peace be upon him. He had upon him 600 wings with the space between each two wings as great as that between heaven and earth. It is Gabriel of whom God Almighty spoke thus: "And he certainly saw him in another revelation, at the sidrat al-muntahā, at which is the garden of eternity. When the tree was shrouded in its covering, sight did not turn aside, nor did it exceed its bound" (sūrat al-Najm; LIII, v.13-17). That is, it (i.e. sight, tr.) did not turn aside to the right or to the left, nor did it look up at that which was out of bounds.

This was both tremendous fortitude (on the part of Muhammad) and a great show of respect (for God).

This second vision (that he had) of Gabriel, peace be upon him, in the natural form in which God created him, is in accord with the statements transmitted by Ibn Mus'ūd, Abū Hurayra, Abū Dharr and 'A'īsha, God be pleased with them all.

The first vision (that Muḥammad had of Gabriel) was, in the words of the Almighty, when, "(an) all-powerful (angel) taught him, the one endowed with supreme power, who (appeared) in his natural form while in the highest point on the horizon. He then drew near and came close, until he was two bow lengths away, or closer. Then he made his revelation to His servant" (sūrat al-Najm; LIII, v.6-10).

That took place at al-Abtāh. Gabriel stretched out over the Messenger of God (SAAS), the enormity of his being dominating all between earth and sky, until there was only the space of a bow's length or two between them both.

7. A reference to the Islamic belief that angels, working as scribes in the service of God, record the fate and destiny of the universe as dictated to them by Him.
8. A tree believed to be positioned to the right side of God's throne.
9. The name of a place near Mecca.
This is what is authentic in the exegesis, as is affirmed by the words of the eminent Companions mentioned heretofore, God be pleased with them all. As for Shurayk’s comment about Anas concerning the tradition relating to the night journey, “and then al-jabbār, the Omnipotent, the Lord of Glory drew close and descended, becoming as close as a bow’s length or two,” this might be the understanding of the reciter, and so he inserted it into the hadith. But God knows best.

Even if this interpretation is correctly preserved, it is no interpretation of the holy verse, but relates to something quite different from that at issue. But God knows best.

It was on that night that God Almighty and Glorious enjoined the daily prayers upon His servant Muḥammad (God’s peace and blessings be upon him and upon his nation); these were to number fifty prayers each day and night. Thereafter he repeatedly went between Moses and his Lord, Almighty and Glorious is He, until finally the Lord, All Resplendent is He, and to Him is all credit due, decreed that they be five. He stated, “They are five and (yet) they are fifty, credit being ten times the number.”

That evening speech came to him directly from the Lord, Almighty and Glorious is He. The Imāms of the orthodox faith are unanimous regarding this. They differ regarding his seeing Him. Some consider that he saw God twice, in his heart. Ibn ʿAbbās and his adherents maintain this. Ibn ʿAbbās generalized (in discussion) about the vision, but others have offered a more narrow interpretation.

Those who spoke in general terms about the vision include Abū Hurayra and Ahmad b. Ḥanbal, God be pleased with them.

Some authorities, however, state their conviction that the vision was by means of his eyes.

Ibn Jarir preferred this and insisted upon it, being followed in this by others of the more recent authorities.

Among those considering that the sight occurred through the naked eyes included Sheikh Abū al-Ḥasan al-Ashʿarī, as reported by al-Suhaylī and it is the preferred view of Sheikh Abū Zakariyyā al-Nawawī in his fatwa, his legal decisions.

One faction maintains that the vision never occurred, because of the hadith in the saḥih collection of Muslim, from Abū Dharr. It states, “I said, ‘O Messenger of God, did you see your Lord?’ He replied, ‘A light! How could I have seen it!’ In another account the words are, ‘I saw a light.’”

These scholars say that the sight of the Everlasting could never be through eyes that are ephemeral.

Therefore God Almighty said to Moses, as is reported in certain holy texts, “O Moses, no mortal being can see me until he dies, nor any dry thing until it moves.”

10. The plural of fatwa, a term used to denote the pronouncements of a mufti, one who delivers formal legal opinions.
The dispute over this question perplexed the early scholars just as it does those who succeeded them. God alone knows best.

Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) came back down to Jerusalem. And it seems clear that the prophets descended with him to express their respect for him on his return from the glorious Divine Presence, as is the custom for those who visit; visitors do not assemble with others before meeting that person to whom they have been summoned.

That is why when he passed by one of them Gabriel would say, as each approached to greet him, “This is so-and-so; greet him.”

If he had met with them before his ascent he would not have needed introduction to them a second time.

Substantiation for this is given in his saying, “And when it was time for the prayer, I acted as their Imam.” The only time for that, then, would have been the dawn prayer. He came forward as their Imam on the instruction of Gabriel, relaying what his Lord, Almighty and Glorious is He, told him.

Some scholars deduce from this that the most eminent Imam takes precedence over the master of the house, since Jerusalem was their (the other prophets) place of residence.

He then left there, riding on al-Burāq, and returned to Mecca. Next morning he was back, in a state of complete security, peace and dignity.

That night he saw such signs and things as to make anyone else who saw them, even in part, either utterly amazed or even insane.

He, however, became merely sombre, quiet that is, and was fearful that if he started to tell his people what he had seen they would have promptly disbelieved him.

And so at first he told them calmly that he had been to Jerusalem that night.

That was when Abū Jahl, God damn him, saw the Messenger of God (SAAS), in the sacred mosque sitting in sombre silence and spoke to him, asking, “Well, anything new?” He replied, “Yes.” “What is it?” Abū Jahl asked. “I was taken this night to Jerusalem.”

“To Jerusalem?”

“Yes.”

Abū Jahl asked, “If I were to call your people over to you for you to tell them, would you say to them what you said to me?”

“Yes, I would,” he replied.

Abū Jahl wanted to assemble Quraysh to hear that from him, and so too did the Messenger of God (SAAS) also want to gather them to tell them and so give them information.

Abū Jahl then said, “Come, O tribe of Quraysh!” They gathered there from their assemblies. He then said, “Well, tell your people what you told me.”

The Messenger of God (SAAS) related to them what he had seen, that he had gone to Jerusalem that night and prayed there.
Amidst clapping and whistling of disbelief and derision at this report, the news spread quickly over Mecca.

People then went to Abī Bakr, God bless him, and told him that Muḥammad (ṢAAS) was saying such-and-such a thing.

He responded, “You are telling lies about him!”

They replied, “No, we swear it, he is saying that.”

“Well,” said Abī Bakr, “if he said that, he spoke the truth.”

He then went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who was surrounded by the pagans of Mecca, and asked him about that. He told him of it all and Abī Bakr asked him to describe Jerusalem, so that the polytheists would hear him and recognize the veracity of what he had told them. In the saḥīḥ collection the account has it that it was the polytheists who asked the Messenger of God about that.

He said, “I then began telling them about His signs, and I became somewhat confused. And so God made Jerusalem clear to me until I could see it beyond ‘Uqayl’s house, and I described it to them.”

He (Ibn Isḥāq) went on, “In his description he was correct.”

Ibn Isḥāq recounted the information we gave earlier about him telling them of his having passed by their caravan and of having drunk their water.

And so God provided proof for them and illuminated the straight path for them. Some did believe because of their conviction from God, while others disbelieved despite the proof they had.

As God Almighty said, “And we only made the visions we have shown you as a test for the people” (sūrat al-Isrā’; XVII, v.60). That is, they were a way of testing and trying them.

Ibn ‘Abbās said, “These were visions perceived by the eye that were shown to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).”

This view, that of the majority of scholars both ancient and more recent, holds that the night journey was both a physical and a spiritual experience for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). This is shown in the clear accounts of his making a journey and of his ascending on the ladder, and such-like. God therefore stated, “Glory be to Him who took his servant by night from the ‘sacrosanct mosque’ to the ‘further mosque’ whose precincts we have blessed, to show him our signs” (sūrat al-Isrā’; XVII, v.1). Such evocation of glory would only occur for truly great and extraordinary signs. And this proves that it was by both body and spirit, and the word “servant” gives expression to both of these together.

Also, if it had been a dream, the Quraysh polytheists would not have promptly expressed their disbelief and outrage. For that would not have been so important a matter. And so it shows that he did tell them that he had been taken on his night journey while awake, not asleep.

And then there is the statement of Shurayk, from Anas: “Then I awoke and found myself inside the ḥijr, the sacred enclosure.” This is either to be considered an error of Shurayk, or it must be concluded that the movement from the one state to the other is to be noted as “wakefulness”.
This will also be suggested in the hadith from ʻĀ'isha, God bless her, when the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to Tāʾīf but they disbelieved him. (In it) he said, "I returned in a state of depression, and I only came out of it at Qarn al-Tha'ālib."

Also there is the hadith of Abū Usayd, when he brought his son to the Messenger of God (SAAS) for the taḥnīk ceremony. He placed him in the lap of the Messenger of God (SAAS) who was engaged in conversation with the people. So Abī Usayd lifted his son up. Then the Messenger of God (SAAS), ʻistayqaza, he "awoke or became aware", and did not find the boy there. He asked about him, and they said he had been lifted off; and so he named the boy al-Mundhir, the rooster or awakener.

This interpretation is preferable to considering it an error. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq related as follows, "A member of Abā Bakr’s family related to me that ʻĀ'isha, “mother of the believers”, used to say, ‘The body of the Messenger of God (SAAS), was never found to be missing, but God did journey away with his spirit.’"

He also said, “Ya'qūb b. Utba related to me as follows, ‘When he was asked about the night journeys of the Messenger of God (SAAS), Muḥāwiya would say, “These were true visions from God.”’"

Ibn Ishaq stated, “That is not refuted by the statement of both these authorities, according to the words of al-Ḥasan, to the effect that, ‘The following verse was revealed on that subject: “and We only made the signs We have shown you as a test for the people.”’"

Similarly Abraham, peace be upon him, said, “O my son, I see in my sleep that I am sacrificing you” (sūrat al-Sādūq; XXXVII, v.102). And in the hadith literature there is the statement: “My eyes are asleep while my heart is awake.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “God knows best which of that it was. He did go there and did see there what he saw of God Almighty, whether he was asleep or awake. All of that is, however, factual and true.”

My own comment is that Ibn Ishāq stopped at that point, having combined both possibilities in one whole. But one thing beyond doubt or disagreement is that he was certainly awake, for all the reasons given above.

It is not necessary to interpret the words of ʻĀ'isha, God bless her, that it was not his body, but his spirit that made the journey, as implying that he was asleep, as Ibn Ishāq understood it. The journey might well have in fact occurred for his soul while he was awake and not asleep; he could have ridden al-Burāq, gone to Jerusalem, ascended into heaven and seen all he did while awake and not asleep.

11. This is an ancient Islamic custom of blessing a new-born by chewing dates and rubbing therewith the palate of the baby.
This may well be the purpose of ‘A’isha, “mother of the believers”, God bless her, as well as of those who agreed with her, and not what Ibn Ṭabari understood, which is that thereby they all implied that he was asleep. But God knows best.

I observe that we do not deny the occurrence of sleep visions before the experience of the night journey, as happened thereafter. For whenever he had visions they came (clearly) like the breaking of dawn. The hadith dealing with the beginnings of revelation contained material to this effect. In such cases, what he saw when awake happen to him he had previously seen when asleep. That prior vision had been for the purpose of laying the foundation, making an introductory step, and giving him a sense of security and ease. But God knows best.

There is also disagreement among scholars over whether the night journey and the ascent took place on one night or whether each occurred on a different night. And some claim that the night journey came while he was awake and the ascent while he slept.

Al-Muhallah b. Abū Ṣufra has told, in his exegesis of al-Bukhari’s hadith compendium, about some scholars maintaining that the night journey occurred twice, once with his spirit while he slept and once with both his body and his spirit when he was awake.

The ḥāfiẓ Abū al-Qasim al-Suhaylī related this, from his teacher, the jurist Abū Bakr b. al-ʿArabi.

Al-Suhaylī stated, “This view combines the accounts. In the hadith of Shurayk, from Anas, are the words, ‘And that related to what his heart saw while his eyes slept. His heart was not asleep.’ At the end of his account the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, ‘Then I awoke and found myself in the hijār.’”

This was sleep. Something else would suggest wakefulness.

There are some who also claim that there were several journeys while he was awake. One scholar stated, “There were four night journeys.” Some claim that some took place in Medina.

Sheikh Shihāb al-Dīn Abū Shāma, God bless him, tried to reconcile the differing interpretations of the night journey by grouping them variously. He concluded that there were three night journeys. One was from Mecca specifically to Jerusalem, mounted on al-Buraq. One again was from Mecca to heaven also upon al-Buraq, according to the hadith of Hudhayfa, and one was from Mecca to Jerusalem and thereafter to heaven.

We comment that if it is merely the differences in the accounts that leads him to these three views, then the wording relating thereto differs even more than these three.

Anyone wishing to understand these matters should peruse the research materials we compiled in our book of exegesis relating to the words of the Almighty, “Glory be to Him who took his servant by night” (sūrat al-Isrāʾ; XVII, v.1).

Even if one concluded that such division was restricted to three possibilities relating to Jerusalem and to heaven, such mental computations have no impact on actual events. But God knows best.
It is strange that Imam Aḥāʾ Allāh al-Bukhm, God be pleased with him, gave the account of the night journey after recounting the death of Aḥā Talīḥ. He was thus in accord with Ibn Iṣḥāq in referring to the ascent to heaven in the later materials, but differed with him in reporting it after the death of Aḥā Talīḥ.

Ibn Iṣḥāq positioned his account of the death of Aḥā Bakr after the description of the night journey. But God alone knows how it really was.

This means that al-Bukhārī made a distinction between the night journey and the ascent. Each of these he therefore dealt with in a separate section.

His text reads, Section on the night journey and the statement of God Almighty, ‘Glory be to Him who took His servant by night.’

“It was related to us by Yahyā b. Bukayr quoting al-Layḥ, from ‘Uqayl, from Ibn Shihāb who said that Aḥā Salama b. ‘Abd al-Rāḥmān related to him as follows, ‘I heard Jabār b. ‘Abd Allāh say that he heard the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) say, ‘When Quraysh expressed their disbelief in me I was in the ḥijr. And God made clear Jerusalem to me and so I set about telling them its distinctive features while I viewed it.’’”

Muslim, al-Tirmidhī and al-Naṣrī related this from a ḥadīth of al-Zuhrī, from Aḥā Salama from Ḥabīr.

Muslim, al-Naṣrī and al-Tirmidhī also related it from a ḥadīth of ‘Aḥā Allāh b. al-Fadl, from Aḥā Salama, from Aḥā Hurayra, from the Prophet (ṢAAS) in similar terms.

Al-Bukhārī’s text goes on, Section on the Ascent:

“It was related to us by Hudba b. Khālid, from Hammām and Qatāda, from Anas b. Mālik, from Mālik b. Ṣaṣaṣa, that the Prophet (ṢAAS) related to them as follows about the night he was taken on a journey, ‘While I was lying down there in the ḥatīm’—or he may well have said the ḥijr—‘an apparition came to me and began cutting.’ (Mālik b. Ṣaṣaṣa, tr.) then heard him say, ‘And he split open from this to this.’ I asked al-Jārūd who was by my side, ‘What does he mean by that?’ And he replied, ‘From the hollow of his neck down to his pubic hair.’ And I heard him say, from ‘his breastbone down to his pubic hair.’”

“The Prophet (ṢAAS) went on, ‘Then he withdrew my heart and a basin of gold filled with faith was brought to me. He then washed my heart and it was stuffed and replaced. After that I was brought a white mount that was smaller than a mule but larger than a donkey.’

“The Prophet (ṢAAS) continued, ‘It could span with its stride as far as it could see. I was mounted upon it and Gabriel led me away until he reached the lowest heaven. He asked for me to go in and a reply came, ‘Who is this?’’

“Gabriel,” he replied. “And who is with you?” He replied, “Muḥammad.” ‘And has he been given a mission?” “Yes,” Gabriel answered. “Then welcome to him! His arrival is a pleasure!”

“Then and so he opened up. When I went in I found Adam therein. Gabriel said, “This is your father Adam; greet him!” I did so and he saluted me in return, saying, “Welcome to my pure son, to the pure Prophet!”

“I was then taken up to the second heaven and when he asked to go inside, he was asked who it was. The same responses and questions as before followed and when I went in there were John and Jesus, who were cousins on the maternal side. Gabriel again introduced me and we exchanged the same greeting as with Adam.

“Then I was taken up to the third heaven where Gabriel again asked entry and was met with the same questions and responses. When I went in, there was Joseph, whom I greeted, and I received welcome from him as before.

“Taken to the fourth heaven, there were the same questions and responses and when I went in I found Idris there, exchanged greetings, and he welcomed me as before.

“Brought up to the fifth heaven, the same questions and responses were made, and when I entered there was Aaron, with whom I exchanged greetings and from whom I received welcome.

“Then at the sixth heaven the same questions and responses were made and when I entered, there was Moses, with whom I exchanged greetings and who made me welcome.

“And when I went further on, he wept. When he was asked why, Moses replied, “I weep because a young man who has received his mission after me will have a greater number of his nation enter paradise than will of mine.”

“I was then taken to the seventh heaven where the same questions and responses were made. When I went in there was Abraham, with whom I exchanged greetings and who welcomed me.

“Then I was raised up to the sidrat al-muntaha; there were four rivers, two open to see, two hidden. I asked Gabriel, “What is this, Gabriel?” He replied, “The two hidden rivers are those of paradise, while the two visible ones are the Nile and the Euphrates.”

“Then the bayt al-ma‘mur was raised for me to see, wherein each day 70,000 angels enter. I was then brought a vessel of wine, another of milk, and a third of honey. I took the milk. Gabriel said, “That is al-fitr that you and your nation follow.”

“Prayer was then enjoined on me, 50 prayers each day. Then I went back and when I passed by Moses, he asked, “What orders were you given?”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, “I was ordered to pray 50 times each day.”

“Moses commented, “Your nation can’t manage 50 prayers a day. I swear, I put people to the test before your time and I made some very severe requirements

13. The word has connotations of “God’s way of creating”, and therefore His plan or purpose. See the Encyclopaedia of Islam.
of the people of Israel. Return to your Lord and ask him for some relief for your nation.”

“‘And so I did return and ten prayers were lifted from me.

“‘I went back to Moses, he said as he had before, I returned and ten more were removed.

“‘Again back to Moses, I returned once more and ten more were removed.

“‘Once more to Moses, he said as before, and I returned and was ordered to make ten prayers each day.

“‘Moses then spoke as before, and again I returned and was ordered to make five prayers each day.

“‘When I went back to Moses, he asked, “What were your orders?” I replied, “To make five prayers each day.”

“‘He commented, “Your people can’t manage five prayers each day. I tried my people before your time and made severe requirements of the people of Israel. Return again and ask your Lord for some alleviation for your nation.”

“‘I replied, “I have already made such requests of my Lord as to make me ashamed; therefore I’d much rather accept and be satisfied.” As I passed on, a voice called out to me, “I have completed my decree. I have alleviated the burden upon my servants.””

Thus al-Bukhārī related this hadīth here. He also recounted it in other places of his compendium and so did Muslim, al-Tirmidhī and al-Nasā’ī through various chains from Qatāda, from Anas, from Malik b. ِSa‘ṣa‘a.

We gave it by the account from Anas b. Malik from ‘Ubay b. Ka‘b, as well as by the account of Anas from Abū Dharr. And we gave it by several paths from Anas, from the Prophet (SAAS).

We related all that in detail with its various chains of transmission and phraseology in our Tafsīr (Exegesis).

In this text there is no mention of Jerusalem. It is as though some of the sources omit some information because of the broad knowledge of it. Or they forgot it, or mention only what are in their views the most important matters. Sometimes they elaborate and give the entire account in detail, while at others they omit selectively to stress what they consider most useful. Those who make each account of the ʿṣrāʾ a separate experience, as we have indicated of some above, have strayed too far from the truth. This is so because each of these accounts includes reference to the greeting made to the prophets, and in each the Messenger of God (SAAS) is introduced to them. Also in each one prayer is made obligatory for him. How is it possible to claim that all these would have occurred several times? This is extremely unlikely and implausible. But God knows best.

Al-Bukhārī then stated, “Al-Ḥumaydī related to us, that Sufyān narrated to him from ʿAmr, from Ṭirīma, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who commented as follows about the words of God Almighty, ‘And we only made the signs we have shown you as a test for the people.' He (Ibn 'Abbas,) said, 'These were visions seen by the eye, shown to the Messenger of God (SAAS) on the night he was taken to Jerusalem.' And of the shajarat al-maţâma, the 'accursed tree', mentioned in the Qur'an he said, 'It is the al-zaqqûm tree.'

Division

On the morning following the night of his journey, Gabriel came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) at about noon. He then explained to him the manner of prayer and its times.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) told his followers to assemble and Gabriel led him in prayer all that day until the next, with the Prophet (SAAS) acting as the Imam of the Muslims, and following the example of Gabriel. This is told in the hadith from Ibn 'Abbâs and Ja'âbir, "Gabriel led me in prayer twice at the house (of God)."

He thus explained to him the two times, the beginning and the end, that is, of the five daily prayers. The expanse of time between them is called the al-waqi al-muwassa't the 'extended period', but he made no mention of such an extension of time for the prayer at sunset.

This is affirmed in the hadith of Abu Mûsâ, Burayda and 'Abd Allâh b. 'Amr, all of which are in the compendium of Muslim. Discussion of this occurs in our book al-Ahkâm (The Regulations). And to God is all praise.

Also affirmed in the hadith of the compendium of al-Bukhârî is the statement brought down from Ma'amâr, from al-Zuhri, from Úrwa, from ‘A'îsha, who said, "When prayer was first prescribed it was just two rakâ', prostrations; this was subsequently established only for the prayer on travel, with more rakâ being added for prayer when in residence."

Al-Awza’î related it thus, from al-Zuhri, and al-Shâbî gave it from Masrûq back to ‘A'îsha.

This is problematic in view of the fact that ‘A'îsha used to perform the prayer in its entirety while travelling, as also did Úthmân b. Affân. We discussed this matter with regard to God's words, "And if you journey in the world there is no blame on you if you shorten the prayer if you fear incitement from those who disbelieve" (sûrat al-Nisâ; IV, v.101).

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "Al-Hasan al-Başri held the view that prayer while resident when first prescribed was made to be four rakâ'. He similarly referred to it, through a hadith with an incomplete chain of authorities, regarding the prayer made by the Prophet (SAAS) on the morning after the night journey, 14 A tree said to produce bitter, poisonous fruit.

15 A reference to the ka'ba in Mecca.
16 In Islam the daily prayers are made up of liturgies and physical movements that are divided into cycles each of which is called a rak'a (plural rak'â).
namely to the effect that there should be four rak'āt at midday, four in the late afternoon, three at sunset, with the prayers of the first two being recited aloud, four at night with just two being recited aloud, and two in the morning, both recited aloud.”

My own view is that 'A'isha may have meant that before the night journey the prayer consisted of two rak'āt, recited twice, separately, and then, when the five were made compulsory they were kept the same while in residence, and that permission was given that two rak'āt be prayed while travelling, as had been the case previously. Based on this explanation, there would be no controversy at all. But God knows best.

Section: Concerning the splitting of the moon in the time of the Prophet (SAAS).

God did provide the Messenger of God (SAAS) with a sign to prove the veracity of the guidance and religion of truth he brought, and that was at the time of his pointing (to the moon).

God Almighty spoke the following in His noble book, “The hour has drawn near and the moon bas split asunder. And if they see a sign they turn away, saying, ‘Just more trickery!’ They call it deceit and follow their fancies, while all things are pre-determined” (sūrat al-Qamar; LIV, v.1–3).

Muslims are agreed that this did occur in the time of the Messenger of God (SAAS); traditions with complete lines of transmission, through numerous paths, provide decisive proof for those who examine it and comprehend it.

We will provide some of those easily available traditions, if God wills it and in Him is all faith and reliance. We detailed this in our Tafsir (Exegesis), and there gave the various chains of authorities and differences in phraseology verbatim. Here we will refer to some aspects of these and will attribute them to well-known texts, with the power and strength from God.

Regarding the ḥadith of Anas, Imam Āḥmad stated, “‘Abd al-Razzāq related to us that Ma‘mar related to him, from Qatāda, from Anas b. Mālik, who said, ‘The people of Mecca asked the Prophet (SAAS) for a sign. And so the moon over Mecca was split twice. And he spoke the words, “The hour has drawn near and the moon has split asunder”’” (sūrat al-Qamar; LIV, v.1).

And Muslim related this, from Muḥammad b. _RAFFI_ from ‘Abd al-Razzāq.

This is one of the texts known as the _mursalāt al-ṣaḥābā_. And it is plain that he received it from a large mass of the Companions, or from the Prophet (SAAS), or from everyone.
Both al-Bukhari and Muslim related this hadith on a path through Shayban. In his line of transmission al-Bukhari added Sa'id b. Abu Uruba. Muslim added Shu'ba to his. All three (sic) of them drew from Qatada, from Anas. The tradition states that the people of Mecca asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) to show them a sign. He showed them the moon in two parts, so that they could see Mt. Hira? between them both.

This is the phraseology of al-Bukhari.

Regarding the traditions quoted by Jubayr b. Mut'imin, the Imam Ahmad stated, “Muhammad b. Kathir related to us, that Sulayman b. Kathir related to him, from Husayn b. 'Abd al-Rahman, from Muhammad b. Jubayr b. Mut'imin, from his father, who said, ‘The moon split in the time of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and became two parts; one was over this mountain, the other over that mountain. People said, ‘Muhammad has performed a trick on us.' Then they said, ‘He may have tricked us, but he can't trick everyone.'”

A'Hamd alone gives this hadith.

Ibn Jarir reported it similarly from a hadith of Muhammad b. Fudayl and others, from an account of Husayn.

Al-Bayhaqi related it through Idris b. 'Abd al-Muttamin and Hushaym, both of them from Husayn b. 'Abd al-Rahman, from Jubayr b. Muhammad b. Jubayr b. Mut'imin, from his father and grandfather. His account adds one further man to the chain of transmission.

As for Hudhayfa b. al-Yaman’s tradition, Abu Nu'am related in the Dalail (The Signs), on a line through 'Ata' b. al-Sa'ib from Abu 'Abd al-Rahman al-Sulami, as follows: “Hudhayfa b. al-Yaman made an address to us at al-Madina. He gave thanks and praise to God and then said, ‘The hour has drawn near and the moon has split asunder. Yes indeed, the time is near. And yes, the moon did split. The world really is close to partition. Today we have the race-track, and the race is tomorrow!'”

“The next Friday I went with my father to the mosque. Again he praised God and repeated what he had said, adding, ‘And yes, indeed, the winner is he who comes first on Fridays.'

“On our way back, I asked my father what he had meant when he said, ‘the race is tomorrow.' He replied, ‘For who first reaches paradise.'”

Regarding the tradition of Ibn 'Abbâs, al-Bukhari stated, “Yahya b. Bukayr related to us that Bakr related to him, from Ja'far, from 'Irak b. Malik, from Ubayd Allah b. 'Abbâs, who said, ‘The moon did split during the time of the Prophet (SAAS).’”

Al-Bukhari also, along with Muslim, related this from a hadith of Bakr, who was Ibn Nasr, from Ja'far. Regarding “… the time is near and the moon has split asunder. And if they see a sign they turn away, saying 'Just more trickery!'” He said, “That time is past. That was before the hijra. The moon did split, and people could see both parts of it.”
Al-‘Awfi related it thus, from Ibn ‘Abbās, God bless him, this being one of his mursal traditions.

The ḥāfiẓ Abū Nu‘aym stated, “Sulaymān b. Ahmad related to us, quoting Bakr b. Suhayl, quoting ‘Abd al-Ghanī b. Sa‘īd, quoting Mūsā b. ‘Abd al-Raḥmān, from Ibn Jurayj, from ‘Ata‘, from Ibn ‘Abbās—also, it came from Muqāṭil, from al-Dāhḥāk, from Ibn ‘Abbās—with reference to God’s words, ‘The hour has drawn near and the moon has been split asunder’ as follows, ‘The polytheists gathered around the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); they included al-Walīd b. al-Mughirah, Abū Jahl b. Hishām, al-‘Aṣ b. Wā‘il, al-‘Aṣ b. Hishām, al-Aswād b. ‘Abd Yaghūṯ, al-Aswād b. al-Muṭṭalib b. Asad b. ‘Abd al-‘Uzza, Zam‘ā b. al-Aswād and al-‘Ather b. al-Ḥārith, along with many other such men. ‘They said to the Prophet (ṢAAS), ‘If you are telling the truth, then split the moon for us into two parts, one half over Mt. Abū Quḥays, the other over Mt. Qu‘ayqūn.’ The Prophet (ṢAAS) asked them, ‘If I did so, would you believe?’ ‘Yes, we would,’ they replied. It was a night of full moon, and so he asked God the Almighty and Glorious to grant him what they requested. That evening the moon did have one half removed and placed over Mt. Abū Quḥays, the other being above Mt. Qu‘ayqūn, while the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) called out, ‘O Abū Salama b. ‘Abd al-Asad, and al-‘Arqam b. al-‘Arqam, be a witness (to this event).’”

Moreover, Abū Nu‘aym stated, “Sulaymān b. Ahmad related to us, quoting al-Ḥasan b. al-’Abbas al-Rāzi, from al-Haytham b. al-‘Umar, as did Isma‘īl b. Ziyād, from Ibn Jurayj, from ‘Āṭa’, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, ‘The people of Mecca went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and said, ‘Is there some sign by which we can know that you are the Messenger of God?’ ‘Gabriel then came down and said, ‘O Muḥammad, tell the people of Mecca that they will rejoice this night when they will see a sign and benefit thereby.’ “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) informed them what Gabriel had said and they all went outside on the night of the splitting, that of the 14th, and the moon split into two halves, one above Mt. al-Ṣafā, the other over Mt. al-Marwa. They looked, turned away and wiped their eyes, then looked once more, saying, ‘O Muḥammad, this is nothing more than the trickery of a monk!’ “Then God revealed His words, ‘The hour has drawn near and the moon has split asunder’” (ṣūrat al-Qamar; LIV, v.1–3).

Al-Dāhḥāk related from Ibn ‘Abbās as follows, “Rabbis came from the Jews to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and said, ‘Show us a sign so we may believe in you.’ ‘He asked his Lord, and He showed them the moon split into two parts, one over Mt. al-Ṣafā, the other above Mt. al-Marwa. It remained so between early evening until night, with them looking on, and then it disappeared. They commented, ‘This is just magic, a trick.’”

18. A mursal hadith is a statement of a Companion that he or she has not attributed to the Prophet himself.
Ibn Jurayj quoting 'Amr b. Dinar, from 'Ikrima, from Ibn 'Abbas, who said, "In the time of the Messenger of God (SAAS), the moon was eclipsed and people said, "The moon is bewitched!" And so the words were revealed, "The hour has drawn near and the moon has split asunder. And if they see a sign they turn away saying, 'Just more trickery!'"" (surat al-Qamar; LIV, v.1-3).

This has a fine chain of authorities; it states that the moon was eclipsed that night; perhaps its splitting occurred on the night of its eclipse and this is why what happened to it was hidden from most of the earth's inhabitants. However, this was in fact witnessed in many parts of the world. It is said that in some parts of India that became a point for dating, and that a building was constructed that night which was dated by the night when the moon split.

Regarding the tradition of Ibn Umar, the ha'if al-Bayhaqi stated, "We were informed by Abü 'Abd Allah, the ha', and by Abü Bakr Ahmād b. al-Hasan al-Qaḍi as follows: 'Abü al-'Abbas al-Asamm related it to us, as did al-'Abbas b. Muhammad al-Dūrī, as did Wahb b. Jarir, from Shu'ba, from al-A'mash, from Mujahīd.'"

Muslim said, "It is like the account of Mujahīd from Abū Ma'am, from Ibn Mas'ūd."

Al-Tirmidhi stated, "This hadith is hasan and sahih."¹⁹

Regarding the tradition quoted by 'Abd Allāh b. Mas'ūd, the Imam Ahmad said, "Sufyān related to us, from Ibn Abī Najīh, from Mujahīd, from Abū Ma'am, from Ibn Mas'ūd, who said, 'The moon split into two parts during the time of the Messenger of God (SAAS) so that everyone looked at it. And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'Bear witness!'""

(Both of these authorities) drew this from an account of Sufyān, he being Ibn 'Uyayna. And from a hadith of al-A'mash, from Ibrahim, from Abū Ma'am, from 'Abd Allāh b. Samra, from Ibn Mas'ūd, who said, "The moon split asunder while we were with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Mina. The Prophet (SAAS) then said, 'Bear witness!' And one piece of the moon went off towards the mountain."

This phraseology is from al-Bukhari.

Al-Bukhari then said, "Abū al-Daḥḥāk narrated it from Masrūq, from 'Abd Allāh in Mecca, and Muḥammad b. Muslim followed him, from Ibn Abī Najīh, from Mujahīd, from Abū Ma'am, from 'Abd Allāh, God bless him."

Abū Da'ūd al-Ṭayālīsī gave support to the hadith of Abū al-Daḥḥāk, from Masrūq, from 'Abd Allāh b. Mas'ūd, who said, "The moon split in the time of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and Quraysh said, 'This is the trickery of Ibn Abū Kabsa.' They commented, 'See what travellers say to you! Muḥammad can't trick everyone.'"

"He said, 'And travellers did arrive, and they said the same.'"

¹⁹. These are among the categories that hadith scholars use to describe the soundness of a chain of transmission; the words mean "good" and "true".

“And the unbelievers of Quraysh told the people of Mecca, ‘This is magic. The son of Abū Kabsha has tricked you by it. Look to travellers arriving. If they saw what you say, then he is correct, but if they did not see what you did, then it is magic he has tricked you with.’

“He went on, ‘So travellers were questioned, and,’ he said, ‘they came from all directions. And they reported, ‘We did see it.’’”

Abū Nuʿaym reported this the same way from a hadith of Jābir, from al-ʾAlmash, from Abū al-Ḍuḥā, from Masrūq, from ‘Abd Allāh.

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Muʿammil related to us, that Isrāʾīl related, from Simāk, from Ibrāhīm, from al-ʾAswād, from ‘Abd Allāh, who said, ‘The moon split in the time of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); I could see the mountain between the two splits in the moon.’”

Ibn Jarir related it thus from a hadith of Asbāt from Simāk.

The ḥafiz Abū Nuʿaym stated, “Abū Bakr al-Ṭalḥī related to us, quoting Abū Huṣayn Muḥammad b. al-Ḥusayn al-Wādīṣi, as did Yahyā al-Himmānī, as did Yazīd, from ‘Aṭāʾ, from Simāk, from Ibrāhīm, from ʿAlqama, from ‘Abd Allāh, who said, ‘We were with the Prophet (ṢAAS), at Minā, when the moon split until it was in two parts, one of which was behind the mountain. The Prophet (ṢAAS) then said, ‘Bear testimony! Bear testimony!’’”

Abū Nuʿaym stated, “Sulaymān b. Ahmad related to us, quoting Jaʿfar b. Muhammad al-Qalānīṣi, as did Ādam b. Abū Iyās, as did al-ʿAlīṣ b. Saʿd, as did Hishām b. Saʿd, from Utba, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Utba, from Ibrāhīm b. Masʿūd, who said, ‘The moon split while we were in Mecca. I saw one of its two pieces over the mountain at Minā while we were at Mecca.’

“ʿAḥmad b. Iṣḥāq related to us, as did Abū Bakr b. Abū ʿĀṣim, Muḥammad b. Ḥātim, and Muʿāwiya b. ʿAmr, from Ṣaʿīda, from ʿĀṣim, from Zīr, from ‘Abd Allāh, who said, ‘The moon split at Mecca and I saw it in two parts.’”

He then related from a hadith of ʿAlī b. Saʿīd b. Masrūq, Mūsā b. ʿUmayr related to us, from Mansūr b. al-Muʿtamir, from Sayd b. Waḥb, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Masʿūd, who said, “I saw the moon, I swear by God, split in two parts, with Mt. Ḥirā between them both.”

Abū Nuʿaym related, through al-Suddī al-Saghir, from al-Kalbi, from Abū Sāliḥ, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “The moon split into two halves, one of which left while the other remained.”

Ibn Masʿūd stated, “I saw Mt. Ḥirā between the two halves of the moon. One half left and the people of Mecca were amazed at this, and said, ‘This is just some faked-up trick; it will pass.’”
Layth b. Abū Sulaym reported Mujāhid as having said, "The moon split into two pieces in the time of the Messenger of God (SAAS) who said to Abū Bakr, 'Bear testimony, Abū Bakr!'"

"And the polytheists said, 'He has bewitched the moon so that it split apart!'")"

These various lines are strong in their links and provide decisive proof for those who consider them and the probity of these men. The version told by some storytellers, that the moon fell down to earth and entered one sleeve of the Prophet (SAAS), and came out of the other, has no foundation; it is a lie, an invention and untrue.

When the moon split it did not leave the sky. However, when the Prophet (SAAS) gestured towards it, it reacted by splitting and became two halves. One of these passed over until it was beyond Hira and they saw the mountain between that one and the other. This is how Ibn Mas'ūd related that he had witnessed it.

What we find in the account of Anas in the compendium of Ahmad to the effect that, "The moon split 'twice' in Mecca” is controversial. Obviously he meant “into two parts”. But God knows best.

Section: The death of Abū Tulib, uncle of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and thereafter that of Khadija, daughter of Khwāyliḍ, and the wife, may God be pleased with her, of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Some say that she preceded him in death, but the reverse is commonly known.

These were both sympathizers, he publicly, she privately. He remained a disbeliever while she was trusting and a believer; may God be pleased with her and please her.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Thereafter Khadija and Abū Tālib both died, in one year.

"After the death of Khadija troubles fell upon the Messenger of God (SAAS) in quick succession. She had been his trusted adviser in all his troubles and he would seek reassurance from her. The death of his uncle Abū Tālib meant he had lost a source of support and protection against his people.

"This occurred three years before his emigration to Medina.

"When Abū Tālib died, Quraysh harmed the Messenger of God (SAAS) to an extent they would never have dared during Abū Tālib's life; one fool of Quraysh even went so far as to throw dirt on his head.

"Hishām b. 'Urwa related to me, from his father, as follows, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) went into his house with the dirt still on his head. One of his daughters went to him, washing him off and weeping, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) told her, “Don't weep, child. God is your father's protector,” while he also commented, “Quraysh never treated me so badly before Abū Tālib died.”'

Ibn Ishāq previously reported that they might toss something harmful into his cooking pot when it was set up for him. When they did that, he stated, quoting 'Umar b. 'Abd Allāh from 'Urwa, he would lift out on a stick whatever they had put there and take it to his door, saying, “O Banū 'Abd Manaf, what kind of protection is this?” Then he would throw it out into the street.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “When Abū Ṭalib became sick and Quraysh learned of his serious state, they noted how Ḥamza and Umar had accepted Islam and how the prestige of Muhammad had spread through the Quraysh tribes, so they decided to go to Abū Ṭalib to get him to reconcile his nephew to them. Otherwise, they concluded, he might subvert their authority completely.

“Al-‘Abbās b. ‘Abd Allah b. Ma‘bad related to me, from a member of his family, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, ‘When they went to Abū Ṭalib and spoke to him, the Quraysh leaders, including ‘Utba b. Rabī‘a, Shayba b. Rabī‘a, Abū Jahl b. Hishām, Umayya b. Khalaf and Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb, along with others, said, “O Abū Ṭalib, you know what standing you have with us, and that your serious condition, of which you are aware, greatly concerns us. You also know of the dispute between us and your nephew. Would you now call him and reach a compromise by which he will do us no harm nor we him; let him tolerate our religion and we will his.”

“Abū Ṭalib sent for him and when he came, he told him, “O Nephew, these leaders of your people have gathered to reach a compromise with you and you with them.”

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, “You all just need to say one word, uncle, and through it you can rule the Arabs and have the non-Arabs subject to you.”

“‘Oh yes, I swear by your life,” answered Abū Ṭalib, “along with ten words more!’

‘He told him, “Say, ‘There is no god but God.’ And repudiate whatever gods you worship besides Him!”

‘Those present clapped their hands and commented, “O Muhammad, do you want to make all the gods into one? How strange.”

‘Then they said to one another, “This man is not going to give us any part of what we want. We should leave and continue in the religion of our fathers until God decides between us and him.” They then dispersed.

‘At that Abū Ṭalib said, “I swear, nephew, I don’t think you asked anything excessive.”

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had high hopes of him now and said to him, “O Uncle, if you were to say it I would intercede for you on Judgement Day.”

“Recognizing the eagerness of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), Abū Ṭalib replied, “O Nephew, I swear that were it not for fear of the curses there would be on you and your relatives after me, and the fact that Quraysh would think that I had only said it out of fear of death, I would say it. I will not say it only to please you thereby.”

“When death approached Abū Ṭalib, al-‘Abbās saw that he was moving his lips and so he put his ear close to hear. Then he said, “O Nephew, I swear my brother did say the word you asked of him!”
“The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, “I did not hear.”

“And God Almighty revealed about that group of men, “Ṣād. By the Qur’ān of fine repute! Those who disbelieve act in pride and arrogance”’” (ṣūrat Ṣād; XXXVIII, v.1).

We have discussed this in the Tafsir (Exegesis), and to God go all praise and credit.

Various scholars of the Shi’a and other extremists hold the view that Abī Talib died a Muslim because of what al-‘Abbās said in this hadith, that is, “O Nephew, my brother did speak the word you told him to say: ‘There is no god but God.’”

There are many ways to respond to this. One is that there is some question relating to the chain of authorities that includes one link defined as “a member of his family” about whom nothing is known. The doubt here rests on ignorance of both the person and his circumstances. Such a tradition is normally regarded as an hadith mawqif, if it remains unsubstantiated.

Imām Aḥmad, al-Nāṣārī and Ibn Jarir gave much the same chain, through Abī Usāma from al-Aʿmash (who said), “‘Abbad related to us, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr …” He gave the account without, however, mentioning the words of al-ʿAbbās.

Al-Thawri also related it, from al-Aʿmash, from Yaʿhya b. ʿAmmār al-Kūfī, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās. He gave it without the addition of the words of al-ʿAbbās.

Al-Ṭāmīmī related it and stated it to be a good tradition, as did al-Nāṣārī and Ibn Jarir.

The wording of the tradition on the line given by al-Bayhaqī through al-Thawri, from al-Aʿmash, from Yaḥyā b. ʿAmmār, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, quotes Ibn ʿAbbās as saying, “Abī Talib fell sick and men of Quraysh and the Prophet (SAAS) arrived at his home and there was a seat for one person at the head of Abī Talib’s bed. Abī Jahl arose to prevent him sitting there, all the while protesting to Abī Talib about Muhammad. He asked, ‘Nephew, what is it you want from your people?’

“He replied, ‘Uncle, all I want from them is a statement through which the Arabs will submit to them and which will bring them tribute from the non-Arabs. Just one statement.’

“And what is that?’

‘There is no god but God,’ he replied.

“They commented, ‘What, make all the gods into one? That’s ridiculous!’

“He went on, ‘And God revealed about them, “Ṣād. By the Qur’ān of fine repute! …” and so on to the words, “… nothing but a forgery!’” (ṣūrat Ṣād; XXXVIII, v.7).

Moreover Ibn Ishāq’s account is contradicted by one more authoritative, namely that of al-Bukhari, who said, “Maḥmūd related to us, that ʿAbd al-Razzāq

20. The term implies that the hadith has an unknown person in its chain of transmission; it is therefore regarded as unsound.
related to them that Ma'\textsuperscript{m}ar informed them, from al-Zuhri, from Ibn al-Musayyab, from his father, God bless him, that Abü ɬalib was close to death when the Prophet (SAAS), along with Abü Jahl, went in to see him. He (the Prophet) said, 'Uncle, say, "There is no god but God!" One statement; (and) I will plead with God thereby on your behalf.'

"Abü Jahl and 'Abd ɬal\textsuperscript{ah} b. Abii Umayya then said, 'O Abü ɬalib, are you leaving the faith of 'Abd al-Muttalib?' And they both continued talking to him until he spoke his last words to them, namely, '... in the faith of 'Abd al-Muttalib.'

"The Prophet (SAAS) said, 'I will seek forgiveness for you for as long as I am not restrained from doing so.'

"And so there was revealed, 'It is not appropriate for the Prophet and for those who believe to seek forgiveness for the polytheists, even though near relatives, after it has become plain to them that they would inhabit hell' (s\textsuperscript{ur}at al-Tawba (or al-Bar\textsuperscript{a}); IX, v.113). And there was also revealed, 'You cannot give guidance to those you love'" (s\textsuperscript{ur}at al-Qas\textsuperscript{a}; XXVIII, v.56).

Muslim related this account from Ishaq h. Ibrahim and 'Ahd Allah, from 'Abd al-Razaq. They also drew it from a hadith of al-Zuhri, from Sa'\textsuperscript{id} b. al-Musayyab, from his father in similar words. In it he states, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) continued to suggest this to him while the other two repeated their words until he spoke his final words, '... in the faith of 'Abd al-Muttalib.' And he refused to utter the words 'There is no god but God.'

"The Prophet (SAAS) said, 'I will seek forgiveness for you.' And so God sent down, thereafter that is, the words, 'It is not up to the Prophet and those who believe to seek forgiveness for the polytheists, even though near relatives.'"

Concerning Abü ɬalib, it was revealed, "You cannot give guidance to those you love."

Imâm Ahmad, Muslim, al-Tirmidhi and al-Nasâ\textsuperscript{i} related this from a hadith of Yazid b. Kaysân, from Abü ɬâzim, from Abü Hurayra, who said, "When death was near for Abü ɬalib, the Messenger of God (SAAS) came to him and said, 'Uncle, say "There is no god but God" and I will testify for you about it on Judgement Day.'

"He replied, 'If it were not for Quraysh insulting me and saying that it was only fear of death that made me say it, I would do so, and please you. I would not, however, say it only to please you.'\textsuperscript{21}

"And so God, Almighty and Glorious is He, revealed, 'You cannot give guidance to those you love.'"

'Abd ɬal\textsuperscript{ah} b. 'Abbas, Ibn 'Umar, Mujâhid, al-Shâ\textsuperscript{b}i, and Qatada all stated that the above verse was revealed about Abü ɬalib when the Messenger of God

\textsuperscript{21} The passage could also be translated, "Were it not for Quraysh insulting me by saying that it was only fear of death that induced me to say so, or that I did so in order to please you, I would have uttered this statement; but only to please you."
(SAAS) suggested to him that he say, “There is no god but God” and he refused to do so. Instead, he said that he subscribed to the faith of the elders. The last thing he said was that, “He is following the religion of ‘Abd al-Mutţalib.”

All this is affirmed by al-Bukhārī’s narration from Musaddad, who related from Yāḥyā, from Sufyān, from ‘Abd al-Malik b. ‘Umayr, from ‘Abd Allâh b. al-Ḥārith who said, “Al-‘Abbās b. ‘Abd al-Mutţalib related to us that he said, ‘I asked the Messenger of God (SAAS), “What benefit were you to your uncle? He used to protect and defend you.”

“He replied, “He is in a shallow stream of hell-fire; if it were not for me, he would be in its lowest depths.””

Muslim related this same account in his compendium by various paths, from ‘Abd al-Malik b. ‘Umayr.

Both these scholars narrated it in both their works from a ḥadīth of al-Layth, as follows, “Ibn al-Ḥādī related to me, from ‘Abd Allâh b. Ḥabbâb, from Abū Sa‘īd, that he heard the Prophet (SAAS) say when someone mentioned his uncle, ‘Perhaps my intercession may help him on Judgement Day, and he will be placed in a shallow stream of hell-fire that will reach up to his ankles and cause his brain to boil.’”

This is the phraseology of al-Bukhārī. In one account the words used are, “… cause umm dimaghīhi”, the centre of his brain, instead of “dimaghuhū”, his brain, to boil.

Muslim related, from Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba, from ‘Affān, from Ḥammād b. Salama, from Thābit, from Abū ‘Uthmān, from Ibn ‘Abbās, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “Abū Talib receives more lenient punishment than any other inhabitant of hell; he wears two shoes of fire that cause his brain to boil.”

In the Maghāzi, the history of the conquests, by Yūnus b. Bukayr, the statement given is “… and from them (his shoes) his brain will boil so that it streams down over his feet.” Al-Suhaylī makes mention of this.

The ḥāfiz Abū Bakr al-Bazzār stated in his compendium, “‘Amr – he being the son of Ismā‘īl b. Mujālîd – related to us, saying that his father related to them, from Mujālîd, from al-Sha‘bī, from Jābir, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) was asked, “Have you been of benefit to Abū Talib?”

“He replied, “I drew him forth from hell-fire into a shallow stream of it.”’”

Al-Bazzār alone gives this tradition.

Al-Suhaylī stated, “However, the Prophet (SAAS) did not accept the testimony of al-‘Abbās that his brother (Abū Talib) had made the said statement and replied, ‘I did not hear it because al-‘Abbās was at that time an unbeliever, from whom a testimony was unacceptable.’”

My comment is that this account thereof is in itself not to be considered authentic because of the weakness of its chain of transmission, as stated earlier.

Evidence for that is provided by the fact that he (al-‘Abbās) asked the Prophet (SAAS) thereafter about Abū Talib and he told him what is stated above.
If, however, we accepted the argument for the authenticity of the aforementioned statement of Abū Ṭalīb, we would, none the less, aver that he only said what he did upon seeing the angel after the death-rattle, when expression of faith cannot be of use to a soul.

But God knows best.

Abū Daūd al-Ṭayalīsī stated, “Shu‘bā related to us, that Abū Ishāq said, ‘I heard Nājiyya b. Ka‘b say, ‘I heard ‘Alī say, ‘When my father died, I went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and told him, “Your uncle has died.” He replied, “Go and bury him.” I said, “He died a polytheist.” So he replied, “Go and bury him and do not cause (a scene), then return to me.”

“‘I did so, returned to him and he told me to wash.’”

Al-Nasāʾī related this from Muḥammad b. al-Muthannā, from Ghundar, from Shuʻbā.

Abū Daūd and al-Nasāʾī related it from a hadith of Sufyān, from Abū Ishāq, from Najīyya, from ‘Alī who said, “When Abū Ṭalīb died, I said, ‘O Messenger of God, that misguided old man your uncle has died. Who will bury him?’

“He replied, ‘Go and bury your father. Do nothing to cause (a scene), then return to me.’

“When I returned to him he told me to wash, and I did so. He then said some prayers for me that gave me more pleasure than would have anything else on earth.”

He (al-Bayhaqī) went on to say that it was related from the Prophet (ṢAAS), though with an incomplete chain, with the addition “... and he did not stand at his grave.”

He (al-Bayhaqī) also said, “This man, Ibrāhīm b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān, who is mentioned in the context of the chain of authorities for this account, is that same al-Khwārizmī about whom there has been some controversy.

I note that several persons have related traditions from him, including al-Fāḍl b. Mūsā al-Sīnānī and Muḥammad b. Sallām al-Bikandi. Nevertheless Ibn ʿAdī said, ‘He is not well known. And the traditions others have quoted from him are not sound.”

We have already given accounts of the support and protection given by Abū Ṭalīb to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), how he defended him and his followers. We also quoted from the verses he spoke in their praise and of the love and sympathy for them these verses express, as well as the criticism and blame they contain for those who opposed and ridiculed them. These verses exemplify the eloquence, skill and fluency of the Hashim and Muṭṭalibi clans, an ability to use the language that could not be matched, rivalled or excelled by any Arab.

In all of this he knew that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was truthful, innocent and right-guided, but his heart, nevertheless, did not believe.

There is a difference between the heart knowing and believing. We have affirmed this fact in our exegesis of the Book of Faith in the saḥīḥ of al-Bukhari.

Evidence for this is given in the words of the Almighty, “Those to whom we have brought the Book know it as they do their sons; (however) a group of them conceal the truth, while knowing it” (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.146).

Regarding Pharaoh’s people, the Almighty said, “... and they denied them, though their souls were convinced ...” (sūrat al-Naml; XXVII, v.14). And Moses said to the Pharaoh, “You know that it is only the Lord of the heavens and the earth who sent clear proofs, and I believe you, Pharaoh, to be damned!” (sūrat al-Isrā; XVII, v.102).

Some of the salafi or early authorities consider the Almighty’s words “... they defend him yet reject him” (sūrat al-Anṣām; VI, v.26) to relate to Abū Ṭalib, since he used to defend the Messenger of God (SAAS) from harm even though he rejected the guidance and true religion he brought.

(This opinion) is related as from Ibn ‘Abbās, al-Qāsim b. Mukhaymira, Ḥabīb b. Abū Thābit, ‘Aṭā b. Dīnār, Muḥammad b. Kaʿb and others and it is open to question. But God alone knows best.

Preferable, though God knows best, is the other account from Ibn ‘Abbas to the effect that the verse refers to those who prevented people from believing in Muḥammad (SAAS). Mujāhid, Qatada, al-Dahhāk and others held this view. It is also the choice of Ibn Jarir; though God knows best. Its implication is that this verse emphasizes the blame for the polytheists for preventing others from following him while themselves not benefitting from him either.

The Almighty therefore stated, “There are from among them those who listen to you over whose hearts we have placed covers that prevent them understanding, and holes in their ears; even if they see all signs they fail to believe in them. Even when they come to you to argue with you, those who disbelieve say, ‘These are just legends of the ancients.’ And they forbid others from (believing in it), and themselves keep away from it. It is only themselves they destroy, yet they do not sense this” (sūrat al-Anṣām; VI, v.25).

The phrase here: “... and they ...” indicates reference to a group. As for “they” as referred to in the subsequent comment, “... it is only themselves they destroy, yet they do not sense this”, this gives evidence of the totality of the blame.

Such could not apply to Abū Ṭalib. On the contrary, he restrained people from harming the Messenger of God (SAAS), and his followers, using all action, speech, moral support and money available to him.

Nevertheless, God did not decree faith for him, in all His mighty wisdom, nor did He furnish him with the clear, irrefutable and decisive proofs whereby (one) is compelled to believe and submit.
And were it not for God’s having forbidden us seeking forgiveness for disbelievers, we would certainly seek such forgiveness and mercy for him.

DIVISION

On the death of Khadija, daughter of Khuwaylid and reference to some of her qualities and virtues, may God bless and please her and make the gardens of paradise her place of dwelling and repose. And He has indeed done that in a reference made by him who is truthful and believed, in which he announced her being in a home in paradise made of pearl shell where there is neither discord nor distress.

Ya‘qūb b. Sufyān said, “Abū Šāliḥ related to us, from al-Layth, who said that Uqayl related to him from Ibn Shihāb, as follows, “Urwa b. al-Zubayr said, “Khadija had died before the prayer was made obligatory.””

This was related also in another path from al-Zuhri which had him say, “Khadija died at Mecca before the departure of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) for Medina, and before the prayer was made obligatory.”

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated, “Khadija and Abū Ṭalīb died in the same year.”

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “I was informed that Khadija died three days after the death of Abū Ṭalīb. It was ʿAbd Allah b. Mandah who mentioned this in his book al-Ma‘rifa (Knowledge), as did our sheikh Abū ʿAbd Allah, the ḥāfīz.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “Al-Waqqāq claimed that Khadija and Abū Ṭalīb both died in the same year they came out of the enclave, that is, three years before the emigration, and also that Khadija died 35 days before the death of Abū Ṭalīb.”

My comment is that they mean before the five daily prayers were made obligatory, on the “night journey”.

It would have been more appropriate for us to make reference to the deaths of Abū Ṭalīb and Khadija before the account of the “night journey”, as al-Bayhaqi and others did. We have postponed it till after the “night journey” for a reason that you will see shortly. Discussion of this will effectively harmonize and order this section, as you will find, if God so wills it.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Qutayba related to us, quoting Muḥammad b. Fuḍayl b. Ghazwān, from ʿUmāra, from Abū Zurʿa, from Abū Hurayra, who said, ‘Gabriel came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and said, “O Messenger of God, this is Khadija who has brought a vessel of shortening – or food and drink. When she comes to you greet her from her Lord and from me and give her news of a house in paradise made of pearl shell and where there is neither discord nor distress.””

Muslim related this from a ḥadīth transmitted from Muḥammad b. Fuḍayl.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Musaddad related to us, from Yaḥyā, from Ismāʿil, who said, ‘I asked ʿAbd Allah b. Abū Awfā, “Did the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) give glad tidings to Khadija?” He replied, “Yes, of a house of pearl shell devoid of discord or distress.””
Al-Bukhārī also related it, as did Muslim, in lines from Isma‘īl b. Abū Khalīd. Al-Suhaylī stated, “He only announced good news of her having a house made of qasāb, pearl shell, in paradise, because she had won the qasāb, the first prize, (in the race) to faith. There was to be ‘no discord or distress’ there because she never raised her voice to the Prophet (SAAS), never once caused him trouble or was discordant with him, and never harmed him.”

Both scholars gave it in the ṣaḥīḥ collections, from a hadīth of Hishām b. Urwā, from his father that 'A'īsha, God bless her, said, “The only one of the wives of the Prophet (SAAS) of whom I was jealous was Khadijā – who died before he married me – and this was because of how I would hear him mention her.

“And God ordered him to announce to her the tidings of a house of pearl shell for her in paradise; and if he slaughtered a sheep he would present to her friends as much of it as they wanted.”

These are the words of al-Bukhārī.

In another version from 'A'īsha, she said, “I was never so jealous of any woman as I was of Khadijā; this was due to the frequency with which the Messenger of God (SAAS) would mention her. He married me three years after (her death). And his Lord, or Gabriel, ordered him to announce the tidings of her having a house of pearl shell in paradise.”

In another of his variant wordings, she said, “I was never so jealous of any of the wives of the Prophet (SAAS) as I was of Khadijā. I did not see her, but he talked often of her. He sometimes slaughtered a sheep then would cut off its limbs for her and send them off to Khadijā’s women friends. I would say, ‘Why, it’s as if Khadijā were the only woman in the world!’ and he would reply, ‘She was what she certainly was, and I had a son by her.’”

Then al-Bukhārī stated, “‘Ismā‘īl b. Khalīl related to us, ‘Ali b. Mushīr informed us, from Hishām b. Urwā, from his father, that ‘A‘īsha said, ‘Hālā, daughter of Khuwaylid, Khadijā’s sister, asked to come in to see the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he thought of it as Khadijā’s asking for entry; he was confused, then said, “O God, it’s Hālā!’”’

‘A‘īsha went on, “And so I was jealous and commented, ‘Why think back on some red-mouthed old woman of Quraysh who died long ago and whom God has replaced for you with someone better!’”

Muslim related this thus, from Suwayd b. Sa‘īd, from ‘Ali b. Mushīr.

This comment gives clear evidence that ‘A‘īsha was better than Khadijā, either in her personal or in her wifely qualities, for he did not contradict her or answer her back, as is obvious from the course of the account of al-Bukhārī, God bless him!

However, Imām Ahmad said, “Mu‘ammil Abū Abd al-Raḥmān related to us, quoting Ḥammād b. Salām, from ‘Abd al-Malik – he being Ibn Umayr – from Musā b. Ṭalḥa, from ‘A‘īsha, who said, ‘One day the Messenger of God (SAAS) referred to Khadijā and began speaking excessive praise for her. I was overcome by that jealousy that affects women and I said, “O Messenger of God, God has awarded you with better than a red-mouthed old Quraysh woman!”

His account proceeds, “The face of the Messenger of God (SAAS) underwent such a change as I only ever saw when revelation happened or when he was imagining something and not knowing whether the outcome would be mercy or punishment.”

He related it similarly on a path from Bahz b. Asad and Uthman b. Muslim, both of these giving as authorities for it Hammad b. Salama, back to ‘Abd al-Malik b. ‘Umayr.

After the words, “red-mouthed” this last account added the phrase “who died ages ago”. And then she said, “His face then flushed in such a way as I only ever saw when revelation came or he was imagining something that might mean either mercy or punishment.”

Ahmad alone gave this version. Its chain of authorities is excellent.

Imam Ahmad also stated, and quoted Ibn Ishq as having said, “Mujalid related to us, from al-Shafi’i, from Masruq, that ‘A’isha said, ‘When the Prophet (SAAS) mentioned Khadija he would speak of her with the finest of praise. One day I got jealous and commented, “How often you refer to that old, red-mouthed woman; God has given you better than her in exchange!”

“He replied, “God has not given me better than her in exchange. She believed in me when the people disbelieved, and trusted me when they distrusted. She shared her wealth with me when others denied me. And God endowed a son to me from her, yet He withheld from me having sons with other women.”’”

Ahmad is also alone in giving this tradition. Its chain of authorities is fair. Muslim frequently gave Mujalid as a source, and he is controversial. But God knows best.

Perhaps this statement, I refer to his saying “God endowed a son to me from her yet He withheld from me having sons with other women” was before the birth of Ibrâhim, the son of the Prophet (SAAS) by Mary, and may have actually been before her arrival. This is clearly so, for all the sons of the Prophet (SAAS), as we have seen and will report hereafter, were born to Khadija, except for Ibrâhim who was born to Mary, God bless her, the Egyptian Coptic woman.

A number of scholars refer to this statement as evidence of the superiority of Khadija over ‘A’isha, God be pleased with her and make her content. Other scholars have questions about its chain of authorities.

Yet others interpret this matter as referring to ‘A’isha as having been better in intimacy. This is likely or even obvious. The reason for this is that ‘A’isha’s closeness involved her youth, beauty and the pleasure of intimacy with her. She had not implied by her words, “God has given you better than her in exchange” that she considered herself more pure and virtuous than Khadija. For this is a matter that is the prerogative of God, Almighty and Glorious is He. As He stated, “Do not attribute purity to yourselves; He knows best who is the most pious” (surat al-Najm; LIII, v.32). And God Almighty also stated, “Have you not seen those who attribute purity to themselves? It is God who attributes purity to whomever He wishes” (ṣūrat al-Nisā'; IV, v.49).

This is an issue subject to much debate among scholars old and new. On one side of it there are those versions to which members of the Shi'a and others restrict themselves, considering no woman equal to Khadija because of the greetings made to her by the Lord and because the only sons of the Prophet (ṢAAS), except for Ibrahim, were born to her. Also they refer to the fact that he married no other woman until she died, and out of his respect for her acceptance of Islam, and for her having been of those who trusted. She has the status of having believed at the beginning of the mission and of devoting herself and her wealth to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

There are also sunni, orthodox, scholars who take extreme positions and attribute to each of them special virtues, as is well-known. However, the strength of their orthodoxy leads them to prefer ʿAʾisha for having been the daughter of al-Šiddiq, Abū Bakr, “the Trusting”, and to her having been more knowledgeable than Khadija. For in no nation was there ever any woman the like of ʿAʾisha in her ability to memorize, in her knowledge, eloquence or intelligence. Moreover, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did not love any of his wives as much as he did her. And affirmation of her innocence came down from above the seven heavens. And she related after he had died a great deal of excellent and highly valued knowledge of him, to such an extent that many people make reference to the well-known hadith “Take one half of your religion from al-Ḥumayrā.”

The truth is that both of them have virtues so evident as to amaze and dazzle anyone who might have witnessed them. It is therefore best to defer this matter to God almighty.

One who possesses irrefutable proof, or is inclined to one view in this regard, ought to speak on the basis of such knowledge.

Anyone who is hesitant about any such matter will find that the best and the straightest path is for him to say, “God knows best.”

Imām Aḥmad, al-Bukhārī, Muslim, al-Tirmidhī and al-Nasāʿī related, through Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfar, from ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalib, God bless him, who stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘The best of their women was Mary, daughter of ʿImrān, and the best of their women was Khadija, daughter of Khūwaylid.’” By this he meant the best women of their eras.

Shuʿba related, from Muḥāwiya b. Qurra, that his father Qurra b. Iyyās, God be pleased with him, stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘There have been many perfect men, but only three perfect women. These were Mary, daughter of ʿImrān, Asiyya, the wife of Pharaoh, and Khadija, daughter of

22. Apparently a nickname applied to ʿAʾisha. The word, a diminutive form, means high born, of great excellence, or fair-skinned.
Khuyaylid. The greater virtue of ‘A’isha over other women is like that of al-tharid over other foods.”

Ibn Mirdawayh related this in his Tafsir (Exegesis), and this chain of authorities is good back to Shu’ba and beyond.

Scholars agree that the quality shared by these three women, Asiyya, Mary and Khadija is that each of them vouched for a prophet sent by God, gave them the best of companionship, and believed when they were given their mission.

Mary gave the most complete and full support and credence to her son when he received his mission.

Khadija wished to have the Messenger of God (SAAS) marry her and gave her wealth for that, as we have stated previously. She also had full faith in him when revelation came down to him from God, Almighty and Glorious is He.

His statement “the greater virtue of ‘A’isha over other women is like that of al-tharid over other foods” is also firmly established in both sahih compendia through Shu’ba, from Urwa b. Murra, from Murra al-‘ayyib al-Hamdani, from Abü Musa al-Ash‘a, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘There have been many perfect men, but of women there were only Asiyya, Pharaoh’s wife, and Mary, daughter of ‘Imran; and the greater virtue of ‘A’isha over other women is like that of al-tharid over other foods.’”

Al-tharid is a dish made of bread and meat mixed together. It is the finest food of the Arabs. As some poets have said:

“When bread is enriched with meat, that, by God’s good grace, is al-tharid.”

His statement, “The greater virtue of ‘A’isha over other women” has the implication of being comprehensive and encompasses all those women mentioned as well as others; but it may apply equally to all women, excluding (the afore-mentioned three). The discussion about her (‘A’isha’s) status as compared to those three women would then remain undecided, with the probability of there being equality among them. Anyone wanting to express a preference for one of these over the others would therefore need extrinsic proof. But God knows best.

Section: On his marriage after the death of Khadija, God bless her, to ‘A’isha, daughter of Abū Bakr, and to Sawda, daughter of Zam’a, God bless them both.

What is true is that he contracted marriage first with ‘A’isha, as will be shown.

Al-Bukhari stated in his chapter on his marriage to ‘A’isha as follows, “Mu‘alla b. Asad related to us, quoting Wuhayb, from Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, from ‘A’isha, that the Prophet (SAAS) told her, ‘You have twice been shown to me in my sleep dressed in a silk cloth. And he (Gabriel) says, “This is your wife.” And when I uncover her, it is you! And so I say that if this be God’s will, then may He bring it about!””

23. The word refers to a culinary dish the base of which is bread to which may be added marrow, eggs, meat and spices.

‘Isma’il b. ‘Abd Allah related to us, as did his brother, from Sulaymān b. Bilāl, from Hishām b. ‘Urwa, from his father, from ‘A’isha, who stated, ‘I said, “O Messenger of God, do you think that if you were to go down into a valley where there was one tree whose fruit had previously been eaten from, and another that had not been eaten from, at which of them would you graze your camel?” “At the one never eaten from.” This implied that the Prophet (SAAS) married no other virgin but her.”’

Al-Bukhari alone gives this tradition.

He then stated, “Ubayd b. Isma’il related to us, that it was related to him by Abū Usāma, from Hishām b. ‘Urwa, from his father, that ‘A’isha said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) told me, “You were shown to me in my sleep being brought in a cloth of silk by an angel who said to me, “This is your wife.” I withdrew the cloth from your face and it was you! So I said, ‘If this be God’s will, then may He bring it about!’”’

In one account the wording is, “You were shown to me three nights in my sleep.”

According to al-Tirmidhi Gabriel brought him her image in a piece of green silk and said, “This is your wife in this world and the next.”

Al-Bukhari’s text reads, “Chapter on Marriage between the Young and the Old. ‘Abd Allah b. Yusuf related to us, as did al-Layth, from Yazīd, from ‘Irāk, from ‘Urwa, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked Abū Bakr for ‘A’isha’s hand in marriage. Abū Bakr replied, ‘But I’m your brother!’ (the Prophet (SAAS)) responded, ‘You are my brother in God’s religion and His Book, and she is permitted to me.”’

The text of this tradition clearly suggests it to be mursal, incomplete, even though al-Bukhari and the authorities consider it uninterrupted. This is because it is a hadith of ‘Urwa from ‘A’isha, God bless her. This is a tradition narrated by al-Bukhari alone, God bless him.

Yūnus b. Bukayr stated, from Hishām b. ‘Urwa, from his father who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) married ‘A’isha three years after (the death of) Khadija. At that time (of the contract) ‘A’isha had been a girl of six. When he married her she was nine. The Messenger of God (SAAS) died when ‘A’isha was a girl of eighteen.”

This tradition is considered gharib (unique in this line).

Al-Bukhari had related, from Ubayd b. Isma’il, from Abū Usāma, from Hishām b. ‘Urwa, from his father, who said, “Khadija died three years before the emigration of the Prophet (SAAS). He allowed a couple of years or so to pass after that, and then he contracted marriage with ‘A’isha when she was six, thereafter consummating marriage with her when she was nine years old.”

24. This is so because ‘Urwa, the narrator, is transmitting a conversation to which he was not a party, as is clear from the text. Also, he was too young to have witnessed this meeting.
What Urwa stated here is mursal, incomplete, as we mentioned above, but in its content it must be judged as muttaṣil, uninterrupted.

His statement, “He contracted marriage with ʿĀʾisha when she was six, thereafter consummating marriage with her when she was nine” is not disputed by anyone, and is well established in the ṣahīh collections of traditions and elsewhere.

He consummated marriage with her during the second year following the emigration to Medina.

His contracting marriage with her took place some three years after Khadija’s death, though there is disagreement over this.

The ḥāfīz Ya’qūb b. Sufyān stated, “Al-Ḥajjāj related to us, that Ḥammād related to him, from Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, from ʿĀʾisha, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) contracted marriage with me (after) Khadija’s death and before his emigration from Mecca, when I was six or seven years old. After we arrived in Medina some women came to me while I was playing on a swing; my hair was like that of a boy. They dressed me up and put make-up on me, then took me to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he consummated our marriage. I was a girl of nine.’”

The statement here “muttaṣafī Khadija”, “Khadija’s death” has to mean that it was shortly thereafter. Unless, that is, the word baʿda, “after”, originally preceded this phrase and had been omitted from the account. The statement made by Yūnus b. Bukayr and Abī Usāma from Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, is, therefore, not refuted. But God knows best.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Farwa b. Abī al-Maghraṣ related to us, that ʿAlī b. Mushir related to him, from Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, that ʿĀʾisha said, ‘The Prophet (SAAS) contracted marriage with me when I was six. We went to Medina and took up residence with the Banū al-Harith b. al-Khazraj. I fell ill and my hair was cut short so that all I had was a head of hair like a boy’s. My mother, Umm Rūmān, came to me when I was on a swing in the company of my friends. She shouted to me and so I went to her not knowing what she wanted. She took me by the hand and sat me down at the door of the house; I was panting, but settled down somewhat. Then she took some water and, having wiped my face and head, led me into the house. There I found a number of the wives of the Companions of the Prophet (SAAS), and they addressed me with the words, “Blessings, good health and happy news!” Then she delivered me to them and they tidied me up. To my surprise it was the Messenger of God (SAAS) who came to me that morning. They gave me over to him; at the time I was nine.’”

Imām Aḥmad stated in the musnād of ʿĀʾisha, “the mother of the faithful”, that “Muḥammad b. Bishr related to him, from Bishr and Muḥammad b. ʿAmr, who was told the following by Abū ʿAla Salama and Yaḥyā: ‘When Khadija died, Khawla, daughter of Ḥakīm, the wife of ʿUthmān b. Mazʿūn, came and said, “O Messenger of God, wouldn’t you like to get married?” He replied, “To whom?”

“My Lord,” he said, “to either a virgin or to someone previously married, as you wish.”

“‘And who would the virgin be?’ He asked. She replied, “That creation of God you enjoy above all others, ‘A’isha, daughter of Abü Bakr!”

“‘And who would the previously married woman be?’ he asked. “Sawda, daughter of Zam‘a,” she answered. “She has expressed belief in you and has become your follower.”

“‘You may go,” he told her, “and make mention of me to them.”

“She entered Abü Bakr’s house and said to his wife, “Umm Rūmān, what goodness and blessings God brings you!” “How do you mean?” she enquired.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) has sent me to ask to become engaged to ‘A’isha!”

“‘See Abü Bakr when he comes in,” she replied.

“Abü Bakr did come and Khawlā said, “O Abü Bakr, what goodness and blessings God brings you!”

“‘How so?’ he asked.

“‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) has sent me to ask to become engaged to ‘A’isha!”

“‘And would she be proper for him? After all, she is his brother’s daughter,” he responded.

“So I returned to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and told him that and he replied, “Go back and tell him ‘I am your brother, and you are mine, in Islam. Your daughter would be proper for me.’”

“So I went back and told him this, and he replied, “Wait” and left. Umm Rūmān told me, “Mu‘tām b. ‘Adi has asked for her in marriage to his son; and, I swear, Abü Bakr never before broke an agreement he had made.”

“Abü Bakr went in to see Mu‘tām b. ‘Adi who had his wife, Umm al-Sabī, with him. She commented, “Well, son of Abü Quhāfa, are you perhaps having our friend change his religion and join yours if he gets married into your family?”

Abü Bakr asked Mu‘tām b. ‘Adi, “Is this how you respond?” He replied, “It’s she who said that.”

“And so Abü Bakr left, God having relieved him of the promise he had made to Mu‘tām. He returned home and told Khawlā, “Call for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to come to me.” She did so and he agreed to her marriage to him, ‘A’isha at that time being six years old.

“Khawlā then left and went in to see Sawda, daughter of Zam‘a, saying, “What goodness and blessings God brings you!” “How do you mean?” she asked. “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) has sent me to ask you to marry him!” “I would like that,” she replied. “Go in and tell Abü Bakr of that.”

“He was an elderly man, too old to have gone on the pilgrimage, so she went in to him and gave him the salutation used before the coming of Islam. “Who is that?” he asked. “The Messenger of God” (ṢAAS) she told him, “has sent me to arrange his marriage with Sawda.” “A fine match! What does your lady say?” he responded. "She would like that," she replied. "Well, call her in to me," he told her. She did so and Abū Bakr said to Sawda, "My child, this woman claims that Muhammad, son of ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib, has sent asking to become engaged to you. It’s a fine match. Would you have me marry you to him?" "Yes, I would," she replied. "Then call for him," he said.

"And when the Messenger of God (S.A.W) came, he did marry him to her.

"Her brother ‘Abd b. Zam'ā then returned from the pilgrimage, his head covered with dirt. After greetings, he commented, "By your life, what a fool I am! The same day I cover my head with dirt the Messenger of God (S.A.S) marries Sawda, daughter of Zam'ā!"

"'A'isha stated, "We moved to Medina and took up residence among the Banū al-Ḥārith b. Khazraj in al-Sunḥ. The Messenger of God (S.A.S) came into our house where he had a meeting with some of the men and women of the anṣār,27 'the Helpers'. My mother came to me while I was on a swing, going to and fro between two date-palms. She took me down from the swing; my hair was short like a boy's and she parted it, washed my face with some water and then led me over to the door. I was out of breath and (stopped) there until I became calmer. Then she took me in and there was the Messenger of God (S.A.S) seated on a bed inside our house, in the company of a group of the anṣār, both men and women. She sat me down in his lap and said, 'These are your family; may God bless you by them and they by you.' The men and women then jumped up and left. The Messenger of God (S.A.S) consummated our marriage there in our house; no camels or sheep were slaughtered for me. Eventually Sa'd b. ‘Ubād sent us a bowl of food such as he would provide whenever the Messenger of God (S.A.S) was visiting his wives. At that time, I was nine.'"

This account, though seemingly incomplete is to be considered comprehensive.

This is an account of the same circumstances related by al-Bayhaqī through Ahmad b. ‘Abd al-Jabbār, as follows, "‘Abd Allāh b. Idrīs al-Azdi related to us, from Muhammad b. ‘Amr, from Yahyā b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Ḥāṭib who reported, ‘A’isha said, 'When Khadija died Khawlā, daughter of Ḥākim, came and said, 'O Messenger of God, would you like to be married?' 'To whom?' he enquired. 'It could, if you wish, be to a virgin or to a woman previously married,' she replied. 'Which virgin, and which previously married woman?' he asked. 'The virgin could be the daughter of that creation of God whom you love best; the previously married woman would be Sawda, daughter of Zam‘ā. She has expressed belief in you and become your follower.' 'Make mention of me to them,' he told her.'"

The account hereafter relates the hadith essentially as above.

26. Apparently placing dirt on the head was part of the pre-Islamic pilgrimage ritual in which he had engaged.

27. This refers to the people of Yathrib (later Medina) who accepted Islam and assisted the Muslim migrants from Mecca.
This tradition firmly establishes that his betrothal to 'A'isha preceded his marriage to Sawda, daughter of Zam'a.

However, he did consummate marriage with Sawda in Mecca, whereas that with 'A'isha was postponed until Medina, in the second year (after the hegira) as indicated above and hereafter.

Imām Ahmad stated, “Aswad related to us, that it was related to him from Shurayk, from Hishām, from his father, from 'A'isha, who said, ‘When Sawda grew old and she gave to me the day assigned to her, the Messenger of God (SAAS) shared the day given to me (by her) with his other wives. She was the first woman with whom he contracted marriage after myself.”

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Abū al-Nadr related to us, quoting ‘Abd al-Ḥamid, Shahr and ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abbās, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) became engaged to a woman from his people whose name was Sawda; she was a woman with many children, having some five or six from her husband who had died. The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked her, ‘Is there something holding you back from me?’ She replied, ‘O Prophet of God, nothing prevents you from being the most beloved of mankind to me. But I would do you honour by preventing these boys from being at your head morning and night!’

‘Does anything else keep you from me?’ he asked. ‘No, I swear,’ she replied. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then told her, ‘God have mercy on you! The best of women ride on old camels; isn’t that appropriate? The women of Quraysh are kind to a boy when young and they also take care of their husband however they can!’”

I observe that her husband before him was al-Sakrān b. ‘Amr, brother of Suhayl b. ‘Amr. He had accepted Islam and gone into exile to Abyssinia, as we reported before. He had then returned to Mecca and died there before the emigration, God be pleased with him!

All these accounts indicate that the marriage contract with 'A'isha was prior to that with Sawda, this being the statement of ‘Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. Uqayl. Yūnus also related this from al-Zuhri.

Ibn ‘Abd al-Barr preferred the contract with Sawda to have preceded that with ‘A’isha; he related this from Qatāda and Abū Ubayd.

He stated, “Uqayl related it from al-Zuhri.”

DIVISION

Reference has previously been given to the death of Abū Ṭalib, the uncle of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and to his having been a supporter and defender of his, with all the moral, financial, verbal and practical help he could give.

When he died, foolish men of Quraysh were emboldened and engaged in such actions against him that they had not previously been able to undertake.

As al-Bayhaqi reported from al-Ḥakīm, from al-Aṣamm: ‘Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq al-Sanʿānī related to us, from Yūsuf b. Bahlūl, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Idrīs, from Muhammad b. Ishaq, from someone else who told him, from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, from Abd Allah b. Jafar, who said, 'When Abū Talib died, a foolish fellow of Quraysh stood in the way of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and threw dirt at him. He, the Messenger of God (SAAS), then returned home and one of his daughters came and wiped the dirt from his face, weeping. He told her, "Don’t cry, daughter; God will protect your father."'

He is supposed to have said during this conversation that Quraysh did not engage in any reprehensible actions against him until the death of Abū Taib, at which point they began (to harass him).

Ziyād al-Bakāʾī related this from Muhammad b. Ishaq, from Hishām b. 'Urwa, from his father, with an incomplete chain of authorities. But God knows best.

Al-Bayhaqi also related, from al-Ḥākim and others, from al-Āṣamm, from Ahmad b. 'Abd al-Jabbār, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Hishām b. 'Urwa, from his father, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "Quraysh remained cowards until Abū Taib died."

He then related this from al-Ḥākim, from al-Āṣamm, from 'Abbas al-Dūri, from Yahyā b. Maṭīn, who said, "We were related by 'Uqba al-Majdār, from Hishām b. 'Urwa, from his father, from ʿAisha, that the Prophet (SAAS) said, "Quraysh remained cowards until Abū Taib died."

The ḥāfiz Abū al-Faraj b. al-Jawzī related with a chain of authorities from Thaʿlabā b. Ṣuqayr and Ḥakīm b. Ḥizam who both said, "When Abū Taib and Khadija died, five days apart, he suffered two tragedies together. He kept to his house and rarely went out. Quraysh treated him worse than they would have ever intended before.

"News of this reached Abū Lahab, who came to him and said, ‘O Muḥammad, pass on freely as you want. Do whatever you did when Abū Taib was alive. No, by al-Lat, I swear no harm will befall you before I die.'"

"Ibn al-Ghaymla insulted the Messenger of God (SAAS), and so Abū Lahab went to him and punished him and he went off yelling, ‘O tribe of Quraysh, Abū 'Utha has become a Ṣabīan!’ Quraysh men then came and stood before Abū Lahab. He told them, ‘I have not left the faith of 'Abd al-Muttalib. But I will prevent my nephew from being harmed and ensure his own freedom of action.’

"They commented, ‘You have done well and right, and maintained your family ties.’

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) thereafter spent a period of some days coming and going without interference from Quraysh who respected Abū Lahab. But eventually 'Uqba b. Abū Muʿayṭ and Abū Jahl went to Abū Lahab and asked him, ‘Has your nephew told you where your father has been sent?’

"Abū Lahab then asked him, ‘Muḥammad, where has Abū al-Muṭṭalib been sent?’

"He replied, ‘With his people.’ So Abū Lahab went out to 'Uqba and Abū Jahl and told them, ‘I did ask him. And he replied, ‘With his people.’"
"The two men commented, 'Well, he's claiming that he is in hell-fire then!'
"Abū Lahab then asked him, 'Muḥammad, is Ābd al-Muṭṭalib in the fire?'
"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, 'Whoever dies in the state Ābd al-Muṭṭalib was in does go into hell-fire."
"Abū Lahab – God curse him – then announced, 'By God, I shall always be your enemy for your claiming that Ābd al-Muṭṭalib is in the fire!'
"At that Abū Lahab and the rest of Quraysh intensified their attacks upon him."

Ibn Isḥaq stated, "The group of men who used to harm the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in his house were Abū Lahab, al-Ḥakam b. Ābū al-ʿĀṣ b. Umayya, ʿUqba b. Abū Muʿayy, Adī b. al-Ḥamrāʾ, and Ibn al-ʿAṣdāʾ al-Huḍhali."
"These were neighbours of his; the only one of them to ever accept Islam was al-Ḥakam b. Ābū al-ʿĀṣ.
"It is said that one of them would throw a sheep’s uterus over him while he was praying, or toss it into his cooking pot if set up for him. Eventually the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would take a position near a wall when praying and when they threw some such thing at him he would carry it outside on a stick, stand at his door and say, ‘O Banū Ābd Manāf, what kind of neighbourliness is this?’ Then he would toss it out into the street."

My own view is that most of the matter being related here occurred after the death of Abū Talib. Though God knows best. It is certainly very appropriate to mention them here. These incidents included the throwing of a camel’s placenta over his shoulders while he prayed, as Ibn Masʿūd related, and of Faṭima’s having come and removed it from him and having gone off and reviled them; when he had finished praying, he said prayers against seven of them. A similar incident was the account of Ābd Allāh b. ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ of their having severely throttled him until Abū Bakr intervened, saying, "Would you murder a man merely for saying God is my Lord?" And there is the case of the intent of Abī Jahl, God damn him, to tread on his neck while he prayed, and of this being prevented.

Section: On his departure to the people of Ṭāʾīf to call them to Almighty God, and to come to the aid of His faith; how they refused him this and he returned to Mecca.

Ibn Isḥaq stated, "When Abū Ṭālib died, Quraysh treated the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) worse than had ever been the case during the life of his uncle Abū Ṭālib.
"And so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) left for Ṭāʾīf seeking help from Thaqīf and their protection from his people. He hoped they would accept the message he brought them from God Almighty.
"He went to them alone.
"Yazīd b. Abī Ziyād related to me, from Muḥammad b. Kašf al-Kuرا立志, who said, 'When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arrived in Ṭāʾīf, he made for a group of Thaqīf, their leaders and nobles, who were three brothers. They were Ābd Yālīl, Mas'ūd and Ḥabīb, all sons of ʿAmr b. ʿUmayr b. ʿAwf b. ʿUqda b. ʿAwf b. Thaqīf. One of these was married to a Quraysh woman of the Banū Jumāh.

"He sat with them and invited them to God, asked them to help Islam and himself against those of his people who were opposing him. One of them replied, "He would tear off the covering of the kāʿba if it were God who had sent you!" Another said, "Did not God have anyone but you to send?" The third commented, "By God, I will never speak to you. If you were a messenger from God, as you claim, you are far too important for me to argue with, and if you are lying against God, then it would certainly not be appropriate that I talk to you."

"And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) arose and left them, despairing of any good from Thaqīf. I have been told that he had asked them, "Since you have so behaved, at least keep it secret for me." The Messenger of God (SAAS) did not want his people to hear about this, since it would have encouraged them to oppose him.

"However, they did not agree, and incited their fools and slaves to revile him and to shout out after him. A crowd gathered against him and forced him to seek refuge in a garden belonging to Wtba b. Rabiʿa and Shayba b. Rabiʿa, they both being there at the time. The Thaqīf fools who had been following him then withdrew.

"He made for the shade of a grape vine, where he sat down, while the two sons of Rabiʿa watched him, having seen his ill-treatment by the Thaqīf fools.

"As I have been told, the Messenger of God (SAAS) had met the woman from the Banū Jumāh and had told her, "Well, how is it we've been so treated by your husband's family?"

"When he felt secure, as I have been told, he spoke the prayer, "O God, I complain to You about my weakness and inadequacy before the people. O You, most Merciful of all, You who are Lord of the oppressed, You who are my Lord, to whom would You entrust me, to those far away who greet me with displeasure, or to some enemy to whom You entrust me? As long as You are not angry with me, I will not care, but I would prefer your favour.

"I take refuge with the light of Your face that brightens the shadows, repairs the troubles of this world and the hereafter, ensuring that Your anger or discontent not alight upon me. May You be content and be pleased; all power and strength stem from You."

"When Rabiʿa's two sons Utba and Shayba saw what had happened to him, they felt compassion for him. They summoned a Christian servant they had called ʿAddās and told him, "Take a cluster of grapes, place it on a plate, then go over to that man and tell him to eat it."

"ʿAddās did this; he placed it before the Messenger of God (SAAS), and told him to eat.

"As the Messenger of God (SAAS) placed his hand upon it, he spoke the words, "In the name of God" then he ate. ʿAddās looked into his face and said,
"By God, people of this land do not say these words." The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him, "Where are you from, 'Addas, and what is your religion?"

He replied, "I am a Christian, and I come from Nineveh."

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, "You mean from the village of that pious man Jonah, son of Amittai?"

"'Addas asked, "How do you know of Jonah, son of Amittai?"

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, "That man was my brother; he was a prophet and I am a prophet."

"'Addas bent low over the Messenger of God (SAAS), kissing his head, hands and feet.

"The two sons of Rabī’a said to one another, "He's already corrupted our servant!"

"When 'Addas came back to them, they commented, "What was wrong with you, 'Addas? Why did you kiss the head, hands and feet of that man?"

""On all earth there is none finer than this man; he has told me of something that no one but a prophet could know," he told them.

""Be careful," they warned him, "you don't let him turn you from your faith. Your religion is better than his."

Mūsā b. 'Uqba related this similarly but did not include the prayer and added the words, "The people of Ta'if positioned themselves in two lines along his path and as he passed by every time he raised and put down a foot they threw stones at it until his feet began to bleed. His feet streaming with blood, he withdrew and made his way beneath the shade of a palm tree, completely overcome. In that garden were 'Utba and Shayba, the two sons of Rabī’a. He disliked being at their place because of their enmity towards God and His Messenger."

Mūsā then related the story of 'Addas the Christian much as above.

Imām Ahmad recounted from Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba as follows, "Marwān b. Mu‘āwiyah al-Fazārī related to us, from ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān al-Tāfīfī, from ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Khalid b. Abū Jabal al-Adwānī, from his father, that he saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) in the winter quarters of Thaqif standing on a staff or a bow, having gone to them seeking their help. The source said, 'I heard him say, "By the heavens and he who comes by night" (sūrat al-Ṭārīq, LXXVI, v.1) up to its end.'"

He went on, "So I became aware of it in the jahiliyya, before Islam, while I was a polytheist, then I recited it after accepting Islam.

"Thaqif summoned me and asked, 'What did you hear from that man?' so I recited it to them. One of the Quraysh men there with Thaqif said, 'We are very well acquainted with him; if we knew that what he says is true, we would follow him.'"

It is established in both Sahih collections, through ‘Abd Allāh b. Wahb, who said, "I was told by Yūnus b. Yazīd from Ibn Shihab, who told him, 'It was related to me by ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr that ‘Aisha related to him that she said to the Messenger of God (SAAS), "Has any day been harder on you than that of the battle of Uhud?"

"He replied, "The worst I suffered from your people was the day of al-'aqaba, when I presented myself to Ibn 'Abdu Yail b. 'Abd Kalāl, and he refused my request to him. I wandered off, dazed and depressed, and only came to myself at Qarn al-Thā'ālib. I raised my head and there above me was a cloud. Looking up, I saw Gabriel in it, and he called out to me, saying, 'God has heard what your people said to you, and how they rejected you. He has sent to you the angel of the mountain for you to order him to do with them whatever you like.'"

"'Then the angel of the mountain called out to me in greeting and said, 'O Muḥammad, God has sent me. God has heard what your people said to you. I am the angel of the mountain; your Lord has sent me to you to order me to do whatever you wish. If you wish, you can bring down the two mountains the Akhshabayn upon them.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, 'I hope that God will bring forth from their loins those who will worship God and associate no other god or person with Him.'"

DIVISION

Muḥammad b. Isḥāq told how the jinn, the spirits, overheard the recitation made by the Messenger of God (SAAS) upon his return from Ta'if when he spent the night at Nakhla and said the morning prayer with his Companions. The jinn who had been dispatched to him heard his reciting there.

Ibn Isḥāq stated, "They were seven in number. Concerning them God Almighty revealed His words, 'And when We dispatched towards you a group of jinn'" (sūrat al-Aḥqāf, XLVI, v.29).

My own comment is that we spoke about this in detail in the Tafsīr (Exegesis), and included some material relating to it above. But God knows best.

Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) entered Mecca on his return from Ta'if and came under the protection of al-Muṭṣim b. 'Adi. His people increased their anger and antagonism towards him and became ever bolder in their opposition. God is the one from whom to seek help, and reliance must be upon Him.

In his work on the maghāzī, the early military engagements, al-Umawi related that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Urayqīt to al-Akhnas b. Sharīf and asked him to give him protection in Mecca. But he replied, 'An ally of Quraysh cannot give protection for one of their own.'

"He then sent to Suhayl b. 'Amr to give him protection, and he responded, 'The Banū 'Āmir b. Lu'ayy cannot give protection against those of the Banū Ka'b b. Lu'ayy.'"

"He then sent him to al-Muṭṣim b. 'Adi for his protection, who agreed, saying, 'Yes; tell him to come.'

"And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) did go to him and spent that night with him. When morning came, he and his six or seven sons, all wearing swords, went out with the Messenger of God (SAAS). They entered the mosque and told the Messenger of God (SAAS), ‘Make your circumambulations.’ And they sat, with their legs drawn up over their belted swords in the mataf, the space around the ka'ba for the circumambulations.

"Abū Sufyān came over to Muṭṭim and asked him, ‘Are you giving protection or are you a follower?’

‘He replied, ‘No, I’m just protecting.’

‘Then you’ll not be watched,’ Abū Sufyān told him.

‘He then sat with him until the Messenger of God (SAAS) had finished his circuits, and when he left al-Muṭṭim and his men went with him. Then Abū Sufyān went off to his seat.’

The account went on, "This continued for a few days, then he was given permission to make the hijra, to leave for Medina.

"Shortly after the Messenger of God (SAAS) had left Mecca for Medina, al-Muṭṭim b. ‘Adi died. Hassān b. Thābit said, ‘By God, I shall certainly eulogize him!’ And part of what he spoke were the following verses:

‘If honour could today render any one person everlasting, his honour would today select Muṭṭim.

You protected the Messenger of God from them and they became your slaves for as long as pilgrims don the ihram and shout “labbayka”.

If all Ma‘add, Qaḥṭān or all the rest of Jurhum were asked about him,

They would say, “He fulfils defence of his neighbour and protects if he takes on a difficult duty,”

The shining sun above them does not look down on his like among them, one greater or more noble.

Resolute if refusing, but kind by nature, sleeping well even if the night is dark and he protecting another.”

I observe that this is why the Prophet (SAAS) said, on the day the prisoners were taken at Badr, “If al-Muṭṭim b. ‘Adi were alive now and asked me about these stinking people, I would have given them over to him.”

Section: On the call of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to the Arab tribes during the pilgrimage seasons to help and support him against those persecuting and denying him. None of them agreed, since God Almighty had reserved that great honour to the ansār (the “ Helpers” or “Partisans”) of Medina, may God be pleased with them.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned to Mecca, where his people were even more antagonistic to him and his religion than before, except for a few persons of no power who did believe.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) would present himself at the fairs when they were held, addressing the Arab tribes and inviting them to God, Almighty and Glorious is He. He would tell them that he was a prophet who had been given a mission, and would ask for their belief and their protection so that he could explain what God had entrusted to him.”

Ibn Ishaq continued, “One of our fellow scholars, a man in whom I trust, related the following to me, from Zayd b. Aslam, from Rabī‘a b. Ḥibād al-Du‘ālī, and another person from whom Ḥabīb Zinād had narrated. I was also related this by Ḥusayn b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Ḫubayd Allāh b. ʿAbbās, who said, ‘I heard Rabī‘a b.
Ḥibād being addressed by my father who said, ‘I was once, when a young lad, with my father at Minā when the Messenger of God (SAAS) would stop at the camps of the Arab tribes and say to them, ‘I am the Messenger of God to you. I tell you to worship God and to associate no other with Him and to abandon those others you revere; and you should have faith and belief in me and protect me so that I make evident that with which God sent me.’” “Behind him stood a squint-eyed, neatly dressed man, his hair in two braids and wearing a cloak from Aden. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had finished his prayer and address, that man would say to the tribe, “This man is only trying to get you to strip al-Lat and al-Uzza off your necks, along with your allies the juin of the Banū Malik b. Uqaysh in favour of the wrongful innovation he himself brings. Do not obey him and do not listen to him.”

“I asked my father, “Who is that man who follows behind him and contradicts what he says?”

“He replied, “That is his uncle, ʿAbd al-Uzza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, Abū Lahab.””

Imām Ahmad recounted this hadith from Ibrahim b. Abū al-ʿAbbās saying,
“The man named Rabī‘a b. Ḥibād of the Banū al-Dil informed me – he having been a polytheist before Islam who converted – as follows, “I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) in the market of Dhū al-Majāz in the period before Islam was accepted;
he was saying, ‘O people, say, L’T there is no god but God” and you will prosper.’
As people gathered around him there was one man with a handsome face, squint-eyed and wearing two plaits who would say, ‘He’s a ʿSabian, a liar.’ And he would follow behind him wherever he went. I asked about him and was told he was his uncle Abū Lahab.””

Al-Bayhaqi related this, through Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Anṣārī, from Muḥammad b. ʿAmr, from Muḥammad b. al-Munḳādir, from Rabī‘a al-Dīlī, as follows, “I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the market of Dhū al-Majāz following people into their homes and inviting them to God. Behind him came a squint-eyed man with flaming-red cheeks who was saying, ‘Do not let this man lead you astray from your religion and that of your forefathers.’ I asked who he was, and I was told that this was Abū Lahab.”

Abū Nuʿaym related this similarly in the Dalāʾil (The Signs), through Ibn Abū Dhiʿb b. ʿAdī and ʿAbd Allāh b. Salāmā, both of them relating a similar account from Muḥammad b. al-Munḳādir.
Al-Bayhaqi also related it through Shu'ba, from al-Ash'ath b. Salīm, from a man of Kināna, who said, “I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the market of Dhī al-Majāz and he was saying, ‘O people, say, “There is no god but God” and you will prosper.’ And there was a man behind him tossing dirt at him. This was Abū Jahl and he was saying, ‘O people, do not let this man lead you astray from your religion. He only wants you to give up worship of al-Lāt and al-‘Uzza.’”

According to this account, these were words of Abū Jahl. This supposition might be illusory or it might sometimes have been Abū Jahl and sometimes the other, Abū Lahab. They might have taken turns in doing such harm to the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Ibn Ishaq wrote, “Ibn Shihāb al-Zuhri related to me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to the tribe of Kinda, visiting them in their homes, including one of their leaders named Mūlayḥ. He invited them to God, Almighty and Glorious is He, and offered himself to them, but they refused him.”

Ibn Ishaq said, “Muḥammad b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Ḥusayn related to me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to the Banū Kalb in their homes in a valley of theirs where they were called the Banū ‘Abd Allāh. He called them to the path of God and offered himself to them, saying, ‘O Banū ‘Abd Allāh, God named well indeed your forefather ‘Ahd Allāh’ (i.e. ‘the slave or servant of God’). But they could not accept from him what he proposed to them.

“Some of our friends related to me, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Ka'b b. Malik that the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to the Banū Ḥanīfah in their homes, called them to the path of God and offered himself to them. None of the Arabs gave him so rude a rejection as they did.

“Al-Zuhri related to me that he went to the Banū ‘Amir b. Sā'āda and called them to the path of God, offering himself to them. One of their men, named Bayḥara b. Fīrās, replied to him, ‘I swear, if I were to have this brave man of Quraysh, I could eat up the Arabs with him.’ He then said to him, ‘If we were to follow your orders and then God gave you victory against those opposing you, would we have power after you were gone?’

“He replied, ‘God controls power and places it where He wishes.’

“Bayḥara commented in reply, ‘Are we to present our throats to the Arabs in your defence and then, if God gave you victory, see power go elsewhere than to us? We’ll have nothing to do with you!’ And so they refused him.

“When the people there dispersed, the Banū ‘Amir returned to a sheikh of theirs who, being elderly, was unable to attend the fairs with them. When they returned home they would tell him what had occurred at the fair. That year on their return he asked them who had been at the fair. They told him, ‘A man of Quraysh, of the family of ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib, came to us claiming to be a prophet and he asked us to defend him and aid him and take him back to our territory.’
"The old man put his hand to his head and said, 'Could your mistake be put right? Can its consequences be reversed? I swear no descendant of Ishmael ever made such a claim falsely. It has to be true. Where did your good judgement go?'

Mūsā b. Uqba stated, quoting al-Zuhri, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) would for the period of those years, present himself to the Arab tribes at each fair, speaking with each tribal leader but asking them only for their protection and support. He would say, 'I don't wish to force any one of you to do anything. Any of you who agree to what I ask may do so, but I would not compel anyone not so wishing. All I want is to guard myself against those wanting to kill me, so that I may fulfil my Lord's mission and carry out whatever decree He wishes regarding myself and those who support me.' But not one of them accepted him. Every one of those tribes reached the following conclusion: 'The man's own tribe knew him best; how could we accept as suitable for us someone who has subverted his tribe and whom they have expelled.'

"This rejection too was due to the honour God had in store for the anṣār (the 'Helpers') of Medina."

The ḥāfiẓ Abū Nu'aym related through 'Abd Allāh b. al-Ajlāh and Yahyā b. Sa'īd al-Umawi, who both took their information from Muḥammad b. al-Sā'ib al-Kalbi, from Abū Sālih, from Ibn 'Abbās, from 'Abbās, who said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) told me, 'I don't consider myself receiving protection from you or from your brother. Would you take me to the market tomorrow for us to stay in the homes of some of the tribespeople?' It was the time for the gathering of the Arab tribes.

"He (the Prophet (SAAS)) went on, 'These are Kinda and those who mix with them. They are the best of those from Yemen who make the pilgrimage. Those are the homes of Bakr b. Wā'il; those belong to the Banū 'Amir b. Sa'ārā. Choose for yourself.'"

'Abbas continued "He began with Kinda, asking them, 'From whom are you?' 'From Yemen,' they replied. 'From which tribe?' he asked. 'From Kinda.' 'From which sub-tribe?' he next enquired. 'From the Banū 'Amr b. Mu'awiya,' they told him.

"Would you like to achieve good?"

"How would that be?" they asked.

"You would bear witness that there is no god but God, and would engage in prayer and believe in God's message.'"

'Abd Allāh b. al-Ajlāh quoted his father as having said, on the authority of the elders of his people, that Kinda replied to him (the Prophet (SAAS)), "If you are successful, will you grant us power after yourself?"

The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, "Power rests with God; He places it where He wishes."

They responded, "We don't need what you bring."
Al-Kalbi went on to state, “And they (Kinda) said, ‘have you come to us to keep us from our gods and have us go to war with the Arabs? Remain with your people. We have no need of you!’

“He then left them and went to Bakr b. Wā'il. He asked, ‘Who are these people?’ ‘They are part of Bakr b. Wā'il.’ ‘From which sub-tribe?’ he asked. He was told, ‘From the Banū Qays b. Tha'labā.’

‘How many are they?’ he asked.

‘Very numerous,’ he was told.

‘How would their protection be?’ he asked.

‘They replied, ‘We border on Persia; we have no protection from them or for them.’

“He told them, ‘Grant God custody over yourselves and He will keep you safe until you descend upon their homes, marry their women and enslave their children. Then give praise to God three and thirty times, then give thanks to Him three and thirty times, and say He is most great four and thirty times.’

‘Who are you?’ they asked.

‘I am the Messenger of God,’ he replied. Then he left.

“When he had left,” al-Kalbi said, “his uncle Abī Lahab had been following him and telling people, ‘Do not accept what he says.’ When he passed by them, they asked, ‘Do you know this man?’ He replied, ‘Yes, he’s from our élite. What about him makes you ask?’ They told him what he had offered them, saying, ‘He claims to be the Messenger of God.’ Abū Lahab commented, ‘Take no account of whatever he says. He’s crazy, and talks off the top of his head.’

‘We saw that,’ they commented, ‘when he spoke as he did about Persia!’”

Al-Kalbi stated, “'Abd al-Rahmān al-'Āmirī told me that elders of his tribe said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came to us when we were at the ‘Ukaz fair. He asked, ‘From whom are these people?’ We replied, ‘From the Banū ‘Amir b. Sa'āda.’ ‘From which sub-tribe?’ he asked.

‘We responded, ‘From the Banū Ka'b b. Rabī’a.’

‘He asked, ‘How would protection be with you?’

‘We replied, ‘The best imaginable; we are invincible.’

‘He stated to them, ‘I am the Messenger of God, and I am coming to you to protect me until I fulfil the mission of my Lord. I would not force any of you to anything.’

‘They asked him, ‘From which part of Quraysh are you?’

‘‘From the family of 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib,’ he replied.

‘‘What are your relations with the 'Abd Manāf?’ they asked.

‘‘They were the first to deny and to drive me away,’ he told them.

‘‘Well, we will neither drive you away nor believe in you; but we will protect you until you fulfil your Lord’s mission.’

‘So he took residence with them while they were attending the fair. And then Bayhara b. Firāsh al-Qushayri came to them and said, ‘Who is this man I now see with you; I don’t know him?’
"‘He is Muhammad, son of ‘Abd Allâh, of Quraysh,” they replied.

‘And what do you have to do with him?” he asked.

‘He claims to be the Messenger of God and he has asked us to protect him until he fulfils his Lord’s mission,” they replied.

‘And how did you respond?” he enquired.

‘We made him very welcome,” they told him. “We said we would take him to our own territory and protect him as we do ourselves.”

Bayhara commented, “I know of no one at this fair going back home with anything worse than you are. You have begun a policy that will alienate people; the Arabs will attack you in unison. His people know him very well; if they had perceived good in him, they would have been most delighted with him. Will you support a man cast out and denied by his own people and give him shelter and aid? Your policy is dreadful.”

‘He then approached the Messenger of God (SAAS), and told him, “Get up and join your people. I swear if you weren’t here among my kin, I would strike you down!”

‘And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) got up and mounted his camel. That evil man Bayhara then prodded the mount in its flank and it darted away with the Messenger of God (SAAS), and threw him.

‘With the Banû ʿAmir on that day was .DAO, daughter of ʿAmir b. Qarat; she was one of the women who had accepted Islam with the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Mecca. She had come on a visit to the Banû ʿAmir. She spoke out, “O people of ʿAmir, you’re not ṣâmir (i.e. civilized, cultured) to me! Could this really happen to the Messenger of God, right here among you without any one of you protecting him?”

‘Three of her relatives then attacked Bayhara, while two assisted him. Each man fought with another, her supporters beating the others to the ground, sitting on their chests and slapping their faces.

‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) then spoke, “May God bless these men and damn the others!”

‘The three who had aided him later embraced Islam and died as martyrs in battle. These were Ghaṭṭf and Ghaṭṭān, two sons of Sahl and ʿUrwa – or ʿUdhra – b. ʿAbd Allah b. Salama. God be pleased with them.”

The haʃīr Saʿd b. Yahya b. Saʿd al-Umawi related this hadīth from his father in its entirety in his book of the maghāzi, the military campaigns.

The other men all perished. These were Bayhara b. Firs, Hazn b. ‘Abd Allâh b. Salama b. Quṣṣayr and Muʿāwiya b. Abbâda, one of the Banû Uqayl, may God damn them utterly.

This is a curious tale; we give it here for its strangeness. But God knows best.

Abû Nuʿaym related a similar account, from a hadīth of Kaʿb b. Malik, God bless him, relating to the story of ʿAmir b. Ṣaʿṣaʿa and the rudeness of their reply to him.
Even stranger and lengthier than that was what Aba Nu'aym, al-Hakim and al-Bayhaqi related; the text was given by Aba Nu'aym, may God be pleased with them all. It comes from a hadith of Aban b. 'Abd Allah al-Bajali, from Aban b. Taghlib, from Ikrima, from Ibn 'Abbás, who quoted 'Ali b. Abū Ta'lib as having said, “When God ordered His Messenger to present himself to the tribes of the Arabs, he left, along with myself and Abū Bakr, for Minā. There we were present at a majlis, a reception, given by the Arabs.

“Abū Bakr, God bless him, went forward and made his greetings. He was in the very vanguard of good, and an expert in genealogy. He asked, ‘From whom do you people come?’ ‘From Rabī‘a,’ came their reply.

‘From which Rabī‘a are you, from its mainstream or from a branch?’

‘From its greatest mainstream.’

‘Abū Bakr asked them, ‘Is ‘Awf of you, of whom it was said, “There is no harr, no heat, in the ‘Awf valley?”’

‘No,’ they told him.

‘Do Bīṣām b. Qays Abū al-Liwa‘ and Muntahā al-‘Ayā‘ belong to your tribe?’

‘No,’ they replied.

‘Is al-Ḥawāfazān b. Shurayk, the killer of kings and robber of their souls, a kinsman of yours?’

‘No,’ they replied.

‘Is Jassās b. Murra b. Dhuhl, the protector of honour and defender of the neighbour, from you?’

‘No,’ they said.

‘Is al-Muzdalif, he of the unique turban, from you?’

‘No,’ they replied.

‘Are you related to the kings of Kinda?’ he asked.

‘No,’ they replied.

‘Are you related to the kings of Lakhm?’ he asked.

‘No,’ they replied.

‘Abū Bakr, God bless him, then commented, ‘So you’re not from its mainstream, but from a branch.’

‘At that a youth named Daghfal b. Ḥanzala al-Dhuhlt, his beard beginning to sprout, jumped up and grabbed the bridle of Abū Bakr’s camel, reciting, ‘Those who ask of us will be asked of; as for the burden (of proof) we neither know it nor bear it (as a responsibility).’

‘He also commented, ‘Hey, you, you asked and we replied, hiding nothing from you. We want to ask you something; who are you?’

‘He replied, ‘A man of Quraysh.’

‘The youth commented, ‘Well said! You are a people of leadership and power, the vanguard and guide of the Arabs. What part of Quraysh?’

‘He replied, ‘I’m of the Banū Taym b. Murra.’

‘The youth asked again, ‘So you shot the bowman right through his mouth! Is Quṣayy b. Kilāb, he who killed at Mecca those trying to conquer it, a kinsman of yours? That man, Quṣayy, who drove the rest of them away and brought in his own people from all over and settled them in Mecca, took over the temple and set Quraysh in the dwellings? The man who was therefore known as "the unifier", and about whom a poet spoke the verse,

"Was it not your father who was called 'the unifier', by whom God brought together the tribes of Fihr?"

"Abū Bakr replied, 'No.'

"'Were not 'Abd Manāf, the ultimate giver of advice, and Abū al-Ghaṭārīf, the great leader, of your stock?"

"Abū Bakr replied, 'No.'

"'And 'Amr b. 'Abd Manāf Ḥashim, who prepared bread and meat into the dish al-tharīd for his people and all of Mecca, was he not of you? The one of whom the poet said,

"'Amr al-Ūlā prepared the al-tharīd for his people, while the men of Mecca were destitute and under famine,

To him they attribute both the journeys, that of the winter and that of the summer,

Quraysh were as an egg which when split open came to have its best part, its yoke, as the 'Abd Manāf.

(They are) the wealthy, as is no other known, and they are those who say 'come on in' to the guests.

They are those who strike down pure-white sheep, those who protect the innocent with their swords.

How fine for you, if you stay at their abode; they will protect you from all ills and accusations.'"

"'No,' responded Abū Bakr.

"'Then,' the youth continued, 'you must be related to 'Abd al-Muṭib, that venerable man of much praise, controller of the Mecca caravan, and feeder of the birds of the skies and the wild beasts, of the lions in the desert, he whose face shines forth like a moon on a dark night?"

"'No,' said Abū Bakr.

"'Then you must be of those who have the privilege of the ifāda? (The signalling to the pilgrims to move from Arafāt to Minā.)"

"'No,' said Abū Bakr.

"'Perhaps of those who have the privilege of the hijāba? (The guardianship of the holy places.)"

"'No,' said Abū Bakr.

"'Then those with the privilege of the nadwa? (Making an address to the pilgrims.)"

"'No,' said Abū Bakr.

"'Then you must be of those who have the privilege of the siqāya? (The provision of drink for the pilgrims.)"
"'No,' said Abū Bakr.

"'Are you then of those with the privilege of providing the riḍāda?' (The provisioning of the pilgrims.)

"'No,' replied Abū Bakr.

"'Are you then of those who give bounteous aid?'

"'No,' said Abū Bakr and he pulled his bridle out of the hands of the youth, who then quoted the line,

'Sometimes it happens that distinction is moved on down, at other times up.'

"Then he commented, 'Well, I swear, O Brother of Quraysh, if you had continued to hold out I would have proven you to belong to the lowest class of Quraysh, not to its élite!'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) now came over to us, smiling," 'Ali went on, "and I commented to Abū Bakr, 'Well, this bedouin has turned out to be a disaster for you!' 'Yes indeed, Abū al-Ḥasan,' Abū Bakr replied, 'And, there's never a catastrophe without another that follows, and calamity is compounded by words.'"

'Ali continued his account, "We then went on to a meeting underway marked by calm and dignity. There were sheikhs of high rank and fine appearance there. Abū Bakr went forward and made greeting.

"'And,' 'Ali commented, "Abū Bakr was always in the vanguard of good.

"Abū Bakr asked them, 'From whom are you?' They replied, 'We are of the Banū Shaybān b. Ṭhaʿlabā.'

"Abū Bakr turned to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and commented, 'I swear, no one has more ḍīz, power, in their people than these do.'"

In other accounts the words ṣadr, responsibility, and ghurar, experience, are substituted for the word ḍīz, power, in the preceding sentence.

'Ali's account goes on, "Among this group were Mafraq b. 'Amr, Hani' b. Qabisa, al-Muthannā b. Ḥarīthah and al-Nuṣān b. Shurayk.

"The man most comparable to Abū Bakr was Mafraq b. 'Amr; he was their most eloquent. He wore his hair in two braids that came down to his chest. He sat closest to Abū Bakr.

"Abū Bakr asked him, 'How many are you in number?'

"Mafraq replied, 'We are more than 1,000 strong; and "a few men can't heat 1,000", as they say.'

"'And how would protection be with you?'

"'We go to the limit; and "every people has a forefather," (i.e. "we are proud and noble"),' Mafraq responded.

"Abū Bakr asked, 'And how is it when you make war with your enemies?'

"Mafraq answered, 'When we meet in battle, we are the angriest of men. We take greater pride in our steeds than our sons, care more for our swords than our sperm; victory rests with God. Sometimes He grants us victory, sometimes others victory over us. You seem to be a member of Quraysh?'" “Abū Bakr answered, ‘If you have heard of him who is the Messenger of God, this is he here.’

‘We have heard,’ Mafrūq answered, ‘that he says he is.’

He then turned to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and asked, ‘What do you propound, O Brother from Quraysh?’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then came forward and sat down, while Abū Bakr arose and stood shading him with his cloak. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then spoke, ‘I call upon you to bear witness that there is no god but God alone who has no associate, and that I am the Messenger of God. I ask you to shelter and protect me until I can carry out what God has ordered me to do. Quraysh have come out against God’s commands and have denied His Messenger. They have sided with wrong against right. But God is All-Powerful, All-Praised.’

“What else do you propound, O Quraysh brother?’ he asked.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then recited to him, ‘Say: Come! I shall recite for you what it was your Lord forbade you: that you must not associate another with Him, and that you must treat your parents with kindness’ up to the words ‘That He enjoined upon you that you might be pious’ (ṣūrat al-Anā’am; VI, v.152-4).

“Mafrūq asked, ‘And what else do you propound, O Quraysh brother? I swear these are not words of any earthly mortal; if they were, we would know them to be.’

“Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) recited to them, ‘God enjoins justice, compassion and charity to your relatives. He forbids adultery, immorality and oppression. He exhorts you so that you will take heed’ (ṣūrat al-Nāḥīf; XVI, v.90).

“Mafrūq commented, ‘I swear, Quraysh brother, you are certainly advocating ethical conduct and good behaviour; and yet your people have denied, rejected and opposed you.’

“Apparently Mafrūq wanted to involve Hānī b. Qubayṣa in the discussion and said, ‘This is Hānī b. Qubayṣa, our sheikh and religious leader.’

“Hānī said, ‘I heard what you said, O Quraysh brother, and believed what you said. I consider that our abandoning our religion and following you in yours because of one meeting we are having with you which had neither introduction nor follow-up, and without our giving it full consideration nor examining what the consequences would be of what you suggest – that would be a lapse in judgement, rashness and inadequate consideration for consequences. Lapse of judgement only comes with haste. We have behind us a people for whom we should be reluctant to make any pact. You should retire, as we should too; you should think it over, as we should.’

“Apparently Mafrūq wanted also to involve al-Muthannā b. Ḥāritha in the discussion, for he then said, ‘This is al-Muthannā, our sheikh and military leader.’
“Al-Muthanna then spoke, ‘I heard and liked what you said, 0 Quraysh brother. I was impressed by your words. But our answer should be that of Hānī b. Quṭayṣa; for us to leave our religion and follow you after one sitting with us would be like us taking residence between two pools of stagnant water, one al-Yamāma and the other al-Samāwa.’

“The Messenger of God asked (SAAS), ‘And what might those pools of stagnant water be then?’

“Al-Muthanna replied, ‘One of these is where land extends to the Arab world, and the other is that of Persia and the rivers of Chosroe. We would be reneging on a pact that Chosroe has placed upon us to the effect that we would not cause an incident and not give sanctuary to a troublemaker. This policy you suggest for us is such a one that kings would dislike. As for those areas bordering Arab lands, the blame of those so acting would be forgiven and excuses for them be accepted, but for those areas next to Persia, those so acting would not be forgiven, and no such excuses would be accepted. If you want us to help and protect you from whatever relates to Arab territories alone, we should do so.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘Your reply is in no way bad, for you have spoken eloquently and truthfully. (But) God’s religion can only be engaged in by those who encompass it from all sides.’

“He then asked, ‘Supposing it were only shortly after now that God were to award you their lands and properties and furnished you their young women, would you then praise God and revere Him?’

“Al-Nu‘mān b. Shurayk replied, ‘Would to God you could accomplish that, Quraysh brother!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then recited to them, ‘We have sent you as a witness, to bring good news and to warn, and to invite unto God, with His permission, and as a light-giving lantern.’ (This quotation combines surat al-Fath; XLVIII, v.8 with surat al-Ahzab; XXXIII, v.46.)

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then arose, holding on to the hand of Abū Bakr.”

‘Ali went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then turned to us and said, “Ali, what fine character the Arabs used to have, in the jahiliyya; how noble a time that was; they sought refuge in the life of this world.”’

‘Ali went on, “We proceeded on to a meeting being held by the Aws and the Khazraj. We remained with them until they pledged allegiance to the Prophet (SAAS).”

‘Ali continued, “And they were true, steadfast friends. And the Messenger of God (SAAS) was delighted at the knowledge of Abū Bakr, God bless him, about their genealogies.

“Soon thereafter the Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth to address his Companions, telling them, ‘Give much praise to God. For today the sons of

28. That is, from ignominy and boorishness.
Rabi’a have triumphed over the people of Persia. They have killed their kings, and captured their troops and it was by me that they were given victory.’” ‘Ali went on, “And the battle occurred at Qurąqir, by the side of Dhū Qār. And about this victory al-‘Ashā spoke the verses, ‘My camel be a ransom for the Banū Dhuhl b. Shaybān and its rider at the clash, for it bore its burden well.

They struck blows at the hinw, the bends of Qurāqir, against the vanguard of al-Ḥamurz, until they fled.
Glory be to the eyes that beheld those knights, like Dhuhl b. Shaybān, when they were in command.
They rose up, and we did so too, with friendship between us, though we were overcome by the hardships of battle, clearly evident.”’

This hadith is very strange. We have included it for its evidences of the proofs of the prophethood, its references to ethics and moral behaviour and its examples of the eloquence of the Arabs.

It also comes down through another line. It states, in that version, that when they battled against the Persians and met them at Qurāqir, a place near the Euphrates, they made their battle cry the name of Muḥammad (SAAS), and that it was thereby that they were made victorious over the Persians. Thereafter they converted to Islam.

Al-Wāqīḍī stated, “‘Abd Allah h. WXbiva al-‘Absi, told us, from his father, from his grandfather, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) came to us in our houses at Minā while we were staying there near the first jamra29 which is next to the Khayf mosque. He was riding on his mount with Zayd b. Ḥāritha seated behind him. He called out an invitation to us, but we made no response to him; we were not given to make a good choice.

“We had heard of him and of his preaching at the fairs; he stood and made a presentation and invitation to us, but we did not respond. We had with us Maysara b. Masrūq al-‘Absi and he said to us, “I swear by God, if we had believed this man and had taken him off to inside our territory, we would have triumphed. I swear by God, he will succeed and ultimately achieve all his objectives.”

“But our people replied, “Leave us alone. You’ll not involve us in that over which we have no power.”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) had high hopes of Maysara and spoke to him. Maysara replied, “How fine, how enlightening your words are! But my people oppose me. All a man has is his own people. And if they don’t stand by him, then enmity is more extensive.”

“So the Messenger of God (SAAS) left and people went off to their families. Maysara told them, “Let’s turn off to Fadak. There are Jews there whom we can ask about this man.”

29. One of three pillars at Minā at which pilgrims cast stones.
“'So they did go off to the Jews. They brought out a book of scriptures they had, put it down and studied. It made mention of the Messenger of God (SAAS) as the ummi, unlettered, Arab prophet who would ride an ass, reward himself with a piece of bread, a man neither tall nor short, neither curly nor straight-haired, with a redness to his eyes, and light in complexion. "If," (the Jews concluded) "it is he who appealed to you, then respond to him and enter his religion. We envy him and will not follow him. We will suffer greatly from him. All Arabs will follow him or fight him, so be among those who follow him."

"'Maysara said, "O people, this matter is very clear."

"'His people replied, "We will return to the festival and meet him." They then went home to their lands, but their elders refused to allow their return, and so none of them did follow him.

"'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) migrated to Medina and performed the "farewell pilgrimage" Maysara met with him and he recognized him. Maysara asked, "O Messenger of God, I swear I've continued wanting to follow you ever since that day you dismounted with us. But, as you see, God saw fit to delay my accepting Islam. All those who were with me at that time have since died; where have they been taken, O Messenger of God?"

"'The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, "All those who died in any other state than Islam are now in hell-fire."

"'Maysara commented, "Praise be to God who saved me!" He then accepted Islam fully and he was treated with respect by Abu Bakr."

Imam Muhammad b. 'Amr b. Waqidi has examined closely and related individually details about those tribes to which the Messenger of God (SAAS) presented himself. These included the tribes of 'Amir, Ghassan, the Fazara, the Murra, the Hanifa, the Sulaym, the 'Abs, the Nadr b. Hawazin, Tha'laba b. 'Ukaba, Kinda, Ka'b, al-Harith b. Ka'b, Udhra, Qays b. al-Hattim, and others.

The accounts of all these are very extensive; we have given here a goodly part of them, and to God belong all praise and credit.

Imam Ahmad also stated, "Aswad b. 'Amir related to us, quoting Isra'il, from Uthman - meaning Ibn al-Mughira - from Saliim b. Abu al-Jad, from Jabir b. 'Abd Allah, who said, "The Prophet (SAAS) used to present himself to the tribes at the assembly at 'Arafa, and say, "Will any man of you take me to his own people? For Quraysh have prevented me from delivering the words of my Lord. Almighty and Glorious is He!"

"'A man from Hamdan came to him thereafter and the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him, "From whom are you?"

"'From Hamdan," he replied.

"'"And do your people grant protection?"

"'Yes."

"Thereafter the man feared that his people might be watching him, so he came to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and said, "I will go to them and tell them, then I'll come to you next year."
“‘All right,’” the Messenger of God (SAAS) agreed.

“The man then left, and in the month of Rajab the delegation of the anṣār, (the Helpers), arrived.’”

This hadīth is reported, by various paths, by scholars of all four of al-sunan al-arba’a, from Isrā‘il. Al-Tirmidhī stated, “It is ḥasan, ṣaḥīh, good and authentic.”

DIVISION

On the arrival of the delegation of the anṣār, the Helpers, year after year, and their pledging their loyalty to him time after time. And thereafter the Messenger of God (SAAS) moved away to them in Medina, residing there among them, as will be explained in detail, if God wills it and in Him is all trust.

An Account from Suwayd b. ʿṢāmit, the Anṣārī.

His full name was Suwayd b. al-Ṣāmit b. ʿAtiyya b. Ḥūṭ b. Ḥabīb b. ʿAmr b. ʿAwf b. Mālik b. al-Aws; his mother was Laylā, daughter of ʿAmr al-Najāriyya, the daughter of Salmā, daughter of ʿAmr, the mother of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib b. Ḥāshim. This Suwayd was the son of the maternal aunt of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, the grandfather of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Muḥammad b. Ishaq b. Yasa stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) continued as he had for some time; whenever people met for the festival, he would go to them and invite the tribes to God and into Islam, presenting himself to them and the message of guidance and mercy he brought. Whenever he heard of any Arab of good repute coming to Mecca, he would meet him, invite him to God Almighty and present him his message.”

Ibn Ishaq continued, “ʿAsim b. ʿAmr b. Qatāda informed me that the sheikhs of his tribe said that Suwayd b. al-Ṣāmit, a brother from the Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf came to Mecca, either for the hajj, the ‘greater pilgrimage’, or the umra, the ‘lesser pilgrimage’. Suwayd was known among his people as al-Kāmil, ‘the perfect’, for his strength, his poetry, his honour and his fine lineage. It was he who spoke the lines, ‘Many men there are you call friends who would shock you to see the lies they tell of you in your absence.

There before you his words may be sweet as honey, while in your absence they are an old sword at the base of your neck!
What he shows you pleases you, while under his skin he’s an amulet of deceit exploding behind your back.

30. A technical term used to identify the four compilers of the saḥīh traditions, excluding al-Bukhārī and Muslim.
The eyes show you with suspicious glances what spite and hatred he conceals.

“Feather” me well; for long you have weakened me; the best allies are those who “feather” without weakening.’

“Having heard of him, the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to see him and invited him to God and to Islam. Suwayd replied, ‘Perhaps what you have is like what I have.’

“What is it you have?” asked the Messenger of God (SAAS).

“The majalla of Luqmân,” he replied. By this word he meant the ‘wisdom’ of Luqmân.

“Present it to me,” the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, and when Suwayd had done so, he commented, ‘These words are fine. But what I have is better—a Qurʾān that God has sent down to me to be a guide and a light.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then recited the Qurʾān to him and invited him into Islam. Suwayd did not draw away, but said, ‘Those words were wonderful.’

“Suwayd then left and later came to Medina with his tribe. Shortly thereafter he was killed by the Khazraj tribe, though some of his own people say that he was a Muslim at the time of his death. His killing occurred before the battle at Bu’ath.”

Al-Bayhaqi related this, from al-Ḥākim, from al-Asamm from Ahmad b. ‘Abd al-Jabbar, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Ibn Ishaq, in a shorter form.

THE ACCEPTANCE OF ISLAM BY IYĀS B. MUṢĀDH.

Ibn Ishaq stated that Al-Ḥuṣayn b. ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. ‘Amr b. Sa’d b. Muṣādh related to him, from Maḥmūd b. Labīd, saying, “When Abū al-Ḥaysar, Anas b. Rāfī came to Mecca, accompanied by other men of the Banū Abīl-Abshāl, including Iyās b. Muṣādh, seeking a pact with Quraysh against the Khazraj tribe, the Messenger of God (SAAS) heard of their coming and went to them. He sat down among them and asked, ‘Would you like something better than what it was you came for?’ ‘What would that be?’ they asked.

“He replied, ‘I am the Messenger of God to all mankind. And I invite them to worship God and to associate none other with Him. ‘And,’ he told them, ‘the book has been revealed to me.’ He then told them of Islam and recited the Qurʾān to them.’

The account goes on, “Iyās b. Muṣādh, who was a young man, spoke up, saying, ‘My people, I swear this is better than what you came for.’

“Abū al-Ḥaysar Anas b. Rāfī then took up a handful of dirt from the river bed and threw it into the face of Iyās b. Muṣādh, saying, ‘Clear off! We came for something different.’

“Iyās remained silent, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) left them, and they returned into Medina. The battle of Bu’ath was between the Aws and the Khazraj tribes.
And shortly thereafter Iyās b. Mu'ādh died.

Māhmūd b. Labīd said, 'Some of his tribesmen who were present told me that they heard him constantly praising, glorifying and exalting God until he died. They did not doubt that he had died a Muslim. He had become conscious of Islam at that assembly when he had heard what the Messenger of God (ṣa-as) had to say.'

My own comment is that this occurred on the day of the battle of Bu'āth, the name of a site at Medina. A major battle took place there which led to the death of a large number of the leaders of the Aws and the Khazraj; few of their prominent men survived it.

Al-Bukhārī related in his saḥīḥ collection, from 'Ubayd b. Ismā'īl, from Abū Umāma, from Hishām, from his father, from Ā'isha, who said, "The battle of Bu'āth was one that God gave to His Messenger. The Messenger of God (ṣa-as) came to Medina when their leadership was divided, their elite having been killed."

Chapter: The commencement of the acceptance of Islam by the ansār, the "Helpers" of Medina, God bless them.

Ibn Išāq stated, "When God wished to display His religion, exalt His Prophet and fulfil His promise to him, the Messenger of God (ṣa-as) set out in that season of the pilgrimage in which he met a number of the ansār. He presented himself to the Arab tribes as he had been doing in previous seasons. While he was at al-'Aqaba he met a group of the Khazraj tribe for whom God had good in store.

"Āsim b. Umar b. Qatāda related to me that some of the leaders of his people said, 'When the Messenger of God (ṣa-as) met them he asked them, "Who are you?" "We are men of al-Khazraj," they replied. "Are you allies of the Jews?" he asked.

""Yes," they replied.

"Would you sit down so that I may talk with you?" he invited them, and they agreed.

"So they did sit down and he called them to the path of God, explaining Islam to them. He also recited the Qur'ān to them.

"One way in which God facilitated their (acceptance) of Islam was that the Jews were there with them in their country. These were followers of Scriptures and men of knowledge, though they themselves were polytheists and idol worshippers. They had previously attacked these Jews in their territories and whenever dispute had arisen, the latter had told them, "A prophet will now be sent. His day is coming. We will follow him and give you the same fate as that of the peoples of Ād and Iram."

"When the Messenger of God (ṣa-as) addressed these people, and invited them to God, they told one another, "This has to be the prophet the Jews foresaw; we should not let them get to him first!"
They therefore responded to his call for them to believe in him and accepted Islam, saying, "We have left our own people, for they have such discord and disension between them not found in any other. Perhaps God may unite them through you. We will go forth among them and invite them to join you, presenting to them this religion we have accepted from you. If God should unite them around you, then no one will be dearer to us than you." They then left, returning to their territory, believing in him and the faith.'"

Ibn Ishaq continued, "These men, so I have been told, were six in number. Of the Khazraj there was Abū Umāma As'ad b. Zurāra b. 'Uds b. 'Ubayd b. Tha'labā b. Ghanm b. Malik b. al-Najjār. According to Abū Nu'aym, he was the first of the ansār of the Khazraj to accept Islam.

"From al-'Aws there was Abū al-Haytham b. al-Tayyihān. It is said, however, that the first of them to accept Islam were Rafi' b. Malik and Muḥammad b. 'Afra'. But God knows best.

It is similarly related from al-Shābi, al-Zuhri and others that those there that night were six men of the Khazraj.

Miṣā b. Uqba recounted, from al-Zuhri and Urwa b. al-Zubayr, that at the first meeting between them and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), they were eight in number and consisted of Muḥammad b. 'Afra', As'ad b. Zurāra, Raḥf b. Malik, Dhakwān, he being Ibn ʿAbd Qays, ʿUbāda b. al-Šāmit, Abū ʿAbd al-Rahmān Yazīd b. Tha'labā, Abū Ḥaytham b. al-Tihān, and Uwaym b. Sā'īda. These all accepted Islam and made an appointment for the following year.

They then returned to their people and called on them to accept Islam. They also sent Muḥammad b. 'Afra and Raḥf b. Malik to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), asking him to send to them someone who could give them religious instruction. He responded by sending Muṣṭāb b. Umayr, who went and stayed with As'ad b. Zurāra.

This account goes on to conclude as Ibn Ishaq's and more fully than that of Miṣā b. Uqba. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "And when these men arrived in Medina to their people they told them of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and invited them to Islam. Eventually news of him spread among them to such a degree that not a single home of the ansār was without knowledge of him.
"The following year 12 of the ansār kept to their appointment to attend the festival (of the ḥajj); they were Abū Umāma Asʿad b. Zurāra and ʿAwf b. al-Ḥārith, mentioned above, along with his brother Muṣādh, both these being sons of ʿAfrāʾ, and ʿAbbās b. Mālik, also mentioned above.

"Then there were Dhakwān b. ʿAbd Qays b. Khalada b. Mukhlīd b. ʿAмир, the son of Zurayq al-Zurqī. (Ibn Hishām said that he was a Helper who had also migrated from Mecca.)

"These men were from Khazraj.

"From Aws there were two men, ʿUwaym b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṭāhā b. Ṭayḥān. Ibn Hishām stated that al-Ṭayḥān could also be spelled al-Ṭayyihān, as in the words mayt, dead, and mayyīt.

Al-Suhaylī stated, "The full name of ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṭāhā b. ʿAbd al-Malik b. Ṭāhā b. Atayk b. ʿAmīr b. Abū al-Aṣrām b. ʿAмир b. Zaʿfūr b. Jusham b. al-Ḥārith b. al-Khazraj b. ʿAmr b. Mālik b. al-Aws." And he also stated, "It is said that he was an Irāshī or a Balawi." But neither Ibn Ishaq nor Ibn Hishām give him such a relationship. He also said, "The word al-haytham refers to an eaglet; it is also a type of plant."

By this he shows that these 12 men attended the festival that year with the intent of meeting with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); they did so at al-ʿAqāba, where they pledged allegiance to him with a pledge known as the "women's pledge"; this occurred at the first (meeting) at ʿAqāba.

Abū Nuʿaym related that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) recited to them God's words in surāt Ibrāhīm, "And when Abraham said, 'O my Lord, render this country secure' (surāt Ibrāhīm; XIV, v.35).

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb related to me, from Marthad b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Yazānī, from Abū al-Rahmān b. Usayla al-Ṣunābīḥī, from Ubāda, he being Ibn al-Ṣāmit, who said, 'I was among those who attended the first (meeting at) ʿAqāba. We were 12 men. We pledged allegiance to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) by the so-called "women's pledge". That was before war was enjoined. It was to the effect that we would not associate any other with God, we would not steal, nor commit fornication, nor kill our children, nor make false accusations, nor disobey him in anything good. "If you keep to this," he told us, "you shall go to paradise. But if you commit any of these, then God will decide your fate; if He wishes He will either punish you or forgive you."'"

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim related this hadīth through al-Layth b. Saʿd, from Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb in much the same terms.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Ibn Shihāb al-Zuhri recounted, from ʿAṭīf Allāh Abū Idrīs al-Khawlānī that Ubāda b. al-Ṣāmit related to him, saying, 'We pledged to the Messenger of God (SAAS), on the night of the first (meeting at) 'Aqaba, that we would not associate any other with God, that we would not steal, commit fornication, kill our children, make false accusations, nor disobey him in anything good. (He told us) "If you keep to this, you shall have paradise. But if you give up any of this, and you are punished for it in this world, then that will provide atonement for you. But if it is overlooked until Judgement Day, it will be up to God to decide whether to punish or forgive you.""

This hadith is given in both sahih collections and elsewhere with paths from al-Zuhri in much the same version.

The words here, the "women’s pledge", are a reference to the similarity between this and the revelation relating to the pledge later made by women in the year of the truce of al-Hudaybiyya. And on that occasion the revelation accorded with what had been revealed regarding the pledge he had required of his Companions on the night of al-'Aqaba. This is not strange, for a Qur'anic revelation sometimes came in more than one location, as was affirmed by 'Umar b. al-Khattab, as we have explained in both his biography and in the Tafsir (Exegesis). And since this pledge resulted from revelation that was not recited, it makes the aforementioned observation all the more plausible. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "When the group left, the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent to them Muṣṭafā b. 'Umayr b. Hashim b. 'Abd Manāf b. 'Abd al-Dār b. Quṣayy. He told him to recite the Qur'ān to them, to teach them Islam and to instruct them in the faith."

Al-Bayhaqi reported, on the authority of Ibn Ishaq, who said, "'Asim b. 'Umayr b. Qatada related to me that he sent Muṣṭafā when they wrote to him asking that he send him to them. It was he who was mentioned by Miṣa b. Wqba, as given above, even though in that case he applied to the first of the meetings what is here said of the second."

Al-Bayhaqi commented, "The account of Ibn Ishaq is more complete."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "'Abd Allah b. Abe Bakr used to say, 'I don't know what this "first (meeting at) 'Aqaba" means.'' Ibn Ishaq then commented, "Certainly, I swear it, there was an 'Aqaba meeting, and then another one."

All authorities agree that Muṣṭafā took up residence with As'ad b. Zurair and that he was known in Medina as the mughṭir, the reciter.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "'Asim b. 'Umar b. Qatada related to me that he used to lead the prayer for them. This was because the Aws and the Khazraj disliked that they be led in prayer by one who belonged to the other tribe. God be pleased with them one and all."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Muhammad b. Abū Umāma b. Sahl b. Ḥunayf related to me, from his father, from 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ka'b b. Mālik who said, 'When my father had lost his sight, I used to lead him. When I would take him out to the Friday meeting, and he heard the call to prayer there he would say a prayer for Abū Umāma As'ad b. Zurārā.’’

The account goes on, ‘‘This went on for some time; he never heard the Friday call to prayer without praying for him and asking forgiveness for him. I told myself it was weakness on my part not to ask him why this was and said, ‘‘Why is it, father, that whenever you hear the Friday call to prayer, you pray for Abū Umāma?’’ He replied, ‘‘My son, he was the first to unite us in Medina at the hazm al-nabit, in the quarter of the Banū Bayāḍa, in al-baqiṣ, the plain, known as the baqiṣ al-Khaḍimīt.’’ ‘‘And how many were you there that day?’’ I asked. ‘‘We were 40 men,’’ he replied.’’

Abū Dā'ūd and Ibn Māja told this hadith through Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq, God bless him.

Al-Dārquṭnī related, from Ibn ʿAbbās, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wrote to Muṣ'ab b. ʿUmayar telling him to establish the Friday prayer. But there is some peculiarity in the line of transmission he gives. God knows best.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, ‘‘Ubayd Allāh b. al-Mughirā b. Muʿayyiqib related to me, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr b. Muḥammad b. ʿAmr b. ʿHazm, that Asʿad b.
Zurārā went off with Muṣ'ab b. ʿUmayar to visit the homes of the Banū ʿAbd al-Ashhal and the Banū Zafr. Sa'd b. Muṣ'adh was the son of the maternal aunt of As'ad b. Zurārā. He took him inside one of the gardens of the Banū Zafr at a well known as the ‘Maraq well’. They sat there and received visits from some of the men who had accepted Islam.

‘Sa'd b. Muṣ'adh and Usayd b. al-Ḥuḍayr were at that time leaders of their people of the Banū ʿAbd al-Ashhal; both were polytheists practising their nation’s religion.

‘‘When they heard of him, Sa'd said to Usayd, ‘Go to those two men who have come to our homes to make fools of our weakest elements; rebuke them and forbid them from entering our quarters. If As'ad b. Zurārā were not related to me, as you know, I'd save you the trouble. But he is my maternal aunt's son, and I can't approach him’’

‘‘And so Usayd b. Ḥuḍayr took his spear and went to them. When they saw him, As'ad b. Zurārā said to Muṣ'ab, ‘This is his tribe's chief who has come to you; trust God through him.’

‘Muṣ'ab said, ‘I will speak to him if he sits down.’

‘Usayd stood gloowering at them and asked them, ‘Why did you both come here and make fools of our weak? Keep away from us if you value yourselves.’

‘Mūsā b. ʿUqba said, ‘At this point a youth commented, ‘It's you who have come to our homes with this strange threatening of yours to have our weak elements behave stupidly and advocate it to others.’’”

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, ‘‘Muṣ'ab replied to him, ‘Why not sit down and listen to us.
If you like what you hear, you can accept it; if you dislike it you can ignore it.’
"He replied, 'You have spoken fairly.' He then put down his spear and sat with them. Muṣṭafā then spoke to him about Islam and recited the Qurān to him.

"According to what is reported, they both said, 'By God, we recognized Islam in his face, from its radiant calm, even before he spoke.'

"Usayd then said, 'How beautiful, how wonderful that is! What does one do to enter this faith?'

"They told him, 'You wash, and clean yourself and your clothes. You then give testimony to the truth and say prayers.'

"Usayd then arose, washed, cleaned his clothes and made testimony to the truth. He then performed two prayer prostrations and told them, 'Behind me there is a man who if he follows you, will not leave behind any one of his people. I will send him to you now. He is Sa'd b. Muṣṭadh.'

"He then took his spear and left for Sa'd and his people who were sitting in their assembly. When Sa'd b. Muṣṭadh saw him coming, he commented, 'I swear by God, Usayd is coming back to you with an expression quite different from when he left you.'

"When Usayd stopped at the assembly, Sa'd asked him, 'Well, what did you do?' He replied, 'I spoke to both men and, I swear, I saw no harm in them. I warned them and they replied, 'We will do whatever you wish.' And I was informed that the Banū Hāritha had gone off to kill As'ad b. Zurārā; that was because they knew that he is your aunt's son and wanted to harm you.'

"Sa'd b. Muṣṭadh arose angrily at this, anxious because of what they had said about the Banū Hāritha. He took the spear in his hand and said, 'I can see, by God, that you have accomplished nothing!'

"Sa'd then left to go to the two men and when he saw them to be untroubled, he realized that Usayd had merely wanted him to listen to them. He came to a stop, in a rage, and said to As'ad b. Zurārā, 'By God, Abū Umāmah, if we weren't relatives, you wouldn't behave this way to me. Will you behave in our very homes in ways that offend us?'

"As'ad had told Muṣṭafā, 'I swear, a leader has come to you who has such influence that if he follows you, no two others will hold back from you.'

"Muṣṭafā therefore told him, 'Would you sit and listen; if you hear what you like, you can accept it; if you dislike it, we'll not bother you with it again.'

"Sa'd replied, 'You speak fair.' He then put down his spear and sat. Islam was then explained to him, and the Qurān was recited to him.

Mūsā b. 'Uqba recounted that it was the first part of surat al-Zukhruf (XLIII) that was recited to him.

"The account continued, 'And, I swear, we recognized Islam in his face even before he spoke, from its radiant calm.'

"Sa'd then asked them, 'What does one do to accept Islam and enter this religion?'

"They told him, 'You wash, and clean yourself and your clothes. Then you give testimony to the truth and make two prayer prostrations.'
“Sa’d arose, performed the ablutions, washed both his garments, gave testimony to the truth and then performed two prayer prostrations.

“After that Sa’d took his spear and returned to his people’s assembly, Usayd b. al-Hudayr accompanying him. When his people saw him coming, they said, ‘My God, Sa’d is returning with quite a different expression from when he left.’

“When he stood there before them, he said, ‘O Banū ‘Abd al-Ashhal, how do you view my position among you?’

“They replied, ‘You are our leader, the wisest man among us, and the man with the happiest disposition.’

“Sa’d told them, ‘It is forbidden for any man or woman among you to speak to me until you believe in God and His Messenger.’

“The account continues, ‘And, I swear, by that evening every single man and woman there in the quarters of the Banū ‘Abd al-Ashhal had become Muslims.’

“Sa’d and Muṣ‘ab then returned to the home of As‘ad b. Zurārah and remained there calling upon people to join Islam until there was not a single one of the homes of the ansār that did not have Muslims living there. Except, that is, for the homes of the Banū Umayya b. Zayd, Khaṭṭāma, Wā’il and Wāqīf. These were of the Aws, that is, al-Aws b. Ḥāritha.

“This is because they had among them Abū Qays b. al-Aslat, known as Ṣayfī. Al-Zubayr b. Bakkār said, ‘His name was al-Ḥārith, but also it was said to be ʿUbayd Allāh. His father’s name was al-Aslat ‘Amr b. Jusham b. Wā’il b. Zayd b. Qays b. ‘Amir b. Murra b. Mālik b. al-Aws. Al-Kalbi gave him the same genealogy. He was a poet and a leader of theirs; they would listen to him and obey. He kept them from Islam until after the battle of al-khandaq, “the battle of the trench.”’

“I observe that this Abī Qays b. al-Aslat has poetry quoted by Ibn Ishāq that is eloquent and good and reminiscent of the poetry of Umayya b. Abū al-Ṣalt al-Thaqafi.

Ibn Ishāq commented concerning the above, “As news of the Messenger of God (ṣaas) spread among the bedouins and the towns, this was reported in Medina. No Arab quarter was more knowledgeable about the affairs of the Messenger of God (ṣaas), both before and after he became the subject of report, than this territory of the Aws and the Khazraj. This was because of what they had heard from the Jewish rabbis.

“When circumstances developed in Medina for him as they did and people discussed the dispute between him and Quraysh, Abū Qays b. al-Aslat, brother of the Banū Wāqīf spoke some verses.”

Al-Suhaylī gave his name as Abī Qays Sīrma b. Abī Anas. The full name of Abū Anas was Qays b. Sīrma b. Mālik b. ʿAdī b. ʿAmr b. Ghanm b. ʿAdī b. al-Najjār. And he said, “It was about him and ʿUmar that the following verse was revealed, ‘It has been made lawful for you to visit with your wives on the night of the fast’” (ṣūrat al-Baqara; II, v.187).
Ibn Ishaq commented, “He greatly liked Quraysh. He was a son-in-law of theirs, his wife being Arnab, daughter of Asad b. Abd al-Uzza b. Quṣayy. He had spent some years living among Quraysh with his wife.

“He spoke an ode in which he extolled sacrosanctity and advised Quraysh against war. In it he referred to their good qualities and their aspirations and reminded them of how God had tested them and how He had repelled from them those of the elephant and all their strategies. He also told them to leave the Messenger of God (SAAS) alone. In these verses, he said, ‘O rider, if you do not object, then carry this message from me to the tribe of Luayy b. Ghālib.

The messenger of a man upset by your enmity, sad at the distance between you, tired of it,
I had a place to stop at for my troubles, yet I did not by it fulfil my needs and wishes.

Your abode, however, has two factions, each one clamouring noisily, like the sound made by kindling and wood burning,
I bid you take refuge with God from your evil deeds, from the evil of your desires and from the scorpion’s sting,

From the display of bad morals, from evil plottings like the prick of an awl, having great impact,

And remind them firstly of God and at the sanctioning of things forbidden, like wombs of young maidens.
And tell them, “And God will make His judgement; abandon warfare and let it depart from you.”

When you incite it, you arouse something blameworthy; it is an evil spirit for those related to you or not.
It severs family ties, can destroy a nation, use up the fat from a camel’s hump and withers.

For it fine, thin clothes are exchanged for coats of chainmail and the rust-spotted garb of the warrior,
While musk and camphor are exchanged for clouds of dust, the chain-links looking like locusts’ eyes.

Beware lest war attach itself to you, for it is a pool whose water is unhealthy and bitter to drink.

It seems attractive to nations, then they see its consequences reveal it as an ugly old woman.
It burns up rather than cooks those who are weak, and diverts your nobles to certain death.
Do you not know how it was in the war of Dāhīs; give thought; and to the war of Hāṭib too.

How many great leaders were then struck down, fine, up-standing men whose guests were never disappointed,
Great men, like fine charcoals, men to be revered, men of pure character, of exemplary nobility,
Like water spread out in a waste-land as though poured there by the winds of East or South,
Of which you are told by a truthful man who has knowledge of its events, knowledge based on experience.

Buy weapons from a warrior, and remember well your account, for God is the best accountant.

A man’s patron is He, and chose a religion; and let there be no guardian over you but the Lord of the stars.

Establish a ḥanīf religion for us, for You are a goal for us, and one can be guided by great peaks.

And You are a light and protection for this people; You are a refuge they go to, and dreams do not disappoint.

And if the people find a jewel, to You goes the credit (lit. for You are the valley’s centre, the rabbit’s nose).

You ensure noble and ancient lineage, lines that are refined and blemish-free.

Those in need see moving towards your abodes groups of those destroyed, leading other groups.

Those most righteous have learned that your heights are in all ways the best of all abodes.

It is the most wise and the best in conduct who, among all the processions, are most given to the truth.

And so arise and pray to your Lord, and touch the pillars of this temple amidst the mountains.

For among you from Him has come a favour and a proof on the day of Abī Yaksūm, leader of the phalanges.

His forces will march over the plain, and his men will traverse the clefts of the high mountains.

When the assistance of the Throne-possessor comes to you armies of angels will repel them, raising dust and stones,

And they shall turn tail and flee, and only a few groups will return from captivity to their people.

And if you perish, so let us die, along with festivals long lived by; so will a man say who will not lie.”

The war of Dāhīs mentioned by Abū Qays in his poetry was famous and occurred in the jāhiliyya period. According to Abū Ubayd Maʾmar b. al-Muthannā and others, its cause was as follows: Qays b. Zuhayr b. Judhayma b. Rawāḥa al-Ghatafānī owned a mare called Dāhīs, and he ran her in a race with a mare called al-Ghabrā owned by Ḥudhayfā b. Badr b. ʿAmr b. Juʿayya, also of Ghatafān. Dāhīs came in first but Ḥudhayfā ordered it to be struck in the head. Malik b. Zuhayr jumped up and struck al-Ghabrā in the head. At that Ḥamal b. Badr struck Malik. After, Abū Junayd al-ʿAbsi met ʿAwf b. Ḥudhayfā and killed him. Then a man of the Banū Fazāra met and killed Malik. And so war erupted between the Banū ʿAbs and Fazāra. Ḥudhayfā b. Badr, his brother Ḥamal b. Badr and other groups were killed. A great deal of poetry, which it would take much time to quote and explain, was written concerning this.
Ibn Hishām stated, “Qays started Dāhīs and al-Ghabrā’ in the race, while Ḥudhayfa started al-Khaṭṭār and al-Ḥanfā’. The former account is more accurate.

As for the war of Ḥāṭib, the reference is to Ḥāṭib b. al-Ḥārith b. Qays b. Ḥaysha b. al-Ḥārith b. Ṣumayyā b. Muʿāwiyah b. Mālik b. ʿAwf b. ʿAmr b. ʿAwf b. Mālik b. al-Aws who had killed a Jew who was under the protection of the Khazraj. Zayd b. al-Ḥārith b. Qays b. Mālik b. ʿĀlmar b. Ḥāritha b. Thaʿlabah b. Kaḥb b. Mālik b. Kaḥb b. al-Khazraj b. al-Ḥārith b. al-Khazraj, he being known as Ibn Fushum, went out after this man Ḥāṭib, accompanied by a group of his men of the Banū al-Ḥārith b. Khazraj. They killed Ḥāṭib and this led to a war between the Aws and the Khazraj. The fighting was very fierce and ultimately the Khazraj were victorious. At that time al-Aswad b. al-Ṣāmit al-Awsi was killed by al-Mujaddādh b. Dhiyād, an ally of the Banū ʿAwf b. al-Khazraj. This led to further wars between them that would be lengthy to relate.

The point is that Abū Qays b. al-Aslat gained nothing from all his knowledge and understanding when Musʿab b. Ṣumayr came to Medina and called upon its people to accept Islam, many of whom agreed.

So that, as has been said, not a house there was without a Muslim man or woman except that of the Banū Wāqīf, Abū Qays’s tribe, who held them back from Islam. It was also he who spoke the verses:

“O Lord of mankind, some things have given pain, significant and trivial matters combined,
O Lord of mankind, if we should have gone astray, then guide us to the proper path.
Were it not for our Lord, we would be Jews, and the religion of the Jews lacks proper form.
Were it not for our lord, we would be Christians, with the monks up in the mountains of Galilee.
But when created, we were made hanīfs from many generations back.
We lead the camels to slaughter, passive and in shackles, their necks bare, but wearing saddles.”

The gist of what he says is that he was undecided as to how to react to what he had heard about the mission of the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ), so he prevaricated despite his learning.

The person who kept him back from Islam initially was ʿAbd Allāh b. Ubayy b. Saḥūl, after Abū Qays had informed him that the person who had announced his coming was a Jew; and so he dissuaded him from accepting Islam.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “He did not accept Islam up to the time of the conquest of Mecca, he and his brother, and so he left.”

Al-Zubayr b. Bakkār denied that Abū Qays accepted Islam. As did al-Waqīdī, who stated, ‘He had intended to accept Islam when first the Messsenger of God (ṢAAS) invited him to do so. ʿAbd Allāh b. Ubayy, however, criticized him for this and he pledged that he would not accept Islam until the next year. But he died in the month Dhū al-Qa‘da.”

Others, as related by Ibn al-Athir in his work Usūd al-Ghāba (The Jungle Lions) state that when death was close for him, the Prophet (ṢAAS) invited him to Islam and he was heard to say, “There is no god but God.”

Īmām Aḥmad stated, “Ḥasan b. Mūsá related to us, that Ḥammād b. Salama related to him, from Thābit, from Anas b. Malik, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) visited an ansār man and said, ‘O khāl, “maternal uncle”, say, “There is no god but God.”’ He replied, ‘Do you say khāl, maternal uncle or ‘amm, paternal uncle?’ ‘No, I say khāl,’ he replied. The man asked, ‘So it is best for me to say, “There is no god but God?”’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, ‘Yes.’”

Aḥmad is alone in giving this ḥadīth.

Īkrīma and others related that when he died, his son wanted to marry his father’s widow, Ḋabisha, daughter of Mā‘ān b. ʿĀṣim. She asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) about this and God revealed, “Do not marry those same women your fathers married” (surat al-Nisa’; IV, v.22).

Ibn Ishaq stated, as did Sa‘īd b. Yahyā al-ʿUmawī in his work on the maghāzī, the military campaigns, “This man Abū Qays became a monk during the jāhilīyya period before Islam and adopted wearing a hair-cloth gown. He abandoned the idols, washed after being in a state of ritual impurity and kept away from menstruating women. He thought of adopting Christianity but then refrained. He took a house and made it into a mosque where he allowed no menstruating women entrance nor anyone in a state of ritual impurity. He said, ‘I worship the God of Abraham when he had abandoned and expressed hatred for the idols.’

“This went on until the arrival of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). He then accepted Islam and became a good Muslim.

“He was a respected elder and man of truth who glorified God in that jāhilīyya period, before Islam, in which he lived. He spoke fine verses on the subject. It was he who said, ‘Abū Qays, about to leave, says, “Perform all you can of this my advice.

I commend God to you, righteousness, piety and honour, but devotion to God comes first.

If your people lead, do no envy them; if you attain leadership, then be just.

If a disaster should befall your people, then place yourselves in front of your tribe.

If a disastrous loss affects them, keep them company and bear up beneath whatever it is they place on you.

If hardship afflicts you, remain pure, and if wealth should come to you, then be generous.”’
"Abū Qays also said,

‘Glorify God at dawn each day His sun rises, and at every crescent moon.
He knows both what is plain and secret; nothing our Lord says is misguided.
The birds are His that stray far away then return to their nests in the safety of the mountains.
The wild beasts of the deserts are His; you see them in the sand tracts and the shades of the dunes.
The Jews pray to Him and perform every ritual out of fear of disaster.
The Christians bow down to Him and offer all feasts and celebrations to their Lord.
The hermit monk is His; you see him live in poverty though formerly in ease.
O my people, do not sever kinship’s ties, but ever join the short to the long.
Fear God when treating weak orphans; sometimes what is forbidden is considered fair.
And know that orphans have an All-Knowing protector who guides without question.
Do not consume the wealth of orphans; the wealth of orphans does have a protector.
My people, do not ignore the bounds; there are limits to ignoring bounds.
My people, do not feel secure in the future; beware of its deceit and of time’s passage. Realize that time’s passing destroys all things created, young and old alike.
Resolve yourselves for goodness and piety; forsake indecency and do only right.’”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Abū Qays also composed another piece in which he records how God had honoured them by the gift of Islam and by having sent His Messenger (SAAS) down to them. The following line is part thereof:

‘He resided among Quraysh a dozen years, preaching in case he should find there some helpful friend.’”

We will give the full text of this poem later, if God wills it, and in Him is all trust.

An Account of the second meeting at al-’Aqaba.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Muṣ’ab b. Umayr returned to Mecca and the ansār Muslims came there along with those of their people who were making the pilgrimage and were still polytheists. (The ansār) made a pact with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at al-‘Aqaba, in the medial days of the tashriq\textsuperscript{32} when God granted them honour, ensured victory for the Prophet and glory for Islam and its people, and cast down idolatry and its supporters.

"Ma‘bad b. Ka‘b b. Malik related to me, that his brother ‘Abd Allah b. Ka‘b, one of the most learned of the ansār, told him that his father Ka‘b told him as follows, having been one of those who was present at al-‘Aqaba and pledged allegiance there to the Messenger of God (SAAS). He stated, ‘We left in the company of those of our people who were polytheists; we had prayed and received religious instruction. With us was al-Bar2 b. Ma‘mūr, our elder and leader. When we had headed out on our journey from Medinā, al-Bar2 said, ‘I’ve had an idea, and I wonder whether or not you will agree with me on it.’ We asked what it was and he replied, ‘I think I will not leave this building – meaning the ka‘ba – to my back. I shall pray towards it.’ We commented, ‘We’ve not heard that our Prophet (SAAS) never prays in any other direction than towards Syria\textsuperscript{33} (i.e. Jerusalem). We don’t want to contradict him.’

‘He replied, ‘I am going to pray towards it.’

‘Well, we will not,’’ we told him.

‘When time for prayer came we did face towards Syria, while he prayed in the direction of the ka‘ba until we reached Mecca. We criticized him for persisting in doing this. Upon reaching Mecca, he told me, ‘Nephew, let’s go off to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and ask him about what I’ve been doing on this journey. The disapproval I have seen in you has somewhat disturbed me.’

‘So off we went, asking the whereabouts of the Messenger of God (SAAS). We had not seen him prior to that. We met a Meccan and asked after him, and he replied, ‘Do you know him?’ ‘No,’ we replied. ‘Then do you know al-‘Abbās b. al-Muṭṭalib, his uncle?’ ‘Yes,’ we told him, for we did know al-‘Abbās. He often came to us on business trips. The Meccan told us, ‘If you go to the mosque, he will be sitting next to al-‘Abbās.’

‘So we went in the mosque and there was al-‘Abbās sitting with the Messenger of God (SAAS) by his side. We made greetings then sat down facing him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked al-‘Abbās, ‘Do you know these two men, Abū al-Fadl?’ He replied, ‘Yes; this is al-Bar2 b. Ma‘mūr, his people’s leader, and this is Ka‘b b. Malik.’’’

The account proceeds, ‘‘I swear, I’ll never forget what the Messenger of God (SAAS) then said: ‘You mean the poet?’ ‘Yes,’’ he replied.

‘‘Then al-Bar2 b. Ma‘mūr addressed him, ‘O prophet of God, I have come on this journey having been given guidance to Islam by God Almighty. I had the idea of not facing my back to this building, so I prayed towards it. My friends opposed me in this, causing me concern. What do you think?"

\textsuperscript{32} During the pre-Islamic pilgrimage season, the tashriq days, those between the 11th and the 13th of Dhu al-Hijja, were apparently given over to eating, drinking, and sensual pleasure. The tashriq days were later incorporated into Islam, without, however, the aforementioned practices of the jahiliyya.

\textsuperscript{33} Lit. ‘‘Greater Syria’’. Jerusalem was often referred to as al-Sham, Syria, because it was a part of what was then Greater Syria.

"'You already had a qibla, a direction for prayer, and should have kept to it,' he replied.

"'And so al-Bara reverted to the prayer direction adopted by the Messenger of God (SAAS), and so prayed along with us towards Syria.'"

The account concludes, "But his family claim that he continued his prayers towards the ka'ba until he died. But it was not as they said; we know better than they about it."

Ka'b b. Malik stated, "We then left on the pilgrimage, having made an agreement to meet the Messenger of God (SAAS) at al-'Aqaba in the middle of the tashriq period. When we had finished the pilgrimage the night arrived for which we had an appointment with the Messenger of God (SAAS). We had kept our purpose unknown to those of our people who were polytheists, but there with us was 'Abd Allâh b. 'Amr b. Harâm Abû Jâbir, one of our leaders. To him we spoke, telling him, 'Abû Jâbir, you are one of our noble leaders, and we would like you to give up your practices; otherwise one day you will end up as fuel for hell-fire.' We then invited him into Islam, and told him of our rendezvous with the Messenger of God (SAAS) at al-'Aqaba. He did accept Islam, was present at al-'Aqaba and became a naqib, a leader."

Al-Bukhârî stated, "Tbrâhim related to me, quoting Hishâm, that Ibn Jurayj told them, from 'Atâ', that Jâbir said, 'I, my father and my two maternal uncles were present at al-'Aqaba.' 'Abd Allâh b. Muâammad stated, 'Ibn 'Uayyna said, 'One of these two men was al-Bara' b. Ma'mûr.'" 'Ali al-Madîni related to us, quoting Sufyân, "'Amr used to say, 'I heard Jâbir b. 'Abd Allâh state, 'My two maternal uncles were present at al-'Aqaba with me.'"

The Imam Ahmad stated, "'Abd al-Razzâq related to us, quoting Ma'mar, from Ibn Khuthaym, from Abû al-Zubây, that Jâbir said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained for ten years in Mecca following people to their homes, going to 'Ukz and Majanna during the festivals asking, 'Who will give me refuge? Whoever will help me until I can fulfil the mission of my Lord will attain paradise.' But he found no one to shelter or aid him. So much so that someone from Yemen or the Mudar would appear and respond favourably to this plea, only to have his relatives and friends tell him, 'Watch out that that man of Quraysh doesn't corrupt you!' And if the Messenger of God (SAAS) were to pass through their encampments, they would point their fingers at him.

"'This went on until God sent us from Yathrib (Medina) to him and we gave him refuge and believed in him. Our people would go off, believe in him, have the Qur'an recited to them and then return to their own folk who would then accept Islam as they had. Eventually no anjâr home was devoid of Muslims displaying their faith in Islam."
"'At last we all consulted together and asked ourselves how long we were going to leave the Messenger of God (SAAS) doing his rounds and being harassed in the Meccan mountains in a state of fear.

'So 70 of us men went to see him during the pilgrimage season. We made a rendezvous with him at the defile at al-‘Aqaba, going there in ones and twos until all were present. Then we asked him, "O Messenger of God what do you wish us to pledge to you?"

'He replied, "You must pledge to hear and obey at times of both action and inaction, to give whether times are hard or easy, and to advocate goodness and prohibit evil. You must speak out for God and not fear any blame for supporting God. You must help and defend me if I come to you in the same ways you help and defend yourselves, your wives and your children. You will then attain paradise." And so we stood up before him and pledged allegiance. As’ad b. Zurära took him by the hand, he being one of the youngest there.'"

In the account of al-Bayhaqi, the text reads, "He was the youngest of the 70 except for myself. He (As’ad) said, 'Slowly now, people of Yathrib! We only hurried here because we know that he is the Messenger of God. Bringing him out now, however, would be a provocation to all the Arabs that would cause you to lose your élite and would box you in with swords raised against you. If you are able to withstand that, then adopt him and it will be up to God to reward you. But if you are a people who have great fear for yourselves, then leave him and make that fact plain; that course would be more forgivable in God’s sight.'

'Keep away from us, As’ad,' (they replied). 'We won’t renege on this pledge. We will never deny it.'"

He continued, "So we all stood and pledged to him. He made us make promises and assured us paradise in return."

Imäm Ahmad related this also, as did al-Bayhaqi through Dā‘ūd b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān al-Aṭṭār.

Al-Bayhaqi’s account adds to the chain of authorities al-Ḥakim back to Yahyā b. Sālim; both of them include ‘Abd Allah b. Uthmān b. Khuthaym, from Abū Idris, with much the same content.

This chain of authorities is excellent and meets the criteria for aḥādīth prescribed by Muslim; the scholars, however, did not cite it.

Al-Bazzâr commented, "Several authorities quote it from Ibn Khuthaym, but we only know of Jābir being a link in this one account."

Imäm Ahmad stated, "Sulaymān b. Dā‘ūd related to us, from ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Abū al-Zinād, from Mūsā b. ‘Abd Allāh, from Abū al-Zubayr, from Jābir, who said, "Al-‘Abbās was holding the hand of the Messenger of God (SAAS), while the latter was verifying our pledges. When he had finished, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'I have taken, and I have given.'" the son of 'Abd Allāh — who said, 'The Messenger of God (ṣaṣaṣ) said to the ansār leaders, ‘Will you then give me refuge and protect me?’ ‘Yes,’ they said, ‘and what will we receive?’ ‘Paradise,’ he replied.’

Al-Bazzār then added, ‘We know of this ḥadīth only from this one chain of authorities back to Jābir."

Ibn Ishaq then related, from Ma'bad, from 'Abd Allāh, from his father Ka'b b. Malik, who said, ‘That night we went to bed among our people in our caravan. But when one-third of the night had passed, we left the caravan to attend the rendezvous with the Messenger of God (ṣaṣaṣ). We slipped away, keeping ourselves hidden like sand-grouse and met in the defile at al-'Aqaba. We were 73 men in number and two of our women accompanied us, Nasība, daughter of Ka'b, mother of 'Umrā, a wife from the Banū Māzin b. al-Najjār, and Asmā', daughter of 'Amr b. 'Adī b. Nābi, one of the wives of the Banū Salama, she being the mother of Manī'."

Ibn Ishaq quoted from an account of Yūnus b. Bukayr, giving their names and genealogies and the information that some sources give their number as 70; but the Arabs (i.e. the bedouin, tr.) often deal only in round numbers.

‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr and Mūsā b. Uqba stated, ‘They were 70 in number, with one woman.’ He also said that 40 of them were adult, while 30 were youths, the youngest of them being Abū Mas‘ūd and Jābir b. 'Abd Allāh.

Ka'b b. Malik stated, ‘When we met at the defile we waited and the Messenger of God (ṣaṣaṣ) did come, accompanied by al-'Abbas b. 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib. At that time al-'Abbās was still following his people’s religion, although he was keeping track of his nephew’s affairs and watching over him.

‘When they sat down, the first to speak was al-'Abbas b. 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib, who said, ‘O Khazraj’ — the Arabs used to know the ansār as Khazraj, whether they were Khazraj or Aws — ‘Muḥammad holds with us a position of which you are aware. We protect him from our people who think about him as we do. He is respected among his people and safe in his own town. But he is determined to join up with you. If you think you will keep trust with him in the invitation you have given him and will protect him from his opponents, then it’s up to you to accept your responsibilities. But if you think you might deliver him over and abandon him after he has joined you, then leave him right now. He does have respect and protection among his own people and in his town.’

‘We replied, ‘We hear what you say. Speak to us, O Messenger of God, and take for yourself and for your Lord whatever you want.’

‘The Messenger of God (ṣaṣaṣ) then spoke, recited the Qur’ān, invited people to God and acclaimed Islam. He said, ‘I ask you to pledge that you will defend me as you do your women and children.’

‘Al-Barā’ b. Ma‘mūr then took him by the hand and said, ‘Yes indeed; we will, I swear by Him who sent you with the truth, protect you as we do our women from whatever threatens them. We pledge ourselves to you, O
Messenger of God, and we are, I swear it, warriors from father to son over many generations.'

"While al-Bara' was speaking to the Messenger of God (SAAS) he was interrupted by Abu al-Haytham b. al-Tayyihān, who said, 'O Messenger of God, we have certain ties to others' — meaning the Jews — 'and if we break these, we are concerned that if God gives you victory, you might return to your own people and abandon us.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) smiled at this and said, 'If your blood be sought, our blood shall be sought, and your destruction is mine as well. I am of you and you are of me. I will battle those you battle and make peace with those with whom you make peace.'"

Ka'b b. Mālik went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'Bring forth twelve from among you to be leaders to take charge of their people's affairs.'

"They selected twelve men, nine from al-Khazraj, three from Aws.'

These were the nine men of the Khazraj.

Ibn Hishām stated, "Some scholars include among these Abu al-Haytham b. al-Tayyihān instead of al-Rīfā', who is above mentioned." He is also included in the account of Yūnus quoting Ibn Ishaq. And al-Suhaylī and Ibn al-Athir in his Uṣūd al-Ghāba (Jungle Lions) included him.

Ibn Hishām gave testimony to this in a quotation he makes from Abu Zayd al-ʿAnṣārī of poetry by Ka'b b. Mālik giving reference to the twelve men selected that night of the second meeting at al-ʿAqaba:
“Tell Ubayy that his opinion is wrong; he died the morning of the (meeting in) the defile, but death does come,
May God deny what your soul craves; He watches over man's affairs, seeing and hearing.
And inform Abü Sufyän that, through Ḥāmid, there has appeared to us a shining light of God's guidance.
Do not covet acquiring something you want; just take and gather whatever it is you receive.
Take care! Know that breaking vows with us was forbidden you by the group when they gave allegiance.
Both al-Barā‘ and Ibn ‘Amr forbade it, and As‘ad and Rāfi‘ too forbid it.
Sa‘d al-Sā‘īd forbade it, and Mundhir would cut off your nose if you tried it.
And Ibn Rabi‘, if you received his pledge, would not give him up. Let no one expect that.
Similarly Ibn Rawāḥa would not give him to you; to protect him he would even take poison.
Al-Qawqālī b. Šāmīt too is far removed from what you try to achieve, living up to the promise he made.
Abū al-Haytham also is true to his pledge, secure in the oath he had made.
And you should have no hopes of Ibn Ḥudayr for what you want; perhaps you should abandon your foolish error.
And Sa‘d, brother of ‘Amr b. ‘Awf, is far removed and opposed to what it is you want.
These are not stars that will arise in the dark of night and repel bad luck from you.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “Abū al-Haytham is mentioned here among these men, whereas Rīfā‘a is not.”
My own comment is that the poet also mentions Sa‘d b. Mu‘ādh who was definitely not one of the leaders of the gathering that night.

Ya‘qūb b. Sufyān recounted, from Yūnus b. ‘Abd al-‘Aqīfa, from Ibn Wahb, from Malik who said, “The ansār on the night of al-‘Aqaba were 70 men; their leaders were twelve in number, nine from Khazraj, three from Aws.
An ansār elder told me that Gabriel was indicating to the Messenger of God (SAAS) which of these men he should appoint as leaders on that night of al-‘Aqaba, and Usayd b. Ḥudayr was one of those leaders.”
Al-Bayhaqī related this.
Ibn Ishaq stated, “Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said to these leaders, ‘You shall be those entrusted for your people just as the apostles were for Jesus, son of Mary. I shall be entrusted with my own people.’ They replied, ‘So be it.’
"Aśīm b. Umar b. Qatāda related to us that when this group met to pledge allegiance to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), al-ʿAbbās b. Ubāda b. Naḍla al-ʿAṣārī, of the Banū Sālim b. ʿAff, said, 'O Khazraj, do you know what it is you are pledging this man?' 'Yes,' they replied.

"He continued, 'You are pledging to go to war against all kinds of people. If you think that if you suffered great losses to your wealth and had your leaders killed, you would give him up, then do it now or suffer the punishment of this life and the next. If you think you will keep faith with him in what he has called upon you to do, despite loss of wealth and your leaders being killed, then do accept him. For he is, by God, the best in this world and the next.'

"They replied, 'We will take him regardless of loss of wealth or the death of our leaders. But what will we receive in return for this, O Messenger of God, if we keep faith with you?'

"'Paradise,' he replied.

"Then hold out your hand,' they asked.

"He did so and they pledged allegiance to him.

"Aśīm b. Umar b. Qatāda commented, 'Al-ʿAbbās b. Ubāda only said this to emphasize the pact they were making.'

"ʿAbd Allāh b. Abī Bakr claimed that al-ʿAbbās had only said that to delay the pledge of allegiance that night in the hope that ʿAbd Allāh b. Ubayy b. Sallīl, leader of the Khazraj would attend so that the action of the group would be even stronger. God knows best which of these is true."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "The Banū al-Najjār claim that Abū Umāma Aṣād b. Zurārā was the first who touched his hand in allegiance. The Banū ʿAbd al-Asḥāḥal, however, claim that it was Abī al-Haytham b. al-Tayyihān."

Ibn Ishaq also said, "Maʿbad b. Kaʿb related to me from his brother ʿAbd Allāh, from his father Kaʿb b. Malik, who said, 'The first man to touch the hand of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was al-Barāʾ b. Maṣrūr. Then all the rest pledged allegiance to him.'"

Ibn al-Athir stated in his work al-Ghāba (The Jungle), "The Banū Salama claim that the first who pledged allegiance to him that night was Kaʿb b. Malik."

It is established in the saḥīḥ collection of al-Bukhārī and in that of Muslim, from a hadīth of al-Zuhri, from ʿAbd al-ʿRahmān b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Kaʿb, from his father, from Kaʿb b. Malik in his hadīth when he absented himself from the battle of Tabūk. He stated, "I was present with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on the night of al-ʿAqaba when we pledged ourselves to Islam, and I would not rather have witnessed the battle of Badr than it, even though at Badr there were more men involved."

tree. He told them, 'Let your spokesman speak, but not talk too long. For there are polytheists watching you and if they have knowledge of you they will expose you.'

"Abū Umāma, their spokesman, said, 'Ask, Muḥammad, for your Lord whatever it is you want. Then after that ask for yourself what it is you want. Then tell us what reward we will have from God and from you if we do that.'

"He replied, 'For my Lord I ask you to worship Him and to associate no other god with Him. For myself, and my Companions, I ask you to give me refuge and to help me and protect me from what it is you protect yourselves.'

"They asked, 'What will we receive if we do that?'

"'You shall have paradise,' he replied.

"'Shall you have that?' they asked."

Hanbal also related this from Imam Alḥmad, from Yahyā b. Zakariyyā, from Mujālid, from al-Shaḥī, from Abū Masūd al-Anṣārī who, having recounted it, stated, "Abū Masūd was the youngest man there."

Alḥmad stated, from Yahyā, from Ismā'il b. Abū Khalīd, from al-Shaḥī, who said, "No one, old or young, ever heard such an address."

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "Abū Tāhir Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. Muḥmish narrated to us from Muḥammad b. Ibrāhim b. al-Fadl al-Fahām from Muḥammad b. Yahyā al-Dhuḥlī from 'Amr b. ʿUthmān al-Raqī, as follows: ‘Zuhayr related to us, from ‘Abd Allāh b. ʿUthmān b. Khuthaym, from Ismā'il b. Ubayd Allāh b. Riūsā, from his father, who said, "Skins of wine were brought out, but ʿU바da b. al-Ṣāmit went up to them and pierced them open, saying, 'We have pledged to the Messenger of God (SAAS) that we will listen and obey, in action and at rest, expend our wealth in good times and bad, enjoin good and forbid evil, express our faith in God without fear of reproach, and assist the Messenger of God (SAAS) if he comes to Yathrib with the same protection we give ourselves and our children in body and soul. And we shall have paradise.'"

"'This was the pledge we made to the Messenger of God (SAAS).'

This chain of authorities is strong and excellent but the scholars do not cite it.

Yūnus stated, from Ibn Iṣḥāq, "ʿU바da b. al-Walīd b. ʿU바da b. al-Ṣāmit related to me from his father, from his grandfather ʿU바da b. al-Ṣāmit, who said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) had us pledge to him that we would fight, that we would listen and obey in good and bad times alike, regardless of the incentives or disincentives or pressure upon us, that we would not dispute among ourselves, that we would speak the truth wherever we were and hear no reproach in our worship of God.'"

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated in his account from Maʿbad b. Kaḥb, from his brother ʿAbd Allāh b. Kaḥb b. Mālik, who said, "When we pledged ourselves to the Messenger of God (SAAS) Satan called out from the top of the defile in the most piercing voice I have ever heard. He said, 'O people of the jābājīb' — the word meaning 'houses' — are you going to support this reprehensible man and the fools with him who have tried to make war upon you?"
“The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, ‘That was Azabb of al-‘Aqaba. He’s the son of Azyab.’”

Ibn Hishām suggested that the name given was “son of Uzayb”.

‘Do you hear, O enemy of God,’ he went on, ‘I swear I will destroy you’

“Then he told them, ‘Return to your caravans.’”

The account continues, “Al-‘Abbās b. ‘Ubayd b. Naḍla said, ‘O Messenger of God by Him who sent you with the truth, if you wish tomorrow we will fall on those at Minā with our swords!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘We have not been ordered to do that; however, do go back to your caravans.’

“And so we returned to our beds and slept in them until morning.

“Next morning leaders of Quraysh came to us in our camps and said, ‘O Khazraj, we have learned that you have come to this man of ours asking him to leave us and pledging to fight against us. We swear that there is no Arab group we would like less to do battle with than you.’

“Those of our people who were polytheists promptly swore that they had no knowledge of any such thing.

“And they spoke the truth; they knew nothing. We, meanwhile, were exchanging glances.

“Then Quraysh arose; they included al-Ḥārith b. Hishām b. al-Mughira al-Makhzūmī who was wearing new sandals. I spoke to him as if I wanted to associate the entire group with what the polytheists had said. Then I said (changing the subject) ‘Abū Jābir, seeing that you are one of our chiefs, can’t you get sandals like those of that young Quraysh fellow?’

“Al-Ḥārith heard this, took off his sandals and hurled them at me, saying, ‘By God, you can put them on!’

“Abū Jābir replied, ‘Now easy there; you’ve annoyed the lad; give him back his sandals.’

“I replied, ‘I swear, I’ll not return them. They’re a good omen; and if it proves true, I’ll keep the sandals!’”

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “‘Abd Allāh b. Abū Bakr related to me that they went to ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Ubayy b. Saḥl and said much the same as Ka‘b had. He told them, ‘This is a very grave matter; my people are not such as to divide over a matter like this. I have no knowledge of it.’ The Quraysh leaders then left.

“The pilgrims then left Minā and some of them investigated the report further, finding it to have happened. They set about pursuing our people and caught up with Sa‘d b. ‘Ubaḍa at Adhākhir, along with al-Mundhir b. ‘Amr, a brother from the Banū Sā‘ida b. Ka‘b b. al-Khazraj; both of these were ‘leaders’ (i.e. appointed at al-‘Aqaba, tr.).

“Al-Mundhir evaded them but they captured Sa‘d b. ‘Ubaḍa and tied his hands behind his neck with the cords holding his saddle and led him into Mecca, beating him and pulling him along by his hair which was very full.
Sa'd reported, ‘So there I was in their hands when up came a group of Quraysh among whom was one tall, handsome, fair-skinned man. I told myself, “If there is any good in any of their men, it has to be him.”

‘But when he drew near he raised his hand and struck me hard. I told myself, “Well, I swear, after this there’s no good in them at all!”

‘Well, there I was in their hands, being pulled along, when one of their men came up to me and said, “Too bad! Don’t you have any pact or protection agreement with any Quraysh man?” I replied, “Yes, indeed I do. I used to give protection to Jubayr b. Mu'tim and his merchants on business trips and prevent those of my people who wanted to harm them. And also I protected al-Ḥārith b. Ḥarb b. Umayya b. Ṭabd Shams.” He commented, “Cry out the names of the two men and tell of your connection to them.”

‘So I did this and that man went off to look for those two merchants. He found them in the ka'ba and told them, “There’s a man of Khazraj now out there in the valley being beaten and calling out for both of you.” They asked, “Who is he?” “He is Sa'd b. Ḫubāda,” he told them. “Well,” they said, “he has spoken the truth. He did protect our merchants from some in his country who wanted to harm them.”

The account continues, “The two men then went and released Sa'd from his attackers, and he fled. The man who struck Sa'd was Suhayl b. Ḵāmr.

Ibn Hīṣām stated, “The man who gave him refuge was Abū al-Bakhtārī b. Hīṣām.”

Al-Bayhaqi related with a chain of authorities from Ḣsā b. Abū b. Jubayr, who said, “Quraysh heard someone speak out in the night on the mountain of Abī Qubays, ‘If Sa’d b. Murghān (i.e. “two Sa’ds”, tr.) be safe, then Muḥammad should not fear any opposition in Mecca.’

“Next morning, Abū Sufyān asked, ‘Who is al-Sa’d? As’ad b. Bakr or Sa’d b. Ḥudaym?’

“The second night they heard someone reciting,

‘O Sa’d, Sa’d of al-Aws, may you be victorious; and you, O Sa’d, Sa’d of Khazraj, a hero.
Answer to him who calls for guidance and beseech God for paradise as those who know.
For God’s reward to Him who seeks guidance is gardens of paradise where birds fly.’

“Next morning Abū Sufyān said, ‘I swear, it has to be Sa’d b. Muṭadh and Sa’d b. Ḫubāda!’” Ibn Ishāq stated, “When the ansār who had pledged themselves to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on the night of the second meeting at al-‘Aqaba returned to Medina, they proclaimed their acceptance of Islam.

"Among their people there were still a few elders persisting in their polytheistic beliefs. One of these was ‘Amr b. al-Jamāḥ b. Zayd b. Ḥarām b. Ka'b b. Ghanm b. Ka'b b. Salama.

‘His son Muṣādh b. ‘Am was one of those who were present at al-‘Aqāba. ‘Amr b. al-Jamāḥ was a leader of the Banū Salama. He had a wooden idol, named Manāt, in his home; this was a practice common among those chieftains. They would treat these idols as gods and would venerate them and show them off. When the young men of the Banū Salama, Muṣādh, and Muṣādh b. Jabal accepted Islam, they would sneak in at night to that idol of ‘Amr, carry it out and toss it head first into pits used to contain the excrement of the Banū Salama. Next morning ‘Amr would ask, ‘Who could have attacked our god tonight?’ He would then look around for it and when he found it he washed it, purified it and scented it. Then he would say, ‘I swear, if I knew who did that to you I would put him to shame!’

‘When ‘Am slept at night they would again seize it and do as before. ‘Amr again found it harmed as before and he would wash, purify and scent it. That night they returned and did the same, as he did. But this time he brought his sword and attached it to the idol saying, ‘I swear I do not know who is doing this to you, but if there is any good in you, then defend yourself! You have this sword now.’

‘That night while ‘Am slept they returned to the idol, took the sword off its neck and then replaced it with a dead dog they attached to it. Then they threw it into one of the cesspools of the Banū Salama. Next day ‘Amr b. al-Jamāḥ did not see it in its place, so he went out to find it and did so in the cesspool, upside down and with the dead dog attached. When he saw it in this state he reflected upon his state and one of his people who had accepted Islam went and spoke to him, and, by God’s mercy, he accepted Islam himself and remained a good Muslim. When he accepted Islam and knew what he now did of God, he reflected on his own state and what he had seen happen to the idol. He thanked God who had saved him from his former blindness and error and spoke the following verses,

By God, if you had been a god, you would not have been hurled into a well tied to a dog!
Yekh! for treating you as a god; now we have assessed you and (turned from) evil ways, Praise be to God the Almighty, the Benevolent, the Giver, the Provider, the establisher of the religions,
He it was saved me before I was encased in the darkness of a grave.’"

Section: That gives the names of those who attended the second meeting at al-‘Aqāba, their number, according to Ibn Ishāq, totalling seventy-three men and two women.

There were 11 men from Aws: Usayd b. Ḥudayr, one of the "leaders"; Abū al-Haytham b. al-Tayyihān, who was also at Badr; Salama b. Sallāma b. Waqশ, at Badr; Zuhayr b. Rasī; Abū Burda b. Niyar; Nuhayr b. al-Haytham b. Naḥī b.
Majda'a b. Ḥāritha; Sa'd b. Khaythama, one of the “leaders” who was killed at Badr; Riḍa'a b. ʿAbd al-Mundhir b. Zunayr, a “leader”, at Badr; ʿAbd Allāh b. Jubayr b. al-Nuṣmān b. Umayya b. al-Burak, at Badr, killed at Uhud where he was a commander of the bowmen; Ṭa'an b. ʿAdī b. al-Jadd b. ʿAjlan b. al-Ḥārith b. Ḥubayy's al-Balawi, an ally of the Aws, present at Badr and its aftermath and died a martyr in al-Yamaa; ʿUwaym b. Saʿīda, who attended Badr and thereafter.

From the Khazraj there were 62 men: Abū Ayyūb Ḥālīd b. Zayd, who participated at Badr and thereafter, dying a martyr in Byzantine territory during the reign of Muʿawwīya; Muʿādh b. al-Ḥārith, along with his brothers ʿAwf and Muʿāwīya, sons of Ṭaʿrā, all at Badr; Ummāra b. Ḥāzm who witnessed Badr and thereafter, was killed in al-Ŷamāma; ʿAsād b. Zurāra Abū ʿUmāma, one of the “leaders”, who died before Badr; Saḥl b. ʿAtik, at Badr; Āws b. Thābit b. al-Mundhir, at Badr; Abū Ṭalḥa Zayd b. Saḥl, at Badr; Qays b. Abū Saʿāda ʿAmr b. Zayd b. ʿAwf b. Mabdūl b. ʿAmr b. Ghānim b. Māzin, a commander of the rear-guard at Badr; ʿAmr b. Ghāziyya; Sa’d b. al-Rabī', one of the “leaders”, who was at Badr and was killed at Uhud.

Also there were ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa, one of the “leaders”; he was present at Badr, Uhud and the khandaq, “the trench”. He was killed at the battle of Mu'ṭa, acting as commander. Also there was Bashir b. Sa'd, at Badr, and ʿAbd Allāh b. Zayd b. Tha'labah b. ʿAbd Rabbīhi, who was shown how to call people to prayer. He was present at Badr.

Khallad b. Suwayd, who was present at Badr, Uhud and the khandaq. He died a martyr battling the Banū Qurayza; a millstone was hurled at him and it crushed him. It is said that the Messenger of God (ṣaas) stated, “He will have the reward of two martyrs.”

Also there was Abū Mas'ūd ʿUqba b. ʿAmr, at Badr. However, Ibn Ishaq stated, “He was the youngest person to witness al-ʿAqaba, and he was not present at Badr.”

There was Ziyād b. Labīd, at Badr, Farwa b. ʿAmr b. Wadhafa; Khālid b. Qays b. Mālik, at Badr; Rāfi' b. Mālik, a “leader”; Dhakwān b. ʿAbd Qays b. Khalda b. Mukhlīd b. ʿĀmir b. Zurayq. He it is who was called both muhājirī and ansārī, “Emigrant” and “Helper”, because he stayed with the Messenger of God (ṣaas) in Mecca until his migration to Medina. He was present at Badr and was killed at Uhud. Also there was ʿAbbād b. Qays b. ʿĀmir b. Khālid b. ʿĀmir b. Zurayq, at Badr, and his brother al-Ḥārith b. Qays b. ʿĀmir, also at Badr.

And al-Barā' b. Maʿrūr, a “leader” and the first man to pledge allegiance (at ʿAqaba) according to the claim of the Banū Salama. He died before the arrival of the Prophet (ṣaas) in Medina and pledged to him a third of his wealth. The Messenger of God (ṣaas) returned the money to his heirs. His son was Bishr b. al-Barā'; he was present at Badr, Uhud and the khandaq. He died a martyr at Khaybar as a result of eating, along with the Messenger of God (ṣaas), from the poisoned sheep. God bless him!

Also there was Sinān b. Ṣayfī b. Ṣakhir, at Badr, al-Ṭufayl b. al-Nuṣmān b. Khāṣa', at Badr; he was killed at the battle of al-khandaq.

And 'Abd Allah b. 'Amr b. Harâm, one of the "leaders", at Badr, martyred at Uhud, and his son Jâbir b. 'Abî Allah; Mu'adh b. 'Amr b. al-Jamâh, at Badr; Thâbit b. al-Jadîf, at Badr and martyred at al-Tâ'if; 'Umâyr b. al-Hârith b. Thaqîla, at Badr; Khadij b. Salama, an ally of theirs from Bâliy; Mu'adh b. Jabal who witnessed Badr and thereafter; he died of the plague at Imwas in the Caliphate of Umar b. al-Khattâb.

And Ubâda b. al-Samit, a "leader", at Badr and thereafter; al-'Abbâs b. Ubâda b. Nadîa, who stayed at Mecca until he emigrated from it. He also was known as a muhâjiri ansâri. He was martyred at Uhud. And Abû 'Abd al-Rahmân Yazid b. Thaqîla b. Khazma b. 'Ashram, an ally of theirs from the Banû Ghusaynna from Bâliy; 'Amr b. al-Hârith b. Labâda; Rif'â'a b. 'Amr b. Zayd, at Badr; Uqba b. Wahb b. Kalda, an ally of theirs, at Badr. He was one of those who left for Mecca and remained until he emigrated from there. He was one of those also called a muhâjiri ansâri. And Sa'd b. Ubâda b. Dulaym, a "leader"; al-Mundhir b. 'Amr, a "leader" and at both Badr andUhud. He was killed at BPr Ma'âda, acting as a commander. It was he of whom it was said, "He was manumitted only to die."

The two women were Umm Umâra Nasîba, daughter of Ka'b b. 'Amr b. Awf b. Mabdhûl b. 'Amr b. Ghanm b. Mazin b. al-Najjâr, of Mazin and al-Najjar.

Ibn Ishâq stated, "She, along with her sister and her husband Zayd b. 'Ashim b. Ka'b and her sons Habîb and 'Abd Allah, was present with the Messenger of God (SAAS) during the war. This son of hers, Habîb, was killed by Musaylima, "the liar", the latter asked him, 'Do you bear witness that Muhammad is the Messenger of God?' 'Yes,' he replied. He asked, 'Do you bear witness that I am the Messenger of God?' He replied, 'I do not hear!' At that he began cutting off one member after the other from him until he died right there before him; he got nothing more from him. Umm Umâra was one of those who left for al-Yamâmâ with the Muslims when Musaylima was killed. When she came back she had 12 wounds caused by hits and cuts. God bless her.

The other woman was Umm Mani, Asma, daughter of 'Amr b. 'Adî b. Nabi b. 'Amr b. Sawwâd b. Ghanm b. Ka'b b. Salama. May God be pleased with them all.
Chapter: The beginning of emigration from Mecca to Medina.

Al-Zuhri stated, from Urwa, that 'A'isha said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS), he being at Mecca at the time, addressed the Muslims as follows, ‘I have been shown the place of your migration; I have been shown a salty, swampy plain with palm-groves between two tracts of rocks.’

“Some people migrated towards Medina when the Messenger of God (SAAS) said that, while other Muslims who had gone to Abyssinia returned and went there instead.”

Al-Bukhari related this.

Abu Musa stated that the Prophet (SAAS) said, “In my sleep I saw that I would be migrating from Mecca to a place where there were palm-groves. My imagination told me that it was to be in al-Yamama or Hajar, but it turned out to be the town of Yathrib.”

This hadith is given at length by al-Bukhari with a variety of chains of authority.

Muslim also related both of the above hadith with lines of authority from Abu Kurayb. Muslim added ‘Abd Allah b. Murad and quoted both traditions on the authority of Abu Usama, from Yazid b. ‘Abd Allah b. Abu Burda, from his grandfather, Abu Burda, from Abu Musa ‘Abd Allah b. Qays al-Ash’ari, from the Prophet (SAAS), giving the whole hadith.

“The scholars state that thereafter he decided for Medina, and told his Companions to migrate there.”

This is a very strange hadith. Al-Tirmidhi related it in a digression in his compendium, giving only one account, from Abu ‘Ammar al-Husayn b. Hurayth, from al-Fadl b. Musa, from Isâ b. Ubayd, from Ghaylan b. ‘Abd Allâh al-Amiri, from Abu Zur’A b. Umar b. Jarir, from Jarir, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘God revealed to me, “Any one of these three places you go to will be the site of your migration: Medina, al-Bahrain or Qinnasrin.”’” He (al-Tirmidhi) then commented, “This tradition is gharib, unique; we know of it only on the authority of al-Fadl, and Abu ‘Ammar alone narrated it.”

I comment that this authority Ghaylan b. ‘Abd Allâh al-Amiri is mentioned by Ibn Hibân in al-Thiqat (The Trustworthy Authorities). However, he states, “He related, from Abu Zur’A, a spurious hadith about the hijra, the emigration.” But God knows best.
Ibn Ishaq stated, "When God Almighty gave permission for warfare with His words, 'Permission (to fight) is being given to those against whom war is being wrongfully waged. God has power to give them victory, those who have been expelled unjustly from their homes merely for having said, "Our Lord is God'" (ṣirat al-Ḥājj; XXII, v.3940).

"When God gave permission to do battle and that group of ansār had followed him into accepting Islam and had agreed to give him and his Muslim followers aid and refuge, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered his supporters, both those who had previously emigrated and those who had stayed with him in Mecca, to leave in migration to Medina to join their Muslim brethren there. He told them, 'God has provided brothers and a home where you may be secure.'

"And so they left for Medina in groups.

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stayed in Mecca waiting for his Lord to give him permission to emigrate from Mecca to Medina.

"The first of his supporters to emigrate to Medina of the Quraysh and of the Bani Makhzum was Abu Salama 'Abd Allah b. 'Abd al-Asad b. Hilal b. 'Abd Allah b. 'Umar b. Makhzum. His migration took place one year before the pledge made at al-Qa'aba. This was because, following his return from Abyssinia, he had been badly treated by Quraysh and had decided to return there, but, when he learned of fellow Muslims in Medina, he went there instead."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "My father related to me, from Salama b. 'Abd Allah b. 'Umar b. Abii Salama, from his grandmother Umm Salama, who said, 'When Abii Salama decided to depart for Medina, he saddled his camel for me, mounted me on it and put my son Salama in my lap. He then led us away."

"'When some men of the Banu al-Mughira saw him they approached and said, "We can accept what you yourself do, but why should we allow this woman of ours to be taken off by you somewhere else?" She went on, "And they snatched the camel's bridle out of his hand and took me off it."

"'This angered the Bani 'Abd al-Asad, Aba Salama's people, and they said, "By God, we'll not leave a son of ours with her now you've taken her away from our man." So they tugged at my son Salama and dislocated his arm. The Bani 'Abd al-Asad then took him away, while the Banu al-Mughira kept me among themselves. My husband, Abu Salama, then left for Medina. So I was separated from both my son and my husband.

"'Thereafter I would go out every morning and sit in the valley and weep till evening; I kept this up for about a year.

"'Then one day a man from my uncle's family, one of the Banu al-Mughira, passed by, saw the state I was in and took pity on me. He told the Banu al-Mughira, 'Can't you let this poor woman go? You've separated her from both her son and her husband?'

"'They then told me I could join my husband if I liked.

"'So then the Banu 'Abd al-Asad returned my son to me; I saddled a camel, took my son in my lap and headed out to my husband in Medina.
"I was entirely alone. But eventually, at al-Tan'im, I met Uthmān b. Ṭalḥa b. Abū Ṭalḥa, a relative of the Banū ʿAbd al-Dar, and he asked, "Where are you going, daughter of Abū Umayya?" I replied, "I'm heading for my husband in Medina." He said, "And there's no one with you?" "There is no one with me except God and this son of mine," I replied.

"He commented, "You shouldn't be left like that."

"He then took the camel's halter and began accompanying me. And, I swear, I was never in the company of any Arab more honourable than him. When we made a stop, he would make my camel kneel and then he would move away until I had dismounted. When I made a halt he would take my mount away, unload it, and tie it to a tree. He would then move off and make his bed beneath a tree. When it was time to leave, he would get my camel, lead it up, saddle it and then stand away from me. He would then say, "Do mount!" And when I mounted and was secure, he would come and take its halter and lead me away until we next stopped.

"He continued behaving in this way until he brought me to Medina. When he saw the village of the Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf at Qubā', he said, "Your husband is in this village. Abū Salama is living here. Go on in, with God's blessings." He then left, returning to Mecca.'

"She used to say, 'I know of no other family in all Islam who suffered like that of Abū Salama. And I swear I never had a more honourable companion than Uthmān b. Ṭalḥa.'"

This man, Uthmān b. Ṭalḥa b. Abū Ṭalḥa al-ʿAbdari, accepted Islam after the Ḥudaybiyya truce. He emigrated along with Khalid b. al-Walid. His father and brothers, al-Ḥārith, Kilaab and Musāfi', were killed at Uhūd, along with his uncle Uthmān b. Abū Ṭalḥa. The Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥāḥ) handed over to him and to his cousin Shayba, head of the Banū Shayba, the keys of the kāba on the "conquest of Mecca"; he affirmed their being in their care in Islam as they had been in the jahiliyya. On that subject the Almighty revealed, "God orders you to give over matters of trust to those entitled to it" (sūrat al-Nisā'; IV, v.58).

Ibn Isḥāq gives his name as ʿAbd, though it is also said to have been Thāmāma. Al-Suhaylī stated that the first of these names was correct.

"Abū Aḥmad was blind; however, he used to make his way all over the length and breadth of Mecca without any guide. He was a poet and had a wife named al-Ḥaḍīra, daughter of Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb. His mother was Umayma, daughter of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib b. Ḥāshim."
"The home of Banū Jaḥš was shut up when the migration occurred. Utba b. Rabī'ā, al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib and Abū Jahl b. Hishām passed by it on their way up to the heights of Mecca. Utba looked at its doors blowing open, unoccupied, and he sighed deeply and said, ‘Every house, no matter how long safe, will one day be beset by disaster and outrage.’"

Ibn Hishām, however, mentioned that this verse was a line from a poem by Abū Dārūḍ al-Iyyāḍi. Al-Suhaylī said that Abī Dāma al-Iyyāḍ was Hanżaš b. Sharqī; also his name was given as Ḥāritha.

(Ibn Iṣḥaq continued) “Utba then said, ‘The home of Banū Jaḥš has become devoid of its people.’ Abū Jahl commented, ‘No one at all will weep over that!’ He then said, to al-ʿAbbās that is, ‘All this is the work of your nephew! He has split us up and completely divided our community.’"

Ibn Iṣḥaq stated, “Abū Salama, Āmir b. Rabī'ā and the Banū Jaḥš took up residence at Quba' with Mubashshīr b. ʿAbd al-Mundhir; after this the Emigrants arrived in groups.

“Abū Ahmad b. Jaḥš spoke the following verses concerning their emigration to Medina:

‘When Umm Ahmad saw me leaving under the protection of One supernatural whom I fear and revere,
She said, “If this is what you have to do, then take us some place else, far from Yathrib.”
I said to her, “Yathrib is not just a possible location; man does whatever the All-Merciful wishes.
I head towards God and to the Messenger; and whoever directs himself to God one day will not be disappointed.
What a lot of true, real friends we have left behind, and a woman, too, who weeps tears and laments.
You think it is vengeance that distances us from our land; we think that it is our aspiration that we seek.
I invited the Banū Ghanm to spare their bloodshed; for there is a course open to people when the path to truth is clear."

They responded, praise the Lord, when someone invited them to the truth and to success, and they came united.

We, and our fellows who had left the true path and had helped those using weapons against us, had become,

Like two battalions; one of these was successful in achieving truth, rightly guided, while the other would be punished.

Acting unjustly, they thought up lies; Satan made them err away from the truth. They failed and caused to fail.

We delighted in the words of the Prophet Muhammad and those of us who supported truth acted well and were well treated.

We are very closely related to them, though there is no close relationship if there is no closeness.

What nephew would, after us, give you their husq what in-law after us could be respected?

One day you will learn which of us is closer to the truth, when they have passed on and the people’s dispute is concluded."

(ʻIbn Ishāq continued) "Then Ťumar b. al-Khaṭṭāb left, along with ʻAyyāsh b. Abū Rabī‘a, and went to Medina.

ʻNasfī related to me, from ʻAbd Allāh b. Ťumar, from his father, saying, ‘Having made up my mind to emigrate to Medina, I arranged a rendezvous with ʻAyyāsh b. Abū Rabī‘a and Hishām b. al-ʻĀṣ at al-Ta‘ādub of Iḍrat of the Banū Ghifār, above Saraf. We agreed, “Any one of us who doesn’t arrive there in the morning must have been detained; in such a case the others must go ahead.”

‘Next morning ʻAyyāsh and I were there at al-Ta‘ādub. Hishām was detained. He was enticed and apostatized.’

‘When we reached Medina we went to live among the Banū ʻAmr b. Ťawf in Qubā. Abū Jahl b. Hishām and al-Ḥarīth b. Hishām came over to see ʻAyyāsh who was their cousin and their brother through their mother. They came to Medina at a time when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was in Mecca. They talked to ʻAyyāsh and told him, “Your mother has warned that she will not allow a comb to touch her hair until she sees you, nor will she shelter from the sun.”

ʻAyyāsh was worried about her, but I told him, “These people, I swear, only want to entice you away from your faith; so beware of them. You can be sure that if your mother gets lice she’ll be sure to comb her hair, and if she finds Mecca’s heat severe, she’ll surely seek shade!”

‘But ʻAyyāsh said, “I will remove my mother’s oath; and I have money there I can get.” I told him, “You already know I’m one of the wealthiest men of Mecca, and if you don’t go, I’ll give you half what I have!”
"He refused my offer, insisting on leaving with them. When that was all he would do, I said, "Well, if you have to do it, then take this camel of mine. It is a splendid mount and docile. Keep on her back and if you get suspicious about them, then escape on her."

"He then rode off on her with them. Some way along Abū Jahl asked him, "Say, brother, I find my mount difficult to ride. Would you mind if I rode behind on yours?" "Sure," he responded. Then he made his camel kneel as the other two men dismounted to change mounts. But when they were all on the ground the others ran up at 'Ayyāsh and tied him up. Then they took him off to Mecca, subverted him and he apostatized.

"'And,' the narrator 'Umar said, 'we used to say, "God will not accept repentance from those who apostatize." And those who apostatized made similar statements about themselves."

"He went on, 'This was so until the Messenger of God (SAAS) came to Medina and God revealed, "Say: 'O my servants who have harmed themselves, do not despair of God's mercy. God will forgive all sins. He is the All-Forgiving, the All-Merciful. Turn back to your Lord and submit to Him before punishment reaches you; then you shall not be helped. Follow the best that has been revealed to you from your Lord before punishment comes suddenly to you, and you are caught unawares.'"' (sūrat al-Zumar; XXXIX, v.53–5).

"'Umar went on, 'I wrote this down and sent it on to Hishām b. al-Ĥās.

"Hishām said, "When it reached me I began reading it at Dḥū Ṭuwā, holding it this way and that, but I didn't understand it. Eventually I said, 'O God, make me understand this!' And God made me realize that it had been sent down specifically about us and what we used to tell ourselves and what was said about us."

"'So I went to my camel, mounted it and joined the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Medina.'"

Ibn Hishām recounted that it was al-Walid b. al-Mughira who brought Hishām b. al-Ĥās and 'Ayyāsh b. Abū Rabī'a to Medina. He stole them away from Mecca and brought them on his own mount while he walked beside them. He stumbled and bloodied his toe, and so spoke the line,

"Are you anything but a toe that bleeds; what happened to you was in God's cause!"

Al-Bukhārī stated, "Abū al-Walid related to us, quoting Shu'bā, quoting Abū Ishāq who heard al-Barā' say, 'The first to come to us were Muṣ'ab b. Umayr and Ibn Umm Maktūm, and they were followed by 'Ammār and Bilāl.'

"Muḥammad b. Bashshār related to me, quoting Ghundar quoting Shu'bā, from Abu Ishāq, who said, 'I heard al-Barā' b. Āzib say, "The first to join us were Muṣ'ab b. Umayr and Ibn Umm Maktūm. They would read to the people. Then came Bilāl, Sa'd and 'Ammār b. Yāsir, followed by 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb along with 20 of the supporters of the Prophet (SAAS)."
“Then came the Prophet (SAAS); and I never saw the people of Medina so happy as they were to see him. So much so that the slave girls sang out, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) has come!” And he did not arrive until after I had read the verse in the Qur'an: “Glorify the name of your Lord most high!” (sūrat al-'Alā; LXXXVII), along with other verses from al-Muṣafāṣalāt.”

Muslim related this in his saḥīḥ collection from an ḥadīth of Isra'īl from Abū ʿIshaq, from al-Barā' b. ʿAzib, in similar words.

In it there is the assertion that Sa'd b. Abū Waqqās emigrated before the arrival of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Medina. Mūsā b. ʿUqba, quoting al-Zuhri, claimed that he emigrated only after the Messenger of God (SAAS); the information that precedes this however, is correct.

Ibn ʿIshaq stated, “Then the emigrants, God bless them, followed on after them. Ṭalḥa b. ʿUbayd Allāh and Ṣuhayyab b. Sinān, took up residence with Khubayb b. Isāf, brother of the Banū al-Ḥārith b. al-Khazraj at al-Suḥr. It is also said that Ṭalḥa stayed with ʿAṣād b. Zūrārā.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “It was told to me that Abū ʿUṯmān al-Nahdī said, ‘I learned that when Ṣuhayyab wished to emigrate the polytheists of Quraysh said to him, “When you came to us you were a poverty-stricken beggar. With us you grew wealthy and acquired status and now you want to take yourself and your money away! By God, that won’t happen!”

‘Ṣuhayyab told them, ‘If I were to make my money over to you, would you let me leave?’

‘Yes,’ they agreed.

That information reached the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he commented, ‘Ṣuhayyab made a profit! Ṣuhayyab made a profit!’” salt-plain between two uplands and two lava-rock plains. That would either be Hajar or Yathrib."

"He went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) left for Medina accompanied by Abû Bakr. I had wanted to leave with him, but some young Quraysh men blocked my way. I remained up that night, not lying down, and they commented, "God has diverted him from you through his stomach!" But I made no complaint, and they went to sleep. So I left, but some of them caught up with me after I had gone some way and wanted to take me back. I told them, "If I were to give you some ounces of gold, would you let me go and be fair to me?" They did so and I followed them back to Mecca. I told them, "Dig beneath the threshold of the door; that's where the ounces of gold are. And if you go off to a certain woman, you can take two sets of vestments."

"So I left and joined the Messenger of God (SAAS) at Qubā' before he moved out from there. When he saw me he said, "Well, Abû Yahyâ, you made a good deal!" I replied, "O Messenger of God, no one got here to you before me, so it could only be Gabriel, peace be upon him, who informed you!""

Ibn Ishâq stated, "Hâmza b. 'Abd al-Mu'llalîb, Zayd b. Hârîthah, Abû Marthad Kânâz b. al-Ḫuṣayn and his son Marthad, both of the Ghanawî tribe, allies of Hâmzâ; Anasa and Abû Kabsha, freed-men of the Messenger of God (SAAS); all these stayed with Kûltâm b. al-Hâm, brother of the Banû 'Amr b. 'Awf, at Qubâ'. However, it is also said that they stayed with Sa'd b. Khaythama. It is stated, moreover, that Hâmzâ stayed with Asâd b. Zurâra. But God knows best."

His account continues, "The unmarried emigrant men stayed with Sa'd b. Khaythama since he was unmarried. But God knows best about this."

His account continues, "The unmarried emigrant men stayed with Sa'd b. Khaythama since he was unmarried. But God knows best about this."

Muḥammad b. ‘Ubayd Allāh, from Nāfic, from Ibn ʿUmar, who said, ‘We arrived from Mecca and took up residence at al-ʿUsha, including ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, Abū ʿUbayda b. al-Jarāh, and Sālim, freed-man of Abū Hudhayfa. It was Sālim who acted as their Imām because he had greater knowledge of the Qurʾān than the others.’"

Section: On the cause of the emigration of the Messenger of God (SAAS).

God Almighty revealed, “Say: O God, make my place of arrival good and make my place of departure good. And grant me an aid and authority from Yourself” (ṣūrat Bani Isrāʾil; XVII, v.80).

And God did give him good guidance and inspired him to call out the above prayer to provide him prompt relief and a rapid departure. The Almighty gave him permission to migrate to the “Medina, the ‘city’, of the Prophet”, where there were the anṣār and friends, a place where he could make his home in security and whose people would be his helpers.

Aḥmad b. Ḥanbal, and ʿUthmān b. Abī Shayba said, from Jarir, from Qābūs b. Abū Zubayr, from his father, from Ibn ‘Abbās, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was at Mecca when he was ordered to migrate and there was revealed to him the verse, “Say: O God, make my place of arrival good, and make my place of departure good. And grant me an aid and authority from Yourself.”

Qatāda said, “The phrase ‘place of arrival’ referred to Medina, while the words ‘place of departure’ referred to his emigration from Mecca. The words ‘grant me an aid and authority from Yourself’ referred to God’s book and His ordinances and restrictions.”

Ibn Isḥāq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) stayed on in Mecca after his supporters had emigrated, waiting for permission to be given to himself to leave. “There remained there with him only those (Muslims) who had been detained or who had apostatized, except for ʿAli, son of Abū Ṭalib, and Abū Bakr b. Abū Quḥāfa, God bless them both.

“Abū Bakr often asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) for permission to leave, but he would reply, ‘Don’t be in a hurry. God may well give you a companion.’ And Abū Bakr hoped it would be him.

“When Quraysh saw that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had assembled a party and had supporters from others than their own people and from a town other than theirs, and saw his Companions moving out to join these others, they realized that the Muslims had found a new home with them and had acquired their protection.

“Quraysh were concerned that the Messenger of God (SAAS) would leave and join them, since they knew that he had decided to do battle with them.

“They therefore gathered in the Dār al-Nadwa, the house of assembly, the home of Quṣayy b. Kilāb, where all their decisions were made. They discussed there what they should do about the Messenger of God (SAAS), since they now feared him."

Ibn Ish'aq continued, "A colleague whose views I do not doubt, as did others I consider reliable, related to me, from 'Abd Allah b. Abu Najih, from Mujahid b. Jabr, that 'Abd Allah b. Abbas said, 'The day arrived when they had agreed to meet to enter their assembly to discuss what to do about the Messenger of God (SAAS). That day is known as the yawm al-zahma, "the day of the gathering", and upon it Satan, God curse him, came before them in the form of a venerable sheikh dressed in a heavy cloak. He stood at the door of the house and, when they saw him they asked who he was. He replied, "I am come from Nejd, from the highlands; I have heard why you agreed to meet, and I've come to listen to what you say and perhaps offer some comment or advice." They invited him in.

"They reminded one another what they had experienced from the behaviour of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and agreed that they felt insecure from the possibility that he and his supporters might make an attack upon them.

"Having discussed the issue, one of them, said to have been Abū al-Bakhtārī b. Hishām, suggested, "Put him in irons and gaol him; then wait for him to have the same fate that befell poets like him before, such as Zuhayr and al-Nābirī. He would die as they had."

"But the Najdi sheikh objected, saying "No; that's not a good plan. If you do shut him up, news of him will get right past the door you have locked on him and reach his supporters. They will promptly attack you and release him and then increase in numbers until they overcome you. That's not a good idea."

"They consulted further and one suggested, "Let's exile him from our territory. Once he has gone, we shouldn't care where he ends up or what happens to him. So long as he is gone, we'll be rid of him and we'll be able to restore our affairs as they were before."

"But the Najdi sheikh observed, "No, that's not a good idea for you. You know how sweet his talk is, and his reasoning, and how he convinces others of his message. If you do that you'd have no security against him going to live with some Arab tribe and using his speech and discourse to get them to follow him. Then he would lead them against you and perhaps defeat (or) dispossess you and do what they like with you. No, think of something else."

"Abū Jahl b. Hishām then said, "I have an idea that hasn't occurred to you yet."

"What is it, Abū al-Ḥakam?" they asked him.

"He replied, "I think we should select one young man from each tribe, and someone who is strong, of excellent lineage and reputation as a leader. We should give each one a sharp sword and they would go to him and use the swords to strike him in unison. They would kill him and we would then be rid of him. If they do this, his blood will be spread over all the tribes. And the Banū ‘Abd Manāf will not be able to do battle against them all. So they will accept blood money which we can pay them.”

“‘The Najdī sheikh commented, ‘What he says is right. This is the right idea, and no other.’

“Having agreed upon this, the assembly broke up.

“Gabriel then came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and told him, ‘Do not sleep tonight on the bed you usually use.’

“When it was fully dark that night the Quraysh men gathered outside his door, waiting for him to sleep so they could attack him. Having seen where they were, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said to ‘Ali b. Abu Talib, ‘Sleep on my bed, wrapping yourself in this green cloak of mine from Ḥadramaut; sleep in it. You’ll not come to any harm from them.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was in the habit of sleeping in that cloak of his.’

This story told by Ibn Ishaq is also related by al-Waqidi, with the chains of authority from ‘A’isha, Ibn ‘Abbās, ‘Ali, Surāqa b. Malik b. Ju’shum and others, the various accounts overlapping and saying much as above.

Ibn Ishaq’s account continues, “Yazid b. Abū Yazid related to me, from Muhammad b. Ka‘b al-Qurrațī, who said, ‘The men having met there at his door, Abū Jahl, who was among them, said, ‘Muḥammad claims that if you follow him you’ll become kings of the Arabs and non-Arabs alike. Then you’ll be given life after death and be provided with gardens like those of the Jordan. If you don’t do that, then, he says, you will be slaughtered, given life after death but be put into hell-fire where you will be burned.’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then picked up a handful of dirt, saying, ‘Yes, I do say that. And you are one of them!’

“Then God took away their sight from them and they could not see him. He began sprinkling the dirt on to their heads while he recited the following verses: ‘Yā sin. By the Qur’aan the wise. You are among those sent forth upon a straight path’ up to the verse ‘We have placed a barrier before them and a barrier behind them, and have covered them over so that they cannot see’ (sūrat Yā Sin; XXXVI, v.3–9). Every single man among them had dirt thrown on his head.

“He then left, and went where he wished.

“Someone who had not been there with these men then arrived and asked, ‘What are you waiting for here?’ They replied, ‘For Muḥammad.’ He commented, ‘God damn you! Muḥammad just came out to you and he did not leave any single one of you without throwing dirt on your head. He then left and went elsewhere. Can’t you see what has happened to you?’

“Each man then placed a hand on his head and found dirt there. Looking closely, they saw ‘Ali on the bed covered in the cloak of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). They stayed there like that until morning; when ‘Ali arose from the bed, they said, ‘By God, what he told us must have been true!’”
Ibn Ishaq continued, “Concerning what they had agreed upon that day, God revealed, among others, the following verses, ‘And when the disbelievers plotted to confine, kill or exile you they made plans; but God makes plans and He is the best planner of all’ (sūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.30).

“And there was the verse, ‘Or do they say he is a poet; we await for him incidents of fate.’ Say: ‘Do await! I with you am one who awaits!’” (sūrat al-Ṭūr; LI, v.30–1).

Ibn Ishaq continued, “And so God gave His permission to His Prophet (ṢAAS) to emigrate.”

Chapter: The emigration of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) from Mecca to Medina accompanied by Abū Bakr “the Trusting”, God be pleased with him.

That event marks the beginning of the Islamic era as was agreed upon by the sahāba, “the Companions”, during the rule of ʿUmar, as we have shown in the biography of ʿUmar, God be pleased with him and with them all.

Al-Bukhārī stated, ʿMāṭar b. al-ṣaʿdī related to us, quoting Rawḥ, quoting Hishām quoting ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “The Prophet (ṢAAS) received his mission when he was 40 years old. He continued in Mecca receiving revelation for 13 years and then was ordered to emigrate. He did so for 10 years, then died at the age of 63.

“His emigration took place in the month of Rabiʿ al-Awwal in the 13th year of his mission, on a Monday.”

Similarly ʿImām ʿAḥmad recounted from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “Your Prophet was born on a Monday, left Mecca on a Monday, first received revelation on a Monday, entered Medina on a Monday and died on a Monday.”

Muḥammad b. Ishaq stated, “Whenever Abū Bakr asked permission from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to emigrate, he would be told, ‘Don’t be in a hurry. God may well give you a companion.’ And Abū Bakr hoped it would be the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and that he was really referring to himself.

“He therefore purchased two camels which he kept and fed at his home to be prepared.”

According to al-Wāqīdī, he paid 800 dirhams for them both.

Ibn Ishaq continued, “A man in whom I have confidence related to me, from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, from ʿAʾisha, mother of the faithful, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would go without fail to Abū Bakr’s house either in the morning or the evening. Eventually that day arrived when God gave the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) permission to emigrate, to leave Mecca and his people there. He came to us that day at midday, a time unusual for him.

“When Abū Bakr saw him, he said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) can only have come at this hour because something has happened.’”
"When he came in, Abū Bakr gave up his couch for him and the Messenger of God (SAAS) sat down. There was no one else in the house except myself and my sister Āsma', daughter of Abū Bakr. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, "Send away anyone else who is with you." Abū Bakr replied, "There are only my two daughters; what can be wrong, I pray you?"

"God has given me permission to leave, to emigrate," he replied.

"As companions then, O Messenger of God?" Abū Bakr asked.

"Yes, as companions," he answered.

A'isha continued, "And, I swear, before that day I never knew anyone who wept for joy until I saw Abū Bakr do so that day.

"He then said, "O Prophet of God, these are two camels I have readied for this."

"They hired ʿAbd Allāh b. Arqāt."

Ibn Ḥishām suggests an alternative name, ʿAbd Allāh b. Urayqīt.

Ibn Ishaq continued, "He was a polytheist, of the Banū al-Dīl b. Bakr, his mother of the Banū Sahm b. ʿAmr. He was to act as their guide on the way and they gave him the two mounts to look after until needed.

"And, as I have been told, no one knew of the departure of the Messenger of God (SAAS) except ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalīb and Abū Bakr, "the Trusting", and his family.

"ʿAlī was ordered to remain behind to return to people the items they had deposited with the Messenger of God (SAAS); anyone in Mecca who had concerns about things they owned would leave them in his care, such was his reputation for honesty and trustworthiness.

"Having decided to leave, the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to the house of Abū Bakr b. Abū Quḥāfa and they made their exit via a window at its rear."

Abū Nuʿaym recounted, through ʿIbrahīm b. Saʿd, from Muḥammad b. Ishaq, who said, "I have been informed that as he was about to leave Mecca as an emigrant to Medina for God, he said, "Praise be to God who created me when I had been nothing. O God, protect me from earthly terrors, misfortunes and mishaps in the nights and days to come. O God, accompany me on my journey and keep my family safe. Bless me in what You have granted me and humble me before Yourself. Raise me to the finest qualities in my character. Endear me to You, O Lord. And do not entrust (my fate) to people."

"O Lord of the frail, you are my Lord. I take refuge in Your noble visage before which the heavens and the earth rejoice, the dark shadows dissipate and the troubles of those who are first and those who are last are made right. (I pray) that You spare me your anger and discontent. I appeal to You not to cease your favours and to spare me your sudden wrath, removal of your favour and all your anger. I will repay as best I can all your favours to me. And there is no power nor strength except in You.""

Ibn Ishaq continued, "They then made their way to a cave on Mt. Thawr, south of Mecca, which they entered. Abū Bakr ordered his son ʿAbd Allāh to spend the day listening to what people were saying about them and then to bring them whatever news there might be. And he told 'Āmir b. Fuhayra, his freed-man, to tend his flock during the day and then to bring them to the cave in the evening.

"'Abd Allah b. Abū Bakr would spend the day among Quraysh listening to their planning and what they were saying regarding the Messenger of God (SAAS) and Abū Bakr. He would then visit them in the evening and report to them.

"'Āmir b. Fuhayra would tend his flock in the pasturage of the people of Mecca and in the evening he would bring them to Abī Bakr who would milk and slaughter them. When next morning 'Abd Allāh, Abū Bakr's son would leave them to return to Mecca, 'Āmir would follow him down with the flock in order to efface his footprints."

The following account from al-Bukhari will give evidence of this. Ibn Jarir related from various sources that the Messenger of God (SAAS) preceded Abū Bakr in leaving for the cave on Mt. Thawr and that he told 'Ali to guide his (Abū Bakr's) path to join him, and that he did so on the way. This account is strange and contradicts what is well known, that they travelled together.

Ibn Ishaq continued, "Each evening Asmā', daughter of Abū Bakr, may God be pleased with her, would bring them food to restore them."

"Asmā' said, 'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) and Abū Bakr had left, a group of Quraysh, including Abn Jahl b. Hishm, came and stood at Abū Bakr's door. I went out to them and they asked, "Where is your father, O Daughter of Abū Bakr?" I replied that I did not know, whereupon Abī Jahl, an evil and uncouth man, raised his hand and slapped me so hard on the cheek that my earring fell off. They then left.'

"Yahyā b. 'Abbād b. 'Abd Allah b. al-Zubayr related to me that his father told him, that his grandmother Asmā' said, 'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) left, along with Abū Bakr, the latter took all his cash with him, some 5,000 or 6,000 dirhams. My grandfather, Abū Quhāfa, whose sight was gone, came in thereafter and commented, 'I swear, he's put you all into some difficulty by taking his money with him.'"

"I replied, "No, father, he left us plenty." I then took some stones and placed them in a space in the house where my father used to put his money and placed a cloth over them. Then I took my grandfather's hand and told him, "Put your hand on this money." He did so and said, "Not bad at all. He did well by leaving you all this. This will be enough money for you.""

"'But in fact he had left us nothing; I just wanted to reassure the old man.'"

Ibn Hishām stated, "A certain scholar told me that al-Ḥasan b. Abū al-Ḥasan al-Ḍārī said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) and Abū Bakr, went to the cave at night. Abū Bakr went in first and searched the cave to ensure there were no snakes or lions inside, thus using himself to protect the Messenger of God (SAAS).""
The line of authorities here is incomplete at both ends.

Abū al-Qāsim al-Baghawī stated, “Dā'ūd b. 'Amr al-Ḍabbī related to us, quoting Nāfi' b. Umar al-Jumaḥī, from Ibn Abū Mulayka, that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) left with Abū Bakr for Mt. Thawr, Abū Bakr would first position himself ahead and then at the rear. The Prophet (ṢAAS) asked him why this was and he replied, ‘When I’m behind you I’m afraid you’ll be attacked from the front, and when I’m ahead of you I fear you’ll be attacked from behind.’

“When they finally reached the cave on Mt. Thawr Abū Bakr said, ‘Stay where you are until I put my hand inside and examine it; if there is some creature there it will attack me before you.’

“Nāfi' said, ‘I have heard that there was a crevice inside the cave in which Abū Bakr placed his foot, fearing that some creature might emerge and harm the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).’”

This tradition is incomplete in its chain of authorities. But we have given several other testimonials for it in our biography of Abū Bakr, “the Trusting”, God be pleased with him.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “The ḥāfiẓ Abū 'Abd Allāh informed us, quoting Abū Bakr Ahmad b. Ishāq, that Mūsā b. al-Ḥasan narrated that Ābbād related, quoting 'Affān b. Muslim, quoting al-Sārī b. Yaḥyā, quoting Muḥammad b. Sirīn, as follows, ‘Some men were talking during the period of the rule of Ṣumar and apparently expressed their preference for Ṣumar over Abū Bakr. This reached Ṣumar and he commented, “By God, a single night or a single day of Abū Bakr would be better than the whole clan of Ṣumar! On the night when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went to the cave with Abū Bakr, the latter would walk in front for a while, then walk behind. Eventually the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) realized this and asked, ‘Abū Bakr, why do you walk behind for a while, then go and walk ahead?’ He replied, ‘O Messenger of God, I think of pursuit and walk behind you, but then I think of ambush and so walk ahead of you.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then asked, ‘You mean if something happened you’d rather it be to you than to me?’ ‘Yes indeed, by Him who sent you with the truth,’ he replied.

“‘When they reached the cave Abū Bakr said, ‘Stay outside, O Messenger of God, until I make sure the cave is safe for you.’ He went inside and made sure it was safe, but then remembered he had not checked out the crevice. So he said, ‘Stay were you are, O Messenger of God, while I check again.’ He then went back in, made sure the crevice was safe and said, ‘Come on down, O Messenger of God.’ And he did so.’

“‘Umar then commented, “By Him who holds my soul in His hand, that night was better than the whole clan of Ṣumar!”’

Al-Bayhaqi related this comment from Ṣumar through a different chain. In that account the wording is “Abū Bakr sometimes walked ahead of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and at others behind him, sometimes to the left and at others to the right.” That account also states that when the feet of the Messenger of God (SAAS) became sore, Abû Bakr would carry him on his back. Also, that when he went into the cave he blocked up all the crevices except one, and over that he placed his heel. Snakes then struck at him and his tears ran down. Seeing this, the Messenger of God (SAAS) told him, “Don’t be sad; God is with us!”

There are some strange and unsatisfactory aspects to the course of this anecdote.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “The hâfiz Abû ‘Abd Allâh and Abû Sa‘îd b. Abû ‘Amr informed us as follows, ‘Abû al-’Abbâs al-’Asamm related to us, quoting ‘Abbâs al-Dûrî, quoting Aswad b. Āmir Shâdhân quoting Isrâ’il, from al-’Aswad, from Jundub b. Abî Allah, who said, “Abû Bakr was with the Messenger of God (SAAS) in the cave when he hit his hand on a rock. He then spoke the following verse:

‘You are nothing but a finger that bleeds; what happened to you was in God’s cause!’”

Imâm Aḥmad stated, “Abd al-Razzâq related to us, quoting Ma‘mar, quoting ‘Uthmân al-Jazârî, that Miqṣam, the freed-man of Ibn ‘Abbâs, told him that Ibn ‘Abbâs made the following comment about the verse in the Qur’ân. ‘And when those who disbelieve were scheming to imprison you’ (sûrat al-‘Anfâl; VIII, v.30). He said, ‘Quraysh were engaged in discussion one night in Mêcca and some of them suggested, “In the morning imprison him in shackles.” They were referring to the Prophet (SAAS). Others of them said, “No; kill him!” Yet others said, “No, exile him!” God made his Prophet (SAAS), aware of that and so ‘Alî spent the night on his bed, while the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to the cave. The polytheists spent the night watching ‘Alî, thinking him to be the Prophet (SAAS). When morning came they attacked him and when they saw ‘Alî, God turned their trickery against them. They said, “Where is that master of yours?” He replied, “I don’t know.”

“They followed his tracks, but these became too confused for them in the mountains. They climbed on up the mountain and passed by the cave but saw a spider’s web over its opening. They said, “If anyone had gone inside here, the spider would not have put a web over its opening.” And so he stayed there three nights.’”

The chain of authorities for this is good; it is one of the best accounts given relating to the spider’s web over the mouth of the cave, which was God’s protection for His Messenger (SAAS).

saw the spider’s web over the mouth of the cave, they said, “No one went in here.”

“The Prophet (SAAS) was at the time standing there praying while Abū Bakr watched. Abū Bakr then said to the Prophet (SAAS), “Those are your people searching for you. It’s not for myself I am sad, but because I might see something terrible happen to you.”

“The Prophet (SAAS) replied, “Abū Bakr, don’t be afraid. God is with us.””

This tradition from Hasan is incomplete, but it is good as textual evidence. It includes, however, the praying of the Prophet (SAAS) in the cave; it was his custom to pray when something saddened him.

This same source, I mean Abū Bakr Ahmad b. ‘Alī al-‘Adi, related from ‘Amr al-Nāqīd, from Khalaf b. Tamīm, from Muḥāfaẓ, from his father, from Abū Hurayra, that Abū Bakr said to his son, “Son, if something should happen among the people, then go to the cave where I and the Messenger of God (SAAS) took refuge. Stay there and you will find sustenance come to you both morning and night.”

A poet composed the following line:

“David’s web” is what protected the occupant of the cave, and glory goes to the spider.”

It is also said that two doves made their nest over its entrance. Al-Ṣarṣārī composed the following line on that:

“The spider roofed it over with his web, and the dove having eggs remained at the entrance.”

The hadith dealing with this was related by the hāfiz Ibn ‘Asākir, through Yāḥyā b. Muḥammad b. Sā‘īd, quoting ‘Amr b. ‘Alī, who said that ‘Awn b. ‘Amr Abū ‘Amr al-Qaysī, nicknamed ‘Uwāyn, related to us that Abū Mus‘ab al-Makki said, “I am aware of Zayd b. Aqrām, al-Mughīra b. Shu‘ba and Anas b. Mālik as relating that on the night the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to the cave, God gave an order to a tree that emerged right in front of him and hid him. God also sent the spider that made a web between them, so hiding the face of the Messenger of God (SAAS). He then commanded two wild doves which came fluttering down and alighted between the spider and the tree. Now the young warriors of Quraysh approached, one from each of the tribes there, carrying sticks, bows and staves. When they got to within 200 yards of the Messenger of God (SAAS) the guide, who was Sūrāq b. Mālik b. Ju‘shum al-Mudlajī, said, ‘That’s the rock; but I don’t know where he placed his foot.’ The young warriors commented, ‘You’ve not made a mistake since tonight began.’ When morning came the guide told them to look in the cave. He went ahead of the rest until they were some 50 yards away from the Prophet (SAAS), and then there were the two doves. The guide came back and they asked him, ‘What prevented you from looking in the cave?’ ‘I saw two wild doves at its entrance’, he said, ‘so I knew there was no one inside.’
"The Messenger of God (SAAS) heard him and knew that God had used the doves to save him and Abu Bakr. He then invoked a blessing upon them, and God brought them down to the holy shrine where, as you know, they proliferated."

This is a strange hadith to come from this source. The hafiz Abû Nu'aym related it from an account from Muslim b. Ibrâhim and others, from 'Awn b. 'Amr, he known as 'Uwayn, with chains of authority similar to these. That account states that all the doves of Mecca are descended from these two.

Also in this hadith is the information that the tracker who guided the warriors was Surâqa b. Mâlik al-Mudlaji.

Al-Wâqidi related from Mûsâ b. Muhammed b. Ibrâhim, from his father, that the one who tracked for them was Kurz b. 'Alqama.

My own comment is that it is likely that they both followed the trail. But God knows best.

God Almighty said, "Even if you do not aid him, God did so when those who disbelieved expelled him, he being the second of two, in the cave. (Therein) he said to his companion, 'Do not be sad; God is with us.' And so God sent down tranquillity upon him and aided him with troops you do not see, putting down very low the words of those who disbelieved; the words of God are the highest, for God is powerful, wise" (sûrat al-Tawba or al-Bara'a; IX, v.40).

Reprimanding those who refrained from engaging in battle on the side of the Messenger of God (SAAS) the Almighty stated, "Even if you do not aid him." God will assist him, be his helper and ally. As He did help him, "when those who disbelieved expelled him" from his people in Mecca, in flight and accompanied by no one but his friend and Companion Abû Bakr.

Therefore He said, "being the second of two, when they were in the cave" where they stayed for three days until the search for them died down.

This was because when the polytheists lost track of the two men, as recounted above, they went off in all directions searching for them. They offered 100 camels to anyone who might turn in both or even one of them. They followed their tracks until they became confused. The tracker working for Quraysh was Surâqa b. Mâlik b. Ju'ashum, as mentioned above. They climbed the mountain where the two men were and went past the mouth of the cave. Their feet would move straight across the mouth of the cave without seeing the two men, God protecting them this way.

As Imam Ahmad stated, quoting 'Affân, quoting Hammâm, quoting Thâbit, from Anas b. Mâlik, that Abû Bakr told him, "I said to the Prophet (SAAS), while we were inside the cave, 'If any one of them were to glance down at his feet he would see us below them!'"

"He replied, 'Abû Bakr, how would you regard the safety of two people who had God as their third companion?'"

Al-Bukhârî and Muslim gave this hadith in both their sahih collections, from Hammâm.
Some biographers state that when Abū Bakr said that the Prophet (SAAS) replied, “If they were to come to us from here, we would leave that way.”

Abū Bakr then saw that the cave had opened up on its other side and it was now connected to the sea, and there was a boat tied up beside it.

This tradition is not objectionable in the sense of this being beyond the divine power. However, it does not have a chain of authorities that is strong; nor is it weak. We cannot assert anything purely by ourselves. We do, however, stand by tradition considered authentic and with chains of authority that are good. But God knows best.

The ḥāfīz Abū Bakr al-Bazzār stated, “Al-Fadl b. Sahl related to us, quoting Khalaf b. Tamīm, quoting Mūsā b. Muṭṭār al-Qurashi, from his father, from Abū Hurayra, that Abū Bakr said to his son, ‘If some disturbance should break out among the people, go to the cave where you saw me hide with the Messenger of God (SAAS). Stay there and you will receive sustenance morning and evening.’”

Al-Bazzār then said, “We know of no one else but Khalaf b. Tamīm who related this hadīth.”

My own comment is that Mūsā b. Muṭṭār quoted here is a weak source of low regard; Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn gave the lie to him, and traditions from him are not accepted.

Yūnus b. Bukayr stated, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq, that Abū Bakr, having entered the cave and behaved as related, and after the matter concerning Suraqa, which is still to be told, spoke some poetry, a part of which follows:

“The Prophet said to reassure me, though I was not concerned, when we were in the dark of the shadows of the cave, Fear nothing, for God is our third, and he has guaranteed to me victory from Him.’”

Abū Nuʿaym related this ode through Ziyād, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq. He quoted it at great length along with another poem. But God knows best about these.

Ibn Lahiʿa related, from Abū al-Aswad, from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) remained in Mecca after the pilgrimage in which the anṣār, ‘the Helpers’, pledged themselves to him, for the remainder of Dhū al-Ḥijja, al-Muharram and Ṣafar.

“Then the polytheists of Quraysh joined together and plotted to kill the Messenger of God (SAAS) or to imprison or exile him. And so God gave him foresight of this and revealed the words, ‘And when those who disbelieved were scheming to imprison you’ (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.30). He then gave orders to ʿAli to sleep on his bed while he and Abū Bakr left. Next morning Quraysh went off searching for them everywhere.’

Mūsā b. Quba related it thus in his work on the military campaigns and stated that they went to the cave by night.
We also gave above a statement regarding this from Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, quoting Ibn Hishām.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Yaḥyā b. Bukayr related to him, quoting al-Layth quoting ʿUqayl, quoting Ibn Shihāb, who said that ʿĀʾishah stated, ‘I have no awareness of my parents not practising the religion (Islam); and not a day passed for us without the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) visiting us at both ends of the day, in the morning and the evening. When the Muslims suffered harassment ʿAbū Bakr left as an emigrant towards Abyssinia. He went as far as Bark al-Ghimād, where he met Ibn al-Daghina, the chieftain of the area.’”

She then recounted how he brought ʿAbū Bakr back to Mecca and gave him protection. Her words are similar to our previous account of the migration to Abyssinia up to and including ʿAbū Bakr’s statement, “I therefore give back to you your protection and resign myself to the protection of God.”

She (ʿĀʾishah) stated, “At that time the Prophet (ṢAAS) was at Mecca. He told the Muslims, ‘I have been shown the place of your emigration; it has palm-groves between two rocky tracts.’ These are the Ḥarratān.

“And so some people did leave for Medina, and some who had left for Abyssinia came back and went to Medina. ʿAbū Bakr himself made preparations to leave for Medina. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, ‘Take it slowly; I am hoping I will be permitted to leave.’ ʿAbū Bakr asked, ‘You really do have hopes of that?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied.

“Thereafter ʿAbū Bakr restrained himself for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), so that he could accompany him. He stabled two camels at his home, feeding them on mimosa leaves, crushed and mixed leaves, that is, for four months. Some, however, say he gave them fodder for six months.”

Ibn Shihāb stated, “Urwa reported that ʿĀʾishah said, ‘One day, in the heat of noon, we were sitting in ʿAbū Bakr’s house when someone told him, “Here comes the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), heavily veiled, at a time he doesn’t usually come!” ʿAbū Bakr commented, “I swear, he can only have come at this time for one thing!”’

“ʿĀʾishah went on, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arrived and asked to come in and was invited to do so. When he entered he said, “Ask everyone to leave.” ʿAbū Bakr responded, “But they are all like your own family, O Messenger of God.”’

“He explained, “I have been given permission to leave.” “As companions, then!” said ʿAbū Bakr. “Yes,” he replied.

“ʿAbū Bakr then said, “Do take one of these two mounts of mine.” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, “I’ll pay you for it.”’

“ʿĀʾishah went on, ‘So we quickly prepared some equipment for them and put some provisions in a leather bag. ʿAsmāʾ, ʿAbū Bakr’s daughter, cut off a piece of her girdle to tie up the mouth of the bag; she was thereafter known as “she of the two girdles”.

“Then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went with ʿAbū Bakr to a cave on Mt. Thawr, where they stayed for three nights. Also with them during the night was 'Abd Allah, Abū Bakr's son. He was a bright and intelligent lad and would leave them at dawn and be down among Quraysh by morning, as if he had spent the night there. He went back to them as soon as night fell with all the information he had gleaned of plans against them. Āmir b. Fuhayra, Abū Bakr's freed-man, cared for a flock of sheep, which he would bring them after night fell; they would eat foods made with the milk they provided. Before dawn Āmir b. Fuhayra would call the flock together and leave; he did this each one of those three nights.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) and Abū Bakr hired a man of the Banū al-Dīl, from the Banū 'Abd b. 'Adī, a skilled guide, a khirrit. This man, though a follower of the faith of the Quraysh polytheists, had sworn an oath to the family of al-'Āṣ b. Wā'il al-Sahmī. They had thus placed their trust in him and handed over to him their two riding camels and made an arrangement with him to meet at the cave on Mt. Thawr three nights thereafter; he was to bring their mounts on the following morning. This guide and Āmir b. Fuhayra did set off with the two men, conducting them along the coastal route.'"

Ibn Shihāb stated, "'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Mālik al-Mudlijī, he being the son of Surāqā's nephew, related that his father told him that he heard Surāqā b. Mālik b. Jušham say, 'Messengers from the Quraysh polytheists came to us putting a price on the head of either the Messenger of God (SAAS) or Abū Bakr for anyone who killed or captured either.

"While I was sitting at a meeting being held by my people, the Banū Mudlijī, one of their men arrived and stood there, while we sat, and said, 'Surāqā, I've just seen some human forms in the distance towards the coast, and I think them to be Muḥammad and his companions.'"

"Surāqā said, 'I knew they would be them, but I told him, 'They are not them. You saw so-and-so and so-and-so whom we saw leave with our own eyes.'"

"I remained for a while there in that meeting, then got up and went inside. I told my servant girl to bring over my mare which was behind a hillock and to keep it there for me. Then I took my spear and went out the rear of the house. I made marks with its head on the ground and kept its shaft down low until I reached my horse. I rode off on it and it took me ahead until I drew close to them. Suddenly my horse stumbled and I came off. I scolded her and she stood up, though scarcely able to pull her legs out. When standing upright there was dust coming up like smoke into the sky from the impression left by her legs. Again I sought guidance from them whether or not I should harm them. It came out as I did not want. But I got back on my horse, disobeying the arrows.

"My horse drew me ever nearer to them until I could hear the Messenger of God (SAAS) reciting, without looking around, while Abū Bakr looked around constantly. Then two of my horse's legs sank deep into the ground, right up to the knees, and I was again thrown. I scolded her and she stood up, though scarcely able to pull her legs out. When standing upright there was dust coming up like smoke into the sky from the impression left by her legs. Again I sought advice from the divining arrows and it again came out against my wish.

"I called out to them, reassuring them, and they stopped. I rode my horse up to them, it having dawned on me that my being kept from them was a sign that the Messenger of God (SAAS) was going to prevail. I told him, “Your people have put a price on your head!” and I related to them what people wanted to do with them. Then I offered them provisions, but they would not accept anything from me and told me to leave them alone. I asked him if he would write down a safe conduct for me, and he told Āmir b. Fuhayra who did so on a piece of leather. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then left.’”

Muḥammad b. Ishaq related this same story, from al-Zuhri, from Ṭabd al-Raḥmān b. Mālik b. Juṣḥam, from his father, from his uncle Surāqa. However, his account has him seeking advice from the divining arrows when he first left the house, with the arrow telling him what he did not like, that is, that he should not harm the Messenger of God (SAAS). It went on to mention his horse stumbling with him on four different occasions. All that related to his seeking advice from the divining arrows and being told what he did not like— that he should not harm him. It has him reassuring them and asking for a document that would be a token from the Messenger of God (SAAS). The account states, “He wrote a document for me on a bone, or a scrap of leather, or a scrap of cloth.” He also tells how he went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) when the latter was at al-Jīrāna on his way back from Ṭā’if and that he said, “Today is one of keeping trust and of goodness; let him come near.” The account ends, “So I approached him and accepted Islam.”

Ibn Ḥishām stated, “The man relating this was Ṭabd al-Rahmān b. al-Ḥārith b. Mālik b. Juṣḥam.

“And what he said was correct.

“After Surāqa returned, whenever he met one of the pursuers, he would turn them back, saying, ‘You’ve finished in this direction.’

“When it was known that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had arrived in Medina, Surāqa began telling people what he knew and had witnessed relating to him, and about what had happened to his horse. He gained some notoriety for this, and the leaders of Quraysh were afraid he would bring them discredit, and that that would be the cause of many people accepting Islam. Surāqa was the leader of the Banū Mudlij. Abū Jahl, God damn him, composed the following verses to them,

“O Banū Mudlij, I fear your fool Surāqa misleading about Muḥammad’s victory. Take care that he not divide you so you become split, after former glory and leadership.”

Surāqa spoke the following in answer to Abū Jahl’s poetry:

“O Abū al-Ḥakam, had you but been witness to what happened to my horse when its legs sank, You would have been amazed, and not doubted that Muḥammad is a prophet and a proof; so who can oppose him?
Take action, have your people leave him alone, for I think that some day his qualities will be clear to us.
In a matter you would wish to win, for all the people, onogether will make peace with him.”

Al-Umawi gave this poetry in his work on the military campaigns with a chain of authorities from Aḥa Ḥishāq. Aḥu Nuʿaym related it with a chain through Ziyād, from Ibn Ḥishāq. His account gives more poetry from Aḥu Jahl with verses that include overt disbelief.

Al-Bukhārī stated, with a chain of authorities back to Ibn Shihāb, who is quoted as saying, “Urwa b. al-Zubayr informed me that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) met al-Zubayr in a caravan of Muslims who were merchants coming in from Syria, and that al-Zubayr clothed the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and Abū Bakr in white garments.

“The Muslims in Medina heard of the departure of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) from Mecca and would go each morning out to the rocky lava plain to wait for him, until the heat of noon would force them back.

“One day after they had returned to their homes, having waited a long time, one of the Jews went up on top of one of their forts for some reason, and he saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his Companions dressed in white emerging through the haze. The Jew felt compelled to shout out, ‘O Arabs, here’s your great man you’ve been awaiting!’

“The Muslims leapt for their weapons and met up with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) beside the rocky lava plain. He turned off, along with them, to the right to where the Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf were; this was Monday in the month of Rabīʿ al-Awwal.

“Abū Bakr stood up before the group, while the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sat silently. The anṣār who had come and who had not before seen the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) began greeting Abū Bakr. But then the sun began striking the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and Abū Bakr went over and shielded him from it with his cloak. And so everyone then knew which one was the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) remained there with the Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf for some ten nights and founded the mosque ‘whose foundations were based on piety’ and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) prayed there.

“He then rode upon his camel, the people walking beside him, until it knelt down at the mosque in Medina of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) where that day some Muslim men were praying. It was a drying shed for dates and belonged to Suhayl and Sahl, two orphan youths in the care of As'ad b. Zurara. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, when his camel knelt, 'This, if God wills it, will be the house.'

'He then asked to see the two youths and negotiated with them over the drying shed so that it could become a mosque. They replied, 'No, we will give it to you, Messenger of God!' But the Messenger of God (SAAS) refused to accept it from them as a gift and did buy it. He then built a mosque.

'The Messenger of God (SAAS) then set about bringing up the bricks for building it, along with the rest of the Muslims, saying as he did so the verse,

'This is not a load from Khaybar; this, O Lord, is more righteous more pure.'

'And also:

‘No matter; the wages for this are those of the other world; be merciful, O God, on the Helpers and the Emigrants.’

“He quoted the verse of one of the Muslim men whose name is unknown to me.
Ibn Shihab said, 'We are not informed in the hadith literature that the Messenger of God (SAAS) quoted any full line of poetry other than these.'"

This is the text as given by al-Bukhari; only he, and not Muslim, gives it and he does so with testimony from other sources; his text, however, does not give the story of Umm Ma'bad, the Khuzi woman.

We will report here from the beginning, as is appropriate.

Imam Ahmad stated, ‘Amr b. Muhammad Abi Sa'id al-Anqazi related to us that Isra'il related to him, from Abu Ishaq, from al-Bara' b. Azib, who said, ‘Abu Bakr bought from Azib a horse's saddle, for 13 dirhams, telling him, “Tell al-Bara' to take it to my house.” He replied, “No; not until you tell us what you did when the Messenger of God (SAAS) emigrated in your company.”’

Abu Bakr stated, “We set off and travelled fast, by day and night until midday approached and was upon us. I strained my eyes to see some shade where we could shelter. I saw a rock and hurried down to it, and some shadow remained.
I smoothed out a place for the Messenger of God (SAAS), and laid down a piece of leather for him, saying, ‘Do lie down, O Messenger of God.’ And he did so.

'I then left to see if I could locate any of the pursuers. I came upon a herds-man and asked him, 'Who employs you, lad?' He mentioned the name of a Quraysh man that I recognized. I asked him, 'Do you have any milk in your flock?' 'O yes,' he replied. 'Will you give me some?' I requested. He agreed and I told him to get some. He tethered a ewe and at my request he wiped the dirt off its udders and his hands. I had with me a container with a cloth over its mouth. He poured a little milk for me and I poured it out into a cup until it was all cool. I then went over to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and gave it to him; he was awake. I asked him to drink, and he did so until I was content. I then asked, 'Should we continue with the travel?' And we left again, our pursuers still after us.

"But the only one of them to catch up with us was Surāqā b. Mālik b. Juṣḥam, riding a horse. I asked, 'O Messenger of God, are our pursuers catching up?' 'Do not be worried, God is with us,' he replied.

"He caught up with us until there was only a spear's throw or two - or the words may have been two or three spear-throws - and I said, 'O Messenger of God, this pursuer is gaining on us!' And I wept. He asked, 'Why are you crying?' I replied, 'It's not for me I'm crying, but for you!'

"The Messenger of God (ṣaə̄s) said a prayer about him, saying, 'O Lord, protect us from him, as You wish.' The legs of his horse then sank down to its belly in firm ground and he fell off, saying, 'O Muḥammad, I know this is your work; say a prayer to God for me to save me from my plight! I swear I will mislead the pursuers behind me. This is my quiver; take an arrow from it, for you will pass by my camels and sheep at so-and-so, and you can take of them whatever you want.'

"The Messenger of God (ṣaə̄s) replied, 'I don't need them.' But he did say a prayer for him and he was released and returned to his people.

"The Messenger of God (ṣaə̄s) and I went further on and eventually reached Medina where people came out to meet him. They appeared on the roads and roofs and servants and young people thronged the streets, saying, 'God is Great! The Messenger of God (ṣaə̄s) has come! Muḥammad is here!'

"The people vied for the honour of having him stay with them. The Messenger of God (ṣaə̄s) therefore said, 'Tonight I will stay with the Banū al-Najjār who are related by blood to 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib, to honour them.' Next morning he was where he had been ordered to be.'

Al-Barā' said, "The first of the Emigrants to come to us was Muṣ'ab b. Ḥumayr, a brother of the 'Abd al-Dār. Then came Ibn Umm Makkūm, the blind, one of the Banū Fihr, followed by Ḥumar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, along with 20 riders. We asked them what had happened to the Messenger of God (ṣaə̄s), and they replied that he was coming later. And eventually he and Abī Bakr did arrive."

Al-Barā' went on, "The Messenger of God (ṣaə̄s) did not arrive until after I had recited chapters from al-muṣaabāl."

The compilers of both saḥīh collections include this account, from Isra'il, without the comment of al-Barā', that is, "The first of the Emigrants". Muslim is alone in giving this, and he related it through Isra'il.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, "The Messenger of God (ṣaə̄s) stayed for three nights in the cave along with Abū Bakr. Having lost knowledge of his whereabouts Quraysh offered a price of 100 camels to anyone who would return him. After the three nights, when the hue and cry had diminished, the man they had hired brought them their camels along with one for himself. Abū Bakr's daughter Aṣmā' also arrived with provisions in a leather table-cloth for them. But she forgot to tie it up and when they were about to depart she came out to tie it up but had no cord. So she untied her girdle to make a cord of it which she used to attach it. She used then to be called, 'she of the two girdles'."

Ibn Ishäq stated, "Abū Bakr brought up the two mounts and offered the best of them to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and asked him to mount the camel. But the latter responded, 'I couldn't ride a camel that I don't own.' Abū Bakr told him, 'But please consider it yours'. 'No,' he replied, 'but what price did you pay for it?' He told him and the Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, 'Well, I'll take it for that.' 'It's yours,' Abū Bakr told him."

Al-Waqidi related, with full chains of authorities, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) took the camel called al-Qaṣwâ. He also said, "Abū Bakr had bought both camels for 800 dirhams."

Ibn 'Asskir related through Abū Usāma, from Hishām, from his father from Ā'isha, who said, "(The camel he chose was) al-Jad'a."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "And so they rode off; Abū Bakr mounted Ā'mir b. Fuhayra, his freed-man, behind himself to serve them both on the way."

"I was told that Āsmā' said, 'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) departed with Abū Bakr, a number of Quraysh men came to us, including Abī Jahl'". Ibn Ishaq then related how Abī Jahl struck her so hard on the cheek that he knocked off an earring, as told above.

"She went on, 'We remained for three nights without knowledge of the whereabouts of the Messenger of God (SAAS) until a man of the jinn, a spirit-man, arrived from the lower parts of Mecca, singing verses of Arabic songs. People followed him, listening to his voice without seeing him. Eventually he came out to the upper parts of Mecca, reciting,

'God, Lord of all men, awarded His very best reward to two Companions who stayed at the tents of Umm Ma'bad.
They stayed there in good will, and then left; and lucky is he who becomes the Companion of Muhammad Their girl's position brings credit to the Banū Ka'b, and her sitting there watching for the believers.'"

"Āsmā' said, 'When we heard what he said we knew where the Messenger of God (SAAS) was headed, towards Medina.'"

Ibn Ishaq said, "They were four in number; the Messenger of God (SAAS), Abū Bakr, Ā'mir b. Fuhayra, freed-man of Abū Bakr, and Ṭābūn Allāh b. Arqat. That is what Ibn Ishaq states, but it is well known that the name of the fourth was Ṭābūn Allāh b. Urayqīt al-Dālī who at that time was still a polytheist."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "When their guide, Ṭābūn Allāh b. Arqat, led them off, he took them down to the lower part of Mecca and from there along the coast, crossing over the route below Usfān. He then took them along the lower parts of Amaj, then crossed the route after passing Qudayd, then from there across al-Kharrār and Thaniyyat al-Marra to Liqf. He guided them past the Liqf well, then down to the Mijāj well and so to Marjah Mijāj, then down again to Marjah Dhū al-ʿAḍwayn and to the Dhū Kashr valley and so to al-Jadājid and al-Ajr. Then he took them along Dhū Salam of the Aḍrā valley, to the well at Tīḥin, then past al-ʿAbabid, across al-Qaḥa, down to al-ʿArj. One of their mounts was falling behind, so a man of Aslam called Aws b. Hajr mounted the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on a camel called Ibn al-Radaʿ and led him into Medina; he sent with him a youth named Masāʾūd b. Hunayda. Then their guide from al-ʿArj took them to Thaniyya al-ʿAḍir on the right side of Rakība; according to Ibn Hishām this place is known as Thaniyya al-Ghāʾir. Then the took them down the Rīm valley and so to Qubāʾ, to the Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf. It was now Monday, the 12th of Rabiʿ al-Awwal and the heat was extreme, the sun almost having reached its zenith.”

Abū Nuʿaym mentioned, through al-Waqidī, approximately these same locations, though there is a discrepancy in some. God knows best.

Abū Nuʿaym stated that Abū Hāmid b. Jabala related to him that Muḥammad b. Ishāq quoted from al-Sarrāj, who quoted from Muḥammad b. Ubāda b. Mūsā al-ʾIjlī from his brother Mūsā b. Ubāda, from ʿAbd Allah b. Sayyār, from Iyās b. Malik b. al-Aws al-Aslamī, who quoted his father as saying, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) emigrated along with Abū Bakr, they passed by a camel of ours at al-Juhfa. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked, ‘Who owns this camel?’ ‘A man from Aslam,’ he was told. The Prophet (ṢAAS) turned to Abū Bakr, who commented, ‘May you be safe, God willing!’ The Prophet (ṢAAS) asked the man, ‘What’s your name?’ ‘Masāʾūd,’ he replied. The Prophet (ṢAAS) again turned to Abū Bakr, who commented, ‘May you be happy. God willing!’”

The account goes on, “My father then went to him and carried him on his way on a camel called Ibn al-Radaʿ.”

I would comment that previously we learned from Ibn ʿAbbās that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) left Mecca on a Monday and entered Medina on a Monday. It is clear that there was a period of 15 days between his departure from Mecca and his arrival in Medina. This is because he spent three nights in the cave on Mt. Thawr, and then took the coastal road which is further than the main route.

On his way he passed by Umm Maʿbad, daughter of Kaʿb b. Khuzayma. Ibn Hishām stated, “Yūnus quoted Ibn Ishāq as saying that her name was ʿĀṭika, daughter of Khalaf b. Maʿbad b. Rabiʿa b. Aṣram.

“Al-ʿUmawi, however, said that she was ʿĀṭika, daughter of Tabīʿ, an ally of Banu Munqidh b. Rabīʿa b. Aṣram b. Ṣanbis b. Ḥarām b. Khaysa b. Kaʿb b. ʿAmr. This woman had sons named Maʿbad, Naḍra and Ḥunayda, all children of Abū Maʿbad. His name was Aktham b. ʿAbd al-ʿUzzā b. Maʿbad b. Rabīʿa b. Aṣram b. Ṣanbis.

37. The passage has a pun on Aslam and ‘safe’, and on Masāʾūd and ‘happy’.
Her story is very well known and related from various paths all confirming one another.

The Story of Umm Ma'bad al-Khuzā‘iyya.

Yunus stated, from Ibn Isḥāq, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) stayed at the tent of Umm Ma'bad, whose name was Ātika, daughter of Khalaf b. Ma'bad b. Rabī‘a b. Āsrām. The travellers wanted a meal served but she said, 'We have no food, no milch-camel and the only ewes we have are in heat.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked to be brought one of her sheep. He wiped its teat with his hand, said a prayer and it gave milk into a tumbler, foaming. He said, 'Drink this, Umm Ma'bad!' She replied, 'No, you drink it; you have more right to it than me.' But he gave it back to her and she did drink it. He then called for another ewe in heat and did the same as before and this time he drank it. He then called for another ewe, did the same and gave it to his guide to drink. Again he did the same, giving it now to Āmir. And then they left.

"The Quraysh men, searching for the Messenger of God (SAAS), eventually came to Umm Ma'bad and asked her about him, saying, 'Have you seen Muhammad who looks so-and-so?' And they described him to her.

"She replied, 'I don't know what you are saying, though a young man did come and get milk from ewes in heat.'

"'That's the one we want,' the Quraysh man told her."

The hafīz Abū Bakr al-Bazzār stated that Muhammad b. Ma'mar related to him from Ya'qūb b. Muḥammad, from 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Uqba b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Jābīr b. 'Abd Allāh, who quoted his father as having related that Jābīr stated, "When the Messenger of God (SAAS) and Abū Bakr left as Emigrants and entered the cave, there was a crevice that Abū Bakr blocked off with his heel until morning, for fear that something might come out at the Messenger of God (SAAS).

"They stayed in the cave for three nights, then left and stayed at the tents of Umm Ma'bad. She sent him the message, 'I see handsome faces; the tribal quarter is better equipped to honour you than I am.'

"That evening, while staying there in her camp, she sent over to them with a young son of hers, a ewe and a broad knife. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'Take back the knife and bring us a farīq, that is a qadah, a bowl. She sent back a message that the ewe had no milk and had no lamb. He said, 'Do send us a bowl.' She brought one and he tapped the ewe on the back and it ruminated, and milk streamed forth. He filled the bowl and drank, gave it to Abū Bakr to drink, took more milk and sent it to Umm Ma'bad.'"

Then al-Bazzār stated, "We know of this anecdote being related only through this one chain. And regarding 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Uqba, the only person we know who quoted from him was Ya'qūb b. Muḥammad, even though his ancestry was well known."
The ḥāfiẓ al-Bayhaqi recounted from a hadīth of Yahyā b. Zakariyyā b. Abū Zaʿīda from Muḥammad b. ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abū Laylā who related it to him, quoting ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. al-‘Āṣbahānī, who said, “I heard ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abū Laylā quote Abū Bakr, ‘the Trusting’, as saying, ‘I left Mecca with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and we reached a bedouin encampment. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) noticed one tent off to one side and went towards it. When we dismounted we found that the only person there was a woman. She said, “O fellow slave of God, I’m just one woman, alone; you should go to our chief if you want hospitality.” He made no response to her, it being evening by then, and a son of hers arrived herding some goats. She told him, “Take these goats over to those two men with this knife and tell them, ‘My mother says that you should slaughter these and eat and feed us too.’”

“When he arrived, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told him, “Take the knife away and bring a bowl.” He replied, “But this ewe has not been with a male and has no milk.” “Go and do it,” he told him. When he had brought back a bowl the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wiped the ewe’s teat and it gave milk, filling the bowl. He then said, “Take this to your mother.” She drank till she was satisfied and the lad returned. Now he told the boy, “Take this ewe away and bring me another.” He did so and then brought a third ewe, did as before, and then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) himself drank.

“We stayed there that night, then left. She used to refer to him as al-Mubārak, “the blessed one”. Her flock multiplied and eventually she brought them all in to Medina. Abū Bakr happened to pass by and he recognized her son and the son said to his mother, “Mother, that’s the man who was with al-Mubārak, ‘the blessed one’. She came over to him and asked, “O fellow slave of God, who was that man with you?” He asked, “You don’t know who he is?” “No, I don’t,” she replied. “He is the Prophet of God,” he told her. “Please, take me in to him,” she asked.

“He did so and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave her food and gifts.”

Ibn ‘Abdān added in his account of this, “She said, ‘Lead me to him.’ And so she came with me and gave to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) some sour cheese and some bedouin goods. And he gave her clothing and gifts in return.”

The account stated, “And I am certain he said, ‘And she accepted Islam.’”

The chain of authorities for this is good.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “This story is similar to that of Umm Maʿbad and it is evident that she is the one referred to here. But God knows best.”

Fuhayra, freed-man of Abū Bakr, and their guide 'Abd Allāh b. Urayqīt al-Laythi, passed by the two tents of Umm Ma'bad al-Khuza'īyya.

"Umm Ma'bad was a good, fearless, strong woman who would sit with her legs drawn up, wrapped in her garment, at the entrance to the tent and give out food and drink. They asked her whether she had any meat or milk they could buy from her. But they obtained none from her and she told them, ‘If we had anything, you would not lack for hospitality, but our people are all out of provisions and we’ve been suffering drought.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) noticed a goat at the side of her tent and said, ‘What about that goat, Umm Ma'bad?’ She replied, ‘She’s a goat left over from the goats after the drought.’ ‘Does she give milk?’ he asked. ‘No, she’s too dried up for that,’ she replied. ‘Would you permit me to milk her?’ he asked. ‘If she has any milk you can,’ she replied.

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) called to the goat and stroked it, speaking God’s name, wiped her teat and again invoked God’s name. Then he called for a vessel large enough to satisfy them, and the goat opened its legs and milk poured out in a copious flow until it was full. He gave (the vessel to) her to drink, and then his Companions and thereafter they all had a second drink. When they were all quenched, he drank too, saying, ‘The one who pours drinks last!’ He put milk in it again, left it with her, and then they departed.

“He went on, ‘Soon her husband, Abū Ma'bad, came home, leading emaciated goats, staggering they were so weak, and their brains scarcely functioning. When he saw the milk, he was amazed and said, ‘Where did this milk come from, Umm Ma'bad? We don’t have a milch-camel and the goat has not been with a male.’ ‘Well, a man who was blessed came past us and seemed from his speech to be such-and-such,’ she replied. ‘Describe him to me; I think he is that man the Quraysh are looking for,’ he told her.

“She replied, ‘I saw him to be a man of evident cleanliness, fine in character, his face handsome, slim in form, his head not too small, elegant and good looking, his eyes large and black, his eyebrows long, his voice deep, very intelligent, his eyelids brown, his brows high and arched, his hair in plaits, his neck long and his beard thick. He gave an impression of dignity when silent and of high intelligence when he talked. His logic was impressive, he was decisive, not trivial, not trite, his ideas like pearls moving on their string. He seemed the most splendid and fine-looking man from a distance and the very best of all from close-by, medium in height, the eye not finding him too tall nor too short. A tree-branch, as it were, between two others, but he was the finest-looking of the three, the best proportioned. He was the centre of his companions’ attention. When he spoke, they listened well, and if he ordered, they hurried to obey, a man well helped, well served, never sullen, never refuted.’

“He – her husband – commented, ‘That, I swear, has to be that man Quraysh are seeking. If I had chanced on him, I would have done my very best to follow him.’
"A voice was heard in Mecca, high up, somewhere between heaven and earth, that people could hear though no one see, reciting the verses,

'God, Lord of all men, awarded His very best reward to two Companions who stayed at the two tents of Umm Ma'bad. They stayed there in good will, and then left; and lucky is he who becomes the Companion of Muḥammad. O Qusayy, God did not withhold from you actions that will not be rewarded, nor leadership? Ask your sister about her goat and bowl; if you were to ask the goat, she would testify. He asked her for a goat without young, and it gave milk for him in plenty, its teat giving foam, So he pledged (with the goat) (milk) for the milker, such that it remained abundant at its commencement and at its completion.'

"Next morning the people, those of Mecca that is, having missed their prophet went to the tents of Umm Ma'bad, trying to catch up with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)."

Ḥassān b. Thabit responded with the verses,

"A people disappointed, having lost their prophet, while those to whom he hurried were pleased, He left a people and their spirits left them, and he took up residence with a people with a light renewed. Are those who mislead people out of blind stupidity equal to those rightly guided by a guide? A prophet, seeing about him what others do not see, reciting the Book of God at every scene. If one day he should speak the words of the unseen, it is corroborated the same day or, at most, the morning of the next. Abū Bakr must be pleased by the pleasure his grandfather enjoys at his accompanying him; whoever pleases God will be happy. Let the place of their woman please the Bānū Ka'b, and her sitting watching for the Muslims."

He stated – 'Abd al-Malik b. Wahb, that is – "I received information that Abū Ma'bad accepted Islam and emigrated to the Prophet (ṢAAS)."

The ḥāfiz Abū Nu'aym related this through 'Abd al-Malik b. Wahb al-Madhjiji, in the same terms. At the end of his account he added, "'Abd al-Malik said, 'I received information that Umm Ma'bad emigrated, accepted Islam, and joined the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).'" Abū Nu'aym, moreover, related this through various routes, from Bakr b. Muḥriz al-Kalbi al-Khuza'q, from his father Muḥriz b. Mahdī, from Ḥarām b.

Hishām b. Ḥ jubaysh b. Khālid, from his father, from his grandfather Ḥ ubays b. Khālid, the Companion of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who stated that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) when forced out of Mecca left there as an Emigrant, along with Abū Bakr, ʿĀmir b. Fuhayra and their guide ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUrayqīṯ al-Laythī. They passed by the tent of Umm Maʿbad, a fearless, strong woman who would sit, legs drawn up and wrapped in her garment, at the entrance to the "leather tent." And he went on to relate the same (introductory material as in the prior account).

He went on, "And I think it was Muhammad b. Ahmad b. ʿAlī b. Makhlad who related to us, quoting Muḥammad b. ʿYūnūs b. Musā, that is al-Kudaymi, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. Yahyā b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz, the freed-man of al-ʿAbbas b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, quoting Muḥammad b. Sulayman b. Salīṭ al-Anṣārī, quoting his father, from his father Salīṭ al-Badri, who said, 'When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) left on the emigration accompanied by Abū Bakr, ʿĀmir b. Fuhayra with Ibn ʿUrayqīṯ guiding them on their path, they passed by Umm Maʿbad al-Khuzāʿīyya, she not knowing who he was. He asked her, "Umm Maʿbad, do you have any milk?" She replied, "No, I swear, our goats have not been with males." "What about that one?" he asked. "She is the last of the goats left after the drought."'"

His account then relates the rest of the story much as given above.

Al-Bayhaqī then said, "It is likely that all these stories relate to one occasion."

He then related an anecdote similar to that about the goat of Umm Maʿbad al-Khuzāʿīyya, stating, "The ḥafīẓ Abū ʿAbd Allāh related to us, by dictation, that Abū Bakr ʿAlīm b. ʿIšāq b. Ayyūb related to them, quoting Muḥammad b. Ghālib, quoting Abū al-Walid, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Iyyād b. Laqīt, quoting Iyyād b. Laqīt, from Qays b. al-Nuʿmān, who said, 'When the Prophet and Abū Bakr left in secret they passed by a slave watching some goats. They asked him for milk. He replied, "I don't have one giving milk. I just have this one young female goat here who gave birth at the beginning of the winter, but her foetus was malformed and she has no milk left." "Call her over to me," he asked. He did so and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) tethered her and stroked her teat and prayed until it began to flow. Abū Bakr then brought a vessel and he milked the goat, gave to Abū Bakr to drink, milked again, and gave to the shepherd, then milked again and drank.'"

"The shepherd then asked, ‘For heaven's sake, who are you? I never saw the like of you!’"

"Do you think you could keep it secret if I told you?" he asked. ‘Oh yes,’ he replied.

"'I am Muḥammad, the Messenger of God,' he told him.

‘You mean you’re the one Quraysh say claims to be a Ṣabian?’ he asked. ‘Yes, they do say that,’ he told him.

"'Well,' the shepherd said, 'I bear witness that you bring the truth, and that only a prophet could do as you have. I am your follower now.'"
“‘You can’t be that right now,’ he told him. ‘Come and join us when you hear I have declared myself openly.’”

Abū Yahyā al-Mawsūli related this, from Jaʿfar b. Ḥumayd al-Kufti, from ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿIyyād b. Laqīṭ.

Abū Nuʿaym at this point related the story of ʿAbd Allāh b. Maṣʿūd stating, “ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfar related to us, quoting Yūnus b. Ḥabīb, Abū Dāʾūd and Ḥammād b. Salama, from ʿAṣim, from Zīrūr, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Maṣʿūd who said, ‘I was a teenage boy working as a shepherd for goats belonging to ʿUqba b. Abū Muʿayt at Mecca when the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) and Abū Bakr came by, having fled from the polytheists. They asked me whether I had any milk to give them to drink. I replied, “I’m held responsible; I’m not here to provide drink for you.” They asked, “Do you have a young sheep that hasn’t yet been with a ram?” “Yes, I do,” I replied.

“So I brought it to them and Abū Bakr tethered it, and the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) took hold of her teat and said a prayer. The teat flowed copiously and Abū Bakr brought a hollowed-out rock and milked into it. He and Abū Bakr drank and they served me. Then he told the teat to close, and it did so.

“Later I went to the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) and asked him, “Teach me some of these fine words,” meaning the Qurʾān. The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) replied, “Consider yourself a well-taught lad!” I took from his mouth 70 sūras and no one can dispute me about them.”

His words in this account, “Having fled from the polytheists” is not with reference to the time of the emigration but with regard to some circumstances prior thereto.

Ibn Masʿūd was one who accepted Islam early and emigrated to Abyssinia and later returned to Mecca, as previously mentioned. This anecdote of his is firm and authentic, related in the saḥīḥ collections and elsewhere. But God knows best.

Imām Aḥmad stated that ʿAbd Allāh b. Muṣṭāf b. ʿAbd Allāh, he being al-Zubayr, related to him, that his father had quoted Fāṭiḥah, the freed-man of ʿAbdādīl, as having said, “I left town in the company of ʿIbrāhīm b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Saʿd; when we reached al-ʿArj Ibn Saʿd came. Now Saʿd (his father) had been the man who had guided the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) on the road to Rakūba. ʿIbrāhīm asked him, ‘What anecdotes did your father relate to you?’ Ibn Saʿd replied, ‘My father told me that the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) came to them in the company of Abū Bakr. Abū Bakr had a daughter with us who was suckling at that time and the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) wanted to find a short route to Medina. Saʿd told him, “This is the waste-land of Rakūba; out there are two thieves of Aslām who are known as the ‘two disgraced men’. If you like we could get directions from them.” The Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) replied, “Yes, let’s do that.”
"'Sa'd went on, "So we went off and came into view of them, whereupon one of them said to the other, 'That is the man from Yemen.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) called over to them and explained Islam to them, and they accepted it. He then asked them their names and they replied, 'We're the "two disgraced men".' He commented, 'No, you're the "two honoured men"!' He then told them to lead him into Medina. So we left and reached the outskirts of Qubā, and there he was met by the Banū 'Amr b. 'Awf. The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, 'Where is Abū Umāna As'ad b. Zurāra?' Sa'd b. Khaythama replied, 'So he scored (with you) before me, O Messenger of God; shouldn't I tell him that?"

""The Messenger of God (SAAS) then passed on until he could see the date-palms and the well there was full. He turned to Abū Bakr and said, 'O Abū Bakr, this is where I shall stay; I saw myself staying at a stream like that of the Banū Mudlij.'" Aḥmad alone gives this account.

Section: On the entry of the Messenger of God (SAAS) into Medina, and where he established therein his dwelling, comprising matters related thereto.

It has been stated above by al-Bukhārī, on the authority of al-Zuhri, from Urwa, that the Prophet (SAAS) entered Medina at noon.

My own comment is that that could have been in the afternoon, because of what is established in both sahih collections from the hadith of Isrā'īl, from Abū Ishāq, from al-Bara' b. ʿAzīb, from Abū Bakr in his hadith concerning the emigration. He stated, "We arrived at night and the people vied for the honour of having him stay with them. The Messenger of God (SAAS) therefore said, 'I will stay with the Banū al-Najjar who are related by blood to 'Abd al-Muttalib, to honour them.'"

This could have been, though God knows best, on the day of his arrival at Qubā. He may have arrived at the outskirts of Medina in the heat of the afternoon and spent some time (resting) under the palm tree. He then proceeded on with the Muslims and stopped at Qubā, that being at night. Furthermore, in stating that these events transpired after noon, he could have meant at night, for evening is indeed after noon.

Alternatively, that could refer to when he left Qubā, travelling on and only reaching the Banū al-Najjar in the evening. This will be discussed later. But God knows best.

Al-Bukhārī recounted, from al-Zuhri, from Urwa, that he stayed with Banū 'Amr b. 'Awf at Qubā, for a score or more nights and established the mosque at Qubā during that period.

He then mounted up, the people accompanying him, and went on until his camel knelt with him at the site of his mosque. That place was a drying shed for dates owned by two orphaned youths named Sahl and Suhayl. He bought it from them and used it as a mosque. And that was among the Banū al-Najjar, may God be pleased with them.
Muḥammad b. Ishaq stated, “Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar b. al-Zubayr related to me, from ʿUrwa b. al-Zubayr, from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿUwaym b. Sāʿida, who said, ‘Some of my tribesmen who were Companions of the Prophet (S.A.A.S) said, “When we learned of the emigration of the Prophet (S.A.A.S) from Mecca, we anticipated his arrival. We would go out, after saying the morning prayer, to the edge of the rock lava plain and await him. We would stay there until the sun would force us to seek shade, failing which, we would go indoors. It was the hot season at that time."

“Eventually the day arrived when the Messenger of God (S.A.A.S) did come. We had sat as usual until there was no shade left and then we had entered our homes. But when we had done so, the Messenger of God (S.A.A.S) arrived. The first to see him was a Jew, and he shouted at the top of his voice, ‘Banū Qayla, your great man has come!’

“So we all went outside to the Messenger of God (S.A.A.S), and found him in the shade of a date-palm, accompanied by Abū Bakr, a man of similar age. Most of us had not seen the Messenger of God (S.A.A.S) before that, and people crowded around him, not knowing how to distinguish him from Abū Bakr. But when the shade moved away from the Messenger of God (S.A.A.S) Abū Bakr stood up and shaded him with his cloak. And at that point we recognized him.””

The account given above from al-Bukhari is similar to this one, as is that from Mūsā b. ʿUqba in his work on the maghāzi, the military campaigns.

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Ḥashim related to us, quoting Sulaymān, from Thābit, from Anas b. Mālik, who said, I moved along through young men shouting, “Muḥammad has come!” And I’d move ahead but still see nothing.

“But then the Messenger of God (S.A.A.S) did come, accompanied by Abū Bakr. They hid in a ruin in Medina, then sent out a bedouin asking for the ansār, the Helpers, to let them enter town. Thereupon some 500 of the ansār went out to greet them, saying, “Do come on; you are safe and will be obeyed.”

“The Messenger of God (S.A.A.S) and his Companion then came on in among them and the townspeople, even the old people as well came out to greet them, climbing on top of the houses and shouting, “Which one is he?” We never saw such a sight before.”’

“Anas said, ‘I witnessed the day he entered among us and the day he died, and I never saw two such days as those.’”

Al-Bayhaqi related this from al-Ḥākim, from al-ʿAṣamm, from Muḥammad b. Ishaq al-Sanṣāri, from Abū al-Nāḍr Ḥāshim b. al-Qāsim, from Sulaymān b. al-Mughīṭra, from Thābit, from Anas, whose account was very similar.

In both saḥīḥ collections, through Isrāʾīl, from Abū Ishaq, from al-Barāʾ, we find that Abū Bakr says, in his account of the emigration, “When we arrived in Medina, the people came out filling the streets and the roof tops, with the young and the servants all shouting and repeating, ‘God is most Great! The Messenger of God has arrived. God is most Great! Muḥammad has come! God is most Great! Muḥammad has come! God is most Great! The Messenger of God has come!’ The next morning he moved on to where he had been ordered to go.”
Al-Bayhaqi stated, “Abū ‘Amr al-Adib told us, quoting Abū Bakr al-Ismā‘īlī, as follows, ‘I heard Abū Khalīfa say, ‘I heard Ā‘ishā’s son say, ‘When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arrived in Medina the women and boys began chanting,

‘The full moon has risen over us, from the passes of al-Wadā’;

We must give thanks, for what a supplicant has prayed to God.’”’”

Muhammad b. Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS), so they say, stayed at Qubā with Kulthūm b. al-Hadam, a brother of the Banū ‘Amr b. ‘Awf, who was of the Banū ‘Ubayd; it is also said, however, that he stayed with Sa‘d b. Khaythama.

“Those who say he stayed with Kulthūm b. al-Hadam assert the following: that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went outside the house of Kulthūm he would go and sit with people in the house of Sa‘d b. Khaythama because this man was a bachelor, without family, and his house was therefore known as ‘the bachelors’ house. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq also stated that ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭālib remained in Mecca for three days and nights until he had handed back the deposits made with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

“He then joined the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and stayed with Kulthūm b. al-Hadam; apparently ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭālib stayed in Qubā only a night or two.

“He would say, ‘In Qubā there was a Muslim woman who had no husband. I saw a man go to her in the depths of the night; he would knock on her door and she came out. He then gave her something he had with him which she took. I found her conduct very suspicious, so I asked her, ‘Who is it that knocks at your door every night; you go out to him and he gives you something I can’t see properly. How can you do this, you being a Muslim woman without a husband?’

‘She replied, ‘The man is Sahl b. Ḥanīf. He knows I am a woman with no one and after dark he damages and destroys his people’s idols then brings their remains to me. He tells me to use them as firewood.’”

“‘Ali, God be pleased with him, used to eulogize Sahl b. Ḥanīf in this way when he was killed in his company in Iraq.”

“Then God took him forth from among them on the Friday, though the Banū ‘Amr b. ‘Awf claim that he stayed there longer among them.”

‘Abd Allāh b. Idrīs quoted Muhammad b. Ishaq, as saying, “The Banū ‘Amr b. ‘Awf claim that he stayed there among them for 18 nights.”
My own comment is, as was stated before from al-Bukhārī’s account, through al-Zuhri, from Urwā, that he stayed there for some 10 nights.

Mūsā b. ʿUqba quoted Mujīma b. Yazīd b. Hāritha as saying, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stayed among us” – amongst the Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf at Qubā, that is – “for 22 nights.”

Al-Waqīḍī stated, “It is said he stayed among them for 14 nights.”

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “When Friday came the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was there among the Banū Sālim b. ʿAwf; he prayed that day in the mosque in the Ṣanūnā valley, this being the first Friday he prayed in Medina.

“Ītbān b. Mālik and ʿAbd b. ʿAmr came to him there along with some men of the Banū Sālim and told him, ‘O Messenger of God, stay here among us enjoying our protection and our wealth.’ He replied, referring to his camel, ‘Give her free passage; for she is being guided.’ And they cleared a path for her.

“She proceeded and got as far as the homes of the Banū Bayāḍa, where he was met by Ziyād b. Labīd and Farwā b. ʿAmr, along with other men of the Banū Bayāḍa. They asked him, ‘O Messenger of God, come and join us and share our protection and our wealth.’

“He replied, ‘Make way before her, she has received a command.’ And they cleared a path for her.

“She went on again and passed by the homes of the Banū Sāfīda where she was blocked by Šaʿd b. ʿUbāda and al-Mundhir b. ʿAmr along with some men of the Banū Sāfīda. They said, ‘O Messenger of God, come to us and share our protection.’ ‘Make way before her,’ he replied, ‘she has received a command.’ And they did so.

“On she went until she was opposite the home of Banū al-Ḥārīth b. al-Khaṣraj. There her way was blocked by Šaʿd b. ʿRabīʿ, Khārīja b. Zayd and ʿAbd Allāḥ b. Rawāḥa, along with men of Banū al-Ḥārīth b. al-Khaṣraj. They called out, ‘Messengers of God, come to us; we have many to protect you.’ But he replied as before.

“She proceeded further, as far as the homes of the Banū ʿAdī b. al-Najjār, to whom he was related. The closest of these was the mother of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, Salmā, daughter of ʿAmr, being one of their women. There were Šalṭ b. Qays and Abū Šalṭ, Usayra b. Abū Khārīja and some men of the Banū ʿAdī b. al-Najjār. They told him, ‘O Messenger of God, join your own relatives and enjoy our wealth and protection.’ ‘Make way before her,’ he replied, ‘she has received a command.’ And they did so.

“She went further, up to the homes of the Banū Mālik b. al-Najjār, where she knelt down before what is today his mosque. At that time it was a drying shed for dates owned by two orphan youths of the Banū Mālik b. al-Najjār, Sahl and Suhayl by name, sons of ʿAmr. They were under the protection of Muḥādh b. ʿAfraʾ.”
My own comment, however, is that it has been related earlier, from the account of al-Bukhari through al-Zuhri, from Urwa, that these youths were under the protection of As'ad b. Zurara. But God knows best.

Mu'āṣa b. Uqba related that the Messenger of God (SAAS) passed by 'Ābd Allāh b. Ubayy b. Salūl while he was there in his house. The Messenger of God (SAAS) came to a stop, expecting to be invited into the house since he was at that time the chief of the Khazraj. But 'Ābd Allāh told him, “Look to those who invited you. Stay with them!”

The Messenger of God (SAAS) related this to a number of the ḤAnṣār and Sa'd b. 'Ubāda commented, apologizing for him, “Now God has granted you to us, O Messenger of God; whereas we had wanted to place a crown on his head and make him king over us.”

Mu'āṣa b. Uqba stated, “The ḤAnṣār had held a meeting before the Messenger of God (SAAS) left the Banū 'Amr b. 'Awf. They had gathered around his camel arguing over which of them should hold its reins, vying to honour and show their respect for the Messenger of God (SAAS).

“Whenever he passed by the home of one of the ḤAnṣār they would invite him inside, but he would say, ‘Leave her alone; she has received a command. I will only stay where God decides.’

“When she arrived at the house of Abī Ayyūb she knelt before the door and he dismounted. He entered that house and stayed there until his mosque and its apartments were built.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When the camel of the Messenger of God (SAAS) first knelt he did not dismount and she got up and went a little further, while the Messenger of God left its rein free without his control. She then turned around and came back to where she had knelt and did so there again. She then shook herself, and sank to the ground stretching out fully. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then dismounted.

“Abū Ayyūb Khalīd b. Zayd then picked up his bags and took them into the house. The Messenger of God (SAAS) stayed there with him.

“He asked who owned the drying shed and Mu'ādh b. 'Affāt told him, ‘It is owned by Sahl and Suhayl, two sons of 'Amr. They are orphans under my care.’ ‘Then I will buy it from them and have it as a mosque,’ said the Messenger of God (SAAS), and later he had it built.”

The Messenger of God (SAAS) stayed in the home of Abū Ayyūb until he built his mosque and its living quarters; he and the Muslims, both Emigrants and Helpers, participated in its construction. An account of the building of the mosque will be given soon hereafter, if God wills it.

Al-Bayhaqī stated in Dalā'il (The Signs), quoting from Abū ' Ābd Allāh, who stated that the ĥāṣiq Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī b. 'Amr informed him, quoting Abū ' Ābd Allāh Muḥammad b. Makhliḍ al-Ḍūrī, quoting Muḥammad b. Sulaymān...
b. Ismacil b. Abū al-Ward, quoting Ibrāhīm b. Śirma, quoting Yaḥyā b. Saʿīd, from Ishaq b. Ṭalḥa, from Anas, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came to Medina, and when we entered the anṣār came along with other men and women and said, ‘Come to us, O Messenger of God.’ He replied, ‘Leave my camel unimpeded; she has received a command.’

“She knelt at the door of Abū Ayyūb and servant girls of the Banū al-Najjār came out striking drums and chanting, ‘We are girls of the Banū al-Najjār; how wonderful if Muḥammad were our neighbour.’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then came out to them and asked, ‘Do you love me?’ They replied, ‘Oh yes, O Messenger of God!’ ‘And I,’ he said, ‘by God, love you all! By God, I love you all!’

“This is a strange tradition from this source. None of the authorities on tradition relate it, though al-Ḥākim gave it in his Mustadrak as will he related.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “Abū ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī related, quoting Abū al-Qāsim ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Sulaymān al-Nahḥās, the Qurʿān-reciter in Baghdad, that ʿUmar b. Ḥasan al-Ḥalabī related to him, quoting Abū Khaythama al-Maṣṭṣi, and ʿĪsā b. Yūnus related, from ʿAwf al-ʿArabī, from Thumāma, from Anas, who said, ‘The Prophet (ṢAAS) passed by a quarter where the Banū al-Najjār lived. And there were servant girls striking drums and chanting,

“We are girls of the Banū al-Najjār; how wonderful if Muḥammad were our neighbour.”

“They commented, “God knows that my heart loves you all!”

This was related by Ibn Māja, from Hishām b. ʿAmr, from ʿĪsā b. Yūnus.

In the saḥīh of al-Bukhārī it is stated from Maʿmar, from ʿAbd al-Wārīth, from ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz, from Anas, who said, “The Prophet (ṢAAS) saw the women and boys coming – I believe he said that it was a wedding procession. So he stood up in full view and said, ‘O God, these are the people I love most of all.’ He repeated this three times.”

Imām Aḥmad stated, “ʿAbd al-Ṣamād b. ʿAbd al-Wārīth related to us, quoting his father, who quoted ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. Ṣuhayb, who quoted Anas b. Mālik, as follows: ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) set out for Medina with Abū Bakr riding behind him on the same mount. Abū Bakr was an elderly man who was well known, whereas the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), was youthful and not known.

“If a person met Abū Bakr and said, “Abū Bakr, who is that man in front of you?” He would reply, “This man is showing me the path.”

“He would think he was referring to him showing him the road, but what he really meant was “the path of good”.

“Abū Bakr looked back and saw a horseman had caught up with them. So he said, “O Prophet of God, a rider has caught up with us!” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) turned around and said, “O God, bring him down!” The man’s horse then fell, tossed him and stood neighing. The man then said, "O Prophet of God, give me your orders!" He replied, "Stay where you are and don't let anyone catch up with me!"

"So the man had started off the morning trying to catch the Messenger of God (SAAS) and by the end of it he was acting as his armed guard!

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) alighted at the edge of the rock lava plain and sent a message off to the ansār. When they came they greeted the two men and told them, "Mount up; you will be safe and you will be obeyed."

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) and Abū Bakr then rode on, the ansār all around them fully armed.

"In Medina people were saying, "The Prophet of God, has come!" And they raised their glances to him, repeating that the Prophet had come.

"He proceeded on and dismounted beside the house of Abū Ayyūb.

"While he was talking to members of its household Ābd Allāh b. Salām heard of him while working in a palm-grove belonging to his family. He quickly stopped what he was doing, she38 accompanying him, heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) then went back to his own people.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, "Which of our people's houses is closest?" Abū Ayyūb replied, "Mine, O Messenger of God; this is my house, this my door." He asked, "Then go and prepare a place for us to rest." He went and did so, then returned and said, "O Messenger of God, I have prepared a place for your siesta. Do come, with God's blessings." They did so.

"Now that the Messenger of God (SAAS) had arrived, Ābd Allāh b. Salām came to him and said, "I bear witness that you are really the Prophet of God, that you have brought the truth. The Jews know me to be their leader and the son of their former leader, their most learned man and son of their former most learned man. Call them and ask them."

"When they came the Messenger of God (SAAS) addressed them, "O Jews, woe upon you! Fear God! By the God other than whom there is none, you well know that I am truly the Messenger of God, and that I bring you the truth. Accept Islam!"

"But three times they replied, "We do not know this."""

Al-Bukhārī alone relates this thus, on the authority of a Muḥammad not further identified and also from Ābd al-Ṣamad.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb related to me, from Marthad b. Ābd Allāh al-Yazānī, from Abū Ruḥm al-Ṣamā'ī, that Abū Ayyūb stated, 'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) took up residence in my house, he lived on the lower floor while I and Umm Ayyūb lived upstairs. I told him, 'O Messenger of God, I really hate being above you, with you beneath me. Come along and live above, while we come down to the lower floor.'"

38. Ibn Ishāq's account as elsewhere published refers to his aunt as working with him in the palm-grove; no doubt the reference is to her in this apparently abbreviated account. See p. 196.
"'He replied, "Abū Ayyūb, it's better for us and for our guests for me to live downstairs."

"'And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) remained down while we stayed above in the house. It happened that a large jug of water of ours broke and my wife and I had to mop it up as best we could with a velvet garment, since we had no other cloth. We used it to dry up the water, fearing to have any drop on the Messenger of God (SAAS) and so harm him.

"'We used to prepare his evening meal for him and send it in to him. If when he returned it there were any morsels left we would try to see where his fingers had touched it and eat that part, hoping to be blessed by that. One night we sent him his supper, having included onions or garlic and he returned it without us detecting any marks of his hands on it. So I was shocked and went to him and asked, "O Messenger of God, you have sent back the food without me seeing any sign you have touched it." He explained, "I sensed the smell of that plant in the food; I'm someone who whispers to others (and such an odour may he offensive to them), so why don't you eat it."

"'We did so and never served him those vegetables again.'"

Al-Bayhaqi related this similarly, through al-Layth b. Sa'īd, from Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb, from Abū al-Ḥasan, or Abū al-Khayr, Marthad b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Yazānī, from Abū Ruhm, from Abū Ayyūb, who told it.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "The ḥāfiẓ Abū ʿAbd Allāh Ḥabīr informed us, quoting Abū ʿAmr al-Ḥārīrī, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad, quoting Aḥmad b. Saʿīd al-Dārāmī, quoting Abū al-Nuʿmān, quoting Thābit b. Yazīd quoting Ṣāʾim al-Ḥārīmī, from ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Ḥārīmī, from Ṣāʾīd, the freed-man of Abū Ayyūb, from Abū Ayyūb, who said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) resided with him, staying on the ground floor while he, Abū Ayyūb, lived upstairs. It occurred to Abū Ayyūb that he was walking on top of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and so he was careful to keep to the sides, where they also slept. He then spoke to the Messenger of God (SAAS) about that, commenting, 'The lower floor is more appropriate for us; I can't be above a ceiling when you are beneath it.' And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) moved to the upper floor, while Abū Ayyūb moved to the lower.

"He used to prepare food for the Messenger of God (SAAS), and if it was returned he would ask about where he had placed his fingers and keep track of this. Once he made food for him that contained garlic and when the food came back he asked where the Messenger of God (SAAS) had placed his fingers. He was told, 'He didn't eat any.' Abū Ayyūb was shocked and went up to him and asked, 'Is it a forbidden food?' The Prophet (SAAS) replied, 'No, but I do dislike it.' Abū Ayyūb commented, 'I dislike whatever you dislike'; or he may have used the words, 'whatever you have disliked.' He also said, 'The Prophet (SAAS) would be visited by angels.'"39

39. It is stated in another tradition that angels dislike the smell of garlic.
Muslim related this from Aḥmad b. Saʿīd.

It is established in both saḥīḥ collections, that Anas b. Mālik said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was brought a large platter” – in one account it was a bowl – “containing green vegetables. He asked and was told what these were and when he looked at them, he did not want to eat them. He commented, ‘You eat them; I have private conversations with people with whom you do not!’”

Al-Waqidi recounted that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stayed at the home of Abū Ayyūb, Asʿād b. Zurzra took hold of the nose-rein of the camel of the Messenger of God and it thus remained with him.

It is related from Zayd b. Thābit that he said, “The first gift made to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), after he took up residence in the home of Abū Ayyās, was brought to him by myself. It was a big wooden bowl filled with bread, crumbled up with yoghurt and butter. I told him that my mother had sent the bowl. He commented, ‘God bless her!’ Then he called over his Companions and they ate. Then a wooden bowl came from Saʿīd b. Ubāda, a mixture of bread and meat gravy.

“Not an evening went by without there being at the door of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) three or four people who would come one after the other carrying food. He remained there in the home of Abū Ayyūb for seven months.

“While resident in the home of Abū Ayyūb, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent his freed-man Zayd b. Ḥaritha and Abū Raḥf, along with two camels and carrying 500 dirhams, to bring back Fāṭima and Umm Kulthūm, daughters of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), his wife Sawda, daughter of Zamʿa and Usāma b. Zayd. Ruqayya had already emigrated with her husband Uθmān, while Zaynab remained with her husband, Abū al-ʿĀṣ b. al-Raḥf in Mecca. Umm Ayman, the wife of Zayd b. Ḥaritha, came with these, and so did ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr with the other children of Abū Bakr who included ʿAḥisha, ‘mother of the believers’. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had not yet consummated his marriage with her.”

“She then moved away with him and came to the place for the minbar, the pulpit, where it knelt down and shook itself. A shed was there where they were storing and drying dates. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS), alighted from his mount and went to the shade. Abū Ayyūb then approached him and said, ‘O Messenger of God, my house is the one closest to you; shall I carry your baggage to my place?’ ‘Yes,’ he said. So he took his baggage into the house. Another man then came to him and said, 'O Messenger of God, where are you staying?' He replied, 'A man stays wherever his baggage is.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) stayed there in the shed for 12 nights, until the mosque was built.'

This was a great honour for Abū Ayyūb Khalid b. Zayd, God bless him, to have the Messenger of God (SAAS) stay with him.

It was related to us through Yazid b. Abū Ḥabib from Muḥammad b. 'Alī b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbbās, may God be pleased with him, that Abū Ayyūb came to Basra over which Ibn ʿAbbas had been appointed governor by 'Alī b. Abū Ṭālib, may God be pleased with him. Ibn ʿAbbas came out of his house and invited Abū Ayyūb to stay there, just as the latter had provided accommodation for the Messenger of God (SAAS) in his house. He also presented him with everything within the house; and when he came to leave, Ibn ʿAbbas gave him 20,000 dirhams and 40 slaves.

Abū Ayyūb’s house later passed into the hands of his freed-man Aflah; al-Mughīra b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. al-Harith b. Hishām bought it from him for 1,000 dinars, repaired it and donated it for the use of the poor of Medina who belonged to the household of the Prophet (SAAS).

Similarly his staying in the home of the Banī al-Najjār and God’s choosing that for him, was also a great honour. In Medina there were many such complexes, nine in number. Each of these was separate and self-sufficient, with its own date-palms, gardens and families. Each one of their tribes were gathered in their own quarters, making them like adjoining villages. God chose for the Messenger of God (SAAS) the home of the Banū Malik b. al-Najjār.

In both saḥīḥ collections it is established from a hadith of Shuʿba as follows, “I heard Qatada quote Anas b. Mdik as stating, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘The best of the anṣār homes is that of the Banū al-Najjār, then comes that of the Banū al-Ashhal, then the Banū al-Hārith b. al-Khazraj, then the Banū Sāʿīda; and in all the homes of the anṣār there is good.’”

“Saʿd b. ʿUbāda stated, ‘I never saw the Messenger of God (SAAS), fail to express preference for others over us.’ But he was told instead, ‘He gave preference to you over many.’”

This quotation comes from al-Bukhārī.

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim also related this from a hadith of Anas and Abū Salama, from Abū Usayd Malik b. Rabīʿa, and from a hadith of ʿUbāda b. Sahl, from Abū Ḥumayd, from the Prophet (SAAS), in the same terms. In the hadith of Abū Ḥumayd there is an addition: “Abū Usayd said to Saʿd b. ʿUbāda, ‘Don’t you think that the Prophet (SAAS) expressed favour for the anṣār and placed us last?’ And so Saʿd went to the Prophet (SAAS) and asked, ‘O Messenger of God, have you given preference to the homes of the anṣār and placed us last?’ ‘Well’, he replied, ‘does it not suffice you that you are among the very best?’”

Great honour and credit were firmly established for the people of Medina, the anṣār, both in this world and the next. God Almighty stated, “As for those who are first and foremost, of the muhājirīn, the Emigrants and the ānṣār, ‘the Helpers’, and those who followed them in goodness, God is pleased with them, and they are with Him. He has prepared for them gardens beneath which rivers flow; they will live in them forever. That is the mighty success” (ṣūrat al-Tawḥīd or al-Baṣrā: IX, v.100). And God also stated, “And (give also) to those who lived in this area and had faith before them, loving those who emigrated to them, and they do not find in themselves any grudge because of what others were given, rather, preferring others over themselves, though they may themselves be in need. Those spared from the meanness of their selves shall be those who succeed” (ṣūrat al-Ḥāshrā: LIX, v.9).

The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, “Had I not been compelled to perform the emigration personally, I would have been an ānṣār, a Helper; and if people had gone to any valley or defile, I would have gone to the valley or defile of the Helpers. The Helpers are as an undergarment, the people at large as an overgarment.”

He also said, “The Helpers are my household and my own family.”

And he said, “I am peace to those who make peace with them and war to those who make war upon them.”

Al-Bukhārī stated that Ḥajjāj b. Mīnāḥ related to him, quoting Shu'ba, quoting ʿAdī b. Ṭāhib, as follows, “I heard al-Baraʾ b. ʿĀzib say, ‘I heard the Messenger of God (SAAS) say’ – or he said – ‘the Messenger of God (SAAS), said, ‘The ānṣār are loved only by those who believe and hated only by those who are hypocritical. Whoever loves them is loved by God, and whoever hates them is hated by God.’”

The other ḥadīth authorities also give this, except for Abū Dā'ud, from an account of Shu'ba.

Al-Bukhārī also stated, “Muslim b. Ibrāhīm related to us, quoting Shu'ba, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUbayr, from Anas b. Mālik, from the Prophet (SAAS) who said, ‘A sign of faith is love for the Helpers; a sign of hypocrisy is hatred for the Helpers.’”

Al-Bukhārī also related it from Abū al-ʿUmar, al-Taṣāṣ and Muslim, from a ḥadīth of Khalīd b. al-Ḥārith and ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Mahdi, all four of them quoting Shu'ba’s account.

There are numerous verses of the Qurʾān and Prophetic Traditions that make reference to the virtues of the ānṣār.

How fine are the verses spoken by Abū Qays Ẓirma b. Abū Anas, mentioned above, a poet from the Helpers, concerning the arrival of the Messenger of God (SAAS) among them, and of the help and comfort they gave to him and to his Companions, God bless them all.

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “Abū Qays Ẓirma b. Abū Anas also spoke the following, making reference to how God had honoured them by bringing them Islam and His Messenger (SAAS),

‘A decade or so he stayed among Quraysh, preaching in hopes of finding agreeable friends, Offering himself to those attending the fairs, but he found no one to protect or invite him.

When he came to us his mind was put at ease and he became pleased and contented,

He found friends and his mind became at ease, and he received evident help from God.

He would tell us what Noah informed his people, and what Moses said when he answered the call,

And so he came to fear no one, whether near or far away.

We gave of our best wealth and of ourselves amidst the uproar and the shared sorrows,

Opposing all those people that he opposed, even those who had been dear and close.

We know that there is nothing besides God, and that the book of God has become our guide.

I would say, when praying at any temple, "Have pity, do not show enmity towards us!"

I would say, when crossing any dangerous land, "Blessed are You, the One relied upon."

Even if you step to one side the ways of death are many, and it is not you who can preserve yourself.

And, by God, a man does not know how his course will be, if he does not have God watch over him.

The thirsty date-palm will do its owner no good if it becomes well-watered yet he becomes buried!"

Ibn Ishāq and others quoted this, as did ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zubayr al-Humaydi and others, from Suṭyān b. ʿUayna, from Yahyā b. Saʿīd al-Anṣārī, from an old woman of the Helpers who said, "I saw ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbbās visiting ʿIrma b.
Qays as he spoke these lines."

Al-Bayhaqi related this.

DIVISION

Medina was also honoured by the emigration there of the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ), and it became a shelter to the good agents and worshippers of God, an impregnable stronghold and fortress for the Muslims and a place where there was guidance for all people.

There are innumerable traditions relating to its virtues, and these we will give glze elsewhere, if God wills it.

It is established in both ṣaḥīḥ collections through Ḥabīb b. Yasāf, from Jaʿfar
b. ʿĀṣim, from Abū Hurayra who said, "The Messenger of God (Ṣaḥīḥ) stated, 'Faith fits into Medina like a snake into its hole.'"

Muslim also related this, from Muḥammad b. Ṭaḥṣ, from Shabāba, from ʿĀṣim b. Muḥammad b. Zayd b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmar, from his father, from Ibn ʿUmar, from the Prophet (Ṣaḥīḥ), in much the same words.
Also in the ṣaḥiḥ collections is the ḥadīth of Malik, quoting Ŷahyā b. Sa‘īd as saying that he heard Abū-ḥu`bāb Sa‘īd b. Yāsār report, “I heard Abū Hurayra say, ‘The Messenger of God (ṣa‘ād) commented, “I was commanded to go to a town that eats up other towns; they call it ‘Yathrib’, but it is ‘al-Madīnā’. It purifies men just as a bellows purifies the dross from iron.'”

Imām Mālik is unique among the four Imāms in giving Medina preference over Mecca.

Al-Bayhaqī stated, “The ḥāfīz Abū ʿAbd Allāh quoted Abū al-Walīd and Abū Bakr b. ʿAbd Allāh, both of whom said, ‘Al-Ḥasān b. Sufyān related to us, quoting Abū Mūsā al-Anṣārī, quoting Sa‘īd b. Sa‘īd, quoting his brother, from Abū Hurayra, that the Messenger of God (ṣa‘ād) stated, “O God, you have brought me out of the town that is dearest to me; let me now dwell in the town dearest to You.” And God sent him to dwell in Medina.’”

This ḥadīth is extremely strange.

It is very widely known and accepted that Mecca is better than Medina, except for that place that holds the body of the Messenger of God (ṣa‘ād).

Most authorities give many proofs of that, these being too many to refer to here; we have referenced their location in al-Manāsik min al-ʿĀhkām (The Rites of the Hajj and the Sharīʿa).

The most famous proof for them of this is in what Imām ʿĀḥmad stated, namely, “Abū-ʾl-Yamān related to us, quoting Shuʿayb, quoting al-Zuhri and Abū Salama b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān that ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAdī b. al-Ḥamrāʾ told him that he heard the Prophet (ṣa‘ād), while standing at al-Ḥazwāra in the market of Mecca, say, “By God, I swear that of all God’s earth you are the best, and the dearest to me; and had I not been forced out of you I would never have left.’” ʿĀḥmad related the same, from Yaʿqūb b. Ḫārīm, from his father, from Ṣālīḥ b. Kaysān, from al-Zuhri.

Al-Tirmidhī related it thus, as did al-Nassāʾī and Ibn Māja, from a ḥadīth of al-Layth, from ʿUqayl, from al-Zuhri. Al-Tirmidhī stated it to be “ḥasan, ṣaḥīḥ’, “good and authentic”.

Yūnus related this from al-Zuhri. Muḥammad b. ʿAmr related it from Abū Salama b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān, from Abū Hurayra. In my view the ḥadīth of al-Zuhri is more reliable.

Imām ʿĀḥmad stated, “ʿAbd al-Razzāq related to us, quoting Maʿṣmar, from al-Zuhri, from Abū Salama b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān, from Abū Hurayra, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṣa‘ād) stood at al-Ḥazwāra and said, “I know you to be of all God’s earth the best, and the dearest to me; and if your people had not expelled me I would not have forsaken you.”’”

Al-Nassāʾī related this thus from an account of Maʿṣmar.

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī stated, “This is a mistake on Maʿṣmar’s part.”

Some authorities relate this from Muḥammad b. ʿAmr, from Abū Salama, from Abū Hurayra; it too is a misconception, the authentic version being that of the community of scholars.
Aḥmad also stated, “Ibrāhīm b. Khalīd related to us, quoting Rabāḥ, from Maʿmar, from Muḥammad b. Muslim b. Shīhāb al-Zuhri, from Abū Salama, from some other scholars, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, while he was in the market place of al-Ḥazwara, ‘By God, I swear that of all God’s earth you are the best, and the dearest to me; and had I not been forced out of you, I would never have left.’”

These are the various lines of transmission of this hadith but the most reliable is the one given above. But God knows best.

The events of the first year of the hegira: An Account of the major events and happenings in the first year following the emigration of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

The șahāba, the “Companions”, God be pleased with them, agreed in the year 16 AH – or some say 17 or 18 AH – during the Caliphate of ʿUmar, on having the Islamic era begin with the year of the emigration.

This came about because a contractual document or agreement was referred to ʿUmar by one man complaining against another. In it was stated that it came into effect in the month of Shaʿbān. ʿUmar asked, “Which Shaʿbān? That of this, last or next year?”

He then assembled the Companions and discussed the need for a calendar whereby contracts concerning debts and other matters should come into effect. One speaker suggested, “Date as the Persians do.” But this met no favour. For the Persians used to date by the reigns of their kings, one following the other.

Another man suggested, “Use the same dating system as the Byzantines.” They used to date by the reign of Alexander, son of Phillip, the Macedonian. But this met no favour.

Another man suggested, “Date from the birth of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).”

Another suggested, “No, date from his receiving the Mission.”

Another suggested, “No, from his emigration.”

Others suggested by the date of his death.

ʿUmar, God be pleased with him, preferred the date of his emigration, because it was so definite and well known, and the others agreed with him.

In his šahīḥ collection al-Bukhārī stated, under the heading: The dating system and when it was established. “ʿAbd Allāh b. Muslim related to us, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz, from his father, from Sahl b. Saʿd, who said, ‘They did not have the dating system start after the beginning of the mission of the Prophet (ṢAAS), nor after his death, but after his arrival in Medina.’”
Al-Waqidi stated, “Ibn Abū al-Zinād related to us, from his father, who said, 'Umar sought advice on a dating system and they agreed upon the emigration.'”

Abū Da‘ūd al-Ṭayālisī stated, from Qurra b. Khalīd al-Sadūsī, from Muhammad b. Sīrin, who said, “A man went up to Umar and said, ‘Set a dating system!’ He asked, ‘What’s that?’ The man explained, ‘It’s something other peoples do; they record things in the form: in such-and-such a month of such-and-such a year.’ ‘Fine,’ agreed Umar, ‘just set it up.’

“They then discussed the matter of the date from which it should begin. Some suggested from the beginning of the Mission of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), others suggested from his death. Finally they agreed it should be from his emigration. Then they discussed at which month it should commence. Ramaḍān was suggested, and then al-Muḥarram, it being the time for the return of people from their pilgrimage and it was also a sacred month. They agreed on al-Muḥarram.”

Ibn Jarir stated, “Qutayba related to us, quoting Nūh b. Qays al-Ta‘ī, from ‘Uthma b. Muḥṣin, that Ibn CAbbas used to say in regard to the words of the Almighty, ‘By the dawn and ten nights!’ (ṣūrat al-Fajr; LXXXIX, v.1), that the reference was to al-Muḥarram, the dawn of the year.”

It is related that ‘Ubayd b. Umayr stated, “Muḥarram is God’s month; it is the beginning of the year and in it the kāba receives its new cover. It is the month from which people establish the date and in which coins are minted.”

Ahmad stated, “Rawḥ b. ‘Ubāda related to us, quoting Zakariyya b. Ishaq, from ‘Amr b. Dīnār, who said, ‘The first man to put a date on a document was Ya‘la b. Umayya in the Yemen. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came to Medina in Rabī‘ al-Awwal, and people marked that as the first of the year.’”

Muḥammad b. Ishaq related from al-Zuhri and Muhammad b. Șāliḥ related from al-Sha‘bi, both saying, “The Banū Isma‘īl dated from the fire of Abraham and then from the building by Abraham and Isma‘īl of the temple, then from the death of Ka‘b b. Lu‘ayy, then from the [year of the] elephant. After that Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb began dating from the emigration. That was in the year 17 or 18 AH.”

We made reference to this issue, giving the relevant chains of authority and lines of transmission in the biography of Umar, and all praise be to God.

The conclusion is that they did make the beginning of Islamic history from the year of the emigration. They set its beginning from al-Muḥarram, this being well known. This is the consensus of the Imāms.

Al-Suhayli and others quoted Imām Mālik as having said, “The Islamic year began in Rabī‘ al-Awwal, because that was the month when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) emigrated.”

He also made such an assertion elsewhere by referring to the Almighty’s words, “certainly a mosque founded in piety from the first day” (ṣūrat al-Tawbah or al-Bara‘a; IX, v.108). That is, from the first day of the arrival of the Prophet (ṢAAS) in Medina. This was the first day of the era, just as the Companions have agreed to its first year having been that of the emigration.
There is no doubt that this, as stated by Imám Mālik, God bless him, is appropriate. However, the actual practice is contrary to this. The first month of the Arabs is indeed al-Muharram. They thus made the first year of the calendar that of the emigration, and had it begin with al-Muharram (instead of Rabî‘ al-Awwal) so that there would be no confusion in the system. But God knows best.

Our comment is—and we rely on God’s help—that the year of the blessed emigration begins while the Messenger of God (SAAS) was still resident in Mecca. He had received the pledge of the anṣār, “the Helpers”, at the second ‘Aqaba meeting, as we have explained, in the middle days of the ṯaḥriq period, that is on the 12th of Dhū al-Ĥijja, preceding the year of the emigration.

The anṣār then went back and the Messenger of God (SAAS) permitted the Muslims to emigrate to Medina. One by one his Companions left for Medina to the point where no one was left in Mecca who could emigrate except for the Messenger of God (SAAS). Abû Bakr had kept himself back so as to be able to accompany the Messenger of God (SAAS) on the journey, as we have explained earlier. They then emigrated together, as is detailed above. ‘Alî b. Abû Ṭalîb was to leave later, at his command, to take care of the deposits entrusted to the Messenger of God (SAAS); he joined the other two men at Quba’. The Messenger of God (SAAS) entered Medina on a Monday at approximately noon, when the heat was extreme.

Al-Waqidi and others stated, “That occurred on the 2nd of the month of Rabî‘ al-Awwal.” Ibn İshaq also related this, except that he did not stop there but preferred a date of the 12th of that month.

This is the popular view held by most scholars. The Messenger of God (SAAS) according to the best accounts, remained in Mecca following his receiving the Mission for 13 years.

This is what we learn in the account of Ḥammād b. Salama, from Abû Ḥamza al-Dabbi, from Ibn ‘Abbâs, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) received the Mission at the age of 40 and remained living in Mecca for 13 years.”

It has been earlier stated that Ibn ‘Abbâs wrote down verses of Şîrma b. Abû Anas b. Qays, including,

“Some decades he stayed among Quraysh, preaching in hopes of finding agreeable friends”

Al-Waqidi stated, from İbrahim b. İsmâ‘îl, from Dâ‘ûd b. al-Ḥusayn, from Ṭïrîma, from Ibn ʿAbbâs, that he cited that same verse as testimony (to the residence having been for 13 years).

Ibn Jarîr related the same, from al-Ḥârîth, from Muḥammad b. Saʿd, from al-Waqidi, but with reference to “15 pilgrimages”, a very strange statement indeed.
Even stranger than that is what Ibn Jarir stated, namely, “It was related to me from Rawḥ b. Ubāda, who said, ‘Ṣa‘īd related to us, from Qatāda, who said, “The Qurʾān was revealed to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) over a period of 8 years in Mecca and 10 in Medina.”’”

Al-Ḥasan used to say “over 10 years in Mecca and 10 in Medina.”

This last statement to which al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī subscribed, that he remained in Mecca 10 years, was one with which Anas b. Mālik, ʿĀisha, Sa‘īd b. al-Musayyab and ʿAmr b. Dinār all agreed, according to what Ibn Jarir related of them.

And there is the account from Ibn ʿAbbās, related by Ṭāmād b. Ḥanbal from Yaḥyā b. Sa‘īd, from Hishām, from ʿIkrima. It has Ibn ʿAbbās as saying, “The Prophet (ṢAAS) received revelation at the age of 43 and he remained in Mecca for 10 years.”

We recounted above that al-Shaʿbī stated, “Ismāʿīl was linked with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) for 3 years during which he communicated to him the Word and the Message. In one account, he would hear his voice but not see his person; and thereafter it was Gabriel.”

Al-Wāqīḍī related that one of his sheikhs rejected that statement of al-Shaʿbī.

Ibn Jarir tried to combine the statements of those who maintained that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stayed for 10 years in Mecca with those who considered it to have been 13 years by reference to what al-Shaʿbī had said. But God knows best.

Division

When the party of the Prophet (ṢAAS) came to Medina he first stayed, as stated above, at Qubāʾ in the home of the Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf. He remained there at the most for 22 nights, though some say it was 18, others 10 or so, and according to Mūsā b. Uqba, 3 nights.

What is widely accepted is what Ibn Ishāq and others stated, namely that he was there at Qubāʾ from a Monday to a Friday.

He did establish during this period of disputed length, as we have indicated, the mosque at Qubāʾ.

Al-Suhaylī claimed that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) founded it on the first day he arrived at Qubāʾ, citing to support this view the Almighty’s words, “certainly, a mosque founded in piety from the first day” (ṣūrat al-Tawḥīd or al-Barāʾa; IX, v.108). And he refuted those who would have the wording read “from the foundation of the first day”.

It is a fine, much honoured mosque. God Almighty revealed about it, “certainly a mosque founded in piety from the first day is fully deserving of you standing (for prayer) inside it; therein are men who love that they be purified, and God loves those who purify themselves” (ṣūrat al-Tawḥīd or al-Barāʾa; IX, v.108). We have discussed this in our Tafsīr (Exegesis). Therein we referred to the ḥadith in the saḥih collection of Muslim to the effect of it being the mosque of Medina, and to the refutation of this.
We also made mention of the hadith related by the Imām Aḥmad as follows: “Hāṣan b. Mūḥammad related to us, quoting Abū Idrīs, quoting Shurḥabīl quoting Uwāymin b. Sāīda who said that it was related to him that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came to them in the mosque in Qubā’ and said, ‘God has given you much good praise for purifying yourselves, in the reference to your mosque; what is it you do to so purify yourselves?’ They replied, ‘We swear by God, O Messenger of God, that the only thing we know is that we had some Jewish neighbours who would wash their behinds after defecating, and so we washed like them.’”

Ibn Khuzayma included this hadith in his ṣahih collection and there are other testimonies to it.

It is also related from Khuzayma b. Thābit and Muḥammad b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Salām and Ibn ‘Abbās.

Abū Ḍa‘ud, al-Tirmidhī and Ibn Māja related from a hadith of Yūnus b. al-Ḥārith, from İbrāhīm b. Abū Maymūna from Abū Hurayra, from the Prophet (ṢAAS), who said, “The following verse was revealed about the people of Qubā’: ‘In it there are men who love to be purified, and God loves those who purify themselves.’” He then went on, “They would wash after excretion and this verse was revealed about them.”

Al-Tirmidhī commented, “A unique tradition from this source.”

My own comment is that this Yūnus b. al-Ḥārith is a weak authority. But God knows best.

One of those who stated that it referred to this mosque as the one “founded in piety” was ‘Abd al-Razzāq who related, from Ma‘mar, from al-Zuhrī, from ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr, and ‘Alī b. Abū Ṭalḥa related it, from Ibn ‘Abbās. It was related also from al-Sha‘bī, al-Ḥasan al-‘Abṣurī, Qatā‘da, Sāīda b. ‘Abd al-Rāman b. Zayd b. Aṣwāfī and ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. Zayd b. Aṣwāfī, along with others.

The Prophet (ṢAAS) used to visit it in later times and would pray there. He would go to Qubā’ each Saturday, sometimes mounted and sometimes on foot. It is a hadith from him that, “Prayer in the mosque at Qubā’ is like an umra.”

It is also stated in a hadith that it was Gabriel, peace be upon him, who pointed out to the Prophet (ṢAAS) the place for the gibla, the prayer niche, for the mosque at Qubā’.

This mosque was the first built in Medina; indeed it is the first that was made for people in general in this community (of believers). In stating this about this mosque, we are excluding the mosque that Abū Bakr built at the entrance to his home in which to worship and pray; this is because it was for his personal household, not for the public at large. But God knows best.

The matters relating to the acceptance of Islam by Salmān have been referred to above in the chapter on the bishūrāt, the early signs. They tell how when Salmān the Persian heard of the arrival of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to Medina, he came and brought him something that he laid before him while he was at Qubā', saying, “This is a donation.” But the Messenger of God (SAAS) refrained from eating it and told his Companions to do so and they did eat it. Salmān then came a second time with something he presented saying, “This is a present.” The Messenger of God (SAAS) then ate some of it himself and told his Companions to do the same, which they did. We gave the tradition earlier at length.

Section: On the acceptance of Islam by 'Abd Allāh b. Salām, may God be pleased with him.

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Muḥammad b. Ja'fār related to us, quoting ʿAwf, from Zurāra, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Salām, who said, ‘When the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived in Medina, the people ran away scared, as I did myself. But as I learned more about him I realized that he was no liar. The first thing I heard him say was, “Spread peace, feed others, pray at night while others sleep, and you will achieve paradise in peace.”’”

Al-Tirmidhī related this, as did Ibn Mājā, by various routes, from ʿAwf al-ʿArābī, from Zurāra b. Abū ʿAwfa. Al-Tirmidhī stated that it was authentic.

This tradition requires that ʿAbd Allāh b. Salām had heard of the Prophet (SAAS) and saw him directly following his arrival at Qubā', when he dismounted there among the Bana 'Amr b. 'Awf.

It is given above in the account of 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Suhayb, from Anas, that he met him when the Messenger of God (SAAS) dismounted at the home of Abū Ayyūb following his arrival from Qubā’ to the quarters of the Banū al-Najjār as told above. It is possible that he did see him for the first time at Qubā’ and then met with him after his arrival with the Banū al-Najjār. But God knows best.

In the account of al-Bukhārī, through 'Abd al-'Azīz from Anas, the last-mentioned stated, “When the Prophet (SAAS) arrived, 'Abd Allāh b. Salām came to him and said, ‘I bear witness that you are the Messenger of God and that you bring the truth. The Jews recognize me as their leader and the son of their leader, their most learned man and the son of their most learned man. Summon them and ask them about me before they know that I have embraced Islam, because if they know I have done so they will say of me things that are untrue.’”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then sent for the Jews and when they came he asked them, ‘O Jews, woe upon you! Fear God! For, by God other than whom there is none, you certainly know that I am the Messenger of God, in truth, and that I bring you the truth. Therefore accept Islam!’ They replied, ‘We do not know it.’ Three times this was repeated. Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, ‘Which of your men is 'Abd Allāh b. Salām?’

“They replied, ‘That is our leader, and the son of our leader, our most learned man and the son of our most learned man.’ He then asked, ‘What would you think if he accepted Islam?’ They replied, ‘God forbid! He would never accept Islam!’
"The Messenger of God (SAAS) then called out, 'Ibn Salam, come on out to them!'

"When he did so he addressed them as follows, 'O Jews, fear God! By God other than whom there is none, you do certainly know that he is the Messenger of God, and that he brings you the truth.' They replied, 'No, you are lying!' Thereupon the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent them away."

Those are the words used in the above account.

In one version the text states, "when he came out before them and gave testimony to the truth they said, 'You are the worst of us, and the son of the worst of us!' And they spoke ill of him. He then said, 'O Messenger of God, this is what I was fearing.'"

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "The ḥāfiż Abū ʿAbd Allāh told us, quoting al-Aṣamm, quoting Muḥammad b. Ishaq al-Ṣanʿānī, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr, quoting Ḥumayyid, from Anas, who said, "ʿAbd Allāh b. Salām heard of the arrival of the Prophet (SAAS) while he was out in some land he owned. He went to the Prophet (SAAS) and said, "I shall ask you three things for which only a prophet would know the answers. They are: What are the signs of the Day of Judgement? What is the finest food that the people of paradise would eat? And what causes a child to resemble his father or his mother?"

"He replied, "Gabriel told me of these previously." "What, Gabriel?" he asked. "Yes," he replied. "But," commented ʿAbd Allāh b. Salām, "he is the angel who is the enemy of the Jews." The Messenger of God (SAAS) then recited, "Whoever is the enemy of Gabriel, who surely revealed it to your heart by God's permission" (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.97).

"He then said, "Regarding the signs of the Day of Judgement, the first will be a fire that comes at people from the East and leads them to the West. As for the prime food of paradise eaten by those that are there, that is a plentitude of whale's liver. And if the male's liquid precedes that of the female, he will resemble the child, while if the female's liquid precedes that of the male, she will resemble the child."

"ʿAbd Allāh b. Salām exclaimed, "I testify that there is no god but God and that you are the Messenger of God; O Messenger of God, the Jews are a people of liars. If they learn of my accepting Islam before you ask them about me, they will lie to you."

"The Jews arrived and the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked them, "What kind of man is the (one of you named) ʿAbd Allāh?" They replied, "He is the best of us and the son of the best of us; he is our leader and the son of our leader." "What," he then asked, "would you say if he were to accept Islam?" They replied, "May God spare him from that!"

"ʿAbd Allāh then came forth and said, "I give testimony that there is no god but God, and that Muḥammad is the Messenger of God." They said, "You are the worst of us, and the son of the worst of us!" And they spoke ill of him.
The image content is a page from a book titled "The Life of the Prophet Muhammad." The content is a historical recounting of events related to the Prophet Muhammad's life, focusing on a particular narrative or story that was passed down through various narrators. The text begins with a quote: "He then commented, "This, O Messenger of God, is what I feared."" This quote is attributed to Al-Bukhari, and it is also related by other narrators such as ‘Ahd b. Humayd, ‘Abd Allah b. Abü Bakr, Hamid b. Wmar, Bishr b. al-Mufaddal, and Humayd.

The narrative continues with a recounting of events that occurred upon the Prophet's arrival in Qubā'. The text mentions the Prophet's association with the Banū ‘Amr b. ‘Awf and the reactions of his aunt Khalida, daughter of al-Hārith, upon hearing the news. The narrative also includes a conversation between ‘Abd Allah h. Ishaq and Yahyā b. ‘Abd Allah, who related a story about a learned rabbi named Safiyya, daughter of Huyay, who was popular with both her father and uncle.

Yūnus b. Bukayr also quotes Muhammad b. Ishaq, stating that ‘Ahd Allah b. Abii Bakr related to him the story of the learned rabbi Safiyya. The text concludes by noting that the account continues as described above, with ‘Abd Allah continuing to tell the story of his open declaration of faith and the reaction of his aunt Khalida, daughter of al-Hārith.

The narrative provides insights into the early days of Islam and the interactions between the Prophet and his followers, highlighting the religious and social context of the time.
greet them as was my custom, but, I swear, neither so much as looked at me. I heard my uncle Ābu Yāsir ask my father, “Is that he then?” “Yes, I swear by God,” he replied. “You recognize him from his character and description then?” “I certainly do, I swear it!” he responded. “So how will you relate to him?” he asked. “With enmity, I swear by God, for as long as I live!”

Mūsā b. ‘Uqba recounted, from al-Zuhrī, that Ābu Yāsir b. Akhtab, following the arrival of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in Medina, went to him, heard him speak, spoke with him and then returned to his people. He told them, “People, obey me; God has sent you the one you have been awaiting. Follow him and do not oppose him.

“His brother Ḥuyayy b. Akhtab, at that time the leader of the Jews, they both being of the Banū al-Naḍīr, then went and sat and listened to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and returned to his people who were obedient to him. He told them, ‘I come to you from being with a man whom, I swear it, I will for ever oppose.’ His brother, Ābu Yāsir, answered him, ‘O cousin, obey me in this matter and disobey however you like thereafter without penalty.’ Ḥuyayy insisted, ‘No, by God, I will never obey you!’ And so Satan took possession of him and his people followed him in his opinion.”

As for Ābu Yāsir, whose name was Ḥuyayy b. Akhtab, his fate is unknown to me. Regarding Ḥuyayy b. Akhtab, the father of Ṣaʿīyya, he expressed enmity for the Prophet (ṢAAS) and his Companions, and continued to do so, God damn him, until he was executed, hound, before the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on the day the warriors of Banū Qurayża were killed. As we will relate, if God wills it.

Division

When, on a Friday, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) left Qubā mounted on his camel al-Qaṣwāt, it was noon by the time he was in the quarter of the Banū Sālim b. ‘Awf. He performed the Friday prayers there with the Muslims in a valley called Rānūwāmā.

This was the first Friday prayer which the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) performed with the Muslims in Medina, or perhaps the very first time of all. This is because – though God knows best – it had not been possible for him and his Companions in Mecca to have any Friday prayers with a sermon and joint open prayer. The strong opposition to him from the polytheists and the harm they were doing to him had precluded any such possibility.

An Account of the sermon of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) that day.

Ibn Jarīr stated, “Yūnus b. ʿAbd al-Aʿ�� related to me, quoting Ibn Wahb, that Saʿīd b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Jumaḥi reported that he was informed that the following was the content of the sermon of the Messenger of God (SAAS) on the first Friday he prayed in Medina, among the Banū Sālim b. 'Amr b. 'Awf, God bless them: 'Praise be to God; I give Him praise, and I ask His help. I ask for His forgiveness and for His guidance. I believe in Him, will not disbelieve in Him, and will do battle with those who do. I bear witness that there is no god but God, that He has no associate, that Muḥammad is His Servant and Messenger whom He has sent with guidance and the religion of truth and light, at a time without messengers, when there is little knowledge, the people are misguided, when the time is out of joint, and the day of retribution and fate is at hand.

"Whoever obeys God and His Messenger is right-guided; whoever disobeys them is misled, and has erred and gone far astray.

"I charge you to fear God; this is the best advice a Muslim can give a Muslim, to urge him on to the afterlife, to order him to fear God. Beware of what God has, of Himself, cautioned you. There is no better advice nor charge than this. It is an act of piety for those who accomplish this with apprehension and fear and a true means of assistance towards your aspirations from the afterlife.

"Whoever cultivates, both openly and in secret, his relationship with God, seeking only God's favour thereby, shall receive recognition in the short term and reward after death, when a man will wish he had done differently than he had before, and would want to put great distance between himself and that behaviour. God bids you beware of Him, though He is merciful towards His worshippers.

"Whoever believes His words and fulfils His promise will find nothing taken back therefrom, for God Almighty states, "Whatever I say shall not be changed, and I am not unjust towards my worshippers" (ṣūrat Qāf; L, v.29).

"Fear God both in matters that are at hand and those that follow, in secret and openly, for "whoever fears God, God will remove his evil ways from him and give him great reward" (ṣūrat al-Ṭalāq; LXV, v.5). And "Whoever fears God and His Messenger will have won a mighty success."41 Fearing God will forestall His disapproval, His punishment, His anger. Fearing God will bring satisfaction, please the Lord and elevate one's status.

"Take advantage of your good fortune and do not be lax in matters pertaining to God. God has instructed you in His book, laid out for you His path, so that He may know those who speak the truth and those who lie. Do good, just as God does good to you. Oppose His enemies and strive energetically for God. It is He who chose you and named you "Muslims", so that those who perish do so for evident cause, while those who live do so for evident cause. There is no power but with God. Make frequent mention of God. Strive for what comes after death. For he who makes good his relationship with God will find his relationship with people satisfactory. That is because God passes judgement upon 41. Verse 71 of ṣūrat al-Āhzab (XXXIII) is somewhat different. It reads, "Whoever is obedient to God and His Messenger." people, while they do not pass judgement upon Him. It is He who controls people, while they do not control Him. God is truly great! There is no power but with God, the Almighty and Glorious.”

This is the text given by Ibn Jarir; its chain of authorities is not complete.

Al-Bayhaqi’s text reads, “Chapter on the first address given by the Messenger of God (SAAS) after his arrival in Medina. The ḥāfiz Abū ‘Abd Allāh informed us, quoting Abū al-‘Abbās al-‘Aṣamm quoting Aḥmad b. ‘Abd al-Jabbar, quoting Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Ibn Ishāq, who stated, ‘Al-Mughira b. Uthmān b. Muḥammad b. Uthmān related to me, along with al-Akhnas b. Sharīq, from Abū Salama b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. ‘Awf, who said, “The first address given by the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Medina began with him standing before them and expressing appropriate praise and adoration for God, and then saying, ‘O people, send forward for yourselves! You well know that any one of you may be struck down and so his flock be left with no shepherd. His Lord will then say to him – and there will be no interpreter or attendant to come between yourself and Him – “Did not My Messenger come to you and inform you? Did I not give you wealth and benefit? What is it you have sent forward for yourself?” And He will look to right and left but see nothing. Then the man will look in front of him and see only hell-fire. So, whoever is able to protect his face from the fire, even if only with a slice of dates, let him do so. If he finds nothing, then let him say one good word for thereby one good deed will be rewarded by 10 times its like, or even by 700 times. May peace be upon the Messenger of God, and the mercy and the blessings of God.”’”

Then the Messenger of God (SAAS) proceeded with the second sermon by saying, “Praise be to God! I praise Him and I seek His help. We seek refuge with God from the evil of ourselves and of our deeds. Whoever is guided by God will not be misled while he who is misled shall have no guide. I bear witness that there is no god but God, Who is unique and without associate. The finest words are those of God’s Book. Successful are those whose hearts have been embellished thereby by Him; those whom He has brought into Islam following disbelief and who chose these words above all human speech. Love those who love God and love Him with all your hearts. Do not tire of His words and of repeating them, nor harden your hearts towards them. From everything that God creates He makes His selection and choice. He has thus mentioned the best of these deeds and the best of persons who perform these deeds. He has also described healthy speech, along with those things He regards as lawful and those that are forbidden. So worship God and associate no other god or person with Him and fear Him as is His due. Be faithful to Him in those good things you utter with your mouths. Love one another, the spirit of God being between you. God is angry if vows to Him are broken. Peace be upon you, and God’s mercy and blessings.”

The chain of authorities for this tradition, though incomplete, does add strength to the previous address, even if the phraseology differs.
Section: On the building of the holy mosque during the period of the residence of the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the home of Abū Ayyūb, may God be pleased with him.

There are differences of opinion as to the length of his stay there. Al-Waqidi stated seven months, while others refer to less than one month but God knows best.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Ishaq b. Mansūr related to him, from ʿAbd al-Ṣamad, who quotes a hadīth from his father, as follows, “Abū al-Tayyāḥ Yazīd b. Ḥumayd al-Ḍabī related to us, quoting Anas b. Mālik, who said, ‘When the Messenger of God (SAAS) came to Medina, he stayed in the upper part of the town in the quarter named for the Banū ‘Amr b. ‘Awf. He stayed among them for 14 nights, then sent a message to the chiefs of the Banū al-Najjār who came wearing their swords. It’s as if I can still see the Messenger of God (SAAS) riding his camel with Abī Bakr mounted behind him and the chiefs of the Banū al-Najjār all around him until they reached the courtyard of Abū Ayyūb’s house.

“‘He used to pray wherever he happened to be when time for prayer came; he would even pray in sheep pens.

“‘Then he ordered that the mosque be built. He summoned the chiefs of the Banū al-Najjār, and when they came he asked them, “O Banū al-Najjār, what price for this wall of yours?” They replied, “Oh no, by God, we’ll seek its price from God, the Almighty and Glorious, alone!”

“Anas Ibn Mālik then said ‘This wall enclosed the following: the graves of polytheists, ruins and date-palms. The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered that the graves be unearthed, the ruins levelled and the date-palms be cut down; this was done.

“‘They (created a wall of) palm trees at the qiblah (the front of the mosque), and constructed its two door posts out of stones. They set about gathering stones, chanting in rajaz verse as they did so. The Messenger of God (SAAS) worked along with them, saying, “O God, there is no good but that of the after-life; please aid the Helpers and the Emigrants!”’

Al-Bukhārī related this in other places, as did Muslim from a hadīth of Abū ʿAbd al-Ṣamad and ʿAbd al-Wārīth b. Saʿīd.

A hadīth from the saḥīh of al-Bukhārī quoted earlier, from al-Zuhri, from ʿUrwa, stated that the mosque had been a mirbād – a shed for dates – belonging to two orphan youths, Sahl and Suhayl, who were under the care of Asʿād b. Zurāra. The Messenger of God (SAAS) made an offer of money to them but they replied, “No; we will give it to you, Messenger of God.” But he refused, and bought it from them instead and then built a mosque on it.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) would chant as he moved the earth along with the others,

“This load is not a load of Khaybar; this, O Lord, is cleaner and purer.”

And he would say,
“O God, real reward is that of the other world, so have mercy on the Helpers and the Emigrants.”

Mūsā b. ʿUqba related that Asʿad b. Zurār compensated the orphans for the land with some date-palms he had on land that was otherwise uncultivated but he also mentions the view that the Messenger of God (SAAS) bought it from them.

My own comment is that Muḥammad b. ʿIṣḥāq also related that the date shed was owned by two orphaned youths who were under the care of Muḥammad b. ʿAfrā’, and that they were Sahl and Suhayl, both sons of ʿAmr. But God knows best.

Al-Bayhaqi related through ʿAbū Bakr b. Abū al-Dunya, quoting ʿAbī Bakr b. Abī al-Dunya, quoting ʿAbī Bakr b. ʿUmar, quoting ʿAbd al-Razāq b. Sulaymān, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. ʿAli b. Ṣaḥbān, that the mosque had been built at the time of the Prophet (SAAS) from bricks and that it had a roof of palm fronds, with pillars made of palm trunks. Abū Bakr made no improvements to it, but ʿUmar enlarged it, rebuilding it in the same manner as in the time of the Prophet (SAAS), that is, with bricks and palm fronds; he also restored its wooden pillars. ʿUthmān, God bless him, made changes and major additions. He had its walls built with cut stone and plaster, its pillars of stone and its roof of teak.”
Al-Bukhari related this similarly from ‘Ali b. al-Madini, from Ya’qūb b. Ibrāhīm.

My own comment is that in adding to it, ʿUthmān b. ʿAffān, God bless him, was putting into effect the words of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), “Whoever builds a mosque for God, even if only like the hollowed out nest of a sand-grouse, will have a house built for him by God in paradise.”

The Companions living at that time agreed with him in this, and they made no changes after ʿUthmān. This gives support to the preponderant view of the scholars that the rules applicable to the original structure will also apply to the extensions made to that structure and thus, those who perform their prayer in that new section will also share in the virtues allotted to those who pray in the original section. Included in this is the waiver of the prohibition of undertaking a journey to any sacred place except the ka’ba and the Prophet’s mosque.42

It was expanded in the time of al-Walīd b. ʿAbd al-Malik, the builder of the Damascus mosque. Its expansion was undertaken at his orders by ʿUmar b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz when he was governor of Medina. He added to it the ḥujrat al-nabawīyya, the burial chamber of the Prophet (ṢAAS). Substantial later additions were made to it. On the side of the prayer niche it was expanded, so much so that the original niche and the rawda, the promenade, became positioned after the front rows, as it is to be seen today.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stayed with Aba Ayyab until his mosque and apartments were built. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) himself worked in it to inspire the Muslims with a desire to work there. Both Emigrants and Helpers co-operated busily in this. One Muslim worker spoke the verse,

“For us to sit while the Prophet worked would indeed be misdirected action.”

As they worked the Muslims chanted,

“There’s no life but that of the hereafter; O God, have mercy on both Helpers and Emigrants.”

The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) himself spoke the words,

“There’s no life but that of the hereafter; O God, have mercy on both Emigrants and Helpers.”43

42. This statement alludes to the teachings of the Prophet regarding the sanctity of the mosque. In one tradition he said that those who perform a single prayer in his mosque will have it increased a thousand fold.

43. The point of this quotation, in which the positions of the Arabic words for Emigrants and Helpers are transposed thus spoiling the meter, seems to be to provide evidence that the Prophet (ṢAAS) had no ear for verse, therefore further establishing the divine origin of the Qurʾān. See also Sir William Muir: The Life of Muhammad London, 1877, p. 184.
'Ammār b. Yasir came in, overloaded with bricks, and said, "O Messenger of God, they're killing me by loading me with what they wouldn't carry!"

Umm Salama said, "I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) wipe his hand through his long, thick hair - which was curly - and say, 'Alas, Ibn Sumayya, it's not them killing you but the evil gang who will!'"

This tradition is devoid of a link from this line; indeed it is problematic between Muhammad b. Ishāq and Umm Salama. Muslim, in his sahih collection, joined it back to a hadith of Shu'ba, from Khalid al-Hadhdha', from Sa'id and al-Hasan, that is from the two sons of Abū al-Hasan of Baṣra, from their mother Khayra, the freed-woman of Umm Salama, from Umm Salama, who said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, 'The evil gang will kill 'Ammār.'" He also related it from a hadith of Ibn 'Aliyya, from Ibn 'Awn, from al-Hasan, from his mother, from Umm Salama, which reports that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said to 'Ammār as he was transporting rocks, "Alas for you, O Ibn Sumayya! The evil gang will kill you!"

'Abd al-Razzāq stated, "Ma'mar related to us, from al-Hasan, from his mother, from Umm Salama, who said, 'While the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his Companions were building the mosque, his men would carry the bricks one at a time, while 'Ammār would carry two, one for himself and one for the Prophet (SAAS). So the latter patted him on the back and said, 'Ibn Sumayya, the others will get a reward, but you will receive two. And the last food for you will be a drink of milk and the evil gang will kill you!'"

This chain of authorities is in accordance with the criteria established in both sahih collections.

Al-Bayhaqi and others tell us, through a group, from Khalid al-Hadhdha', from Ikrima, from Abū Sa'id al-Khudari, who said, "While building the mosque we would be carrying bricks one by one, while 'Ammār would bear them two at a time. The Prophet (SAAS) saw him and, while wiping the dust off his said, 'Alas, poor 'Ammār! The evil gang will kill him. He will invite them to paradise, while they will invite him to the fire!' 'Ammār commented, 'I seek refuge with God from strife!'"

Imam al-Bukhari, however, related this hadith from Musaddad, from 'Abd al-'Aziz b. al-Mukhtar, from Khalid al-Hadhdha'; and from Ibrahim b. Musa, from 'Abd al-Wahhab al-Thaqafi, from Khalid al-Hadhdha'. However, that account does not mention his use of the words, "The evil gang will kill you!"

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "It is as if he left this out only due to what Muslim related from one route, from Abu Nadra, from Abu Sa'id, who said, 'Someone better than myself told me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) while setting about digging the khandaq, "the trench", wiped his head and said to 'Ammār, 'Alas for Ibn Sumayya! An evil gang will kill him!"'

Muslim also related this, from a hadith of Shu'ba, from Abu Muslim, from Abu Nadra, from Abu Sa'id who said, "One of my betters, Abu Qatada, related to me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said to 'Ammār b. Yasir, 'Alas for you, Ibn Sumayya! The evil gang will kill you!"
Abū Dā'ūd Al-Ṭayālīsī said, “Wuhayh informed us from Dā'ūd Ibn Abū Hind from Abū Naḍrā, from Abū Sa'īd who said: ‘When the Prophet (ṢAAS) undertook the excavation of the trench, people generally carried one brick each. ‘Ammār however, who was recuperating from an ailment, carried two bricks at a time. Abū Sa'īd said: ‘A Companion informed me that the Prophet (ṢAAS) would wipe the dust off his head and say: ‘Alas for you, Ibn Sumayya! The evil gang will kill you!’”

Al-Bayhaqī stated, “He distinguished between what he had himself heard and what he heard from his Companions.”

He said, “It seems that his reference to ‘the trench’ is imagined, or that he said this to him both while building the mosque and while digging the trench. But God knows best.”

My own comment is that carrying bricks while digging a trench makes no sense. It seems obvious that there is confusion here. But God knows best.

This hadīth comes from the Dalā'il al-Nubūwaḥ (Signs of the Prophethood) wherein the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) tells ‘Ammār that the evil gang will kill him.

In fact he was killed by the Syrians at the battle of Siffin, ‘Ammār having fought with ‘Alī and the Iraqis.

‘Alī had greater right to rule than did Mu'āwiyah. But their being called bughāt, unjust, does not imply that the supporters of Mu'āwiyah have become unbelievers, as some ignorant persons do who belong to the Shi'ā, along with others as well. For even if they were essentially rebellious, they had in fact erred in their interpretation of the circumstances surrounding the conflict. And not everyone who undertakes interpretation is right; those who are right receive double reward, while those in error receive only one.

There are some who add after the words, “the evil gang will kill you” further words, “may my intercession not include them on Judgement Day”. In making such an addition they are falsely attributing statements to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); he did not say this, since it is not transmitted by any reputable source. But God knows best.

Regarding the words, “He invites them to paradise, while they invite him to the fire”, they refer to ‘Ammār and his friends inviting the Syrians to friendship and to unity, while the Syrians wanted to give preference to some over those whose right was greater, which would result in the people being divided, each one having its own leader. This would have led to dissention and division within the nation and resulted inevitably from their philosophy and policies, even though this was not what they intended. But God knows best.

But the subject at hand here relates mainly to the building of the mosque of the Prophet, may the best of blessings and peace be upon its constructor.

The ḥāfīz al-Bayhaqī stated in Dalā’il (The Signs) as follows, “The ḥāfīz Abū ʿAbd Allāh related to us by dictation, Abū Bakr b. Ishāq related to us, Ubayd b.
Shurayk informed us, Nuaym b. Hammād related to us, quoting ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Mubārak, Ḥashrāj b. Nubāta informed us, from Sa‘d b. Jumhān, from Safina, freed-man of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), who said, ‘Abū Bakr brought a stone and placed it down, then ‘Umar did the same, then ‘Uthmān did the same. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) commented, ‘These will succeed to power after myself.’”

He (al-Bayhaqi) then related this from a hadith of Yahyā b. ‘Abd al-Hamīd al-Himānī, from Ḥashrāj, from Sa‘d, from Safina, who said, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) built a mosque he put down a stone, saying, ‘Let Abū Bakr place a stone next to mine; let ‘Umar place his next to that of Abū Bakr, and let ‘Uthmān place his next to that of ‘Umar.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then said, “These shall be the Caliphs after me.”

This hadith through this line of transmission is gharib, “unique”.

What is well known is what Imam Ahmad related, from Abū al-Naḍr, from Ḥashrāj b. Nabāta al-‘Absi, and from Bahz and Zayd b. al-Ḥabbāb, and ‘Abd al-Ṣa‘d, and Ḥamād b. Salama, both authorities quoting Sa‘d b. Jamhān from Safina, who said, “I heard the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) say, ‘The Caliphate period will last for 30 years. Then thereafter will come the kingdom period.’ Safina then commented, ‘Count! The Caliphate of Abū Bakr lasted 2 years, that of ‘Umar 10 years, that of ‘Uthmān 12 years, and that of ‘Ali 6 years.’”

This wording is that of Ahmad. Abū Dā‘ūd, al-Tirmidhi and al-Nāṣāf related it through various lines from Sa‘d b. Jamhān. Al-Tirmidhi stated, “This hadith is hasan, ‘good’. We know of it only in this form and with the alternate wording, ‘The Caliphate after me will be for 30 years, and then will come a mordacious kingdom era.’” He then related the remainder of the tradition.

I would comment that when first built the mosque of the Prophet (ṢAAS) had no minbar from which to address the congregation. He would speak while leaning against a palm tree trunk in the wall next to the qibla near where he prayed. Eventually he began to use a minbar, as we will explain in its proper place. As he moved over towards it to make his address from it and passed by that tree trunk, it moaned like a love-lorned camel because it had always heard his speeches delivered near itself. And so the Prophet (ṢAAS) returned to it and hugged it until it settled down, just like a baby, and became quiet. Details of this will be given hereafter through various lines, from Sa‘d b. Sa‘d, al-Ṣa‘dī, Jābir, ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Umar, ‘Abd Allāh b. Ḥabbās, Anas b. Mālik and Umm Salama, God be pleased with them.

What more appropriate than the comment made by al-Hasan al-Basri after relating this story, from Anas b. Mālik, “O Muslims! A piece of wood so pining for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)! Do not men hoping to meet him have even more right to yearn for him?”
Imām Aḥmad stated, “Yahyā b. Anīs b. Abū Yahyā related to us, quoting his father, as follows, ‘I heard Abū Sa‘d al-Khudari say, ‘Two men, one from the Banū Khudra, the other from the Banū ‘Amr b. ‘Awf, disagreed over which mosque was referred to by the words in the Qurʾān, ‘the mosque founded in piety’ (ṣūrat al-Tawbah or al-Bara’ta; IX, v.108). The Khudari said, ‘It is the mosque of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).’ The ‘Amri insisted, ‘No, it’s the mosque at Qubā.’ So they went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and asked him about it. He replied, ‘It is this mosque,’ referring to that of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). ‘In that one,’ he went on, meaning the mosque at Qubā, ‘there is much good.’””

Al-Tirmidhī related this from Qutayba, from Ḥātim b. Ismā‘īl, from Anīs b. Abū Yahyā al-Aslami. He characterized it as hasan, sahih, “good”, “authentic”.

Imām Aḥmad, al-Tirmidhī and al-Nasā‘ī related, from Ishāq b. Ṭisā, from al-Layth b. Sa‘d, from Qutayba, from al-Layth from ʿImrān b. Abū Anas, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Abū Sa‘d, from his father, who said: “Two men argued over which was the mosque ‘founded in piety’. Thereafter this account proceeded as above.

In the sahih collection of Muslim, there is the hadith of Ḥumayd al-Kharrāt, from Abū Salama b. ʿAbd al-Rahmān, who is quoted as saying that he asked ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Abū Sa‘d, “What was it you heard your father say about the ‘mosque founded in piety’?” He replied, “My father said, ‘I went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and asked him about the ‘mosque founded in piety’. He picked up a handful of pebbles and dashed them to the ground, saying, ‘It is this, here, your mosque.’””

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Wāḥī related to us, as did Rabī‘a b. ʿUthmān al-Tamimi, from ʿImrān b. Abū Anas, from Sahil b. Sa‘d, who said, “Two men alive at the time of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) differed over which mosque was “founded in piety”. One of them said, “It is the mosque of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).” The other said, “No, it’s the mosque at Qubā.” So they went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and asked him. He replied, “It is this mosque of mine.”””

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Abū Nuʿaym related to us, quoting ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAmir al-Aslami, from ʿImrān b. Abū Anas, from Sahil b. Sa‘d, from Ubayy b. Ka‘b, that the Prophet (ṢAAS) said, ‘The mosque “founded in piety” was this mosque of mine.’”

These numerous sources come close to giving conclusive evidence that the mosque in question is that of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

ʿUmar, his son ʿAbd Allāh, Zayd b. Thabit, Sa‘d b. al-Musayyab and Ibn Jarir all agreed with this.
Others say that there is simply no contradiction between the revelation of this verse being applied to the mosque at Quba and these traditions. This is so, they say, because this mosque (i.e. the Medina mosque) is simply more worthy of such than is the other since it is one of the three mosques referred to as those worth striving to attend. This is established in both sahih collections from a hadith of Abū Hurayra, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, ‘Only three mosques should be the object of travel: this mosque of mine, the ʿāraḍ mosque (in Mecca) and the Bayt al-Maqdis mosque (in Jerusalem).’”

In the sahih collection of Muslim there is a tradition from Abū Saʿīd, from the Prophet (SAAS), who said, “Only three mosques should be the object of travel” and he named these. It is established in both sahih collections that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “A prayer in this mosque of mine is better than a thousand prayers in any other, with the exception of the ʿāraḍ mosque.”

In the hadith collection of Ahmād, with a good chain of authorities, there is mention of an additional, bounty namely the words, “And that one is better.”

In both collections, there is a hadith of Yahyā al-Qattān, from Ḥābiẓ, from Ḥāfiẓ b. ‘Āsim, from Abū Hurayra, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) stated, ‘Between my house and my pulpit there is one of the gardens of paradise, and my pulpit stands by my pool.’”

There are numerous traditions referring to the virtues of this holy mosque. We will report these in the large work al-Manāṣik min Kitāb al-Aḥkām, if God wills it. And in Him is all trust and reliance, and there is no power or strength except in God, the Powerful and Wise.

Imām Mālik and his associates support the view that the Medina mosque is superior to the ʿāraḍ mosque because the latter was built by Abraham, and the former by Muḥammad (SAAS); it being obvious that Muḥammad (SAAS) was superior to Abraham, God bless him.

However, the majority opinion opposes this view and maintains that the ʿāraḍ mosque is superior. This is because it is in a land made sacred by God at the time when He created the heavens and the earth. And it was made sacred by Abraham al-Khalil, “the True Friend”, peace be upon him, and Muḥammad, “the Seal of the Prophets”. The (mosque in Mecca) is thus endowed with qualities not present in any other. Discussion of this issue however, belongs elsewhere; and one turns to God for help.

DIVISION

The Messenger of God (SAAS) built apartments around his mosque which would be dwellings for himself and his family. These were small dwellings with narrow courtyards.

Al-Ḥasan b. Abū al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī stated, he having been a youth in the company of his mother Khayra, the freed-woman of Umm Salama, “I used to be able to reach up with my hand to the highest ceiling in the apartment of the Messenger of God (SAAS).”
I would observe, however, that al-Hasan al-Basri was large in size and tall. God bless him.

Al-Suhayli stated in al-Rawd (The Gardens), “The apartments of the Messenger of God (SAAS) were built of the stalks of palm leaves covered with mud and partly of stones stacked upon one another. The ceilings of all were made of palm fronds.”

This account was related from al-Hasan al-Basri.

His rooms were made of hair-cloth held together with juniper-tree wood.

In al-Bukhari’s work of history we learn that finger nails could knock on the door of the Messenger of God (SAAS); this shows that there were no cloth coverings over his doors.

He stated, “And after the deaths of the wives of the Messenger of God (SAAS) all these apartments were added to the mosque.”

Al-Waqidi, Ibn Jarir and others said, “When ‘Abd Allah b. ‘Urayqit al-Dift returned to Mecca, the Messenger of God (SAAS) and Abu Bakr dispatched Zayd b. Haritha and Abu Rafe, both freed-men of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to bring back their families from Mecca. They sent with them two loads of goods and 500 dirhams with which to purchase a camel of Qudayd. They left and soon returned with the two daughters of the Messenger of God (SAAS), Fathima and Umm Kulthum, his two wives, Sawda and ‘Aisha, and the latter’s mother, Umm Ruman, along with other members of his and Abu Bakr’s family, including the latter’s son, ‘Abd Allah. On the road back, the mounts of ‘Aisha and her mother Umm Ruman strayed apart and Umm Ruman began calling out, ‘Bride! My daughter!’ ‘Aisha later said, ‘I heard a voice say, ‘Let loose its bridle!’ So I did this and it stopped, at God’s will; we give praise to God the Almighty and Glorious.’ They stayed at al-Sunah on the way. Eight months later, in Shawwal, as we will relate, the Messenger of God (SAAS) consummated his marriage with ‘Aisha.

“Asma’, daughter of Abu Bakr and wife of al-Zubayr b. al-Awamm arrived also; she was pregnant and near term with ‘Abd Allah b. al-Zubayr, as we will relate in its proper place in material relating to the end of that year.

DIVISION

How the Emigrants suffered from the Medina fever, God be pleased with them all, though the Messenger of God (SAAS) was spared it through the strength and power of God; he prayed to his Lord who then drew it away from his city.

Al-Bukhari stated, “‘Abd Allah b. Wahab b. Yusuf related to us, quoting Malik b. Hisham b. Urwa, from his father, from ‘Aisha, who said, ‘Abu Bakr and Bilal fell sick around the time that the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived in Medina. I went in to see them and asked, ‘How are you, father? Bilal, how are you?’’

She said: ‘Whenever Abu Bakr developed a fever he would recite,
'Every man might arise among his family, yet his death be closer than his sandal thongs.'

"When the fever was raised from Bilāl he would raise his voice and say,

'O how happy I would be to spend a night in a valley covered with fresh grass and verdure,
Will I ever again descend to Majinna's waters, or see Shāma and Ṭufayl?"

'A'īsha went on, "So I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him and he said, 'O God, make Medina beloved by us as Mecca is, and more so; make it healthy and bless us in its foods. Turn aside its fever and send it off to al-Juḥfa!'"

Muslim related this from Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba from Hishām in abbreviated form.

In al-Bukhārī's account of it from Abū Usāma, from Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, from 'A'īsha, there is an addition after the verses of Bilāl. In this he says, "O God, curse Utba b. Rabī'a, Shayba b. Rabī'a and Umayya b. Khalaf alike for them having forced us out into the land of pestilence!"

"And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'O God, make Medina beloved by us, as Mecca is, and more so; make it healthy and bless us in its prosperity. Turn aside its fever and send it off to al-Juḥfa!'"

"She said, 'When we arrived in Medina, we found it the most pestilential place on God's earth. It was just two basin-shaped valleys wet with nājil, that is brackish water.'"

Ziyād quoted Muhammad b. Ishaq as follows, "Hishām b. Urwa and 'Umar b. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Urwa b. al-Zubayr related to me that 'A'īsha stated, 'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived in Medina, it was the most pestilential place on God's earth. His Companions fell sick from fever and illness, but God kept that away from His Prophet. Abū Bakr, 'Āmir b. Fuhayra and Bilāl, the two freed-men of Abū Bakr, were in one house, struck down by fever. I went in to them to visit them, that being before the ḥijāb, the veil, was prescribed for us. Only God knows how very sick they were. I approached Abū Bakr and said, 'How are you, father?' He replied, in verse:

"Every man might arise among his family, yet his death be closer than his sandal thongs!"

'I exclaimed, 'I swear, my father doesn't know what he is saying!' Then I went over to 'Āmir b. Fuhayra and asked, 'How are you, 'Āmir?' He replied, in verse,

"I have found death before tasting it; a coward has his demise right above him. Every man fights hard with all his power, as a bull protects its skin with its horns."

44. According to a footnote in the printed edition of Ibn Kathīr's text, the reference is to a town where largely Jews resided at the time, some 82 miles from Mecca.
"I exclaimed, "By God, he doesn't know what he is saying!" Bilāl was in the habit of resting in the courtyard of the house whenever the fever struck him, then he would raise his voice and say,

"O how happy I would be to spend a night in Fakh, while all around me was fresh grass and verdure. Will I ever again descend to Majinna's waters, or see Shāmā and ʿUfayl?"

"Āʾishā went on, 'I told the Messenger of God (SAAS) what I had heard from them, saying, "They are raving, irrational from the intensity of the fever." He replied, "O God, make Medina beloved by us as Mecca is, and more so; make it healthy and bless us in its prosperity. Turn aside its fever to Mahya'ā!' Mahya'ā is a reference to al-Juhfa.'" Imām Aḥmad stated, "Yūnūs related to us, quoting Layth, from Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb, from Abū Bakr b. Iṣḥāq b. Yāsār, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Urwa, from Urwa, from Āʾishā, who said, 'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) arrived in Medina, Abū Bakr and ʿAmīr b. Fuhayrā, Abū Bakr's freed-man, and Bilāl, fell sick.' Āʾishā asked permission from the Messenger of God (SAAS) to visit them, and he agreed. She then asked Abū Bakr, 'How are you?'

"He replied,

'Any man might arise among his family, yet his death be closer than his sandal thongs!'

"She then asked ʿAmīr and he replied,

'I have found death before tasting it; a coward has his demise right above him.'

"Then she asked Bilāl and he said,

'O how happy I would be to spend a night in Fakh, while all around me was fresh grass and verdure.'

"So she went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him. He then looked up to heaven and said, 'O God, make Medina beloved by us as Mecca is, and more so; make it healthy and bless us in its foods. Turn aside its fever to Mahya'ā.' This is a reference to al-Juhfa, so they claim.'"

Al-Nasāʾī related this similarly from Qutayba, from al-Layth. The Imām Ahmad related it through ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. al-Ḥārith from her as above.

Al-Bayhaqī stated, "The ḥafiz Abū ʿAbd Allāh related to us, quoting Abū Saʿīd b. Abū ʿAmr, both saying, 'Abū al-ʿAbbās al-ʿAṣamm related to us, quoting Ahmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbar and Yūnūs b. Bukayr, from Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, from Āʾishā, who said, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) came to Medina and it was the most pestilential place on God's earth. It was just two basin-shaped valleys wet with najl, brackish water.'"

Hishām stated, "Its pestilential nature was well known before Islam. When the valley was disease-ridden and a man were to arrive there, he would be told to neigh like a donkey; if he did this the valley's pestilence would not harm him. A poet once said, coming to Medina, "By my life, if I, fearing death, were to emit a donkey’s neighing, I would be expressing my anxiety."

Al-Buhārī related from a ḥadīth of Mūsā b. Uqba, from Sālim, from his father, that the Prophet (ṢAAS) said, “I saw what seemed like a black woman, her head in disarray, emerge from Medina and travel to Mahyā‘a, which is al-Juhfā. I interpreted from this that Medina’s pestilence had been transformed to Mahyā‘a, that is, to al-Juhfā.”

This wording is from al-Buhārī. Muslim did not give this tradition. Al-Tirmidhi did relate it and pronounced it authentic, while al-Nassā‘ī and Ibn Mā‘āj gave it from a ḥadīth of Mūsā b. Uqba.

Ḥammād b. Zayd related, from Hishām b. Urwa, from ʿA‘isha, who said, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arrived at Medina the pestilence was active.” She related the tradition in full as above but gave the final words of the Messenger of God as “remove its fever to al-Juhfā!”

Hishām stated, “A child born in al-Juhfā never reached adolescence without being struck down by the fever.”

Al-Bayhaqī related this in the Dalīl al-Nubuwwah (Signs of the Prophethood).

Yūnus stated, from Ibn Ishāq, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arrived in Medina, the pestilence was active. All his Companions became seriously stricken with that. But God kept it away from his Prophet (ṢAAS).”

It is established in both sahih collections, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his Companions arrived in Mecca flushed and feverish in the year they made the ‘umrāt al-qā‘idā‘, the fulfilment pilgrimage, and the polytheists said, ‘There’s a group of them arriving who are weakened by the Medina fever.’ And so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered his Companions to jog around the ka‘ba except between the two corners where they were permitted to walk. And it was only his concern for them that deterred him from making them jog throughout the performance of the ritual.” I observe that the ‘umrāt al-qā‘idā‘ took place in the year 7 AH, in the month of Dhūl-Qa‘dā‘. Either his prayer to God to remove the pestilence elsewhere had been delayed to some time close to this, or that it had been removed but some few traces of it had remained. Or they were still suffering from some remaining effects of a previous affliction. But God knows best.

Ziyād stated, quoting Ibn Ishāq, “Ibn Shihāb al-Zuhrī related from ʿAbd Allāh b. ‘Amr b. al-ʿĀṣ, that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his Companions arrived in Medina they became seriously ill from the Medina fever, to the extent that they had to say their prayers seated. However, God kept this affliction from affecting His Prophet (ṢAAS).”

The account states, “And so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went out before them while they were praying in this way and told them, ‘You should know that the prayer of someone seated is only half as valuable as that of someone standing. At this the Muslims, despite their weakness and sickness, exerted themselves to stand, in order to gain grace."

Section: On the establishment of friendship between the Emigrants and the Helpers through the document he had drawn up between them. On the nature of that brotherly relationship he made between them, and on the friendly relations he established with the Jews who were in Medina.

In the city's Jewish quarters at that time there were the Qaynuqâ, Naḍîr and Qurayṣa tribes.

According to al-Ṭabarî they had settled in the Hijāz before the anṣār, the Helpers, in the days of Nebuchadnezzar, when he had conquered Jerusalem.

When the Iram flood occurred and people had scattered in all directions, the Aws and the Khazraj tribes had settled in Medina with the Jews. They had established pacts of alliance with these Jews and imitated their ways because of the virtue they saw in them that they had acquired through the prophets.

However, God had bestowed guidance and Islam upon those who had been polytheists, while they, in their envy, pride and wrongheadedness, had failed to follow the truth.

Imâm Ahmad stated, "Affân related to us, quoting Ḥammâd b. Salama and Āṣîm al-Āḥwâl, from Anas b. Mâlik, as follows, 'The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) established a pact between the Emigrants and the Helpers in the house of Anas b. Mâlik.'"

This was also related by Imâm Ahmad, al-Bukhârî, Muslim and Abû Dâ'îd, through various lines of transmission from Āṣîm b. Sulaymân al-Āḥwâl, from Anas b. Mâlik, who said, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) established a pact between Quraysh and the Helpers in my house."

Imâm Aḥmad stated, "Naṣr b. Bâb related to us, from Ḥajjâj, he being Ibn Artât, who said, 'It was related to us by Surayj from 'Abbâd, from Ḥajjâj, from 'Amr b. Shu'ayb, from his father and grandfather, to the effect that the Prophet (ṢAAS) wrote up a contract between the Emigrants saying that they would respect one another's strongholds, that they would treat with kindness those in distress and bring peace between the Muslims.'"

Aḥmad stated, "Surayj related to us, quoting 'Abbâd, from Ḥajjâj, from al-Ḥakam, from Qâsim, from Ibn 'Abbâs, much the same account."

Imâm Aḥmad is alone in giving this.

The saḥîh collection of Muslim quotes Jabîr as saying, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wrote an "aqâla", a blood-wit pact, for each sub-tribe."

Muḥammad b. Ishâq stated, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) wrote a contract between the Emigrants and the Helpers in which he expressed conciliation towards the Jews and made a pact with them, confirming them in their religion and their properties. He stipulated their rights and obligations as follows, 'In the name of God, the Merciful, the Beneficent, this is a document from Muḥammad, the ummi (unlettered) Prophet, between the believers and Muslims of Quraysh..."
and Yathrib and their followers, allies and supporters, establishing that they are one nation apart from all others. The Emigrants from Quraysh will maintain their current practice and will honour blood-money contracts between themselves and will treat their weaker members with kindness and justice. The Banū Āwfi shall maintain their current practice, and honour their former blood-money contracts, each party treating their weaker members with kindness and justice, among all believers.'

"He then made reference to each clan of the Helpers and to the families of each home, mentioning the Banū Sā'īda, the Banū Jusham, the Banū al-Najjār, the Banū 'Amr b. Āwfi and the Banū al-Nabīt.

"He went on to say, 'The believers shall not leave anyone among them burdened by debts without giving to him in kindness and in paying for him any ransom money or blood-money he owes. A believer will not ally with any freed-man of a second believer against that man. Pious believers act against any of their own who practise evil or seek to bring harm, sin, aggression or corruption among believers. Believers will unite against anyone doing this, even if he be one of their sons. No believer shall kill any believer for any non-believer. Nor shall he help any non-believer against a believer. God's protection is all one; the least of them (believers) can offer protection to others. Believers are allies to one another, excluding others.

"Whatever Jews follow us shall receive help and equality. They shall not be maltreated nor will help be afforded others against them. Peace for all believers is one; no peace shall be accepted for any one believer to the exclusion of others when the battle is for God's cause; among them equality and justice must prevail. In every expedition we engage in riders shall take turns on their mounts.

"Believers shall avenge one another for blood shed in God's cause. Believers who are pious are well-guided on the straightest of paths. No polytheist shall be allowed to offer protection for the property or persons of Quraysh nor try to interfere with any believer. Anyone who has clearly aggressed against and caused the death of any believer shall be subject to retaliation for him unless the dead man's executor can be satisfied. Believers as a whole shall take action against him and no excuse for their not doing so will be acceptable.

"It shall not be permissible for any believer who has accepted what is in this document and who believes in God and Judgement Day to give help or shelter to any wrong-doer. Any believer who does this shall be the object of God's curses and anger on Judgement Day and neither compensation nor excuse will be acceptable from him. Any matter in which you disagree must be referred to God, Almighty and Glorious is He, and to Muhammad (SAAS).

"The Jews shall pay expenses along with the Muslims so long as they are allied in warfare. The Jews of the Banū Āwfi are one nation with the believers; the Jews shall have their religion, the Muslims their own. This applies to their freed-men and to themselves, except for those who commit sins and are unjust. Such persons only harm themselves and their families.

"What applies to Banū Āwfi shall also apply to the Jews of Banū al-Najjār, Banū al-Ḥārith, Banū Sā'īda, Banū Jusham, Banū al-Aws, Banū Thaqība and Jufna, and Banū al-Shuṭayba. The close associates of the Jews shall be viewed as themselves. None of them shall go to war without Muḥammad’s permission. However, he is not (thereby) constrained from taking revenge for injury. Whoever attacks another may do so (to protect) himself and his family, but (act) not unjustly, for God condemns such acts. The Jews shall bear their own expenses, the Muslims theirs. Each must help one another against any who fight those who adopt this document. They must give one another advice and consultation; and do good and avoid evil. A man is not held blameworthy on behalf of his ally. Help must be given to those wronged. The centre of Yathrib shall be a sanctuary for those who agree to this document. One’s neighbour shall be treated as oneself, without being harmed or sinned against. No property shall be encroached upon without the permission of its owner.

“In the case of any dispute or incident occurring between those agreeing to this document, and involving consequences likely to be harmful, the matter must be referred to God and to Muḥammad, the Messenger of God. God acknowledges what is very good and very pious in this document. Quraysh and those who help them shall receive no protection. (Those accepting this document) must help one another against anyone attacking Yathrib. If they are called upon to make peace and do so and keep to it, they will be making peace; if they make a similar demand, then it is up to the Muslims to agree except if the warfare is over the Faith. Each participant shall receive whatever portion is due to him from his own side’s winnings.

“This document will not provide protection for anyone sinful or unjust. Whoever goes to war will be safe; whoever stays in the town will be safe—except for those who have sinned or been unjust. God provides protection for those who are good and pious.”

Ibn Ishāq gives it in approximately this form. Abū Ubayd al-Qāsim b. Salām, God bless him, criticized this ḥadith at length in his Kitāb al-Gharib (Book of the Strange) and elsewhere.

Section: On the establishment by the Messenger of God (S.A.W.S) of a pact of brotherhood between the Emigrants and the Helpers so that they would be friends.

As the Almighty stated, “And those who made their abode in the town and in the faith before them do love those who emigrated to them. They do not find in their hearts a need for what they are given, and prefer (them) even before themselves, despite their own poverty. Those who are saved from the meanness of themselves shall be successful” (ṣūrat al-Ḥashr; LIX, v.9). And He also said, “as for those with whom you made agreements, give them their due; God is witness to all things” (ṣūrat al-Nisāʾ; IV, v.33).

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Al-Ṣalt b. Muḥammad related to us, quoting Abū Usāma, from ʿĪdris, from Ṭalḥa b. Muṣarrīf, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, that Ibn ʿAbbās, commenting on the following verse, ‘And to everyone we have appointed heirs’ (ṣūrat al-Nisāʾ; IV, v.33), said “The heirs of “those with whom you made agreements” were the Emigrants who settled in Medina. They inherited from the Helpers (and vice versa) instead of from their own family, based on the brotherhood pact established between them by the Prophet (SAAS). However, when the verse “and to everyone we have appointed agents” was revealed, this practice was abrogated. Then He stated that the following verse, “as for those with whom you have made agreements, give them their due”, henceforth referred to help, hospitality and advice. Inheritance was thus stopped and instead, testamentary endowment was made for such persons.”

Imām Ḥamdān stated, “The following was quoted from Sufyān, ‘I heard ʿĀṣim say, on the authority of Anas, “The Prophet (SAAS) made a pact between the Emigrants and the Helpers in our home.”’ Sufyān commented, “He seems to be saying that he established brotherhood between them.”

Muḥammad b. Iṣhāq stated, “The following was quoted from Sufyān, ‘I heard ʿĀṣim say, on the authority of Anas, “The Prophet (SAAS) made a pact between the Emigrants and the Helpers in our home.”’ Sufyān commented, “He seems to be saying that he established brotherhood between them.”

Imām Ḥamdān stated, “The following was quoted from Sufyān, ‘I heard ʿĀṣim say, on the authority of Anas, “The Prophet (SAAS) made a pact between the Emigrants and the Helpers in our home.”’ Sufyān commented, “He seems to be saying that he established brotherhood between them.”

I observe that this chain of authorities comes through two lines. He went on, “Abī Dharr Barīr b. Junāda and al-Mundhir b. ʿAmr, known as ‘he who hurried on to death’, Ḥaṭīb b. Abū Balṭāʿa and Uwaym b. ʿAqīda, Salmān and Abū al-Dardāʾ, Ḍilāl and Abū Ruwayḥa ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd al-Rāḥmān al-Khathʿāmi, one of the Fāzāʾ – all these became brothers.”

He continued, “These are the men who were named to us from among his Companions between whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) established pacts of brotherhood. May God be pleased with them all.”
I observe that there is controversy in some of what Ibn Ishaq stated.

Regarding the brotherhood established between the Prophet and 'Ali, some scholars deny this and maintain it to be untrue. Their argument is that this brotherhood was only established to bring about closer feelings and ties between these individuals. There was no sense, therefore, in declaring a brotherly state between the Prophet (SAAS) and one of (his) own, nor between two men both of whom were Emigrants, as was the case, according to him, between Hamza and Zayd b. Haritha.

Unless the Prophet (SAAS) did not wish to place the interests of 'Ali in the hands of anyone but himself. For he was someone for whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) had made contributions from his youth on, during the lifetime of Abu Talib, as has been told above from Mujahid and others.

That might also be the case with Hamza, who had looked after the interests of their freed-man Zayd b. Harritha, and so established a brotherhood pact with him. But God knows best.

The same applies to Ibn Ishaq’s reference to the brotherhood between Ja’far and Musad b. Jabal, which is subject to dispute, as ‘Abd al-Malik b. Hisham observed. For Ja’far b. Abu Talib only arrived at the beginning of 7 AH at the time of the battle of Khaybar, as will be told hereafter. How, therefore, could there have been a tie of brotherhood made between him and Musad b. Jabal immediately following the arrival of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Medina? Unless, of course, the arrangement was that this would go into effect whenever he did arrive.

Ibn Ishaq’s statement, “Abu Ubayda and Sa’d b. Mu’adh became brothers,” contradicts what Imam Ahmad stated, namely, “It was related to us by ‘Abd al-‘Samad, quoting Hammad, quoting Thabit, from Anas b. Malik, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) established a brotherhood pact between Abu Ubayda b. al-Jarrâh and Abu Talha.”

Muslim related this also, being the only one to relate this from Hajjaj b. al-Shaârî, from ‘Abd al-‘Samad b. ‘Abd al-Wârith.

This seems more reliable than what Ibn Ishaq recounted, of such a pact between Abu Ubayda and Sa’d b. Mu’adh. But God knows best.

Al-Bukhârî’s text reads as follows, “Chapter on how the Prophet (SAAS), established brotherhood between his Companions. ‘Abd al-Rahmân b. ‘Awf stated, ‘The Prophet (SAAS), established a bond of brotherhood between myself and Sa’d b. al-Rabi when we came to Medina.’” Abu Ju‘ayba stated, “The Prophet (SAAS) established brotherhood between Salmân the Persian and Abu al-Darda. God be pleased with him.”

Muhammad b. Yûsuf related to us, quoting Sufyân, from Humayd, from Anas, who said, “Abd al-Rahmân b. ‘Awf arrived and the Prophet (SAAS) established brotherhood between him and Sa’d b. al-Rabi, the Helper. The latter suggested that he share his family and his property with him. ‘Abd al-Rahmân replied, ‘God bless you in both your family and your wealth. Show me the way to the market.’
There he made some profit from cottage cheese and fat. The Prophet (SAAS) saw him a few days later and he looked stained with yellow upon him. The Prophet (SAAS) asked him, ‘What’s the matter with you, ‘Abd al-Rahmān?’ He replied, ‘I married a woman from among the Helpers.’ ‘What did you give her as dowry?’ he asked. ‘The weight of 5 dirhams worth of gold,’ he replied. The Prophet (SAAS) responded, ‘Well, have a feast, if only with a sheep!’”

This is the sole account of this from this line. Al-Bukhārī related this also in other places as did Muslim from various lines, from Ḥumayd.

Imām Ahmad stated, “‘Afān related to us, quoting Ḥamīd, Thābit and Ḥamīd, from Anas, that ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. ‘Awf came to Medina and the Messenger of God (SAAS) established a pact of brotherhood between him and Sa’d b. al-Rabi‘, the Helper. Sa’d said to him, ‘Now brother, I’m the wealthiest man in Medina. Take a share that appeals to you. I have two wives. Look and see which of them you prefer and I’ll divorce her!’

‘Aḥd al-Rahmān observed, ‘I was in such a state that if I had lifted a single rock I would have hoped to find gold and silver.’”

The additional comment given here by al-Bukhārī from ‘Abd al-Rahmān seems strange, for the only source given for it was Anas. Unless, of course, Anas was told this by ‘Abd al-Rahmān. God knows best.

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Yazīd related to us, that Ḥumayd informed him, from Anas, as follows, ‘The Emigrants said, “O Messenger of God, we’ve never been to people who are better prepared to give help in hopes of so little or more willing to give from so much. They have spared us such difficulty and shared such comfort with us we’re afraid they’re the only ones getting rewards.” He replied, “No, there’s all the great praise you’ve given them, and you have also prayed to God for them.”’”

The line of transmission of this hadith is two-thirds in accord with the criteria for both sahih collections. None of the authors of the six canonical books of traditions give this particular line. It is established in the sahih collections along a different path.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Al-Hakam b. Nāfī‘ informed us, quoting Shu‘ayb, quoting Abū al-Zinād, from al-A‘raj, from Abū Hurayra, who said, ‘The Helpers said, “Divide up the palm trees between us and our brothers.”’ ‘No,’” he replied. They said, “You recompense us with your hard work, and we will have you share in the fruits.” “We hear and obey,” they responded.”
He is alone in giving this hadith.

‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Zayd b. Aslam said, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) told the Helpers, ‘Your brothers have left behind their wealth and their children and have come forth to you.’ They commented, ‘Our property is to be divided up between us then.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked, ‘Well, is there some alternative?’ ‘What could there be, O Messenger of God?’ they asked. He replied, ‘These are people who don’t mind hard work; provide some for them and share the fruits.’ ‘We will,’ they agreed.”

We have previously mentioned the reports and references made concerning the virtues of the Helpers and their fine qualities confirmed by God’s words, “And those who made their abode in the town and in the faith before them” (ṣūrat al-Ḥashr; LIX, v.9).

Chapter: On the death of Abū Umāma As‘ad b. Zurāra.

He was Ibn ‘Adas b. Ubayd b. Tha‘lab b. Ghanm b. Mālik b. al-Najjār, one of the 12 leaders on the night of the pledge made by his people the Banū al-Najjār at al-Qa‘aba. He was present at all 3 meetings there, and was the first to make a verbal pledge of his allegiance to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) at the second. He was a young man and was the first to bring the men together in Medina, at Naṣi‘ al-Khadamāt in the plain of the Nabit. This has been discussed above.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Abū Umāma As‘ad b. Zurāra died in these months, while the mosque was being built. He died from diphtheria or from coughing.”

The men in this chain of authorities are considered reliable.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Abd Allah b. Abū Bakr b. Muhammad b. ‘Amr b. Ḥazm related to me, from Yahyā b. ‘Abd Allah b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. As‘ad b. Zurāra, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, “The death of Abū Umāma is a great pity with respect to the Jews and the Arab hypocrites. They will say, ‘If he were a prophet, his companion would not have died.’ But I have no power from God over this for myself or for my friends.’”

This means that he has to have been the first man to die after the arrival in Medina of the Prophet (ṢAAS).

Abū al-Hasan b. al-Athir has claimed in al-Ghāba (The Jungle) that he died in the month of Shawwāl, seven months following the arrival of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in Medina. But God knows best.

Muḥammad Ibn Ishaq related, from Ḥāṣim b. Umar b. Qatāda, that the Banū al-Najjār asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to appoint a leader for them to succeed Abū Umāma As‘ad b. Zurāra. He replied, “You are my uncles and I am here among you; I will be your leader.” He disliked the idea of singling out any one of them above the others. It was a credit to the Banū al-Najjār that they took pride among their peers in having the Messenger of God (SAAS) as their leader.

Ibn al-Athīr observed, “This fact refutes the statements of Abū Nu‘aym and Ibn Mundah to the effect that As‘ad b. Zurāra was leader of the Banū Sā‘īda; in fact he led the Banū al-Najjār.”

Ibn al-Athīr was correct in saying this.

Abū Ja‘far b. Jarir stated in his history work, “The first Muslim who died after the arrival of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Medina was, so they say, the owner of his house, Kulthūm b. al-Hadh. He died soon after his arrival. The next to die was As‘ad b. Zurāra, whose death was that same year of his arrival and before the construction of the mosque was completed. He died of either diphtheria or from coughing.”

I observe here that the full name of this man was Kulthūm b. al-Hadh b. Imru‘ul-Qays b. al-Ḥārith b. Zayd b. Ḫayyād b. Malik b. ‘Awf b. ‘Amr b. ‘Awf b. Malik b. al-Aws, the Helper and member of the Aws tribe. Of the family of ‘Amr b. ‘Awf, he was a very elderly sheikh who had accepted Islam before the arrival of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Medina. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) came there he stayed at night in Qubā in Kulthūm’s house, and then during the day would talk with his Companions in the home of Sa‘d b. al-Rabi‘, God be pleased with them both, until he moved to the home of the Banū al-Najjār, as related above.

Ibn al-Athīr stated, “It has been said that he was the first Muslim to die following the arrival of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and that the death of As‘ad b. Zurāra followed his. Al-Ṭabarī stated this.”

Chapter: On the birth of ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr in the month of Shawwāl in the year when the emigration occurred.

The first birth to the Emigrants in the Islamic era was ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr. Similarly, al-Nu‘mān b. Bashīr was the first child born to the Helpers after the emigration. God be pleased with them both.

Some claim that Ibn al-Zubayr was born 20 months after the emigration. Abū al-Aswād said this. Al-Waqīqī related this from Muḥammad b. Yahyā b. Sahl b. Abū Ḥathma, from his father, from his grandfather.

They claim that al-Nu‘mān was born 6 months before al-Zubayr, some 14 months after the emigration.

The truth is as we have said above. Al-Bukhārī stated, “Zakariyyā b. Yahyā related to us, quoting Abū Usāma, from Hishām b. ‘Urwa, from his father, from ‘Asmā, who said, regarding her pregnancy with ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr, “When I emigrated, I was at term. When I came to Medina I stayed in Qubā and gave birth to him there. Then I took him to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and placed him in his lap. He then called for a date, which he masticated then spat into his mouth. And so the first thing that entered the baby’s stomach was the saliva of the Messenger of God (SAAS). He then gave him a date to chew on, prayed for him and blessed him. He was the first baby born in Islam.” This account was followed by one of Khalid b. Makhlad, from ‘Ali b. Mushir, from Hishām, from his father, from Asmā’, to the effect that she was pregnant when she emigrated to the Prophet (SAAS).

Qutayba related to us, from Abū Usāma, from Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, from ʿĀʾisha, who said, “The first child born in Islam was ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zubayr. They brought him to the Prophet (SAAS) and he took a date which he chewed, then placed in the baby’s mouth. And so the first food that entered his stomach was the saliva of the Prophet (SAAS).”

This refutes al-Waqi‘i and others, because he reported that the Prophet (SAAS) sent Zayd b. Hāritha and Abū Rāfi‘ back to Mecca with ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUrāqī to bring his and Abū Bakr’s children. They brought them back right after the emigration of the Prophet (SAAS). Asmā’ was pregnant and near term, that is almost ready to deliver her child. When she did so the Muslims let out great shouts of “God is Most Great” in their joy at the birth because it had come to their attention that the Jews had used magic against them so that they would not have children following their emigration. And so God had refuted what the Jews were claiming.

DIVISION

The Messenger of God (SAAS) consummated his marriage with ʿĀʾisha in the month of Shawwāl that year.

Imām Ahmad stated, “Waki‘ related to me, quoting Sufyān, from Ismā‘īl b. Umayya, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Urwa, from his father, from ʿĀʾisha, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) made a marriage contract with me in (the month of) Shawwāl and consummated the marriage in Shawwāl; and which of his wives did he favour more than myself?’

ʿĀʾisha used to prefer to have her women marry in Shawwāl.

Muslim, al-Tirmidhi, al-Nasa‘ī, and Ibn Majā related this on various paths from al-Thawrī. Al-Tirmidhi considered it hasan saḥīh,46 “good and authentic”; we know of it only from Sufyān al-Thawrī.

According to this the marriage of the Messenger of God (SAAS) to ʿĀʾisha took place in the seventh or eighth month after the emigration. Both statements were related by Ibn Jarir, who commented earlier, in his treatment of his marriage with Sawda, on how he had married ʿĀʾisha after they had arrived in Medina, and that his marriage was at al-Sunḥ and during the daytime. This is in contrast to the normal practice of people today. In his marrying her in Shawwāl there is a refutation of those who express disfavour for marriage occurring between the two feasts, out of fear of the couple’s later separation. There is nothing to this, as is shown by what 'A'isha said in reply to those people who imagined this for that time, that is, she said, “He made the marriage contract with me in Shawwal and consummated the marriage in Shawwal; and which of his wives did he favour more than myself?”

This shows that she understood from him that she was the wife he favoured most. And this belief of hers is shown to have been correct by various clear proofs, if only by that definite statement given in the sahih collection of al-Bukhari from 'Amr b. al-As which states, “I said, O Messenger of God, which person do you most favour?” He replied, “'A'isha.” I then asked, “And which man?” “Her father,” he replied.

DIVISION

Ibn Jarir stated, “That same year, the first year of the hegira, the length of the salat al-hadiqar, the prayer while at home, was increased by two rak'at,\(^{47}\) prayer cycles, or so it is said. Previously both the prayer at home and while travelling had been two rak'at. This came about after the arrival of the Messenger of God (SAAS) on the 12th of Rabie al-akhir.”

He said, “Al-Waqidi maintained that there was no dispute among the people of Hijaz on this subject.”

I observe that previously I have given the hadith related by al-Bukhari through Ma'mar, from al-Zuhri, from Urwa, from 'A'isha, who said, “When first made obligatory, prayer was prescribed as needing two rak'at. This was affirmed for prayer while travelling, but it was increased for prayer while at home.”

This was also related through al-Shafi'i back to Masruq.

Al-Bayhaqi related, from al-Hasan al-Basri, that when the prayer at home was first made obligatory, it was established as four rak'at. But God knows best.

We discussed this in the exegesis of surat al-Nisaa, with regards to the words of the Almighty, “And when you travel over the earth, there is no blame on you if you shorten the prayer” (surat al-Nisaa; IV, v.101).

Chapter: On the call to prayer and its legitimacy upon the arrival of the Prophet (SAAS) in Medina.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) was secure in Medina, his emigrant brothers gathered around him and the Helpers were united, Islam became firmly established. Prayer was instituted and the zakat, the alms tax, and fasting were made obligatory. Punishments were prescribed, and those matters that were made permissible or forbidden were determined. Islam took firm hold there among them.

\(^{47}\) A rak'a is an entire cycle of prayer, consisting of standing, bowing once and prostrating twice.
It was this community of Helpers to whom God made reference in the words, "And those who made their abode in the town and in the faith" (sūrat al-Ḥashr; LIX, v.9).

When the Messenger of God (SAAS) first came to Medina, the people would gather with him for prayer at the appointed times without any summons to them. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then wanted to have a horn blown like that the Jews use to call their people to prayer. But he grew to dislike this and ordered a hand bell be used. One was made to be struck to bring the Muslims to the prayer.

While this was the practice ʿAbd Allāh b. Zayd b. Thaʿlabā b. ʿAbd Rabbīhī, the brother of Ibn al-Ḥārīth b. al-Khazraj, saw a vision and came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, "O Messenger of God, last night I had a vision. I saw a man pass me by who was wearing two green garments and he carried a bell in his hand. I asked him, 'Will you sell me that bell?' He responded, 'What will you do with it?' I replied, 'We'll use it to summon people to prayer.' He asked, 'Shall I tell you a better way?' 'What would that be?' I asked. He told me, 'You should call out, 'Allahu Akbar! Allahu Akbar! Allahu Akbar! (God is Most Great) I bear witness that there is no god but God. I bear witness that Muḥammad is the Messenger of God! I bear witness that Muḥammad is the Messenger of God! Come to prayer! Come to prayer! Come to salvation! Come to salvation! Allahu Akbar! Allahu Akbar! There is no god but God!'"

"Having been told this, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'These are – if God wills it – visions of truth. Stand with Bilāl and deliver them to him so that he can use them to announce the call to prayer; he has a stronger voice than you.'

"When Bilāl made the call to prayer using these words ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb heard him while in his house and came out to the Messenger of God (SAAS) dragging his cloak behind him and saying, 'O Prophet of God, I swear by Him who sent you with the truth that I saw the same vision!'"

"'All praise be to God!' exclaimed the Messenger of God (SAAS)."

Ibn ʾIshāq went on, "Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm b. al-Ḥārīth related this ḥadīth to me, from Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh Zayd b. Thaʿlabā b. ʿAbd Rabbīhī, from his father."

Abū Dārūd, al-Tirmidhī, Ibn Māja and Ibn Khuzayma all related this ḥadīth through Muḥammad b. ʾIshāq. Al-Tirmidhī, Ibn Khuzayma and others all deemed it authentic.

According to Abū Dārūd he (the vision) also taught him (ʿAbd Allāh b. Zayd) the iqāma,48 saying, "Then, to begin the prayer, you say, 'God is Great! God is Great! I bear witness that there is no god but God! I bear witness that Muḥammad is the Messenger of God! Come to prayer! Come to salvation! The prayer has begun! The prayer has begun! God is Great! God is Great! There is no god but God!""

Ibn Māja related this ḥadīth from Abū ʿUbayd Muḥammad b. ʿUbayd b. Mayīṭūn from Muḥammad b. Salama al-Ḥarrānī from Ibn ʾIshāq, as stated above.

48. The second call to prayer, indicating its commencement.
He then stated, "Abū Ubayd said, 'Abū Bakr al-Ḥakāmī informed me that 'Abd Allah b. Zayd, the Helper, spoke the following verse on this:

‘Praise be to God, the Sublime, the Revered, great praise for the call to prayer,
For there having come to me the herald from God; honour him as a herald to me!
For three nights he dedicated thus, and each time he came to me he brought me greater honour!’"

I observe that this poetry is strange for it implies that 'Abd Allah b. Zayd saw the vision for three nights before he informed the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

The Imam Aḥmad related this from a ḥadīth of Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq. And he stated, “Al-Zuhrī related from Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab, from ‘Abd Allāh b. Zayd, approximately the same account as given by Ibn Ishaq from Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm al-Taymi, but that account did not include the verses.”

Ibn Māja stated, “Muḥammad b. Khālid b. ‘Abd Allāh al-Wāsīṭī related to us, quoting his father, from ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Iṣḥāq, from al-Zuhri, from Sālim, from his father, to the effect that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked the advice of the community on what to use to commence the prayer. They mentioned the horn, but he disliked this because of its use by the Jews. They then referred to the bell, but he disliked this because of its use by the Christians. That night a vision of the call to prayer came to a helper named ‘Abd Allāh b. Zayd and to Ūmar b. al-Ḵaṭṭāb. The Helper made his way at night to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who gave orders to Bilāl, who made the call to prayer using it.”

Al-Zuhrī stated, “Bilāl made an addition in the morning call to prayer, namely twice saying the words ‘prayer is better than sleep’. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) agreed to this. Ūmar told him, ‘O Messenger of God, I saw the same vision as he did but he preceded me.’”

Material relating to this section will be given in the chapter on the call to prayer in the large work al-Aḥkām (The Statutes). If God Almighty wills it, and in Him is our trust.

In a ḥadīth given by al-Suhaylī with the following line of authority through al-Bazzār, Muḥammad b. Uthmān b. Makhlīd related, quoting his father, from Ziyād b. al-Mundhir, from Muḥammad b. ‘Alī b. al-Ḥusayn, from his father, from his grandfather, from ‘Alī b. Abū Ṭalīb, who made reference to the ḥadīth respecting the isrā‘, the ascent to heaven, as follows, “And an angel emerged from behind the screen and he made the call to prayer using this call. Each time he said a word, God Almighty verified it. Then the angel took the hand of Muḥammad (ṢAAS) and brought him forward. He then led the family of heaven, who included Adam and Noah, in the prayer.” Al-Suhaylī then said, “You may view this ḥadīth as authentic for the support it gives and resemblance it has to the ḥadīth relating to the ascent to heaven.”

But this ḥadīth is not, as al-Suhaylī maintained, authentic. In fact it is unacceptable. Ziyād b. al-Mundhir Abū al-Jārūd is he to whom is attributed the “Jārūdiyya sect”,49 he being among those accused. Moreover, if this had been what the Messenger of God (SAAS) had heard on the night of his ascent to heaven, he would have ordered it to be used in the call to prayer immediately following the emigration. But God knows best.

Ibn Hishām stated that Ibn Jurayj quoted ‘Atēb as having said, “I heard Ubayd b. Umayr say, ‘The Prophet (SAAS) had discussed with his Companions the use of a bell to summon people to prayer. While Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb was planning to buy two pieces of wood for the bell, he had a vision while he slept and was told, ‘Do not make a bell; instead call people to prayer.”

“Umar went to the Prophet (SAAS) to tell him what he had seen. The Prophet had himself received revelation of that. Umar was consequently very surprised to hear Bilāl make the call to prayer. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said to him, when he (Umar) told him of his experience, ‘Revelation of this preceded you!’”

This shows that the revelation had come in confirmation of what ‘Abd Allāh b. Zayd b. ‘Abd Rabbihī had seen in the vision or so some authorities state. But God Almighty knows best.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Muḥammad b. Ja‘far b. al-Zubayr related to me, from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, that a woman of the Bann al-Najjār told him, ‘My house was one of the tallest around the mosque. Bilāl would make the call to prayer on top of it early each morning. He would come just before dawn and sit above the house waiting for daybreak. When he saw it he would stretch out and say, ‘O God, I praise You and seek Your help for Quraysh to adopt Your religion.’ She concluded, ‘And then he would make the call to prayer. I never knew him to miss one night.’”

That is, to miss saying those words.

Abū Dā‘ūd was the only other to relate this.

Chapter: On the expedition of ʿHamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, may God be pleased with him.

Ibn Jarir stated, “Al-Waqīdī claimed that in the month of Ramaḍān of that year the Messenger of God (SAAS) appointed ʿHamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib over 30 of the Emigrants, having presented him with a white standard, to interfere with Quraysh caravans. Al-Waqīdī states that ʿHamza confronted Aba Jahl at the head of 300 Quraysh men, but that Majdī b. ʿAmr intervened between them, and so they did not engage in battle.

“He also said that it was Abū Marthad al-Ghanawī who carried the flag for ʿHamza.”

Chapter: On the expedition of ʿUbayda b. al-Ḥārīrī b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib.

Ibn Jarir stated, “Al-Waqīdī also claimed that the Prophet (SAAS) in Shawwāl, at the beginning of the eighth month of that year, entrusted a white banner to ʿUbayda b. al-Ḥārīrī and ordered him to proceed into the Rabīgh valley.

49. A denomination of the Zaydiyya Shiʿa founded by him and known by his name.
“His flag was carried by Mistah b. Uthatha. He reached Thaniyêt al-Murra, not far from al-Juhfa, in the company of 60 Emigrants, there being no Helpers present. They met up with the polytheists at a well called Ahyâ. They shot arrows at one another, but did not engage in sword play.”

Al-Wâqidi stated, “The polytheists were 200 in number and were led by Abû Sufyân Šakhir b. Ḥarb. This is what we believed to be well established, though it is also said that they were led by Mikraz b. Ḥafs.

DIVISION

Al-Wâqidi stated, “In that same first year, in Dhū al-Qa‘da, the Messenger of God (SAAS) presented a white banner to Sa‘d b. Abû Waqqâs and sent him to al-Kharrâr; the flag was carried by al-Miqdâd b. al-Aswad.

“Abû Bakr b. Ismâ‘îl related to me, from his father, from ‘Amir b. Sa‘d, from his father, who said, ‘I left with 20 men, by foot’ – or he said ‘with 21 men’. ‘We would hide by day and travel by night. We got to al-Kharrâr on the morning of the fifth. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had instructed me to go no further than al-Kharrâr. The caravan had preceded me there by a day.’”

Al-Wâqidi stated, “The caravan consisted of 60; all those with Sa‘d were Emigrants.”

Abû Ja‘far b. Jarîr stated, “It was the view of Ibn Ishâq that these three expeditions mentioned by al-Wâqidi all occurred in the second year of the hegira.”

I observe that the statements attributed to Ibn Ishâq by Abû Ja‘far are not seen as authentic by any who contemplates them, as we will show early in our work on the military expeditions in materials relating to the second year of the hegira. That work will follow the present one, if God wills it.

It is likely that what he means is that these expeditions occurred in the first year. We will give more details and comments on them when we get to them, if God Almighty wills it.

Al-Wâqidi gives full information and a well-organized historical account. He is one of the great Imams of this field of study. He is trustworthy and writes at length. We commented on what is both reliable and unreliable from him in our projected work al-Takmil fî Ma‘rifat al-Thiqât wa al-Du‘âfâ‘ wa al-Majâhil (Full Information on those Authorities who are Trustworthy, Unreliable or Ignorant). All praise and credit are due to God.

DIVISION

Those born in that blessed year, the first of the hegira, included ‘Abd Allâh b. al-Zubayr. He was the first to be born in Islam following the emigration, as al-Bukhârî related from his mother Asmâ‘ and his aunt ‘Â’isha, mother of the believers, both daughters of Abû Bakr, “the Trusting”; may God be pleased with both women.
There are those who say that al-Nūmān b. Bashir was born six months prior to him. According to that, Ibn al-Zubayr would have been the first child born to Emigrants following the emigration.

Some people suggest that they were both born in the second year of the hegira.

The former is obviously correct, as we have shown above. And all credit be to God. We will make reference to this second statement, if God Almighty wills it, in dealing with the end of that second year.

Ibn Jarir stated, “It has been said that al-Mukhtar b. Abū Ubayd and Ziyād b. Sumayya were born in that first year. But God knows best.”

Among the Companions who died that first year were Kulthūm b. al-Hadm al-Awsī, in whose home the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stayed in Qubā' prior to his departure to the home of the Banū al-Najjār, as told above. Later that same year Abū Umāma Aṣ'ad b. Zurārā, the leader of the Banū al-Najjār, died, while the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was still building the mosque. This has been related above. May God be pleased with both these deceased men.

Ibn Jarir stated, “That year, the first of the hegira, Abū Uhayfa died on his property in Tā'if. Also al-Walid b. al-Mughira died, as did al-ʿAṣ b. Wa'il al-Sahmi in Mecca.”

I observe that these men died while still polytheists. They did not accept God, the Almighty and Glorious.

An Account of what happened in the second year of the hegira.

In this year many military expeditions took place, the most important and glorious of these being the great battle of Badr, which occurred in Ramadan. It was the battle that God used to make a clear distinction between truth and falsehood, right guidance and error.

Now is the occasion to make mention of the military expeditions and the delegations sent. We therefore state (as follows), and we seek help from God in doing so.

THE BOOK OF MILITARY EXPEDITIONS.

Imām Muḥammad b. Ishāq b. Yasār stated the following in his work of biography, after giving information about the Jewish rabbis and their declaration of enmity against Islam and the verses making mention of them. Of these men was Ḥuyayy b. Akhtab and his two brothers, Abū Yasir and Judayy. Also there were Sallām b. Mishkam, Kināna b. al-Rabīʾ b. Abū al-Ḥuqayq, Sallām b. Abī al-uuqayq, otherwise known as Aba Wā'il al-Acwar. The latter was a trader of the Hija and one who was killed by the Companions at Khaybar, as will be shown later. Also, there were ʿAmr b. Jaḥṭāsh, Kaʿb b. al-Ashraf, he being of Tāʾi and of the Banū Nabḥān; his mother was of the Banū al-Naḍīr. He was killed by the Companions before Abū Rāfīʾ, as will be shown, along with his two allies al-Ḥajjāj b. ʿUmar and Kardam b. Qays. God curse them all!

These men were from the Banū al-Naḍīr.

From the Banū Thaqālaba b. al-ḪITYawn there was ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṣūriyā. There was no man in the Hijāz more learned in the Torah than he was. I would observe here that he is said to have accepted Islam.

And there were Ibn Ṣalūbā and Mukhayriq, the latter accepting Islam, as will be mentioned later, at the battle of Uhud; he had been his people's rabbi.

I observe that the last-mentioned had earlier accepted Islam, God be pleased with him. Ibn Ishaq stated, “He was their rabbi and most learned man. His name had been al-Ḥuṣayn, and when he accepted Islam the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) named him ʿAbd Allāh.”

From the Banū Zurayq there was Labīd b. Aṣām, who had put a spell on the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).

From the Jews of the Banū Ḥārīth b. Zayd, ʿAṭīf b. Zayd there was Kinānā b. Ṣūriyā. From the Jews of the Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf there was Qardam b. ʿAmr.

From the Jews of the Banū al-Najjār there was Silsila b. Barhām.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “All these men were rabbis and men of evil intent and full of antagonism towards the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his Companions, God be pleased with them. They were those who asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) many questions in their desire to confuse and to express their obstinacy and disbelief. They were men who made difficulties for Islam and who tried to extinguish it. Exceptions to this were ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṣalām and Mukhayriq.”

Ibn Ishaq then related the acceptance of Islam by ʿAbd Allāh b. Ṣalām, along with that of his aunt Khālidā, as we mentioned above.
He also told of the conversion to Islam by Mukhayriq on the day of the battle of Uhud, details of which will come later. He told his people, it being a Sabbath, “O Jews, you well know that Muḥammad has a right to expect your help.” They replied, “But today is the Sabbath.” He replied, “You shall have no Sabbath!” He then took his weapons and went off to battle. He made a charge upon his people who were staying behind, as follows, “If I should be killed today, then my properties are to go to Muḥammad to dispose of as God shows him.” He was a very wealthy man.

“He then joined the Messenger of God (SAAS) and fought until he was killed. God be pleased with him.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) used to say, as I have been told, ‘Mukhayriq was the best Jew.’”

DIVISION

Ibn Ishaq then listed the names of those hypocrites from Aws and Khazraj, who joined the Jews antagonistic to Islam.

From Aws there were: Zuwayy b. al-Ḥarīth, Julās b. Suwayd b. al-Ṣāmit, the Helper. It was about him that the verse was revealed, “They swear by God that they did not speak. But they did speak words of disbelief; they apostatized after accepting Islam” (ṣūrat al-Ṭawba or al-Barā’a; IX, v.74). This was because he said, after having withdrawn from the expedition against Tabīk, “If this man speaks the truth, then we are worse than donkeys!”

“The son of al-Julās’s wife, a man named Wmayr b. Sa’d reported this to the Messenger of God (SAAS) but al-Julās denied it, swearing that he had never said that. The verse was therefore revealed concerning him.”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “It is claimed that he later truly repented and that he was known for his piety.

“Also there was his brother al-Ḥarīth b. Suwayd; it was he who killed al-Mujadhdhar b. Dhiyād b. al-Balawi and Qays b. Zayd, one of the Banū Ḍubay'a at the battle of Uhud. Al-Ḥarīth had gone to war on the Muslims’ side, but he was a hypocrite and when the battle was joined he fought and killed both these men and joined the Quraysh forces.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “Al-Mujadhdhar had killed his father Suwayd b. al-Ṣāmit in an engagement before the coming of Islam. Al-Ḥarīth was taking revenge upon him at the battle of Uhud.”

This is what Ibn Hishām said, but according to Ibn Ishaq it was Muṣdh b. Ṭāʿārīf who killed him in a non-military engagement before the battle of Buṭuth, by shooting him with an arrow.

Ibn Hishām denied that it was al-Ḥarīth who killed Qays b. Thabit, on the grounds that Ibn Ishaq did not include the latter among those killed at Uhud.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) had ordered Ṭūmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb to kill him if he could catch him. Al-Ḥarīth, however, sent a message to his brother al-Julās seeking forgiveness so that he could return to his people. And so it was, as I have been informed on the authority of Ibn ‘Abbās, that God revealed, “How could God lead a people aright who have apostatized after having believed and given testimony that the Messenger is the truth, and after they had received proofs? God does not guide a people who are unjust” (ṣūrat ʿAl-ʿImrān; III, v.86).

“Also there were Bijād b. Ḫūṭmān b. ʿAmr and Nabdāl b. al-Ḥārith. It was about the latter that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘Whoever would like to see Satan, let him look at this man!’ He was a very tall, black man with a mass of hair, red eyes and flushed cheeks. He used to listen to what the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said then report on it to the hypocrites. It was he who said, ‘Muḥammad is just ears; he believes what anyone says to him!’ God revealed concerning him, ‘And among them are those who harm the Prophet by saying that he is ears’ (ṣūrat al-Tawba or al-Bari‘a; IX, v.61).

“And there was Abū Ḥabība b. al-ʿAzʿār. He was one of those who built the mosque at al-Dirār. Also there were Thaʿlabā b. Ḫāṭib and Muʿattīb b. Qushayr. It was these two who promised God that if He gave them of His bounty they would believe. They, however, broke their promise upon which the above was revealed. It was Muʿattīb who said at the battle of Uḥud, ‘If we had any say in it, we’d not be killed here!’ A verse was then revealed about him. It was also he who said, at the battle of al-ʿAlzāb, the ‘schisms’, ‘Muḥammad used to promise us we would enjoy the treasures of Chosroe and Caesar, but we’re not safe to go to the toilet!’ The verse revealed about him was ‘and when the hypocrites, and those in whose breasts is disease, say, “All that God and His Messenger have promised us is mere fancy”’ (ṣūrat al-ʿAlzāb; XXXIII, v.12).

Ibn Iṣḥāq went on, “And there was al-Ḥārith b. Ḫāṭib.”

Ibn Hishām commented, “Regarding Muʿattīb b. Qushayr, and Thaʿlabā and al-Ḥārith, the two sons of Ḫāṭib, they were of the Bani ʿUmayya b. Zayd and took part in the battle of Badr. These were not hypocrites, or so I have been told by a scholar whom I trust. Ibn Iṣḥāq in fact mentioned Thaʿlabā and al-Ḥārith as being of the Bani ʿUmayya b. Zayd and gave their names as participants in the battle of Badr.”

Ibn Iṣḥāq’s account continues, “Also there were ʿAbbād b. Ḥunayf, brother of ʿAbd b. Ḥunayf, and Bahazār, who participated in building the mosque, al-Dirār. And there were ʿAmr b. Khidhām, ʿAbd Allāh b. Nabdāl, Jāriya b. ʿAmr b. al-ʿAṭṭāf and his two sons Yazīd and Muḥīm, also involved in the construction of the Dirār mosque. Muḥīm was a young man who had collected most parts of the Qurʿān and would pray with the others in prayer there. When the Dirār mosque was destroyed, after the Tabūk expedition, as will be explained hereafter, during the reign of ʿUmar, the people of Qubā asked the Caliph whether Muḥīm could lead them in prayer. He refused, saying, ‘By God, was he not the Imam of the hypocrites in the Dirār mosque?’
"But Mujmic swore by God that he knew nothing about them; and they say that Umar let him go and that he did lead them in prayer.

"And there was Wadifa b. Thabit, also one of those who built the Dirar mosque. It was he who said, 'But we're only being sociable and having fun.' And a reference was made in the Qur'an to that.

"And there was Khidam b. Khalid; it was he from whose house the Dirar mosque was made."

Ibn Hisham added to the names given by Ibn Ishq of the hypocrites of the Banu al-Nabit b. al-Aws those of Bishr and Ras, two sons of Zayd.

Ibn Ishq went on, "And there was Mirbat b. Qayza; he was blind. It was he who said to the Messenger of God (SAAS), who was crossing through his garden on the way to the battle of Uhud, 'I'll not allow you, even if you are a prophet, to pass through my garden!' And he picked up a handful of dirt and said, 'I swear, if I knew I would not strike anyone but yourself, I'd throw this at you!' The Muslims made for him to kill him, but the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'Leave him alone. This blind man is blind in his heart as well as in his sight.' Sa'd b. Zayd al-Ashhal, however, had already injured him with his bow.

"And there was Mirbat's brother Aws b. Qayza, who made the comment, 'Our houses are exposed.' And so God said, 'They are not exposed; all they want is to take flight' (sūrat al-Ahzab; XXXIII, v.13).

"And there was Ḥāṭib b. Umayya b. Raṣ, He was a powerful sheikh who was long set in the ways of pre-Islamic ignorance. He had a son who was among the best of Muslims. His name was Yazid b. Ḥāṭib, and he was so injured at the battle of Uhud that his wounds disabled him and he was borne to the home of the Banu Zafar.

"‘Åṣim b. Umar b. Qatada related to me that the Muslims there, both men and women, gathered around him while he was dying and began telling him, 'Rejoice in the gardens of paradise, Ibn Ḥāṭib!' His father's hypocrisy then emerged and he began saying, 'Right! Gardens of rue! You have, by God, deluded this poor wretch about himself!'

Ibn Ishq continued, "And there was Bashir b. Ubayriq Abū Tuʾma, the man who stole the two breast-plates. It was of him that God spoke in the words, 'Do not argue for those who are treacherous to themselves' (sūrat al-Nisā'; IV, v.107).

"And there was Quzman, the ally of the Banu Zufr, who killed seven men at Uhud and then when in pain from his own wounds, killed himself, saying, 'I swear, I only fought in defence of my people!' He then died, God damn him!'\(^{50}\)

\(^{50}\) In Ibn Ishq's text as translated by Guillaume, op. cit. p. 245, Quzman is reported to kill seven polytheists and to have been well treated by the Muslims when he was wounded. It was, according to that text, when he was congratulated by the Muslims on his valour for the cause that he responded with the words attributed to him here, and that he then killed himself. Presumably he is being damned in this text both for denying that he had been fighting for Islam rather than for his people, and for committing suicide.
Ibn Ishaq then stated, “There are no men or women of the Banu 'Abd al-Ashhal known as hypocrites; al-Daḥḥāk b. Thābit, however, was charged with hypocrisy and love of the Jews.”

All the above persons were from Aws.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “And of Khazraj there were Rāfī ḥ. Wādī, Zayd b. 'Amr, 'Amr b. Qays, Qays b. 'Amr b. Sahl and al-Jadh b. Qays. It was the last-named who said, ‘Give me leave; do not try me.’”

“And there was 'Abd Allāh b. Ubayy b. Saʿūd who was the chief hypocrite and leader of the Aws and Khazraj as well. They had previously agreed, before the coming of Islam, to appoint him their king, but when God led them to Islam before they did so, the accursed fellow was greatly offended and angered. It is he who said, ‘If we get back to Medina the strong will definitely drive out of it the weak!’”

Very many verses were revealed about this man and also about Wādī, a man of the Banu 'Awt, as about Ma‘lik b. Abū Qawqāl, Suwayd and Dā‘is who were all of his gang. About them the Almighty revealed, “If they are driven out, they will not go forth with them” (ṣūrat al-Hashr; LIX, v.12). This was when they allied secretly with the Banū al-Naḍīr.

Division

Then Ibn Ishaq made mention of those Jewish rabbis who had accepted Islam as if God-fearing men while in secret they were unbelievers; and they were followed by the worst of the hypocrites among whom were: Sa‘d b. Ḥanif and Zayd b. al-Luṣṭ. It was the latter who commented, when the camel of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) strayed, ‘Muḥammad claims that information reaches him from heaven, yet he doesn’t know the whereabouts of his camel!’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) responded, ‘I only know what God tells me; and He has guided me towards it. My camel is in this defile, her bridle caught in a tree.’ Some of the Muslims then went and found it just so.”

Ibn Ishaq went on: “And there were Nu‘mān b. Awfā, ʿUṯmān b. Awfā and Rāfī ʿ. Ḥurarymala. The last-mentioned is the one of whom the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, so I have been told, when the man died, ‘One of the great hypocrites has died today.’

“Also there was Rīfā ḥ. Zayd b. al-Tābūt. On the day of his death a great wind arose just as the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was returning from Tabūk and he said, ‘It is blowing due to the death of a great unbeliever.’ And when they reached Medina they found that Rīfā ḥ had died that day.

“Also there was Silsila b. Burḥam, and Kināna b. Ṣūrīyā. ‘These, then, are the Jewish hypocrites who had accepted Islam.’

Ibn Ishaq went on, “These hypocrites would attend the mosque and listen to the Muslims’ talk, ridiculing and making fun of their religion.

51. Presumably a reference to ṣūrat al-Tawba or al-Barā; IX, v.49.
"Some of them gathered in the mosque one day and the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw them talking among themselves, sitting together and speaking in low voices. The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered that they be removed from the mosque and they were, forcibly.

"Abū Ayyūb went up to ʿAmr b. Qays, one of the Banū al-Najjār, who had been the guardian of their gods in the pre-Islamic era, took him by the foot and pulled him until he had got him outside, while the other man said, ‘God damn! Would you evict me, Abū Ayyūb, from the date shed of the Banū Thaqāba? ’

"Abū Ayyūb then went up to Rāfiʿ b. Wadiʿa al-Najjār and grabbed him by the cloak, pulled at him hard, slapped his face and threw him out of the mosque, saying, ‘Yekh! You dirty hypocrite!’

"Umāra b. Ḥazm seized Zayd b. ʿAmr, who had a long beard, and pulled him along by it until he had evicted him from the mosque. Umāra then clenched his fists and hit them hard in his chest, knocking him down. Zayd complained, ‘Umāra, you’ve grazed me!’ At this Umāra replied, ‘Clear off with you, hypocrite! What God has in store for you is far worse! Don’t ever come near the mosque of the Messenger of God (SAAS) again!’

"Abū Muḥammad Masʿūd b. Aws b. Zayd b. Ṭhahab b. Ghannū b. Malik b. al-Najjār, who fought at Badr, went up to Qays b. Amr b. Sahl, who was just a lad, the only youth among the hypocrites. Abū Muḥammad pushed Qays by the back of his neck till he had evicted him.

"One of the Banū Khudra approached a man called al-Ḥārith b. ʿAmr who wore his hair thick, seized him by it and pulled him violently across the ground until he had evicted him. At this the hypocrite yelled, ‘You’re being very rough, Abū al-Ḥārith!’ ‘You deserve it,’ he was told, ‘you enemy of God you, for what has been revealed about you. Don’t you come near the mosque of the Messenger of God (SAAS) again; you’re filth!’

"A man of the Banū ʿAmr b. ʿAwf went for the previous man’s brother, Zuway b. al-Ḥārith and forcibly evicted him, expressing his disgust for him and saying, ‘Satan and his work have charge of you!’ ”

Ibn Ishaq then referred to the passages in surat al-Baqara (Qurʾān, II) and in surat al-Tawba (Qurʾān, IX) that refer to the hypocrites and offered full and effective explanations of these. God bless him!

An Account of the first military expedition, that of al-Abwāʾ, also called Waddān, and the first of the delegations sent.

This involved the dispatch of Ḥamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib or ʿUbayda b. al-Ḥārith, as will be explained regarding the military expeditions.

Al-Bukhari’s text reads as follows: Book of the Military Expeditions. Ibn Ishaq stated, “The first battle fought by the Messenger of God (SAAS) was that of al-Abwāʾ, followed by that of Buwāṭ, followed by that of al-ʿUshayra.”
He then related how Zayd b. Arqam was asked how many military expeditions the Messenger of God (SAAS) had sent. He replied, “There were 19, in 17 of which he participated; the first of these was to al-Usayra (or al-Ushayra).”

An account will follow in the sequel of the expedition to al-Ushayra, if God wills it, and in Him is all trust, along with the chains of authority and words used in reporting on it as well as comments about it.

Al-Bukhari stated, in his sahih collection from Burayda, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) set in motion 16 military expeditions.”

Muslim quoted Burayda as saying that he accompanied the Messenger of God (SAAS) on 16 expeditions. He also quotes him as saying that the Messenger of God (SAAS) organized 19 expeditions and himself fought in 8 of them.

Al-Husayn b. Wāqid stated, from Ibn Burayda, from his father, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) organized 17 expeditions and fought in 8, those at Badr, Uhud, al-Ahzāb, al-Muraysiʿ, Qudayd, Khaybar, Mecca and Ḥunayn, and that he sent out 24 raids.

Yaʿqūb b. Sufyān stated, “Muḥammad b. Ṣa’d b. Uthmān al-Dimashqī al-Tanūkhī related to us, quoting al-Haytham b. Ḥumayd, quoting al-Nuʿmān from Makhūl, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) organized 18 expeditions and himself fought in 8. The first of these was at Badr, followed by Uhud, al-Ahzāb, Qurayza, Bpr Maʿūna, that against the Banū al-Muṣṭaliq of Khuzāʿa, Khaybar, Mecca, Ḥunayn and al-Ṭaʾif.”

His placing that of Bpr Maʿūna after that of Qurayza is open to dispute. The truth is that it followed Uhud, as will be shown.

Yaʿqūb stated that Salama b. Shabib related to him, from ʿAbd al-Razzāq, from Maʿmar, from al-Zuhri, (who stated) “I heard Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab say, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) organized 18 expeditions.’ But on another occasion I heard him say 24. I don’t know whether this was mere fancy or something he heard later.”

Al-Ṭabarānī recounted from al-Dabari, from ʿAbd al-Razzāq, from Maʿmar, from al-Zuhri, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) organized 24 expeditions.”

Al-Ḥakīm recounted, through Hishām, from Qatāda, that the expeditions and night raids organized by the Messenger of God (SAAS) totalled 43. Al-Ḥakīm then commented, “Perhaps he meant raids apart from the military expeditions, for in the work al-Iklil (Three Bright Stars) more than 100 raids of the Messenger of God (SAAS) are arranged in order.”

He went on, “A reliable scholar of Bukhārā told me he had read in the work of Abū ʿAbd Allāh Muḥammad b. Naṣr that the raids and delegations sent out totalled some 70, not counting the actual battles.”

This information related by al-Ḥakīm is very strange; and the statements he attributes in them to Qatāda are controversial.
Imām  Ahmad recounted, from Azhar b. al-Qāsim al-Rāsībi, from Hishām al-Dastuwārī, from Qatāda, that the military expeditions and raids of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) totalled 43, consisting of 24 missions and 19 military expeditions. In 8 of these he himself participated, at Badr, Uḥud, al-Āhzāb, al-Murayṣī, Khaybar, the conquest of Mecca, Ḥunayn, and al-Ṭāʾif.
Mūsā b. ʿUqba quoted al-Zuhri as stating, “These were the military expeditions in which the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) fought: Badr in Ramaḍān of 2 AH; Uḥud in Shawwāl, 3 AH; and al-khandaq, which was also known as al-Āhzāb and the ‘Banū Qurayṣa battle’, in Shawwāl, 4 AH. He then fought the Banū al-Muṣṭaliq and the Banū Liḥyān in Shābān, 5 AH; at Khaybar in 6 AH; at the Yawm al-Fath (Mecca) in Ramaḍān, 8 AH. Thereafter he fought at al-Ḥunayn and besieged the people of al-Ṭāʾif in Shawwāl, 8 AH. Then, in 9 AH Abū Bakr performed the pilgrimage, and in 10 AH the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went on the so-called ḥijjat al-wadā’, the ‘farewell pilgrimage’. He organized 12 expeditions that did not result in fighting. The first of his expeditions was that of al-Abwā’.”
Hanbal b. Hilāl stated, from Iṣḥāq b. al-ʿAlī, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaʿfar al-Raqqu, from Muṭṭirīf b. Māzin al-Yamānī, from Maʿmar, from al-Zuhri, who said, “The first verse revealed on making war was, ‘Those who do battle are given permission (to do so), for they have been wronged’ (ṣūrat al-Hājīj; XX, v.39). This came after the arrival of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) in Medina.
“The first battle witnessed by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was that at Badr, on Friday, 17th of Ramaḍān.”
His account proceeds to his comments as follows, “He then went on the expedition against the Banū al-Nāḍīr, then in Shawwāl, the battle of Uḥud took place, that is, in 3 AH. Thereafter he was at the battle of al-khandaq in 4 AH, fought the Banū Liḥyān in Shābān of 5 AH, and fought at the battle of al-Fatḥ (i.e. the ‘victory’, at Mecca, tr.) in Shābān 8 AH, followed by Ḥunayn in Ramaḍān 8 AH. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) organized 11 expeditions in which he did not fight. The first on which he fought was al-Abwā’, then came al-ʿUshayrā, Ḡaṭafān, Banū Sulaym, al-Abwā’ (sic), the first battle of Badr, Ṭāʾif, al-Ḥudaybiyya, al-Ṣafrā’, and Tabūk, the last expedition.” He then went on to refer to the buʿūth, the delegations he sent.
This account that I have copied from the history of the ḥāfiẓ Ibn ʿAsākir is very strange. We will relate later, in its proper order, what truly occurred.
This is an area of expertise requiring care and proper training; as Muḥammad b. ʿUmar al-Wāqiqī related, from ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿUmar b. ʿĀli, from his father, who said, “I heard ʿAli b. al-Ḥusayn say, ‘We used to teach the military expeditions of the Prophet (ṢAAS) just as we would chapters from the Qurʾān.’”
Al-Wāqiqī stated, “I heard Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh say, ‘I heard my uncle al-Zuhri say, “In knowledge of the military expeditions there is knowledge of the hereafter as well as of this world.”’”
Muḥammad b. Ishāq gave further information concerning the military expeditions after having given that we have quoted above. In this he named the chief unbelievers from among the Jews and the hypocrites, God damn them all and gather them in the depths of hell.

He stated, "Then the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) prepared to do battle against them, to wage war and fight against his enemies and their allies as God had ordered him.

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had arrived in Medina on a Monday when it was very hot, and the sun was near its zenith; it was the 12th of Rabi‘ al-Awwal. At that time he was 53 years old, and God had given him his mission 13 years before. He stayed there for the remainder of Rabi‘ al-Awwal and for Rabi‘ al-Ākhir, for both Jumādas, Ṣaḥābān, Ramaḍān, Shawwāl, Dhū al-Qi‘dā, Dhū al-Ḥiǧja, the polytheists being in charge of the pilgrimage that month, and al-Μuḥarram. He then, in Ṣafar, at the start of the 12th month after his arrival there, went forth to do battle."

Ibn Hīshām stated, "He left Sa‘d b. Waqqaṣ in charge of Medina."

Ibn Ishāq went on, "He continued as far as Waddān; this was the expedition to al-Abwā‘. " Ibn Jarīr commented, "It is also known as the Waddān expedition."

Ibn Ishāq continued, "He was heading for Quraysh and the Banū Ǧamra b. Bakr b. ‘Abd Manāt b. Kināna. The Banū Ǧamra made peace with him there; the one who actually did this was Makhshī b. ‘Amr al-Ǧamrī, who was their leader at that time.

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then returned to Medina without having engaged in battle, remaining there for the rest of Ṣafar and the early part of Rabi‘ al-Awwal."

Ibn Hīshām added, "This was the first expedition made by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)."

Al-Waqqādī commented, "His banner was entrusted to his uncle Ǧamzā; it was white."

Ibn Ishāq went on, "While resident then at Medina, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) dispatched ʿUbayda b. al-Ḥarīrī b. al-Muttaḥīb b. ‘Abd Manāf b. Quṣayy along with 60 – or 80 – men, mounted and of the Emigrants; not one of them was a Helper. The party went as far as a well in Hijāz below Thaniyyat al-Murra, where he met a large contingent of Quraysh. There was no engagement with them, however, except that Sa‘d b. ʿAbū Waqqāṣ did that day cast one arrow. That was the first arrow shot for God’s cause after the coming of Islam."

"The two forces separated thereafter, the Muslims positioning a rear-guard. Miqād b. ʿAmr al-Bahrānī, an ally of the Banū Zuhra, fled from the polytheists to the Muslims, along with ʿUtha b. Ghazwān b. Ǧābīr al-Mażīnī, an ally of the Banū Nāwāfī b. ʿAbd Manāf. These were really Muslims, but they had gone forth to have contact with the unbelievers."

Ibn Ishāq continued, "Ikrima b. Abū Jahl was leader of the polytheists on that occasion."
Ibn Hishām related, from Ibn Abī ‘Amr b. al-‘Alā’, that Abī ‘Amr al-Madani said, “It was Mikraz b. Ḥafṣ who led them.”

I observe that al-Waqqāṣi’s account, heretofore, gives two statements, one that the leader was Mikraz, the second that it was Abī Sufyān Ṣakhr b. Ḥarb; but it seemed to him more likely that it was Abū Sufyān. God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq then gave the ode attributed to Abū Bakr “the Trusting”, written about this night raid. It begins, “Is it for your vision of Salmā in the flat desert plains you lay awake, and for something happening in the tribe?

In Lu‘ayy you see a faction that no preaching, no messenger’s mission could keep from unbelief.

A truth-telling messenger came to them but they denied him and told him he could not stay among them.

When we called them to the truth, they turned their backs and fled like panting dogs retreating to their lair.”

He then gave the response of ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zibārā:

“Is it because of the traces of a home now desolate amidst the sand dunes that you weep, your tears soon gone,

And because of time’s surprises, and destiny is all surprises, of things gone by and new.

A great army that came to us, led by ʿUbaydā who is called Ibn Ḥarīth, in battle,

So we would leave idols set up in Mecca, passed down by heir to noble heir.”

Ibn Ishaq goes on to give the complete ode. And nothing prevents us from doing the same except for the fact that Imām ʿAbd al-Malik b. Hishām, God bless him, who was an Imām in language, reported that many scholars, expert in poetry, deny the authenticity of both these poems.

Ibn Ishaq further stated, “Saʿd b. Abū Waqqāṣ spoke the following verses concerning his having shot an arrow, or so they say,

“Has the Messenger of God heard that I protected my companions with my arrow?

Through it I well protected their front ranks over land both rough and easy.

And no one shooting an arrow at an enemy will be counted before myself, O Messenger of God!

And that was because your religion is that of truth; it was with truth and virtue that you brought it.

By it the believers are saved, by it the unbelievers are punished at a place of boiling pitch.
Take care, for you have erred, and do not decry me; woe upon you, Ibn Jahl, misleader of your tribe!"

Ibn Hishām commented, "Most authorities on poetry deny that this poem is to be attributed to Sa'īd."

Ibn Ishaq stated further, "The banner given to 'Ubayda, so I have been told, was the first awarded by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to any Muslim."

Al-Zuhri, Muṣṭaṣ b. Qūba, and al-Wāqīḍī disputed Ibn Ishaq in this and maintained that Ḥamza received a flag before 'Ubayd b. al-Ḥārith. But God knows best.

It will be related hereafter, from a ḥadith of Sa'd b. Abū Waqqāş, that the first leader of these raids was 'Abd Allāh b. Jahl al-Asadi.

Ibn Ishaq went on, "Some scholars maintain that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent him out when he arrived from the mission to al-Abwā' before he reached Medina. Muṣṭaṣ b. Qūba related it so from al-Zuhri."

DIVISION

Ibn Ishaq stated, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS), while resident there, sent Ḥamza b. 'Abd al-Muṭṭalib b. Hashim to the sea coast near al-Ṭīs along with 30 mounted men drawn from the Emigrants; there were no Helpers among them. Ḥamza confronted Abī Jahl b. Hishām and 300 mounted Meccans there on the shore. But Majdī b. 'Amr al-Juhānī interposed himself between the opposing parties, for he was at peace with both. Both sides withdrew from one another and so no fighting occurred."

Ibn Ishaq continued, "Some people say that Ḥamza's banner was the first awarded by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to any of the Muslims. This was because he had dispatched Ḥamza before 'Ubayda at the same time; this confused people."

I comment that Muṣṭaṣ b. Qūba quoted al-Zuhri as saying that he had dispatched Ḥamza before 'Ubayda b. al-Ḥārith. He maintained that Ḥamza's mission came before the expedition to al-Abwā'. And that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) returned from al-Abwā' he dispatched 'Ubayda b. al-Ḥārith along with 60 Emigrants. He then related much as above.

It has been stated above that al-Wāqīḍī said, "The raid made by Ḥamza in Ramadān took place in 1 AH; 'Ubayda's expedition came thereafter, in Shawwāl in the same year." But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq quoted from Ḥamza, God be pleased with him, poetry indicating that his banner was the first awarded in Islam. However Ibn Ishaq stated, "If Ḥamza did speak this, then so it was. He only ever spoke the truth. But God knows best what happened. What we have heard from scholars was that 'Ubayda was first. The poem is as follows:

'O my people, contemplate wisdom and foolishness and failure in man's thought and intellect,

About those who have wronged us while we have not violated their people or property.
As though we had been hostile to them, but we have no hostility for them; all we told them is to be chaste and just.

And we told them of Islam, but they do not accept it and treat it as if it were a joke.

They kept this up till I was appointed to raid them where they reside, seeking security in virtue.

At the order of the Messenger of God, being the first to have his banner fly above me, it not having appeared before.

A flag bringing victory, from a God of honour and power, His deeds the best of all.

They left in the evening, gathered together, the cooking pot of each of us boiling with the rage of his Companions.

When we saw one another they made their mounts kneel and tied up their mounts, and we tied ours an arrow’s reach away.

We told them, “Our connection to God is our aid. But the only connection you have is to error.”

Abū Jahl arose to fight there, acting in evil, but he was disappointed, for God rejected Abū Jahl’s tricks.

We had only thirty mounted men, while they numbered two hundred, with one extra yet.

O Lu’ayy, do not obey your evil men; come over to Islam, to the path that is plain.

For I fear that you will have pain wrought upon you and you will cry out in regret and mourning.”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “And Abū Jahl b. Hishām, God damn him, spoke the following verses in response,

‘I was amazed at the reasons for false worship and ignorance and at those who seek to do harm through division and idiocy,

At those who abandon the practices of our fathers and forebears, those fine and noble leaders.’

He then quoted the rest of the poem.

Ibn Hishām stated, “Most poetry scholars deny that the first poem can be attributed to Hamza, God be pleased with him, or the second to Abū Jahl, God damn him!”

THE EXPEDITION TO BUWĀT, IN THE NEIGHBOURHOOD OF RADWĀ.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) sent an expedition against Quraysh in the month of Rabi‘ al-Awwal, that is in 2 AH.”
Ibn Hishām commented, "He left ʿAṣ'ib b. Wthmm b. Maẓʿūn in charge over Medina."

Al-Wāqidi stated, "He left Saʿd b. Muʿādh in charge of it. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was accompanied by 200 mounted men. His banner was entrusted to Saʿd b. Abū Waqqāṣ. His purpose was to interfere with a Quraysh caravan which consisted of Umayyya b. Khalaf with 100 men and 2,500 camels."

Ibn ʿIshaq stated, "He proceeded until he reached Buwm~, near Raḍwā. He then returned to Medina without engaging in battle. He remained there for the remainder of Rabiʿ al-ʿAḥır and part of Jumāda al-ʿUlá."

---

THE EXPEDITION TO AL-ʿUSSHAYRA.

He then made an expedition against Quraysh. This refers to the expedition known by the name "al-ʿUshayra" or "al-ʿUsayra".

Ibn Hishām commented that he left Abū Salama b. ʿAbd al-ʿAsad in charge of Medina.

Al-Wāqidi stated that his banner was carried by Ḥamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib and stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth to interrupt the Quraysh caravans going to Syria."

Ibn ʿIshaq stated, "He made his way through the territory of the Banū Dīnār, then past Fayfāʾ al-Khayyār, and made camp beneath a tree in the Ibn Azhar valley at a place called Dhāt al-Saq. He said his prayers there, where his mosque is now. Food was prepared for him there which he ate, and the others ate there with him. The remains of the supports used for his cooking pot are still known there. He used the water from a place called al-Mushayrib."

"He then moved on, leaving al-Khalaʾiq to his left and traversed the ʿAbd Allāh defile. From there he kept left, coming down the Yalyal trail till it meets that of al-Ḍabūʿa. He then crossed the Malal plain until he met the road at Ṣukhayrāt al-Yāmām and then went on along it till he reached al-ʿUshayra, in the Yanbuʾ valley."

"There he remained for Jumāda al-ʿUlá and some nights of Jumāda al-ʿAhira; there he made peace with the Banū Mudlij and their allies of the Banū ʿDamra, then returned to Medina, without having engaged in battle.""

Al-Bukhārī stated, "ʿAbd Allāh related to us, quoting Wahb, quoting Shuʿba, from Abū ʿIshaq, who said, 'I was standing next to Zayd b. Arqam when he was asked, 'In how many military expeditions did the Messenger of God (SAAS) take part?' He replied, 'Nineteen.' 'And on how many did you accompany him?' 'Seventeen,' he replied. 'Which of them came first?' I enquired. 'Al-ʿUshyr or al-ʿUsayr,' he replied. I told this to Qatāda and he said it was 'al-ʿUshayr'.'"

This hadith is clear in stating that the first of the military expeditions was at al-ʿUshayra, which can also be spelled "al-ʿUsayrə", and that in both of these spellings the final feminine ending, the "a" may be dropped or a lengthened "a" be substituted. However, what could be meant here is that al-Ushayra was the first expedition in which Zayd b. Arqam participated with the Messenger of God (SAAS), and there could have been earlier ones which he did not witness. This could reconcile between this hadith and that of Ibn Ishāq. But God knows best.

Muḥammad b. Ishāq stated, “It was on that occasion that the Messenger of God (SAAS) made his comment to ‘Ali. Yazīd b. Muḥammad b. Khaytham related to me, from Muḥammad b. Ka‘b al-Quraẓī, quoting Abū Yazīd Muḥammad b. Khaytham, from ‘Ammār b. Yāsir, who said, ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭālib and I were companions on the expedition to al-Ushayra in the Yanbu‘ valley. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) encamped there he remained for a month and made peace with the Banū Mudlij and their allies of the Banū ṫamra. ‘Ali b. Abī Ṭālib said, “Abū al-Yaqẓān, how would you like for us to go and watch these men of the Banū Mudlij who are doing some work on a well of theirs?” So we went to them and watched for a while, then were overcome by sleep. We made our way over to a place where there were young date-palms growing and the ground was soft and there we slept. And, by God, we were eventually woken up by the Messenger of God (SAAS) moving us with his foot. We sat up, soiled with the earth there and it was then that he said to ‘Ali, ‘What have you been up to, Abū Turāb?’ (i.e. ‘father of dirt’) because of the soil that was upon him. We told him what had happened to us and he said, ‘Shall I tell you who are the two most pitiable men?’ We replied, ‘Yes, do tell us.’ He replied, ‘They are Uhaymir of the tribe of Thamūd who slaughtered the camel and the man who will strike you on this’ – and he placed his hand on ‘Mi’s head – ‘so that this’ – and he touched ‘Mi’s beard – ‘will become wet from it.’”

This hadith is unique in this line given. From another line there is also testimony to reference being made to ‘Ali as ‘Abū Turāb’. Similarly, in the saḥīḥ of al-Bukhārī it states that ‘Ali left his house angry at Fāṭima and went and slept in the mosque. When the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to his house to ask after him, Fāṭima told him he had left angry. So the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to the mosque and woke him up and, wiping the dirt from him, told him, “Up you get, Abū Turāb! Up you get!”

THE FIRST EXPEDITION TO BADR.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Upon his return from al-Ushayra, the Messenger of God (SAAS) had been in Medina only a few days, less than ten, when Kurz b. Jābir al-Fihri made a raid on the town. The Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth in search of him and travelled as far as a valley called Safwān, near Badr. This, then was the first expedition to Badr; Kurz evaded him and was not captured.”

Al-Wāqīḍī stated, “His banner was entrusted to ‘Ali b. Abū Ṭālib.”

Both Ibn Hīshām and al-Wāqīḍī related that he had left Zayd b. Ḥāritha in command of Medina.
Ibn Ishāq went on, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned, he spent Jumādā, Rajab and Sha’bān in Medina. He had previously sent out Sa’d with a party of eight Emigrants. He reached as far as al-Khārj in the Hijāz.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “Some scholars maintain that this mission of Sa’d’s took place after that of Hamza. He returned without engaging in battle.”

This is how Ibn Ishaq briefly reported this. Al-Waqidi’s account of these three expeditions is given above; by this I mean those of Hamza in Ramadān, Ḫubaydah in Shawwal, and Sa’d in Dhu al-Qi‘dah, all during 1 AH.

Ibān Aḥmad stated that “‘Abd al-Mut‘al b. ‘Abd al-Wahhāb related to him, quoting Yahiya b. Sa’d; and ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Ibān Aḥmad stated that ‘Sa’d b. Yahiya b. Sa’d al-Umawī related to him, quoting his father, from Mūjālid, from Ziyād b. ‘Alaqa, who quoted Sa’d b. Abū Waqqāṣ as having said, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) came to Medina, he was visited by some of the Juhayna who told him, ‘Now you have come to live among us, make a pact with us so we can join you.’ He did so, and they accepted Islam. In Rajab the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent us out, a force of less than 100, with orders to make a raid on a quarter of the Banū Kināna, who were over next to the Juhayna. We did raid them, but there were many of them and we took refuge with the Juhayna who gave us protection. They asked us, ‘Why are you fighting in the holy month?’ We asked one another what to do and some of us thought we should go back to the Prophet of God (SAAS) and tell him. Others thought they should stay there. I, and some others decided we would do neither and would attack and cut off a Quraysh caravan. The arrangement over booty at that time was that you could keep anything you won.

“So we set off against the caravan, while some of our Companions went back to the Prophet (SAAS). When they told him the situation, he became very angry and red-faced and said, ‘You left me as one group and you’ve returned divided! Those before you who became divided were only ever destroyed! I will appoint over you someone who is no higher than you in rank, but who will give you fortitude against hunger and thirst.’

“He then appointed over us ‘Abd Allāh b. Jaḥsh al-Asadī, who was the first commander in Islam.”

Al-Bayhaqi related this in Dalā'il (The Signs), from a hadith of Yahiya b. Abū Zā‘ida, from Mūjālid, in much the same form. That account adds, after their words to their companions “Why are you fighting in the holy month?” that the others replied, “We are fighting in the holy month those who expelled us from the holy city!”

He then recounted it from a hadith of Abū Usāma, from Mūjālid, from Ziyād b. ‘Alaqa, from Quṭba b. Malik, from Sa’d b. Abū Waqqāṣ. This account is similar, but it adds Quṭba b. Malik in the chain of authorities between Sa’d and Ziyād. This is more appropriate. But God knows best.

This hadith requires that the first of the raids was that of ‘Abd Allāh b. Jaḥsh al-Asadī and this is contrary to what Ibn Ishaq recounted, namely that the first of these was entrusted to Ubayda b. al-Ḥarith b. al-Muṭṭalib. It also contradicts al-Waqidi, who maintained that the first of the raids was entrusted to Ḥamza b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib. But God knows best.

Chapter: On the expedition of ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaḥsh that was the cause for the great engagement at Badr.

This was the day of the Furqān (the line distinguishing good from evil) when the two forces met in battle. And God has power over all things.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “In Rajab, following his return from the first expedition to Badr, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent forth ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaḥsh b. Ṵābāb al-Asadi along with eight Emigrants; their number included none of the Helpers. The names of these men were as follows: Abū Hudhayfa b. Utba, ʿUkāsha b. Miḥṣan b. Ḥurthān, an ally of the Banū Asad b. Khuzayma, Utba b. Ghazwān, an ally of the Banū Nawfal, Saʿd b. Abī Waqqās al-Zuhri, ʿAmir b. Rabīʿa al-Wāʿili, an ally of the Banū ʿAdi, Wāqīd b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd Manāf b. Ārīn b. Thaʿlabā b. Yarbūs al-Tamīmi, also an ally of the Banū ʿAdi, Khālid b. al-Bukayr, one of the Banū Saʿd b. Layth, also an ally of the Banū ʿAdi, and Sahl b. Bayḍā al-Fihri. These seven men were led by their commander ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaḥsh, God be pleased with him.”

Yūnūs quoted Ibn Ishaq as stating that there were eight men and their commander was their ninth. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “He wrote a letter for ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaḥsh which he told him not to open until he had travelled for two days. After opening it he was to do as it ordered him, but not to force any of his companions to do so too.

“Having travelled for two days, he opened the letter. It stated, ‘Having read this letter, proceed to Nakhla, between Mecca and Ṭāʿif. Stay there and observe Quraysh and report back to us news of them.’ Having read the letter, he said, ‘To hear is to obey!’ And he told his men what was in the letter. He said, ‘It forbids me from forcing any of you to comply with this. Those of you seeking martyrdom should go forward. Those reluctant to do this should return. As for myself, I shall proceed to fulfil the order of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).’

“He then proceeded forward accompanied by his men, none of whom stayed behind. He travelled through Hijāz until he reached a mine above al-Furqān known as Bahrān. There Saʿd b. Abū Waqqās and Utba b. Ghazwān lost a camel they had that they had been riding, so they remained behind to look for it. ʿAbd Allāh b. Jaḥsh continued ahead with the rest of the party and made camp at Nakhla.

“There a Quraysh caravan in which was ʿAmr b. al-Ḥaḍrami – Ibn Hishām commented that his full name was ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbbād, one of the Ṣadīf – along with Utmaan b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Mughīra al-Makhtūmī, and his brother Nawfal, along with al-Ḥakam b. Kaysān, the freed-man of Hishām b. al-Mughīra.

“When the caravan party saw them they were concerned because the Muslims had encamped near themselves. But ʿUkāsha b. Miḥṣan appeared before them, having cut his hair.\textsuperscript{52} When they saw him, they felt secure. 'Ammār told them, 'You don’t need to worry about them.'

"The Companions consulted about how to treat them. They realized that if they were to leave them unharmed, that night they would enter sacred territory and be safe, but if they were to kill them they would be doing so on the last day of the sacred month of Rajab. They were undecided and ill at ease about attacking them.

"But then they encouraged one another to do so, deciding eventually to kill those they could and to seize their goods. And so Wāqīd b. 'Abd Allāh al-Tamīmī shot an arrow at 'Aṃr b. al-Ḥaḍrāmī and killed him, Uṯmān b. 'Abd Allāh and al-Ḥakām b. Kaysān were taken prisoner, and Nawfāl b. 'Abd Allāh evaded them and escaped. 'Abd Allāh b. Jāḥsh and his men then returned to the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥāt) with the caravan and the two prisoners.

"Some of 'Abd Allāh b. Jāḥsh’s family maintain that 'Aḥd Allāh told his men, 'The Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥāt) is due one-fifth of what we have taken' and that he set this portion aside and divided up the rest between them. This was before the revelation came down concerning that fifth." When this revelation came down it was as 'Abd Allāh b. Jāḥsh had divided it, as Ibn Iṣḥāq observed.

"When they reached the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥāt) he told them, 'I did not order you to kill anyone in the sacred month!' He suspended disposition of the caravan and the prisoners and refused to take any of it.

"When the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥāt) said this, the raiders were very worried and thought they were ruined, and their fellow Muslims criticized them harshly for what they had done. Quraysh said, 'Muḥammad and his men have made it lawful to use violence in the sacred month; they have shed blood and taken booty and seized prisoners during it.' Those Muslims in Mecca opposing Quraysh, however, maintained that the action had occurred in Sha'bān. Some Jews said, 'You must consider this an omen against the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥāt). The killing of 'Aṃr b. al-Ḥaḍrāmī by Wāqīd b. 'Abd Allāh means as follows, 'Aṃr' stands for 'ṣamarat al-ḥarb', (i.e. 'war has spread'). 'Al-Ḥaḍrāmī' stands for 'ḥadarat al-ḥarb', (i.e. 'war has come') 'Wāqīd b. 'Abd Allāh' stands for 'wuqrat al-ḥarb', (i.e. 'war has been kindled'). God, however, turned this around against them.

"When people gossiped excessively about this, God Almighty sent down the following words to His Messenger (Ṣaḥḥāt), "They will ask you about the sacred month, and about fighting in it. Say: 'fighting therein is a grave matter; but blocking off God’s path and disbelief in Him and (hindering men from) the sacred mosque, and expelling its people from it, (all this) is extremely grave in God’s view; and causing unrest is worse than killing. And they will not stop fighting you until they turn you from your religion, if they can!" (ṣūrāt al-Baqara; II, v.217).

\textsuperscript{52} That is, as if he had just fulfilled the rites of the pilgrimage.
This means “Even if you have fought in the sacred month, they have blocked you from God’s path by disbelieving in Him, and also by keeping you from the holy mosque and expelling you from it when you were of its people. This is more grave in God’s view than your fighting those of them you did. For causing unrest is worse than killing. That is, they used to seduce Muslims from their religion, trying to return them to disbelief from faith. This was worse in God’s view than the fighting. Their conduct was far worse and they were completely unrepentant. This is why God Almighty stated, ‘They will not stop fighting you until they turn you from your religion, if they can!’”

Ibn Ishq went on, “When the Qur’an was revealed about this and God had alleviated the concerns of the Muslims, the Messenger of God (SAAS) took possession of the caravan and the two prisoners. Quraysh then sought to provide ransom for Uthmân and al-Ḥakam b. Kaysan, but the Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, ‘We will not release them to you until our two men come forth.’ He was referring to Sa‘d b. Abū Waqqās and Utba b. Ghazwān. ‘We are concerned’, he told them, ‘about your treatment of them. If you kill them, we will kill your men.’

‘Sa‘d and Utba then came forth, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) ransomed them. Al-Ḥakam b. Kaysan accepted Islam and became a Muslim, remaining with the Messenger of God (SAAS) until he was killed, a martyr, at the battle of Bīr Ma‘ṣuma. Uthmân b. ‘Abd Allāh stayed in Mecca where he died an unbeliever.”

Ibn Ishq stated, “When ‘Abd Allah b. Jahsh and his companions had been relieved of their anxiety when the revelation came in the Qur’an, they sought reward. They asked, ‘O Messenger of God, may we hope that this be considered an expedition for which we will be given reward as warriors for God’s cause?’ And so God revealed concerning them, ‘Those who believe and those who have emigrated and those who have fought for God’s cause, those persons may hope for the mercy of God, for God is merciful and forgiving’ (sūrat al-Baqara II v.218). Through this God gave them very great hope.”

Ibn Ishq continued, “The hadith concerning this is from al-Zuhri, and Yazid b. Rūmān from Urwa b. al-Zubayr.”

Mūsā b. Uqba related, in his work on the military expeditions, from al-Zuhri, a similar account, as did Shu‘ayb from al-Zuhri, from Urwa. Their account stated, “Ibn al-Ḥadrami was the first man killed in fighting between Muslims and polytheists.”

‘Abd al-Malik b. Hishām stated, “He was the first person killed by the Muslims. And this was the first booty taken by the Muslims; Uthmân and al-Ḥakam b. Kaysān were the first prisoners taken by Muslims.”

I comment that in his aforementioned report Imām Aḥmad quoted Sa‘d b. Abū Waqqās as having said, “‘Abd Allah b. Jaḥsh was the first amīr, commander, appointed in Islam.”
We have given in our Tafsir (Exegesis) various testimonies, with their chains of authorities, in support of what Ibn Ishāq recounted.

One such is what was reported by al-ḥāfaẓ Abū Muḥammad b. Abū Ḥātim, namely, ”My father related to us, quoting Muhammad b. Abū Bakr al-Muqaddimi, quoting al-Muṭamir b. Sulaymān, quoting his father, quoting al-Ḥadrāmī, quoting from Abū al-Siwar, from Jundab b. ‘Abd Allāh, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) sent forth some men, having appointed Abū Ubaydah b. al-Jarrāḥ – or ‘Ubaydah b. al-Ḥārith – as their commander. But when he came to leave, he wept in longing for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and sat down. And so he appointed ‘Abd Allāh b. Jaḥsh over them and wrote a letter to him, telling him not to read it until he reached a certain place. He told him, ‘Do not force any of your men to proceed further with you.’

“When he read the letter, he spoke the words, ‘We are God’s and to Him do we return,’ and said, ‘To hear is to obey, both God and His Messenger.’ He then told them what the letter contained. Two of their number then went back, while the rest stayed. They met up with Ibn al-Ḥadrāmī and killed him, not knowing whether that day was in the month of Rajab or Jumādā. The polytheists told the Muslims, ‘You have killed a man in the sacred month!’ God then revealed, ‘They will ask you about the sacred month, and about fighting during it. Say: fighting then is a grave matter’ (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.217).

(The narration states) “He wrote a letter for Ibn Jaḥsh and ordered him not to read it before he reached the Malal valley. When he arrived there he opened the letter. It told him to proceed on to the valley at Nakhlah. He told his companions, ‘Whoever desires death, let him proceed and appoint an executor; I have appointed one and am proceeding to carry out the orders of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).’

“He proceeded further and Sa‘d and ‘Utba lost their mount and stayed behind to find it. Ibn Jaḥsh and his companions went on and encamped in the Nakhlah valley. There they found al-Ḥakam b. Kaysān, al-Mughīra b. Uḥmān and ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Mughīra.” His account then related how Wāqīd killed ‘Amr b. al-Ḥadrāmī and how they went back with the booty and the two prisoners. This was the first booty taken by the Muslims. The polytheists said, “Muḥammad claims that he obeys God. Yet it is he who makes killing lawful in the holy month, having killed our man in Rajab.” The Muslims responded that it was in Jumādā that they had killed him.”
Al-Suddi stated, “Their killing of him occurred in the first night of Rajab, and the last night of Jumādā al-Ākhira.”

I observe, that perhaps Jumādā was yet unfinished, and they believed the month would last through the 30th night. The new moon however, was seen that night. But God knows best.

Al-ʾAwfi related it thus, from Ibn ʿAbbās, that it occurred on the last night of Jumādā, which was also the first of Rajab, but they were not aware of this.

This is also given above in the hadith of Jandab that was related by Ibn Abī Ḥātim.

In the account of Ibn Ishq previously given it is stated that that was the last night of Rajab, and that they feared that if they did not take the booty and seize the opportunity the polytheists would go on into the holy territory and they would then be unable to proceed; they therefore acted in full knowledge of it.

The account of al-Zuhri, from ʿUrwa, is similar. Al-Bayhaqi related it too. But God alone knows which version is correct.

Al-Zuhri quoted ʿUrwa as saying, “We have been informed that the Messenger of God (SAAS) paid the blood-money for Ibn al-Ḥadrāmī and recognized the sacred nature of the holy month as he always had until God sent down his exemption.” Al-Bayhaqi related this.

Ibn Ishq stated, “Abū Bakr ‘the Trusting’ spoke verses about the raid led by ʿAbd Allāh b. Jahsh in response to the polytheists and the charges they had made about making killing permissible in the holy month.” Ibn Hishām, however, attributed these verses to ʿAbd Allāh b. Jahsh.

“You consider killing in the holy month as a grave matter, but there are graver matters to those who view aright:

(like) Your rejection of what Muḥammad says and your disbelief in him, and God sees and knows all.
And your expelling its people from God’s temple so that no one may be seen there prostrating before Him,
Even though you blame us for killing him, more damaging to Islam is the evil-doer and the envier.
We slaked our lances on Ibn al-Ḥadrāmī at Nakhlah when Wāqiq set war alight in blood.
While Ibn ʿAbd Allāh Uthmān is among us restrained by a strong leather strap.”

Section: Concerning the change in the prayer direction in 2 AH before the battle of Badr.

Some authorities maintain that this occurred in Rajab of the second year of the hegira. Qatāda and Zayd b. Aslam stated this, in a tradition related from Muḥammad b. Ishq.
Ahmad related, from Ibn ‘Abbās, evidence supporting this and that is what is clearly implied by the account of al-Barā‘ b. ‘Āzib, as will be shown. But God knows best. It is also said to date from Sha‘bān in that year.

Ibn Isḥāq stated, after his account of the raid conducted by ‘Abd Allāh b. Jahsh, “It is said that the change in the direction of the prayer occurred in Sha‘bān, at the beginning of the 18th month following the arrival of the Messenger of God (SAAS) in Medina.”

Ibn Jarir related this through al-Suddi with a chain of authorities from Ibn ‘Abbās, Ibn Maṣ‘ūd and various Companions.

The great majority of scholars maintain that it was changed in fact in the middle of Sha‘bān, at the start of the 18th month following the hegira.

It was also related from Muḥammad b. Sa‘d, on the authority of al-Wāqidi to the effect that it was changed on a Tuesday in mid-Sha‘bān, though there is some dispute about this. God knows best.

We argued against this, with evidence, in the Tafsīr (Exegesis) regarding the words of the Almighty, “We see you turning your face about in the sky and we shall provide you with a qibla that will please you. Turn your face towards the Sacred Mosque; wherever you may be, turn your face towards it. Those to whom the Book has been brought know that it is the truth from their Lord. And God is not unaware of what they do” (ṣūrat al-Baqara; II, v.144).

(My commentary also examines) the objections made both before and after the change by foolish Jews, hypocrites and low-down ignorant people, and their criticisms were because this was the first abrogation that occurred in Islam.

Regarding this, God had previously stated in the course of the Qur‘ān the permissibility of making abrogation. He had stated, “Whatsoever verse we may cancel or cause to be forgotten we replace with one better or similar. Do you not know that God is capable of all things?” (ṣūrat al-Baqara; 11, v.106).

Al-Bukhārī had stated, “Abū Nu‘aym related to us, (that he had) heard Zuhayr (say) from Aba Ishq, from al-Barā‘, who said that the Prophet (SAAS) prayed towards Jerusalem for 16 or 17 months, though it would have pleased him to have faced towards the ka‘ba. He also said that the first time he worshipped towards it was during the al-qaṣr (late afternoon) prayer. Others were praying along with him at that time. Afterwards a man who had been with him there passed by some people in a mosque prostrated in prayer. He told them, ‘I swear by God, I have prayed with the Prophet (SAAS) in the direction of Mecca.’ They turned right then and there towards the ka‘ba. We didn’t know what to say about people who had died or been killed before the direction for prayer was changed. And so God sent down, ‘God is not one to consider your prayer as valueless; God is merciful and kind towards people’” (ṣūrat al-Baqara; II, v.143).

Muslim related this from another path.

God (SAAS) had been praying towards Jerusalem for 16 or 17 months though he wanted to face towards the ka'ba. And so God sent down, “We see you turning your face about in the sky and we shall provide you with a qibla that will please you. Turn your face towards the Sacred Mosque” (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.144). And so he did face towards the ka'ba.

“The foolish people – the Jews – asked ‘What could it be that turned them from the prayer direction they had previously?’ And so God sent down the verse, ‘Say: To God belong both East and West; he guides whomever He wishes to the straight path’” (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.142).

In short, the Messenger of God (SAAS) used to pray in Mecca towards Jerusalem, while the ka'ba was directly in front of him, so Imām Aḥmad related from Ibn ʿAbbas, God be pleased with him. And when he emigrated to Medina it was not possible for him to combine both and so he prayed towards Jerusalem immediately after his arrival there, keeping his back directed to the ka'ba for 16 or 17 months. This would require it to have been until Rajab of 2 AH. But God knows best.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) wanted to change his prayer direction towards the ka'ba, the qibla of Abraham, and often prayed and entreated God, Almighty and Glorious is He, to allow this. In doing so, he would raise his hands and sight to the sky in supplication. And so God, Almighty and Glorious is He, revealed the words, “We see you turning your face about in the sky and we shall provide you with a qibla that will please you. Turn your face towards the Sacred Mosque.”

When the order came down to change the direction of prayer, the Messenger of God (SAAS) made an address to the Muslims and told them of this, as al-Nasāʿī related, from Abū Saʿīd b. al-Muʿāwila, and this was at noon. Some scholars say that the change was revealed between two prayers. Mujahid and others stated this.

This is substantiated by what is given in both sahih collections from al-Barāʾ. Namely, that the first prayer he made in Medina towards the ka'ba was that of al-ḥārām.

It is strange that the people of Qubāʾ did not hear of this until the early morning prayer of the next day, as is established in the sahih collections, from Ibn ʿUmar. He stated, “While the people in Qubāʾ were at the morning prayer someone came to them and said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) has received tonight a Qurʾān revelation! He has been ordered to face the ka'ba in prayer, so you must too.’ They had been facing towards Syria, but they now turned towards the ka'ba.”

In the sahih collection of Muslim, from Anas b. Malik there is a similar account.

What is shown here is that when the change in the direction of the prayer to the ka'ba was decreed, and God Almighty abrogated the direction of prayer towards Jerusalem, various fools and ignorant people made criticisms, asking “What was it that turned them away from the direction of prayer they had before?”
They said this even though the unbelieving “People of the Book”\footnote{The term commonly applied to members of religions based upon Holy Books, most specifically to Jews and Christians.} well knew that the order came from God, since they recognized the Messenger of God (SAAS) from the description of him given in their books, from the information there that Medina would be the place to which he would emigrate, and also that he would be ordered to face towards the ka‘ba in his prayer. As God stated, “Those to whom the Book was brought know well that it is the truth from their Lord” (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.144).

Despite all this, God Almighty responded to their question and mentioned them specifically when He stated, “The fools will ask, ‘What was it that turned them away from the direction of prayer they had before?’ ‘Say: To God belong both East and West; He guides whomever He wishes to the straight path’” (sūrat al-Baqara, II, v.142). That is, He is the Lord, the Judge and Ruler of the Universe, whose decree no one can revise, He who does as He wishes with His creation, He who decrees whatever He wishes in His law, He who leads whomever He wishes to the straight path, misleading whomever He wishes away from the right road; in all that, His is the wisdom to which all must agree and accept.

Then the Almighty stated, “And thus We have made you an intermediate nation” (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.143). That is, the best “so that you may be witnesses to the people and have the Messenger be witness for you” (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.143). That is, just as We have chosen for you the best of directions for your prayer, having led you to the qibla of your father Abraham, father of the prophets, to which thereafter Moses and those messengers before him also turned. Likewise We have made you the best of nations, the very essence of the world, the most noble of all groups, the most honourable of the ancient and the high-born, so that you may be witnesses on Judgement Day against those who have combined against you, and so that they may give testimony on that day to your great virtue.

This is so substantiated in an account in the sahih collection of al-Bukhari, from Abū Sa‘īd, referring to Noah’s testimony to this nation on Judgement Day. And if Noah should testify for them despite the fact of his own time having been so much before, then it is even more appropriate and proper a course for those after him.

God then mentioned His wisdom in sending his retribution to those who doubted and denied this reality, and His pleasure to those who believed and accepted this actuality. He said, “And We decreed the qibla you used to observe only to know who it is who follows the Messenger” (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.143).

Ibn ‘Abbās commented, “That is, only to see those who follow the Messenger, and those who turn back upon their heels.”

\footnote{A term denoting a tradition traceable in ascending order of traditionaries directly to the Prophet.}
And "even though this was a grave matter" (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.143). That is, even though this matter was difficult and of great impact and importance, except for those guided by God. For they had full faith and belief in it, and were without doubt or uncertainty, but rather were satisfied, had faith and took action, for they were obedient to the Great Ruler, the Mighty and All-Powerful, the Patient and All-Knowing, the Gracious and Omniscient.

And God's words, "God is not one to consider your prayer as valueless" (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.143). That is, by His decision regarding facing towards Jerusalem and prayer towards it, (for) "God is merciful and kind towards people" (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.143).

The accounts and proofs of this are very numerous and would take long to enumerate; this issue is examined in the exegesis and we will include additional comments thereupon in our work al-Ahkām al-Kabīr (The Major Statutes).

Imām Ahmad recounted quoting Āli b. Āśim, quoting Ḥusayn b. 'Abd al-Rahmān, from 'Amr b. Qays, from Muḥammad b. al-Ash'ath, from 'A'isha, who said, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, in regards to the 'People of the Book', that is, 'They envy us for nothing so much as for our Friday to which God led us, but they erred from it, the qibla that God guided us to while they strayed, and our saying "Amen" after the Imām.'"

Section: On the institution of the fasting month of Ramadān in 2 AH, before the battle of Badr.

Ibn Jarīr stated, "It was in that year that fasting for the month of Ramadān was made obligatory. It is also said that it was declared obligatory in Sha'bān of that year. It is related, moreover, that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) came to Medina, he found that the Jews were fasting for the day of ʿAshūrā. He asked them about it and they told him, 'This was the day when God rescued Moses.' He replied, 'But we have a greater claim to Moses than you do!' So he fasted it and told his people to do so too.'"

This ḥadīth is firmly substantiated in both sahih collections from Ibn ʿAbbās.

God Almighty stated, "O believers, fasting has been prescribed for you as it was for those who preceded you, so that you may be properly pious. (It shall be) for a specific number of days. Those of you who are ill or travelling (shall fast) a different number of days. And those with the means to do so may redeem this by feeding a poor person. And whoever does more good than he is bound to do does good unto himself thereby; for you to fast is better for you, if only you knew it. It was the month of Ramadān in which the Qurʿān was revealed, as a guidance to man, and as clear proof of guidance and of the differentiation (between good and evil). Whoever of you are present that month, let them fast it; whoever is sick or travelling should fast a (like) number of other days" (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.183–5).
We have written at sufficient length on this in the Tafsir (Exegesis), giving those \textit{\textit{ahadith}} and related evidences relevant to it, along with the regulations arising therefrom. And all praise be to God.

Imām Ahmad has stated, “Abū al-Naḍr related to us, quoting al-Mas'ūdī, quoting Amr b. Murra from 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Abū Laylā, from Mu'ādh b. Jabal, who said, ‘The prayer underwent three changes and fasting underwent three changes.’ He referred to those respecting prayer, then went on, ‘Regarding the changes in fasting, when the Messenger of God (SAAS) came to Medina, he began fasting three days each month, and he also fasted 'Ashūrā.

‘Then God made fasting incumbent upon him and sent down the words, “O believers, fasting has been prescribed for you as it was for those who preceded you” (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.183), and so on to the words, “And those with the means to do so may redeem this by feeding a poor person” (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.184). As a result, those who wished to fast did so, while those who preferred to feed a poor person did so, and that was considered sufficient for them. Then God sent down another verse, “the month of Ramaḍān in which the Qur'ān was revealed” up to the words “whoever of you are present that month, let them fast it” (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.185). This firmly prescribed fasting for those who were at home and healthy, and exempted those who were sick or travelling. It also established that the elderly unable to fast should be fed. These, then, were two changes.’

(Mu'ādh b. Jabal) then said “Thereafter people would eat, drink and go to their women before retiring to bed; after retiring for sleep they would refrain from these. One Helper, however, a man named Şirma, once fasted while working until evening, went home to his family, performed the evening prayer and then retired without eating or drinking before the next morning, when he again began fasting. The Messenger of God (SAAS) saw him under great strain and so he asked him, ‘How is it I see you under such great stress?’ So he informed him.

He went on, “Umar was in the habit of having sexual relations even after he had slept a while and he came to the Messenger of God and told him this. And so God sent down, ‘It is lawful for you to visit your wives on the night of the fast; they are as apparel for you’ and so on, to the words, ‘and then complete the fast till the night’ (sūrat al-Baqara; II, v.187).”

Abū Da'ūd related this in his work, \textit{Al-Sunan al-Mustadrak}, as did al-Ḥakim in his \textit{Al-Mustadrak} quoting a hadith of al-Mas'ūdī in similar terms.

In both saḥīh collections there is a hadith of al-Zuhri from 'Urwa which quotes 'A'isha as saying, “'Ashūrā was fasted until fasting in Ramaḍān was made obligatory. Thereafter, those who wished to continue with the fast (of 'Ashūrā) did so, while those who wished not to refrained.” A similar account is given by al-Bukhārī from Ibn 'Umar and Ibn Mas'ūd.”

This subject is examined in another section of the exegesis as well as in my work \textit{Al-Ahkām al-Kabīr} (\textit{The Major Statutes}). God is the source of all aid.
Ihn Jarir stated, “In that year people were commanded to give the zakāt al-fitr.\textsuperscript{55} It is said that the Messenger of God (SAAS) addressed the people ordering this a day or two before the ʿid al-fitr”.\textsuperscript{56}

He also stated, “In that same year the Messenger of God (SAAS) said the salāt al-ʿid prayers for the first time and conducted the people to the musalla.\textsuperscript{57} They set out in front of him carrying the ḥarba, a spearhead, that had belonged to Zubayr to whom it had been presented by the Negus. It would be carried forth before the Messenger of God (SAAS) on feast days.”

I comment, and it was this year too, as several later authorities have reported, that the payment of zakāt alms was prescribed. Details of all this will be given following the account of the battle of Badr, if God wills it, and in Him is all confidence and reliance. And there is no power nor strength except in God, the All-High and Almighty.

God Almighty stated, “God gave you assistance at Badr when you were weak; fear God then, and may you give Him thanks” (sūrat al-ʾImran; III, v.123). He also said, “Even as your Lord sent you forth from your house with the truth, a faction of the believers were indeed reluctant. They disputed with you over the truth even after it had become clear, as if being led to death while they watched. And (remember) when God promised you that one of the two parties would be yours, and you wished that, for you, it would be the one that was unarmed, but God wished to fulfill the truth by His words and wipe the unbelievers out to the last. This was to fulfill the truth and to nullify falsehood, even if the evil-doers disliked this” (sūrat al-ʾAnfāl; VIII, v.5–8).

We have discussed this in our exegesis of this sūrat. Here we will give reference appropriate to each passage.

Ibn Isḥāq, God bless him, stated, after giving his account of the expedition led by ʿAbd Allah b. Jahsh: “The Messenger of God (SAAS) then heard that Abū Suḥayn Ṣakhir b. Ḥarb was arriving from Syria with a great Quraysh caravan consisting of money and goods, as well as 30 or 40 men, who included Makhrama b. Nawfāl and ʿAmr b. al-Šā."

Mūsā b. Ṣuqba stated, from al-Zuhri, that this was two months after the killing of Ibn al-Ḥadramī. He also said that the caravan consisting of 1,000 camels carried property belonging to all of Quraysh except for Huwaytīb b. ʿAbd al-ʿUzza, and that this was why he was not present at Badr.

\textsuperscript{55} An obligatory donation given annually during the month of Ramādān.
\textsuperscript{56} The feast marking the end of the fasting of Ramādān.
\textsuperscript{57} A building or area set aside solely for prayer.
Ibn Ishaq went on, “Muḥammad b. Muslim b. Shihāb, Āsim b. ʿUmar b. Qatada, ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr and Yazid b. Rūmān related to me from ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr and others of our scholars, from Ibn ʿAbbās, each of these having related to me a part of this hadith which I have joined together in the following account about Badr. They said that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) heard that Abū Sufyān was arriving from Syria, he sent the Muslims out against them, saying, ‘This caravan belongs to Quraysh, and will carry much wealth. Attack it; God may present it to you.’

“The men got ready, some pleased, others apprehensive because they had not thought the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) would make war. When Abū Sufyān approached Hijāz he sought information from each mounted man he encountered since he was concerned what might develop. Eventually he received news from some travellers that Muhammad had readied a force of men against him and his caravan. This alarmed Abū Sufyān and he commissioned ʿAmr al-Ghifārī, sending him on to Mecca with orders to go to Quraysh and get them to prepare for battle to save their property, by telling them that Muḥammad and his men were about to attack it. ʿAmr raced into Mecca to do so.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “An unimpeachable source related to me, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās and Yazid b. Rūmān related to me from ‘Urwa b. al-Zubayr as follows: ʿAtika, daughter of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib had, three nights prior to the arrival of ʿAmr, a dream that had terrified her. She sent for her brother ʿAl-Ḥabīb b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib and told him, ‘Last night, brother, I swear I had a vision that really scared me. I’m concerned that because of it some harm might come to you or your people, so please keep confidential for me what I’m about to tell you.’

“What was it you saw?” he asked.

“She replied, ‘I saw a man arrive mounted on a camel who came to a halt in the valley then shouted out at the top of his voice, “Come forth to your deaths in three days hence, you people of perfidy!” I saw people gather around him. He then entered the mosque, with the people following. While they were there around him, his camel took him to the top of the ʿkaʿba. Once there he called out as before: “Come forth to your deaths in three days, you people of perfidy!” His camel next took him up to the top of Mt. Abū Quḥays where he shouted the same. Then he picked up a rock, flung it away and it came on down, bursting into fragments when it reached the bottom of the mountain. And no one house or building in Mecca escaped being pierced by one of its fragments.’

“ʿAl-Ḥabīb told her, ‘That was some vision! Keep quiet about it. Don’t tell anyone!’

“ʿAl-Ḥabīb then went off and met with al-Walīd b. Utba, who was a friend of his, told him of it and asked him to keep it confidential. Thereafter al-Walīd told it to his son Utba, and so soon the story was spread all about and all Quraysh were discussing it.

“ʿAl-Ḥabīb said, ‘I arose early to circumambulate the ʿkaʿba and there was Abū Jahl b. Hishām sitting with a group of Quraysh leaders discussing ʿAtika’s...
When Abū Jahl saw me, he said, “Abū al-Faḍl, why don’t you come and join us when you finish your circumambulation?” When I had finished I went over to him and sat down among them. Abū Jahl then asked me, “How long has your family of ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib had this prophetess?” “How do you mean?” I asked. “I’m talking about the visions ʿĀṭika saw,” he replied. “What were they?” I enquired. He responded, “Aren’t you ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib’s satisfied with having your men become prophets? Has it got to be your women too? ʿĀṭika claims that in her vision a man said, ‘Come forth in three days!’ We’re going to watch you closely for these three days and if what you say is true, so be it. But if three days pass with nothing happening, then we’ll judge you the biggest liars of all the temple-worshippers among the Arabs!”

“Al-ʿAbbās commented, ‘I swear, I’ve never had any problem with him before. All I did was repudiate what he said and deny that she had seen anything.’

“He went on, ‘We then parted company. That night every woman of the ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib clan came to see me and said, “Have you agreed to let that dirty old reprobate attack first your men and then your womenfolk while you just listened? Didn’t anything you heard him say offend you?” I replied, “I would have done something, but I never had a problem with him before. I swear I will confront him and if he repeats it, I’ll take care of him for you!”’

“He went on, ‘On the morning of the third day after ʿĀṭika’s vision, I was extremely angry, feeling I had let him get away with something I should have put a stop to. I went into the mosque and saw him. I swear I was making towards him to confront him to get him to retract what he had said – he was a slight man, with a face, voice and gaze that were all sharp – when he hurried off towards the door of the mosque. I asked myself what could be the matter with the fellow, and whether he was doing this because he feared I was about to confront him. But he had heard something I had not – the voice of Damdām b. ʿAmr al-Ghifāfī who was out in the centre of the valley, standing by his camel. He had lopped its ears and turned its saddle back to front, rent his shin and was yelling, “O Quraysh! The baggage camels! The baggage camels! Your goods being brought by Aḥa Suṭyān have been waylaid by Muḥammad and his men! I don’t think you can save them! Help! Help!”

“Ibn ʿAbbās concluded, ‘And so all this diverted us both from our personal conflict.

“The Meccans then made quick preparations commenting, “Do Muḥammad and his men think it’s going to turn out as it did with the raid on the caravan of Ibn al-Ḥadrami? No way! By God, they’ll find out differently!”’

Mūsā b. ʿUqba related the vision of ʿĀṭika in much the same terms as did Ibn Ishaq. He stated, “And when Damdām b. ʿAmr spoke in this fashion the Meccans were very worried about ʿĀṭika’s vision and went forth to battle feeling insecure and fearing the worst.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Meccans used to respond in two ways. They either went forth themselves or sent another in their place. Not one of their leaders stayed behind now, except for Abū Lahab b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib; he sent al-ʿĀṣī b. al-Mughira in his place. He hired him for a debt of 4,000 dirhams al-ʿĀṣī owed him that he could not pay.”

Ibn ʿIshāq stated, “Ibn Abū Najīḥ related to me that Umayya b. Khalaf had made up his mind to stay behind; he was a dignified old sheikh, tall and portly. ʿUqba b. Abū Muʿayyāt came up to him, while he was sitting there in the mosque with some of his family, carrying a censer with lit scented embers which he placed before him, saying, ‘Here, Abū ʿĀli, enjoy the perfume! You’re just a woman!’

“Umayya responded, ‘God damn you, and what you bring!’ He then got himself ready and left with the others.”

This, then, is the anecdote as given by Ibn ʿIshāq. Al-Bukhārī told it quite differently. He stated, “ʿAmmād b. ʿUṭmān related to me, quoting Shurayḥ b. Maslama, quoting ʿIbrahīm b. Yūsuf, from his father, from Abū ʿIshāq quoting ʿAmr b. Maymūn, that he heard ʿAbd Allāh b. Masʿūd relate the following from Saʿd b. Muʿṭādh. Saʿd recounted that he was a friend of Umayya b. Khalaf and that when Umayya visited Medina he would stay with him, just as Saʿd would stay with Umayya when he came to Mecca.

“After the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) had moved to Medina, Saʿd went to stay with Umayya in Mecca while performing the ṣumra, the ‘lesser pilgrimage’. Saʿd asked Umayya, ‘Would you look out for me some time when it’s empty there and I can circumambulate the kaʿba?’ Umayya accompanied him forth at close to midday, but they were met by Abī Jahl, who said, ‘(Abī) Ṣafwān, who is this with you?’ He replied, ‘This is Saʿd.’ Abī Jahl said (to Saʿd) ‘What’s this? Do I really see you going in safety around Mecca when you’ve given shelter to the Sabians and proclaimed your help and protection for them? I swear, if you weren’t in the company of Abī Ṣafwān you’d not return home safely!’

“Saʿd replied, raising his voice, ‘If you were to block my way here I’d do worse to you by blocking yours to Medina!’

“Umayya asked him, ‘Saʿd, don’t raise your voice to Abū Ṣafwān; he is the leader of our valley.’

“Saʿd responded, ‘Let’s talk no more of it; and, I swear, I’ve heard the Messenger of God (ṣaṣṣ) say that they are going to kill you!’ Umayya asked, ‘In Mecca?’ Saʿd replied, ‘I don’t know.’

“Umayya was very much afraid at this.

“When he returned home he asked his wife, ‘Umm Ṣafwān, do you know what Saʿd told me?’ ‘What did he say?’ she asked. ‘He claims that Muḥammad told them they would kill me! I asked him whether in Mecca, and he said he didn’t know. So, I swear, I’m not leaving Mecca,’ Umayya told her.

“When the day of the battle of Badr arrived, Abū Jahl assembled the Meccan force by asking them to save their caravan. Umayya did not want to go to battle, but Abū Jahl came to him and said, ‘Abū Ṣafwān, when people see that you are staying behind, you, one of the valley leaders, they will remain with you.’
“Abū Jahl kept on at him until Umayya responded, ‘You win! I’ll purchase the finest camel in Mecca!’

“He then told his wife, ‘Umm Šafwān, get my equipment ready!’ ‘But have you forgotten what your Yathrib friend told you?’ ‘No,’ he replied, ‘I only want to go a little way with them.’

“After leaving, Umayya tied up his camel at every stop they made, right on up to Badr, where God took his life.”

Al-Bukhārī also told this elsewhere, on the authority of Muḥammad b. Ishaq, from ‘Ubayd Allāh b. Mūsā, from Isrā’īl, from Abū Ishaq, that account being similar.

Al-Bukhārī alone gives this.

Imām Aḥmad related it from Khalaf b. al-Walid, from Abū Saʿīd, both of them quoting Isrā’īl. In Isrāʿīl’s account Umayya’s wife commented, “I swear, Muḥammad never lies.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When they had gathered their equipment and were assembled to depart, Quraysh remembered the dispute they had with the Bānū Bakr b. ʿAbd Manāt b. Kīnānā. They expressed fear that they might attack their rear. This quarrel related to a son of Ḥafṣ b. al-Akhyaf of the Bānū Āmir b. Lūqayy who had been killed by a man of the Banū Bakr, on the orders of Āmir b. Yazīd b. Āmir b. al-Mulāwwaḥ. His brother Mikraz b. Ḥafṣ took revenge for him, killing Āmir by plunging his sword into his stomach.

“He then brought the sword by night and hung it up in the curtains of the kaʿba. Quraysh therefore feared the Bānū Bakr for what had occurred between them.”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “Yazīd b. Rūmān related to me, from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, who said, ‘When Quraysh were ready to leave they remembered their problem with the Banū Bakr and that almost diverted them. But Iblīs, Satan, appeared to them in the form of Suraqa b. Mālik b. Juʿsham al-Mudliji, one of the nobles of the Banū Kīnānā. He told them, “I will give you protection against Kīnānā attacking you from your rear.” They therefore hurried away to battle.’”

I observe that this illustrates the words of the Almighty, “Do not be like those who left their homes exulting and showing off before men, blocking people from the way of God, for God was aware of what they were doing. And when the devil made their works look good to them, he said, ‘No one will overcome you today; I will be your protector.’ But when the two factions met he turned on his heels, saying, ‘I am quit of you; I see what you do not see. I fear God! God is fierce in punishing.’” (sūrat al-ʿAnfāl; VIII, v.47–8).

He, God curse him, deceived them, so that they left, with him following behind them, stage by stage, bringing his troops and his banners with him, as several of them reported. And so he delivered them to their deaths. When he saw the strife, and the angels coming down to help and sighted Gabriel, he turned on his heels and said, “I am quit of you; I see what you do not see. I fear God!”
This is similar to the words of God Almighty, “like the devil, when he says to man, ‘Disbelieve!’ and when man disbelieves, he says, ‘I am quit of you; I fear God, the Lord of the worlds’” (sūrat al-Hashr; LIX, v.16).

And God Almighty said, “And say: ‘The truth has come; and falsehood has vanished; falsehood is ever bound to vanish’” (sūrat Banū Isrā‘îl or al-Isrā‘; XVII, v.81).

And so when Satan, God damn him, on that day saw the angels descend to give victory, he fled. He was the first to flee, though he had been the chief encourager and helper of Quraysh, deceiving them and making them false promises. Satan’s promises were only to mislead.

Yūnūs stated, quoting Ibn Ishaq, “Quraysh went forth with a sense of anxiety and weakness. They consisted of 950 warriors led by 200 cavalry. They had slave girls with them striking tambourines and chanting invective against the Muslims.”

He lists day by day those providing food for the Quraysh force.

Al-Umawi stated, “The first person to slaughter for them following their departure from Mecca was Abū Jahl. He slaughtered ten camels. At ʾAsfān Umayya b. Khalaf slaughtered nine, and Suhayl b. ʿAmr ten more at Qadid. At Qadid they turned off to the wells in the direction of the sea coast and remained a day there. Shayba b. Rabī‘a slaughtered nine more for them. Next morning they reached al-Juḥfa, where ʿUtba b. Rabī‘a slaughtered ten and the next morning, at al-Abwā‘, Nubih and Munbih, two sons of al-Ḥajjāj slaughtered ten. Next, al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-Muttalib slaughtered ten, and Abū al-Bakhtari ten more at the well at Badr. They then ate from their provisions.”

Al-Umawi stated, “My father related to us, quoting Abū Bakr al-Hudhali, as follows, ‘The polytheists had with them 60 horses and 600 coats of mail, while the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had with him 2 horses and 60 coats of mail.

This, then, was how they left Mecca and moved towards Badr.

Regarding the activities of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) moved out with his men several days after the start of Ramadān. He appointed Ibn Umm Maktūm to lead the people in prayer and he sent back Abū Lubāba from al-Rawḥā‘ to administer Medina.

“He entrusted the banner, which was white, to Muṣāb b. ʿUmeyr, while he was preceded by two black flags one, called al-ʿUqāb, the standard, carried by ʿAli b. Abū Ṭālib, the other borne by one of the Helpers.”

Ibn Hisham stated that the Helpers’ flag was carried by Saʿd b. Muṭṭah. Al-Umawi said it was with al-Khabbab b. al-Mundhir.

Ibn Ishaq went on, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) appointed Qays b. Abū Ṣaṣṣa‘a, a brother of the Banū Māzin b. al-Najjār, over the rear guard.”

Al-Umawi said that they had two horses, on one of which rode Muṣāb b. ʿUmayr, and on the other al-Zubayr b. al-ʿAwwām. Saʿd b. Khaythama had charge of the right flank, al-Miqdād b. al-Aswad that of the left.
Imām Ahmad recounted, from a hadīth of Abū Isḥāq, from Ḥāритha b. Maḍrah, who quoted ʿAli as saying, “The only horseman we had at Badr was al-Miqdād.”

Al-Bayhaqi related, through Ibn Wahb, from Abū Sakhb, from Abū Muʿāwiya al-Balkhi, from Saʿīd b. Jubayr, from Ibn ʿAbbās, that ʿAli told him, “We only had two horses with us — that of al-Zubayr and that of al-Miqdād b. al-Aswād.” He was referring to the battle of Badr.

Al-Ūmawi stated, “My father related to us, quoting Ismāʿīl b. Abū Khaṭīb, from al-Taymi, who said, ‘At the battle of Badr the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had with him two horsemen, al-Zubayr b. al-ʿAwwām on the right flank, al-Miqdād b. al-Aswād on the left.”

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “They had with them 70 camels they would ride in turn. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) shared one with ʿAli and Marthad b. Abū Marthad, while Ḥamza and Zayd b. Ḥāритha, along with Abū Kabsha and Anīs, two freedmen of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), took turns with another.”

This is what Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, may God Almighty have mercy on him.

Imām Ahmad stated, “Affān related to us, from Ḥammād b. Salama, ʿAṣīm b. Bahdala related to us, from Zīr r b. Ḥubaysh, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Masʿūd, who said, ‘At Badr we were three to a camel. Abū Lubāba and ʿAli were the Companions of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).’ He also said, “They were the ones taking turns riding with him, and they told him, “Let us walk.” He replied, “You are no stronger than me; nor can I dispense with the reward more than you can.””

Al-Nasāʾī recounted this, from al-Fallās, from Ibn Mahdī, from Ḥammād b. Salama.

I would comment that this might have been before Abū Lubāba was sent back from al-Rawḥān, and that it was thereafter that he shared with ʿAlī and Marthad instead of Abū Lubāba. But God knows best.

The Imām Ahmad stated, “Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar related to us, quoting Saʿīd, from Qatāda, from Zurāra b. Abū Awwā, from Saʿīd b. Hishām, from ʿAṭīsha, who said that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) ordered that the bells be cut off the necks of the camels at the battle of Badr.”

This line of transmission accords with the criteria of both saḥīḥ collections. However, al-Nasāʾī recounted it from Abū al-ʾAṣwāṭ, from Khalīd b. al-Ḥāритha, from Saʿīd b. Abū ʿUrūba, from Qatāda.

Our teacher, the ḥāфиз Sheikh al-Mizzi, stated in al-ʾAṭrāf (The Extremes): “It was Saʿīd b. Bishr who quoted directly from Qatāda. And also Hishām gave it from Qatāda, from Zurāra, from Abū Hurayra.” But God knows best.

Al-Bukhārī stated that Yaḥyā b. Bukayr related to him, quoting al-Layth, from ʿUqayl, from Ibn Shihāb, from ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Kaʿb b. Mālik, who quoted ʿAbd Allāh b. Kaʿb as reporting, “I heard Kaʿb b. Mālik say, ‘The only expedition in which the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) participated, that I did not attend, except for the raid on Tabūk, was the battle of Badr. And God did not reproach anyone who stayed behind from it. Because when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) went forth on it he was heading for the Quraysh caravan; God, however, brought the Muslims into contact with their enemies unexpectedly.”

Al-Bukhārī is alone in giving this.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) made his way out towards Mecca via the upper part of Medina. His path then led by al-‘Aqiq, Dhū al-Ḥulayfa and Ulāt al-Jaysh. From there he passed by Turbān, Malal, Ghamīs al-Ḥamām, Sukhayrāt al-Yamāma, al-Sayyāla, Fajj al-Rawḥā and Shunūka, this being the direct route.

“Arriving at ‘Irq al-Zabiyya he met a bedouin. They asked him about other people, but received no news from him. The Muslims told him, ‘Pay your respects to the Messenger of God! (SAAS).’ The man asked, ‘Do you have the Messenger of God (SAAS) among you?’ ‘Yes,’ they replied. The man then did greet him, but asked, ‘If you’re the Messenger of God, then tell me what is inside the belly of this female camel of mine.’ Salama b. Salaria b. Waqsh responded, ‘Don’t you put questions to the Messenger of God! (SAAS). Come on over to me, and I’ll tell you that. You mounted her and so she has a little goat inside her belly from you!’ The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, ‘You’ve used obscene language to the man!’ He then turned away from Salama.

Mūsā b. Uqba stated that he had dispatched them both before he left Medina and that when they returned and reported on the status of the caravan, he sent people ahead to it.

If what both Mūsā b. Uqba and Ibn Ishaq stated is correct, then he sent them forward twice. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq, God bless him, went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) proceeded ahead and approached al-Šafrah, a village set between two mountains. He asked what were the names of the two mountains and was told that one was called Muslih and the other Mukhrī. He then asked about the people living on them and they were named as the Banū al-Nār and the Banū Ḥurāq, two sub-tribes of Ghifār. The Messenger of God (SAAS) did not like these names, thinking them an ill-omen, and so he left them and al-Šafrah to his left, making his way along a valley called Dhafirān. Having gone through it, he made camp.”

58. The words muslih and mukhrī can both be interpreted as “he who defecates”; al-nār means fire, and ḥurāq means conflagration.
Ibn Ishaq continued, “There he received the news that Quraysh had set out to protect their caravan.

“He told his men about this, and asked their opinion.

“Abū Bakr arose and spoke, giving good advice.

“Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb arose and spoke, giving good advice.

“Al-Miqdād b. ʿAmr then got up and said, ‘Carry on as ever God tells you, O Messenger of God. We are with you. We will certainly not say to you what the people of Israel said to Moses — that is, ‘You and your Lord go and fight together; we are staying here!’ Rather, (we say) you and your Lord go and fight together, and we will fight along with you! By Him who sent you with the truth, if you were to take us even to Bark al-Ghimād, we would fight with you all over the place until you reached it!’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) expressed his appreciation and blessed him. He then said, ‘Now you advise me, men!’ He was really addressing the Helpers, because they were the majority and because, when they had given him allegiance at al-ʿAqaba they had told him, ‘We are free of responsibility for you until you reach our territory. When you join us, you will be under our protection, and we will then protect you as we do our own sons and women.’ The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was therefore apprehensive that they would feel obliged to help him only against those enemies attacking him in Medina, and that they had no duty to proceed against an enemy beyond their lands.

“When he said this, Saʿd b. Muʿādh responded, ‘Is it us you are asking, O Messenger of God?’ When he said that it was, Saʿd affirmed, ‘We do believe in you and bear witness that you bring the truth. We have given you our oaths and agreement to listen to and to obey all your commands. Proceed as ever you decide, for we are with you. I swear, if you were to plunge into the sea, we would do so with you, not one of us would remain behind. We would have no reluctance to accompany you in confronting our enemy tomorrow. We are stoic in battle, trustworthy in the fray. Let us hope that God will give you pleasure in us. Go forward with God’s blessings!’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was delighted with Saʿd’s words and they spurred him on. He then said, ‘Go forward in good spirits! God has promised me I shall take one of the two parties. I swear by God I feel I can already see their destruction!’

This was how Ibn Ishaq, God have mercy on him, related it. And there are various testimonies to it.

One such is what al-Bukhārī related in his sahih collection. He stated that, “Abū Nuʿaym related to him, quoting Israḥil, from Mukhāriq, from Ṭariq b. Shihāb, who quoted Ibn Masʿūd as having said, ‘I witnessed a scene involving al-Miqdād b. al-ʿAswad such as to make me more his friend than I would have been from what was reported of him. He went to the Prophet (SAAS) while he was praying against the polytheists. Al-Miqdād said, "We will not say as Mūsā’s people did to him, ‘You go off with your Lord and fight along with Him; we’re staying here!’ Instead, we will fight on your right and your left, and in front of you and behind you’.”

59. Apparently the reference is to a place some five days’ journey away from Mecca towards Yemen; presumably the name is used to imply a distant and inaccessible place.

“(Ibn Mas‘ūd went on) ‘At that I saw the face of the Prophet (SAAS) light up in delight.’”

Al-Bukhārī alone gave this; Muslim did not. The former related it several places in the ṣaḥīḥ collection, from a ḥadīth of Mukhrāq. Al-Nasā‘ī also recounted it from his ḥadīth; his version states, “At the battle of Badr, Miqdād rode a horse.” He then related it.

Imām Aḥmad stated, “Wbāyda related it to us, he being the son of Humayd, from Humayd al-Tawil, from Anas, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) sought advice concerning going to battle at Badr. First Abū Bakr gave him advice and again he sought it from all. Then ‘Umar gave him advice and again he sought it. One of the Helpers observed, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) wants your advice, O Helpers.’

“One of them said, ‘Well, O Messenger of God, we’ll not speak as the people of Israel did to Moses, that is, “Go off with your Lord and fight; we’re staying here!” If you were to race all the way to Bark al-Ghimād, we’d follow you!’”

Two-thirds of this chain of authorities meets the conditions for being considered ṣaḥīḥ, “authentic”.

Aḥmad also stated, “Affān related to us, quoting Hammād, from Thābit, from Anas b. Malik, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sought advice when he learned of the approach of Abī Sufyān. Abū Bakr spoke, and he turned away from him. Then ‘Umar spoke, and he turned away from him. Sa‘d b. Ubāda then said, ‘It’s to us the Messenger of God (SAAS) is wanting to respond. By Him in whose hand is my soul, if you were to order us to plunge into the sea we would do so. And if you told us to race all the way to Bark al-Ghimād we would do so.’

“And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) urged his men forward.

“They set off and reached Badr. People came to them with reports of Quraysh, and one of these was a black youth of the Banū al-Ḥajjāj whom they captured. The Companions of the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him about Abū Sufyān and those men with him. He would respond, ‘I have no knowledge of Abī Sufyān. But it was Abī Jahl b. Hisham, ‘Utba b. Rabī‘a and Umayya b, Khalaf.’ When he said this they beat him. When they did so, he would then say, ‘Yes, I will tell you! It was Abū Sufyān.’ When they let him go and asked him, he said, ‘I have no knowledge of Abī Sufyān. But it was Abī Jahl, ‘Utba, Shayba and Umayya.’ When he said this too, they would beat him.

“Meanwhile the Messenger of God (SAAS) was standing there praying. When he saw this scene, he left, saying, ‘By Him who holds my soul in His hands, you beat him when he speaks the truth, and you leave him alone if he lies!’"
"He went on, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “This is the place where so and so shall fall. He then placed his hands on the ground here and here.” And no one effaced the place where the Messenger of God (SAAS) had placed his hand.’"

Muslim related this from Abū Bakr, from ʿAffān in a similar form.

Ibn Abū Hātim related in his Tafsīr (Exegesis), as did Ibn Mardawayh, and the wording is his, through ʿAbd Allah b. Lahīqa, from Yazīd b. Abū Ḥabīb, from Aslam, from Abū ʿImrān, who said he had heard Abū Ayyūb al-ʿAnṣārī say, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, while we were in Medina, ‘I have received information that Abū Sufyān’s caravan is approaching. Do you want us to go out against it in the hope that God will grant it to us as booty?’ We replied, ‘Yes.’

‘And so he went forth as did we too. When we had travelled for a day or two, he asked us, “What should we do about their force? They have been informed of our advance.” We replied, “No; we just don’t have the strength to do battle with them. We came seeking the caravan.”

‘Again he asked what we thought of engaging them in battle and we replied as before.’

‘Then al-Miqdād b. ʿAmr arose and said, “In such case we would not say to you what Moses’ people told him – that is, ‘You and your Lord can go off and fight; we’re staying here.’”

“We wished that our people, the “Helpers”, had spoken as al-Miqdād had done, preferring that to great wealth. And then God the Almighty and Glorious made revelation to His Messenger, with the words, “just as your Lord brought you forth from your house with the truth. A group of the believers are reluctant”’” (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.5).

He then related the rest of the hadīth as above.

Ibn Mardawayh also related, through Muḥammad b. ʿAmr b. ʿAlqama b. Waqqāṣ al-Laythi, from his father, from his grandfather, who said, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went forth to Badr and, having gone as far as al-Rawḥā, there he addressed his force. ‘What do you think?’ he asked them. Abū Bakr replied, ‘O Messenger of God, we have heard that they are so-on and so-forth.’ Again he asked them what they thought, and ʿUmar responded as Abū Bakr had done. But he asked a third time what they thought.

“Saʿd b. Muʿādh then asked him, ‘O Messenger of God, is it us you ask? By Him who honoured you and sent down the Book to you, I’ve never travelled this road before and so have no knowledge of it. But if you were to travel on to Bark al-Ghīmād, in Yemen, we’d accompany you. We’ll not be like those who told Moses, “Go off with your Lord and fight; we’re staying here.” Instead, you go off with your Lord and fight, and we will follow you. And if you proceeded for one purpose and God gave you another, then recognize what God has charged you with and proceed. Make or break with whomever you wish, make war or peace with whomever you wish, and take from our wealth whatever you wish.’”
There was a revelation in the Qur'an concerning Sa'd's words, "Just as your Lord brought you forth from your home with the truth. A group of the believers are reluctant" (sūrat al-‘Anfāl; VIII. v.5).

Al-Umawi related this in his work on the military expeditions and he added, after his words, "and take from our wealth whatever you wish" the phrase "and give us what you wish. And what you take from us will be dearer to us than what you have left. Whatever orders you give us we will follow completely. And, I swear, if you were to go on until you reached al-Bark of Ghamdān, we would go with you."

Ibn Isḥāq stated, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) travelled on from Dhafrān and traversed the passes called al-‘Asāfīr. From there he went down to a town called al-Dābbā, leaving al-Hannān on his right. This is a huge sandhill, like a mountain, and from there he went on down to near Badr. He and another man then rode on further."

Ibn Hishām stated that this man was Abū Bakr.

Ibn Isḥāq went on, "This was related to me by Muḥammad b. Yahyā b. Habbān. They went on and finally stopped near an old bedouin sheikh. He asked him about Quraysh and about Muḥammad and his Companions and what news he had of them. The old man replied, 'I'll not tell you until you tell me to whom you belong.'

"The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, 'You tell us and we'll tell you.' The sheikh asked, 'This for that?' 'Yes,' he agreed.

"The old man then said, 'I have been told that Muḥammad and his Companions left on such and such a day. And if the person who told me this spoke the truth, then today they should be at such and such a place.' This was the name of the very place where the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) actually was. 'And,' he went on, 'I was told that Quraysh left on day so-and-so. And if the person who told me this spoke the truth, then today they should be at such-and-such.' This was the place where Quraysh then were.

"When he had finished his report, he asked, 'And who are you?' The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, 'We are from mār, 'water'.' He then left. As he did so the old man was asking, 'What's that about mār? You mean you're from the mār, the water, of Iraq?'

Ibn Hishām said that this man's name was Sufyān al-Damrī.

Ibn Isḥāq stated, "The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then returned to his Companions. That evening he dispatched 'Alī b. Abū Ṭalīb, al-Zubayr b. al-‘Awwām and Sa‘d b. Abū Waqqās, along with a number of his men, to the well at Badr to seek news; it was Yazīd b. Ṭūrwa b. al-Zubayr.

"They came across a watering-party of Quraysh among whom were Aslam, a youth of the Banū al-Ḥajjāj, along with ‘Arid Abū Yāsār, a youth of the Banū al-‘Ās b. Sa‘d. They brought them back and questioned them, while the Message of God (SAAS) was standing praying. The youths told them they were water carriers sent to bring them water.

"The Muslim force disliked what they said and, believing they were under the command of Abū Sufyān, beat them. After they had been severely beaten, the youths said that they were from Abū Sufyān. The Muslims then released them.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) bowed and prostrated in prayer twice and said, 'When they spoke the truth you beat them and when they lied you released them! They did speak the truth, by God. They are of Quraysh. Now, you two, tell me about Quraysh?' They responded, 'They are beyond that sandhill you can see over on the far side of the valley.' That sandhill was called al-'Aqanqal.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked them, 'How many men do they have?' 'Very many,' they replied. 'How many in number?' he asked. 'We don't know,' they answered. 'How many camels do they slaughter each day?' he next asked. 'Some days nine, others ten,' they told him. The Messenger of God (SAAS) concluded, 'So their force must be between 900 and 1000 men.'

"He then asked them, 'What Quraysh nobles do they have among them?'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) went out to his men and told them, 'This Mecca has thrown at you slices of its very liver!'

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Basbas b. ʿAmr and ʿAdī b. Abū al-Zaghbā had gone on ahead to Badr and halted at a hill near the well. They then took a water-skin they had and went to fetch water. Majdī b. ʿAmr al-Juhānī was there at the well and ʿAdī and Basbas heard two girls from the village laying claims on the water. The one under obligation was saying to her companion, 'The caravan will arrive tomorrow or the day after. I will work for them, then pay you what I owe you.' Majdī answered, 'You are right.' He then made a settlement between them.

"ʿAdī and Basbas overheard that, mounted their camels and left, riding back to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and telling him what they heard.

"Abū Sufyān led the caravan cautiously ahead to the well and asked Majdī b. ʿAmr, 'Did you see anyone?' He replied, 'I saw no one suspicious, except for two riders who dismounted over at that hill, took water in a skin they had, then left.'

"Abū Sufyān made his way to where they had dismounted and picked up some of the droppings of their camels, broke it up and found it contained date-stones. He then said, 'I swear this is from feed of Yathrib.'

"He then hurried back to his men, struck his camel to direct it away from the road and headed it towards the sea coast, leaving Badr to his left and moving off at top speed.
“Quraysh advanced and at al-Juhfa Juhaym b. al-Salt b. Makhrama b. al-Muṭṭalib b. ‘Abd Manāf had a vision. He said, ‘I had a vision in my sleep, while half-way between waking and sleeping, of a man riding a horse and leading a camel, who came to a halt. He then said, ‘Utba b. Rabī‘a, Shayba b. Rabī‘a, Abū al-Ḥakam b. Hishām, Umayya b. Khalaf and so on, are all killed!’ He went on to enumerate other chiefs of Quraysh as well who were killed at Badr.

“Juhaym went on, ‘I then saw him strike the upper chest of his camel and send it on into the camp. And every single tent there was splattered with its blood.’

“When Juhaym’s vision was reported to Abū Jahl, God damn him, he said, ‘So he too is a prophet from the ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib family! He’ll know tomorrow who will be killed, if we meet in battle!’”

Ibn Ishaq continued, “Thinking he had saved his caravan, Abū Sufyān sent word to Quraysh, ‘You came out to do battle in order to protect your caravan, people and wealth; God has now saved these, so go back!’

“But Abū Jahl b. Hishām said, ‘By God, we’ll not turn around until we reach Badr!’”

Badr was a place where the Arabs would hold a fair and market each year.

(Abū Jahl went on) “‘We’ll stay there three days, slaughter some camels, eat well, drink wine and the entertainers will play music for us. The bedouin will get to hear of our journey and of our gathering there, and they will always respect us for it. Let’s proceed ahead.’

“Al-Akhnas b. Shariq b. ‘Amr b. Wahb al-Thaqafi, an ally of the Banū Zuhra, who lived in al-Juhfa, said, ‘O Banū Zuhra, God has saved your wealth for you and has now rendered your companion Makhrama b. Nawfal safe; since you only came out to protect him and the wealth he bears, put the blame for cowardice on me and go back. There is no need for you to go to battle when you have suffered no loss. Don’t do as he says.’

“And they did go back; not one member of the Zuhra tribe took part in the battle of Badr. They obeyed him because they recognized his authority.

“Every sub-tribe of Quraysh except the Banū ‘Adi did participate. Not a single one of them took part.

“And so the Banū Zuhra went back with al-Akhnas; not a man from these two tribes engaged in the battle.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “And so the force proceeded. There was some debate between Ṭālib b. Abū Ṭālib, who was present there, and some of the Quraysh. They told him, ‘We well know, you men of the Banū Hashim, that even though you have come out with us, that your sympathy lies with Muhammad.’ And so Ṭālib went back to Mecca with some other men. On that subject he spoke the following verses,

‘O God, if Ṭālib goes to battle with a force allied to fight in great troops like there,
Then let him be the one despoiled, not the despoiler, the one defeated, not the one defeating."

Ibn Isḥāq went on, "Quraysh proceeded and made camp on the far side of the valley, behind the sandhill called al-‘Aqanqal. The floor of the valley, called Yalyal, was between Badr and the huge sandhill, al-‘Aqanqal, behind which were Quraysh. The well at Badr was on the other side of the valley, nearest to Medina."

I would comment that on this subject the Almighty said, "You were on the nearer side, they on the further, and the caravan was below you" (that is, over towards the coast) "and had you made appointment for this you would have failed to keep it; however, (the battle did take place) in order for God to bring about something already ordained" (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.42).

Ibn Isḥāq went on, "And God dispatched the heavens (with rain). The valley was soft ground and the water from the sky merely dampened the earth for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and his force but did not impede their progress. But Quraysh had such rain fall upon them that they could not move ahead."

I comment that on this God spoke, "And He sent down upon you water from the sky to purify you thereby, to remove from you the devil’s filth, to strengthen your hearts and to steady your feet" (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.11).

Here God refers to cleansing them both inside and out, to steadying their feet and giving them courage, to thwarting the devil and his inspiring them with fear and doubts. This action was to give strength both within and without. He sent down His help for them from above, as exemplified in His words, “when your Lord revealed to the angels that I am with you. And so make those who believe; for I shall cast terror into the hearts of the unbelievers. Therefore strike above their necks” (upon their heads, that is) “and strike off all their finger-tips” (so that they cannot grip their weapons). “This is because they were hostile to God and to His Messenger. And God is violent in His punishment of those who are hostile to God and His Messenger. Taste that then! And (know) that the punishment of hell is for disbelievers” (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.12–14).

Ibn Jarir stated, "Ḥārūn b. Isḥāq related to me, quoting Muṣṭaḥb b. al-Miqdām, quoting Isrā‘īl quoting Abū Ishāq, from Ḥāritha, from ʿAlī b. Abū Tālib, who said, ‘That night – the one preceding the morning when the battle of Badr occurred – it drizzled and we took shelter from it beneath the tree and under leather shields. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) remained up praying and he exhorted us for the battle ahead.’"

The Imām Ahmad stated, “ʿAbd al-Rahmān b. Mahdī related to us, from Shu‘ba, from Abū Ishāq, from Ḥāritha b. Miṣrāb, from ʿAlī, who said, ‘The only horseman we had at the battle of Badr was al-Miqdād. From what I saw, all slept except for the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who remained beneath a tree praying and weeping until morning came.’"

This hadith will be given hereafter at greater length.
Al-Nasā'ī related this from Bundār, from Ghundar, from Shu'ba. Mujāhid stated, “He sent down upon them rain which settled the dust and compressed the soil for them. It pleased them to have their feet tread upon it.”

I comment that the night before Badr was the eve of Friday, the 17th of Ramaḍān, 2 AH. The Messenger of God (ṣaas) spent that night near the stump of a tree there, praying. He kept prostrating himself and repeating, “O Everlasting One! O Self-Reliant One!” (ṣūrat al-Baqara; II, v.255).

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṣaas) went out to urge his men on to the well, and when he reached the nearest source at Badr, he stopped there.

“It was related to me by some men of the Bantū Salama, that they had been told that al-Ḥubāb b. Mundhir b. al-Jamīh said, ‘O Messenger of God, is this the place about which God revealed to you that we should not advance beyond nor stop before? Or is this a question of opinion, warfare and tactics?’

“He replied, ‘It’s one of opinion, warfare and tactics.’

“Al-Ḥubāb then said, ‘Well, O Messenger of God, this isn’t a place to stop. We should go ahead till we get to the well nearest to their force and stop there. We should then stop up the wells behind it and build a cistern and fill it with water. Then we can fight them and have water to drink, while they’ll have none.’

“The Messenger of God (ṣaas) commented, ‘You’ve had a good idea!’”

Al-Umawi stated, “My father related to us as follows: ‘Al-Kalbi claimed, quoting Abū Šalih, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, ‘As the Messenger of God (ṣaas) was gathering the men into groups with Gabriel on his right, an angel came to him and said, ‘O Muḥammad, God greets you with peace.’ The Messenger of God (ṣaas) replied, ‘He is peace; from Him comes peace, and to Him peace goes.’ The angel then said, ‘You are to do as al-Ḥubāb b. Mundhir told you.’’”

“‘The Messenger of God (ṣaas) then asked, “O Gabriel, do you know this man?” He replied, “I don’t know all the people of heaven, but he is truthful. He is no devil.”

“‘The Messenger of God (ṣaas) and those with him arose and proceeded on to the well nearest to the Quraysh force, where they halted. He then ordered that the other wells be blocked and built a cistern at the well where he had stopped and filled it with water. They then threw the water jugs into it.’”

Some say that when al-Ḥubāb b. al-Mundhir made his suggestion to the Messenger of God (ṣaas) an angel descended from the sky while Gabriel was there with him. The angel said, “O Muḥammad, your Lord greets you with peace and says to you that you are to do what al-Ḥubāb advised you.” The Messenger of God (ṣaas) looked up at Gabriel who said, “I don’t know all the angels, but he is an angel, not a devil.”

Al-Umawi stated that they halted at the well that was nearest to the polytheists at midnight and made camp there. They completely filled the cistern, and so the polytheists had no water.
Ibn Ishaq stated, “Abd Allah b. Abī Bakr related to me that he was informed that Sa’d b. Mu‘ādh stated, ‘O Prophet of God, should we not build you a cover where you could stay and near which we could tether your mounts, and then we can meet our enemy. If God gives us victory over our enemy, that will be fine by us; but if the opposite happens, you can mount up and join those of our people behind us; those who stayed do not love you any less than we do. If they had thought you would be going into battle, they would not have stayed. God will protect you through them and they will give you sincere counsel and will fight hard with you.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) thanked him and prayed for him. Then a shelter was constructed for the Messenger of God (SAAS) where he stayed.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When morning came, the Quraysh force advanced.

“When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw them coming forward into the valley from their position behind the sandhill at al-Qa‘qanqal, he said, ‘O God, these men advancing are Quraysh in all their vanity and pride; they are antagonistic to You and are calling Your Prophet a liar. O God, give us Your victory You promised us! O God, destroy them this morning.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, having seen Utba b. Rab‘a in the Quraysh force mounted on a red camel, ‘Whatever good may be in them resides in the man mounted on the red camel. If they were to obey him, they would be well guided.’

“Khufṣ b. Aymāʾ b. Ṭabbata, or his father Aymāʾ b. Ṭabbata al-Ghifārī, had sent to Quraysh a son of his with some slaughtered camels which he was donating to them, telling them, ‘If you wish us to provide you with weapons and men we will do so.’ Quraysh sent back with his son the following response, ‘You have maintained family ties and fulfilled your duty. If we are only fighting men, we will not lack the power. But if we are fighting God, as Muhammad claims, no one could stand up to Him.’

“When the Quraysh force made camp, some of their men came forward to the water cistern of the Messenger of God (SAAS); they included Ḥakīm b. Ḥizām. The Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘Let them come.’ And every man who drank that day was killed, except for Ḥakīm b. Ḥizām, who survived. He later accepted Islam and became a good Muslim; whenever he later made a serious oath, he would say, ‘By Him who saved me at the battle of Badr.’”

I would comment that the troops of the Messenger of God (SAAS) consisted of 313 men, as will be shown in a chapter we will give following the account of the battle in which we will list their names in alphabetical order, if God wills it.

In the ṣaḥīḥ collection of al-Bukhārī, from al-Baraʾ, there is the hadith: “We used to relate that those Muslims present at Badr totalled 300 men and some tens more, the same number as the companions of Taiṭūt, who crossed the river along with him; and all those who did so were believers.”
Al-Bukhārī also quotes from the same source as follows, “I and Ibn Umar were deemed too young to participate in the battle of Badr. The Emigrants there numbered some 60 men, while the Helpers totalled some 240.”

Imām Ḥāfīz related from Naṣr b. Rābī, from Ḥajjāj, from al-Ḥakam, from Muqsim, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, “Those participating at Badr totalled 313, while the Emigrants numbered 76. The defeat occurred on Friday, 17th Ramadān.”

God Almighty stated, “And recall when God showed them to you in your sleep as few; and if He had showed them to you as many, you would have lost courage, and would have disputed about the matter. However, God granted salvation” (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.43).

That related to a dream he had that night. It is said that he slept in the shelter and that he told his men that they should not fight until they received permission. When the Quraysh force approached, Abū Bakr began to wake him up, saying, “O Messenger of God, they are getting close! Wake up!” God had showed them to him in his sleep as being few in number.

Al-Umawi related this, and it is very strange.

The Almighty stated, “And when He showed them to you, when you met, as few in number in your sight, as He diminished you in theirs, in order to bring about a matter already decreed” (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.44).

When the two sides were to engage in battle, God made each of them fewer in the view of the other so that they would have courage to face each other, there being very great wisdom in this.

This is not contrary to the statement of God Almighty: “There was a sign for you in the two sides battling together, one fighting for God, the other unbelieving and seeing them by their own sight as twice their own like. And God aids with His victory those He wishes” (ṣūrat Al-‘Imrān; III, v.12).

The meaning according to the most authentic statements is that the unbelievers did indeed view the believers as twice their number. This was when the battle and swordsmanship had begun, God cast weakness and terror into the hearts of the unbelievers. He first led them on by showing them as few in the initial engagement and then aided the believers by making them seem twice as many as they were so that the enemy was weakened and overcome. For this reason God stated, “God aids with his help those He wishes. And there is a lesson in that for those who have vision” (ṣūrat Al-‘Imrān; III, v.12).

Ibrāhīm stated, from Abū Ishāq, Abū Ubayd and ‘Abd Allāh, “They were made fewer in number in our sight on the day of the battle of Badr, to the point where I said to a man by my side, ‘Do you think they are 70 strong?’ He replied, ‘I see them as 100!’”

Ibn Ishāq stated that Abū Ishāq b. Yasār and other scholars related to him that sheikhs of the Helpers had said, “When the Quraysh force felt secure they sent out ‘Umayr b. Wahb al-Jumāhī with orders to estimate the size of the force of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).
“He circled the camp on his horse and returned, saying, ‘They are approximately 300 men in number; but be patient while I check out whether they have any others hidden or in reserve.’"

“He rode far off into the valley but saw nothing. So he came back and told them, ‘I saw nothing more; but what I did see, O Quraysh, was camels bearing death. The Yathrib mounts bear imminent death. They are people whose only aid and refuge is their swords. I swear I don’t foresee any of them being killed before he kills one of you. And if they do kill of you a like number as their own, what good will it be to live after that? Consider carefully.’

“When Ḥākim b. Ḥizām heard that he walked through the force to Utba b. Rabī‘a and said, ‘Al-Walid, you are a leader and a commander of Quraysh; do you wish to be remembered with pride by your people until the end of time?’

‘How do you mean, Ḥākim?’ he asked. ‘Take your force back and deal with the issue of your ally ‘Amr b. al-Ḥaḍrami.’ ‘Consider it done,’ he agreed, ‘you have my guarantee of it. He was under my protection and so it is my duty to pay his bloodwit and provide compensation for what was taken from him. Go and talk to Ibn al-Ḥanẓaliyya — meaning Abū Jahl — he is the only one I fear might make trouble.’

‘Utba then arose to speak, saying, ‘O Quraysh, by fighting Muḥammad and his Companions you will accomplish nothing. If you do attack him, each of you will always be looking at others who will dislike looking back at you; you will be known to have killed their cousin or a member of their tribe. Go home and leave Muḥammad up to the other Arabs. If they kill him that will be accomplishing your aims and if otherwise, he will find you not to have been exposed to (the risk of) what you now plan.’

‘Ḥākim went on, ‘So I went on to Abū Jahl whom I found to have put on a coat of mail and was getting it ready. I told him, “Abū al-Ḥakam, Utba has sent me to you.” And I told him what he had said. He replied, “I swear, his lungs filled with terror when he saw Muḥammad and his men. By God, we will not return until God decides the issue between us and Muḥammad. Utba is not sincere in what he says. He sees Muḥammad and his men as fodder for camels awaiting slaughter, and his own son is there among them. He’s scaring you for his own sake.”’

‘Abū Jahl then sent for ʿĀmir b. al-Ḥaḍrami and told him, ‘This ally of yours wants our force to return home. Yet you see before you your vengeance; stand up and demand your rights for the slaying of your brother.’

‘ʿĀmir b. al-Ḥaḍrami arose, uncovered his head and proclaimed, ‘Woe for ʿAmr! Woe for ʿAmr!’

“And so the mood for warfare became heated and the attitude of the Quraysh force hardened and they became set in their evil course, while Utba’s advice was ignored.

“When Abū Jahl’s words ‘his lungs filled with terror’ reached Utba, he exclaimed, ‘That fellow with the filthy yellow backside will find out whether it’s me or him whose lungs filled in terror!’
“Utba then looked for a steel helmet to put on his head. But he could not find one with the army that was big enough for his skull. Realizing this, he wrapped his head in a cloth he had.”

Ibn Jarir related through al-Musawwar b. 'Abd al-Malik al-Yarbiici, from his father, from Sa'īd b. al-Musayyab, who said, “While we were at the home of Marwân b. al-Ḥakam, his doorkeeper came in and said, ‘Ḥakîm b. Ḥizâm asks if he can come in.’ Marwân said that he could, and when Ḥakîm came in, he said to him, ‘Welcome to you, Abû Khâlid, do sit close by.’ He then moved away from the central cushion, taking a seat with the cushion next to him. He then greeted him and said, ‘Tell us about the battle of Badr.’

“Ḥakîm then said, ‘We went out as far as al-Juhfâ, at which point one entire Quraysh tribe went back, none of their polytheists consequently being at Badr. We then went on to al-Ṣudâwa where we stopped as the Almighty had said. I then went to Utba b. Rabî‘a and asked, “Abû al-Walîd, how would you like to enjoy honour for this day for as long as you live?” “What should I do?” he asked. I replied, “Ask of Muhammad only compensation for the death of your ally, al-Ḥadrâmî; be satisfied with his blood-money and the force will go home.”

“‘You have convinced me,” he said, “go on to Ibn al-Hanzâliyya [meaning Abû Jahl] and tell him his cousin asks him if he is willing to now return home with his men.”

“‘So I went to him (Abû Jahl) and found him with a group of his men all around him. There too, standing in front of him, was Ibn al-Ḥadrâmî who was saying, “I have cancelled my contract with ‘Abd Shams; now it stands with the Bânî Makhzûm.”

“I said to him (to Abû Jahl), “Utba b. Rabî‘a asks you whether you will now return with your men?” He replied, “Are you the only messenger he could find?” I answered, “No; and I’d be the messenger for no one but him.”’

“Ḥakîm went on, ‘I hurried off to Utba to be sure I would miss nothing that happened. He was leaning over Aymâb. b. Rahādâ al-Ghîfârî, who had donated to the polytheists ten camels for slaughter.

“Abû Jahl then appeared, looking extremely mean, and said to Utba, “Have your lungs filled with terror then?” Utba replied, “You’ll find out!” At that Abû Jahl drew his sword and slapped the flank of his horse with it. Aymâb. b. Rahādâ commented, “This is a bad omen.” And at that point warfare began.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had established very effective battle lines for his force.’”

Al-Tirmidhî related, from ‘Abd al-Raḥmân b. Awf, that Ḥakîm used the words, “It was during the night that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) established us in battle lines at Badr.”

Imâm Ahmad related, from an account of Ibn Ḥānî’a, as follows, “Yazîd b. Abû Ḥabîb related to me that Aslâm Abû ‘Imrân related to him that he heard Abû Ayyûb say, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) established our battle lines at Badr, and our heralds went out in front of our lines. The Prophet (SAAS) looked over at them and said, “With me! With me!”

Ahmad alone gives this account. The line of transmission is good.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Habbān b. Wāsi‘ b. Ḥabbān related to me, from sheikhs of his tribe, that when the Messenger of God (SAAS) lined up his forces at the battle of Badr, he held an arrow which he used to indicate how they should adjust their position. He passed by Sawwād b. Ghaziyya, an ally of the Banū ‘Adī b. al-Najār, and a little ahead of the line. He poked him in the belly with the arrow, saying, ‘Straighten up, Sawwād!’

“He replied, ‘O Messenger of God, I swear by Him who sent you with the truth and justice that you hurt me! So let me retaliate!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) promptly uncovered his stomach and said, ‘Retaliate then!’ Sawwād hugged him and then kissed his stomach. The Messenger of God (SAAS), asked, ‘Why did you do that, Sawwād?’ He replied, ‘O Messenger of God, you can see what is about to happen; I wanted my last contact with you to be my skin touching yours.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) then spoke a prayer for him.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “‘Aṣim b. Umar b. Qatāda related to me that ‘Awf b. al-Ḥarīth, he being ‘Afra’s son, said, ‘O Messenger of God, what is it about His worshippers that pleases God?’ ‘For them to charge into the enemy unprotected by helmet or chain-mail,’ he replied.

“At this ‘Awf removed the suit of chain-mail he wore, threw it aside, then drew his sword and fought until he was killed; may God be pleased with him!”

Ibn Ishaq went on, “Having arranged the position of his forces, the Messenger of God (SAAS) returned to his shelter and went in, accompanied by Abū Bakr, no one else being there with him.”

Ibn Ishaq and others also said, “Sa’d b. Mu‘adh, God be pleased with him, was standing at the door of the shelter wearing his sword. With him were some of the Helpers standing guard over the Messenger of God (SAAS) fearing he might be attacked by the polytheist enemies, while choice horses stood there at the ready for the Messenger of God (SAAS) to ride back to Medina if necessary, as Sa’d b. Mu‘adh had suggested.”

Al-Bazzār related in his Musnad (collection of ahādīth), from an account of Muḥammad b. ‘Uqayl, that ‘Āli (once) addressed the forces, saying, ‘Who is the bravest of all the people?’ ‘It is you, O Commander of the Faithful!’ they responded.

“Well,’ he commented, ‘I have never refused anyone’s challenge, but it was in fact Abū Bakr. We made a shelter for the Messenger of God (SAAS) to prevent his being attacked by one of the polytheists. And, I swear, it was Abū Bakr alone who came over to us, holding his drawn sword above the head of the Messenger of God (SAAS). And when anyone came towards him, Abū Bakr would raise his sword before him. This man was the bravest of all.’
"Ali went on, 'Once I saw the Messenger of God (SAAS) in the hands of some Quraysh men, some blocking his way, others jostling him, and saying, "You made the gods into just one!" And, I swear, the only one of us who intervened was Abū Bakr, striking and pushing and jostling them, saying, "Shame on you! Would you kill a man for saying that God is his Lord?"

"Ali then raised up the mantle he wore and wept, his beard wet with tears. He said, 'Were the believers among Pharaoh's people better than him?' The crowd was silent, and 'Ali went on, 'By God, an hour of Abū Bakr is better than an earth full of the believers from among Pharaoh's people. Those were people who concealed their belief, while he was a man who made his faith public.'"

Al-Bazzār then stated, "We know of this anecdote only from this account."

This reflects the special distinction of Abū Bakr; it was he who was with the Messenger of God in the shelter, just as he had been with him in the cave. May God be pleased with him and please him!

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) was meanwhile making invocations, pleas and prayers saying, among other things, 'O God, if this force perishes, You will never again be worshipped on earth!' He cried out to God the Almighty and Glorious, 'O Lord, fulfil what You promised me; O God, give me aid!'

"In saying this he would raise his hands so high that his cloak would slip down over his shoulders, and Abū Bakr, God bless him, would stand close behind him repositioning it for him and saying, in sympathy at the effusiveness of his supplication, 'O Messenger of God, lessen your appeals to your Lord; He will fulfil His promise to you.'"

This, then, is how it is related by al-Suhayli, from Qasim b. Thabit. Abū Bakr only used the words meaning "lessen your appeals to your Lord" out of his concern for what he saw as his being so engrossed in his prayer and supplications that his mantle had slipped down over his shoulders. By saying these words he was in effect asking, "Why are you so exhausting yourself; God has made you a promise of His help." Abū Bakr, God bless him, was a tender-hearted man with great empathy and compassion for the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Al-Suhayli related that his teacher, Sheikh Abū Bakr b. al-'Arabi, said, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) was in a situation of khawf; fearing, while Abū Bakr was in one of rajā', hoping. And this was really a time of fearing." By this he meant that khawf (in this instance) was more appropriate, "because it was up to God to do as He wished; and he feared that God would not be worshipped thereafter. His fear was therefore worship."

I would comment that the view of some Sufi ascetics that this situation was analogous to that of the day in the cave is to be rejected. For this person did not make mention of the weakness of his viewpoint, nor the consequences thereof.

60. These are terms used especially by Muslim mystics to describe the attitudes one can adopt in one's relationship to the Divine being.
In any case, the contending forces did confront one another in battle, the outcome resting in the hands of the All-Merciful. The greatest of the prophets called upon his Lord's help, his Companions too raising their voices loud in invocation of the Lord of heaven and earth, Who hears all prayers and discovers all heroic action.

The first of the polytheists to be killed was al-Aswād b. ‘Abd al-Asad al-Makhzūmī.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “This was a mean and disreputable fellow who had said, ‘I swear to God I will drink from their cistern or destroy it, or die before I get there!’ And when he came forth to do battle, Ḥamza b. ‘Abd al-Muţtaţib went out to confront him. When they met, Ḥamza struck him and off came his foot and half his leg, before he had reached the cistern. He fell down on his back, his leg spurting blood back towards his companions. He then crawled on in the direction of the cistern, plunging into it intending, so they say, to fulfil his oath. Ḥamza pursued him and struck him again and again until he had killed him, there in the cistern.”

Al-Umawī stated, “At that Utba b. Rabī‘a became excited and determined to demonstrate his bravery. He came forth with his brother Shayba on one side of him and his son al-Walid on the other and, standing out in the centre between the two lines, they issued a challenge for single combat. Three young men from the Helpers went out to confront them; they were ‘Awf and Mu‘ādh, the two sons of al-Ḥārith, their mother being ‘Afrā‘, along with ‘Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa, so they say. ‘And who are you?’ they were asked, and they replied, ‘We are from among the ansār, “the Helpers”.’ ‘We have no quarrel with you,’ they were told.”

In one account it is said that the Quraysh warriors then said, “These are our honourable peers, but send forth some of our own people.” Their herald then called out, “O Muḥammad, send forth our peers from our own people.”

According to al-Umawī, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was displeased when the three Helpers stepped forth. This was because this was the first battle pitting his men against his enemies, and he would have preferred his warriors to have been from his own tribe. He therefore ordered the first three men to withdraw and ordered out the three men named above.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When the three combatants approached the three Quraysh warriors, the latter asked their names.” (This is an indication that they were wearing armour and they could not be recognized by their weapons.) “Ubayda, Ḥamza and ‘Ali each gave their names in turn. The Quraysh champions then commented, ‘Worthy peers.’

“Ubayda then stepped forward, he being the oldest of them, and faced Utba, while Ḥamza addressed Shayba and ‘Ali stood before al-Walid b. Utba.

‘Ḥamza soon killed Shayba, as ‘Ali did al-Walid. Ubayda and Utba exchanged blows and each brought the other down. Ḥamza and ‘Ali then turned their swords against Utba and finished him off. They then picked up their fallen comrade and carried him back to their side. May God be pleased with him.”

It is established in both sahih collections from a hadith of Abū Mīlāz, from Qays b. Ubād, that Abū Dharr used to swear on oath that this verse, “These two are adversaries who dispute about their Lord” (sūrat al-Hajj; XXII, v.19) was revealed about Ḥamzah and his opponent and about Utba and his, referring to their coming forth at Badr.

This is the wording al-Bukhārī gives in explaining this verse.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Ḥājjāj b. Minḥāl related to us, quoting al-Muṭṭamir b. Sulaymān, who said, ‘I heard my father say that Abū Mīlāz related to him, from Qays b. Ubād, who quoted ‘Aṭī b. Abū Ṭalīb as having said, “I will be the first person who kneels before the All-Merciful one, Almighty and Glorious is He, among the adversaries on Judgement Day.”’”

“Qays stated, ‘And it was about them that the verse was revealed, “These two are adversaries who dispute about their Lord.”’ He went on, “This referred to those who stood forth to do battle at Badr – ‘Āli and Ḥamzah, Ubayḍa and Shayba b. Rabī‘a, and Utba b. Rabī‘a and al-Walid b. Utba.’”

Al-Bukhārī alone gives this.

We have discussed this at sufficient length in our Tafsīr (Exegesis); and to God be all praise and credit.

Hind spoke the following on that subject,

“Eyes of mine, make copious tears flow down for the best of heroes who did not turn aside. His people called out to him on the morning when the Bānū ʿHashim and the Bānū al-Muṭṭalib did battle, Making him taste the sharpness of their swords, raising him aloft even after he had been destroyed.”

This was why Hind swore she would eat Ḥamzah’s liver.

The Ubayḍa referred to here was the son of al-Ḥārith b. al-Muṭṭalib b. ‘Abd Manāf. They carried him to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), and placed him on a bed next to where he stood. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then honoured him by allowing his cheek to rest on his foot.
“‘Ubayda then said, ‘O Messenger of God, if Abū Ṭalib could only see me, he would know that it was to me his words applied, ‘We will serve him until we are laid out before him, uncaring even of our sons and our wives.’”

“He then, God be pleased with him, died, and the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘I bear witness that you are a martyr?’”

Al-Shafi‘ī, God bless him, related this.

The first Muslim killed in the battle was Mihja‘, the freed-man of ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb; he was shot with an arrow.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “He was the first man killed. Then Ḥāritha b. Surāqa, one of the Banū ‘Adi b. al-Najjār, was shot at as he drank from the cistern. An arrow hit him in the throat, and so he died.”

It is established in the sahih collections, from Anas, that Ḥāritha b. Surāqa was killed at Badr. He was in the vanguard and was struck by a stray arrow which killed him. His mother later came to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and said, “O Messenger of God, tell me about Ḥāritha. If he is in heaven, I will be content. Otherwise, let God show me what to do.” That is, to engage in mourning for him, a practice not yet forbidden. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) replied, “Have you gone crazy? There are eight gardens there, and your son has earned the very highest of paradise!”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The forces moved slowly towards one another. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had told his men not to attack until he gave them the order. He said, ‘If the enemy should surround you, then force them back with arrows.’”

In his sahih collection, al-Bukhārī quotes Abū Usayd as saying, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS), told us at the battle of Badr, ‘If they close in on you’ – meaning the polytheists – ‘then shoot at them and gather up your arrows.’”

Ibn Hishām stated that the war cry used at Badr by the șahūba, the Companions, was “One! One!”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “While the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was in the shelter with Abū Bakr, God bless him, he called out to God the Almighty and Glorious for help. As the Almighty stated, ‘When you sought aid from your Lord, and he answered you, saying, “I will help you with 1,000 angels, following after one another. And God made of it nothing but glad tidings, to ease your hearts by it. And victory comes only from God. God is powerful, wise”’ (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.9, 10).
Imâm Ahmad stated that Abû Nûh Qurâd related to him, quoting ʿIkrima b. ʿAmmâr, quoting Simâk al-Ḥanâfi, father of Zumayl, quoting Ibn ʿAbbâs, quoting ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭîb, as follows, “At the battle of Badr, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) looked over at his force numbering some 300 and viewed the polytheists, totalling more than 1,000. He then turned in the direction of the qibla, wearing his shawl and pants and spoke the words, ‘O God, fulfil what you promised me; O God, if this force perishes You will never again be worshipped on earth.’

“He kept up his appeals and prayers to his Lord until his mantle fell down. Abû Bakr then came and replaced it, remaining close behind him. He then said, ‘Let your appeals to your Lord be enough now. He will fulfil what He has promised you.’ And so God revealed, ‘When you sought aid from your Lord, and He answered you, saying, ‘I will help you with 1,000 angels, following after one another’” (sûrat al-Anfûs; VIII, v.9).

He then related the conclusion of the hadîth as will come hereafter.

Muslim, Abû Dâ‘ūd, al-Tirmidhi, Ibn Jarir and others all related this, from a hadîth of ʿIkrima b. ʿAmmâr al-Yamání. ʿAli b. al-Madîni and al-Tîrmidhi declared it authentic.

Others also stated, from Ibn ʿAbbâs, al-Suddi, Ibn Jarir and others, that this verse was revealed concerning the prayers said by the Prophet at Badr.

Al-Umawî and others stated that the Muslims shouted out loudly to God, Almighty and Glorious is He, seeking His aid.

As for the words of the Lord “with 1,000 angels, following after one another”, it implies that “they are following on towards you and giving aid to your party”.

Al-ʿAwfî related this hadîth from Ibn ʿAbbâs along with Mujâhid, Ibn Kathîr, ʿAbd al-Rahmân b. Zayd and others. Abû Kudâya stated, from Qâbûs, from Ibn ʿAbbâs, that the word murdîfîn, i.e. “following after one another”, meant that each angel was followed by another one. In another account from him, with the same chain of authorities murdîfîn is taken to imply that each came immediately after the other. Abû Ẓabyân, al-Ḍâḥkhâk and Qatâda said this.

ʿAli b. Abû Ṭalîba al-Wâlîbi related from Ibn ʿAbbâs, who said, “God provided His Prophet and the believers with 1,000 angels. Gabriel was there with one wing of 500, while Michael had another wing of 500. This is very well known.”

However, Ibn Jarir stated, “Al-Muthannâ related to me, quoting Isâq, quoting Yaʿqûb b. Muḥammad al-Zuhri, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿAzîz b. ʿImrân, from al-Râbai, from Abû al-Huwâyrîth, from Muḥammad b. Jubâyrr, from ʿAllî, who said, “Gabriel came down along with 1,000 angels on the right flank of the Prophet (ṢAAS) where Abû Bakr was, while Michael came down with 1,000 angels on the left flank of the Prophet (ṢAAS) where I was.”

Al-Bayhaqî related this in his work Dalâ'il (The Signs), from a hadîth of Muḥammad b. Jubâyrr, from ʿAllî. He added the words, “And Isrâfîl came down with 1,000 angels.”

He related in that account that he was stabbed that day by a lance, with the result that his armpit was reddened with blood, and that 3,000 angels came down.
This is strange, and there is some weakness in its chain of authorities. If true, the account would strengthen even further the prior statements. This is substantiated by the alternative reading of some authorities who read the word murdafina, with an “a” following the “d”. But God knows best.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “Al-Ḥākim informed us, quoting al-ʾĀṣāmm, while Muḥammad b. Sinān al-Qazzāz related to us, quoting Ubayd Allāh b. Ṭālib al-Ḥanafī, quoting Ubayd Allāh b. Ṭālib al-Rahmān b. Mawḥāb, quoting Ismāʿīl b. ʿAwf b. Ṭālib b. Allāh b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Muḥammad b. Umar b. ʿAlī b. Abū Ṭalib, from his father, from his grandfather, who said, ‘At the battle of Badr, I fought for a while, then hurried to see what the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) was doing. When I got there, I found him prostrate in worship, saying, “Ya Ḥayy! Ya Qayyūm!” “O Living One! O Eternal One!”; he was saying nothing else. I returned to the fighting, then came back to find him still prostrate and still repeating the same. Again I went off to battle, and once more returned to find the same. He kept saying this till God gave him victory.’”

Al-Nasāʾi related it in al-Yawm wa al-Layla (Day and Night) from Bundār, from Ubayd Allāh b. Ṭālib al-Ḥanafī.

Al-ʾAḥmadī related, from Abū Ishāq, from Abū Ubayda, from Abī Ṭālib ab. Masʿūd, who said, “I never heard any worshipper imploring God more strongly than did Muḥammad (ṢAAS) at the battle of Badr. He was saying, ‘O God, I beseech you in the name of Your promise and Your pact! O God, if this force perishes, You will not be worshipped!’ He then turned, and it was as if the moon had cleft its face! He said, ‘I seem to be seeing the enemy’s destruction in the late evening!’”

Al-Nasāʾi related this from a ḥadīth of al-ʾAḥmadī.

He also said, “When we met in battle at Badr, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) arose, and I never saw anyone implore God more strongly for his rights than did the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).” And he related as above.

It has been definitively stated in the ṣaḥīḥ collection of Muslim, on the authority of Anas b. Malik, as stated, above, how the Prophet (ṢAAS) gave details of the circumstances of the deaths at Badr of the polytheists leaders. This information will also be reported later from the ṣaḥīḥ collection of Muslim on the authority of ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb.

The conclusion to be drawn from the ḥadīth of Ibn Masʿūd is that he gave notice of this on the actual day of the engagement. This is appropriate. The other two accounts, from Anas and from ʿUmar, suggest that he gave this information one day prior thereto.

There is no objection to combining between these. He could have given this information a day or more before, and (again) an hour before, on the actual day of the battle. But God knows best.

61. Changing the vowel ʾi to ʾa has the effect of changing the word from an active to a passive participle.
Al-Bukhārī related through several different lines of transmission, from Khalīd al-Ḥadhā', from Ḥārīm, from Ibn ʿAbbas, that the Prophet (ṢAAS), while in a pavilion he had at Badr, spoke the words, “O God, I appeal to Your pact and to Your oath! If You wish it, You will not be worshipped ever again after this day!” Abū Bakr took him by the hand and said, “That is enough, O Messenger of God! You are pestering your Lord.” The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then went outside, walking vigorously in his armour, speaking the verse, “The force will be defeated! They will retreat! The hour will come, and it will be most bitter!” (ṣūrat al-Qamar; LIV, v.45).

This verse was revealed in Mecca. Its truth was substantiated at the battle of Badr, as Ibn Abū Ḥākim related, as follows, “My father related to us, quoting Abū al-Rabīʿ al-Zahrānī, quoting Ḥammād, from Āyyūb, from Ḥārīm, who said, ‘When the verse was revealed, “The force will be defeated! They will retreat!” ʿUmar asked, “Which force will be defeated, and which will be supreme?” And ʿUmar (later) said, “On the day of the battle of Badr, I saw the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) walking vigorously in his chain-mail and reciting, ‘The force will be defeated! They will retreat! Their hour will come, and it will be most bitter!’ I then realized how it was to be interpreted.””

Al-Bukhārī related, through Ibn Jurayj, from Yūsuf b. Māhān, who heard ʿĀʾishah say, “While I was a girl playing in Mecca, there was revealed to Ṭūhāammad the words, ‘Their hour will come, and it will be most bitter.’”

Ibn Iṣḥāq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) began appealing to his Lord for the aid He had promised him, saying, ‘O God, if this force perishes, You will not be worshipped.’ Abū Bakr was saying meanwhile, ‘O Prophet of God, diminish your appeals to your Lord. God will fulfil for you what He has promised you.’

“The Prophet (ṢAAS) had a brief nap while he was in the shelter. When he awoke, he said, ‘Be joyful, Abū Bakr, God’s help will come to you; I saw Gabriel taking his horse by the reins and leading it. And on its front teeth there was al-naqūṭ! By this word he meant ‘dust’.”

Ibn Iṣḥāq continued, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then went outside to the men and urged them on, saying, ‘Every man who fights them bravely and advances without retreating will have God give him entry into heaven.’

“ʿUmayr b. al-Ḥumām, a brother of the Banū Salama had some dates in his hand that he was eating. He shouted, ‘Great! Great! Is all that stands between me and paradise to have them kill me?’ He then tossed away the dates, took his sword and fought the enemy until he was killed. God bless him!”

Imām Ahmad said, “Ḥāshim b. Sulaymān related to us, from Thabit, from Anas, who said, ‘The Prophet (ṢAAS) sent Basbas off as a scout to see what had become of Abū Sufyān’s caravan. He then returned to the house where only I and the Prophet (ṢAAS) were present, as far as I know, except for some of his wives. He (Basbas) then made his report to him.’
“Anas went on, ‘Thereupon the Messenger of God (SAAS) went out and made an address, saying, “We have a request to make: whoever presently has a camel may ride with us.” Some men there sought permission to fetch their camels from the upper parts of the town but he replied, “No; only those who have their camels present.”

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) and his men then set off and arrived at Badr before the polytheists. When the latter did arrive, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “None of you may advance for any purpose unless I am right behind.”

“When the polytheists advanced, the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “Go forth towards a garden the size of the heavens and the earth combined.”

“Anas continued, ‘At this 'Umayr b. al-Hammām al-Anṣārī asked, “O Messenger of God, could a garden really be the size of the heavens and earth combined?” “Yes,” he replied. 'Umayr then said, “Fine! Fine!” The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked him, “What makes you say ‘fine’?” 'Umayr replied, “O Messenger of God, by God, it is only because of my hope of being one of its people.” “You certainly will be,” responded the Messenger of God (SAAS).

“‘Umayr then took some dates out of his quiver and began eating them. He then said, “If I were to live long enough to eat these dates, it would be a long life!” He then threw away all the dates he had and engaged them in battle until he was killed, God bless him.”

Muslim related this anecdote from 'Abū Bakr b. Abū Shayba and a group of authorities, from 'Abū al-Nadr Hāshim b. al-Qasim, from Sulaymān b. al-Mughira.

Ibn Jarir recounted that while 'Umayr fought he spoke the verses, “Racing on to God, my only provision is my piety and action for the life to come,

And my persistence in fighting for God; for all other provisions soon become exhausted, Except for piety, goodness and right-guidedness.”

Imām Ahmad stated, “Hājjāj related to us, quoting Isrā'īl, from Abū Ishāq, from Hāritha b. Miṣrāb, from 'Alī, who said, ‘When we got to Medina we fell sick from its fruits and the marshes there. The Messenger of God (SAAS) was preparing for Badr. When we received news that the polytheists were advancing, the Messenger of God (SAAS) moved out to Badr, it being the site of a well. We arrived there ahead of the polytheists but we did discover two men there. One was of Quraysh, the other a freed-man of 'Uqba b. Abū Mu'īţ. The man of Quraysh escaped, but we took the freed-man and asked him how large was their force. He replied, “I swear, their numbers are great and their morale is very high.” When he said this, the Muslims would beat him.

“Eventually they took him to the Messenger of God (SAAS) who asked him how many they were, and the freed-man replied as before. The Prophet (SAAS) tried hard to get him to tell their numbers, but he refused. The Prophet (SAAS) then asked how many camels they were slaughtering for food. He replied that it was ten each day. The Prophet (SAAS) then said, “Their force numbers 1,000; each slaughtered camel would feed 100 men and their attendants.”

“That night rain drizzled down on us and we moved beneath a tree and took shelter from the rain beneath leather shields. The Messenger of God (SAAS) set about praying to his Lord, saying, “O God, if this force is destroyed, You will not be worshipped.”

“When dawn came, he called out, “Come to prayer, O worshippers of God!” The men emerged from beneath the tree and the leather shields, and the Messenger of God (SAAS) prayed with us and urged the men on to battle. He then said, “The Quraysh force is over behind those red slopes of the mountain.”

“When the enemy force drew near and we lined up to face them, there was one man among them mounted on a red camel. The Messenger of God (SAAS) called out, “Ali, summon Hamza!” This Quraysh man was the closest to us. The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, “Who is it on the red camel?” When Hamza came, he said the man was Utba b. Rabî‘a. He was advising them against going to war, telling them, “Tie it up to my head; tell people, “Utba b. Rabî‘a turned cowardly.” Though you well know I’m no more cowardly than any one of you.”

“Abû Jahl heard of this and said, “You say this? I swear, were it anyone else who spoke thus, I would set my sword upon him! Your lungs have filled your belly with fear!”

“Utba then said, “You dare to revile me, you yellow-bottomed one! You will discover today which one of us is cowardly.”

“Utba, his brother Shayba and his son al-Walîd went forth challengingly and called out, “Who will come and oppose us?” Some young warriors from among the Helpers stepped forward, but Utba called out, “We don’t want them. We will do battle against our own relatives of the Bânî ‘Abd al-Mu‘tâlib.”

“At this the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, “Off you go, Ḥamza, and you Ali and you too, Ubayd Allâh b. al-Ḥârîrî b. al-Mu‘tâlib.”

“God then killed Utba and Shayba, sons of Rabî‘a, and al-Walîd, Utba’s son. Ubayda was wounded; of their men we killed 70 and took 70 prisoner.

“One of the Helpers brought in al-‘Abbâs b. al-Mu‘tâlib as a prisoner, and al-‘Abbâs said, “O Messenger of God, this is not the man who captured me. A bald, fine-looking man on a piebald horse whom I had not seen with your men was he who took me prisoner.” The Helper insisted, “No; it was I who captured him, O Messenger of God!”

“But he replied, “Keep quiet! God gave you the help of a noble angel.”

This account is good. It corroborates what is given above and will come hereafter. Imâm Aḥmad alone gives it in full. Abû Da‘ūd gave part of it, quoting a ḥadîth of Isrâ‘îl.
When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had come out of the shelter and urged the men on to fight, they remained in their battle lines, firm and frequently invoking God's name, as the Almighty had ordered them to do in the words, "O believers, when you meet a force in battle, remain firm and invoke frequently the name of God" (sūrat al-Anfāl, VIII, v.45).

Al-Umawi stated, "Mu‘āwiya b. ‘Amr related to us, from Abū Ishāq, who quoted al-Awzā‘ī as having stated, 'It used to be said that rarely did an armed force remain firmly in place. Those who can stay in place at such times, cast their eyes down and make frequent mention of God are likely to remain safe from the charge of hypocrisy.'"

‘Utba b. Rabī‘a said to his men at the battle of Badr, "Do you not see them"—referring to the force of the Prophet (SAAS)—"how they crouch down on their mounts, keeping firmly in place, licking their lips like al-hayyāt, 'serpents'? Or he may have used the word al-afā‘ī, 'snakes'.'"

Al-Umawi stated in his work on the military expeditions, "When the Prophet (SAAS) urged the Muslims on to battle, he promised that each man would keep any spoils they took and said, 'By Him in whose hands is my soul, any man who fights them hard and valiantly, advancing and not retreating, who is killed, will be allowed entry to heaven by God.'"

Al-Umawi's account then repeats the anecdote relating to Umayr b. al-Hamām given above.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) himself fought with heart and soul, as did Abū Bakr, just as they had exerted themselves in the shelter in prayer and entreating. Thereafter, they went forth, and urged on the men to fight, themselves participating physically, thus combining their two noble functions.

The Imam Ahmād stated, "Wakī‘ related to us, quoting Isrā‘īl, from Abū Ishāq, from Hāritha b. Mi‘dhab, from ‘Ali, who said, 'I saw at Badr how near we kept to the Messenger of God (SAAS), while he was the one of us most close to the enemy. He was one of the bravest men there that day.'"

Al-Nasā‘ī related this from a ḥadīth of Abū Ishāq, from Hāritha, quoting ‘Ali as having said, "When the forces engaged and the battle grew fierce we sought protection with the Messenger of God (SAAS)."

Imām Ahmād stated, "Abū Nu‘aym related to us, quoting Mis‘ar, from Abū ‘Awn, from Abū Sa‘līh al-Ḥanafi, from ‘Ali who said that he and Abū Bakr were told at Badr, ‘With one of you is Gabriel and with the other is Michael. Isrā‘īl, a great angel, will witness the battle but not fight.’ Or the words used were ‘will witness the ranks.’"

This account is similar to the information preceding, namely, that Abū Bakr was on the right flank, and that at Badr when the angels descended Gabriel was there with 500 of them on one flank, the right along with Abū Bakr, while Michael was on the other, the left, with 500 more angels, along with ‘Ali.

In a ḥadīth related by Abū Ya‘ās, through Muḥammad b. Jubayr b. Muṭ‘im, ‘Ali is quoted as saying, "At Badr, I was swimming in the water-hole when a great wind arose, then another, then another. Finally Michael came down along with 1,000 angels. He took up position on the right of the Messenger of God (SAAS) where Abu Bakr was positioned. Israfil came to the left flank where I was, with another 1,000 angels. Gabriel was present, also with another 1,000.”

‘Ali then said, “That day the water reached up to my armpits.”

The author of al-Iqd62 and others maintain that the finest verse ever spoken by the Arabs is that of Hassān b. Thabit,

“And a well at Badr when Gabriel and Muhammad held back their mounts, beneath our banner.”

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Iṣḥāq b. Ibrāhim related to us, quoting Jarīr, from Yaḥyā b. Saʿīd, from Muʿādh b. Rifāʿa b. Rāfīʿ al-Zurqī, who quoted his father, who had been one of those present at Badr, as saying, ‘Gabriel came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and asked, “How do you consider those of you who were at Badr?”’ He replied, “As the best of Muslims,” or some such phrase. Gabriel commented, “Likewise those of the angels who were present at Badr.””

Al-Bukhārī alone gives this ḥadīth.

God Almighty had said, “When your Lord reveals to the angels that I am with you. And so strengthen those who believe; for I shall cast terror into the hearts of the unbelievers! Therefore strike above their necks” (meaning their heads) “and strike off all their finger-tips” (sūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.12).

In the sāhiḥ collection of Muslim, through ʿIkrima b. ʿAmmār, from Abū Zumayl, (it states) that Ibn ʿAbbās said, “While one of the Muslim warriors was vigorously pursuing one of the unbelievers ahead of him he heard above him the noise of a whip striking and a rider’s voice saying, ‘Giddy up, Ḥayzūm!’ When the Muslim warrior looked at the polytheist in front of him, he found him prostrate on the ground. Examining him more closely he found that the man’s nose had been smashed and his face split apart by a blow from a whip, all having turned dark in colour. The warrior, a Helper, went and told this to the Messenger of God (SAAS) who said, ‘You speak true. That was help from the third heaven.’ That day they killed 70 and captured 70 more.”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd Bakr b. Hazam related to me, from someone who related it to him, from Ibn ʿAbbās, from a man of the Banū Ghīṭār, who said, “I and a cousin of mine were present at Badr, though we were still polytheists then. We were up on a mountain waiting for the battle to take place and to see who would win, when a cloud approached. When it drew near the mountain we heard the sound of horses galloping and a voice saying, ‘Giddy up, Ḥayzūm!’ My companion suffered a heart attack and died on the spot, while I almost expired, but later recovered.”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd Bakr related to me, from a man of the Banū Sāʿida, from Abū Usayd Mālik b. Rāfīʿa, who was present at Badr, who said, his sight by then having gone, ‘If I were there today at Badr and had my sight back, I would show you the defile from which the angels emerged. I would have no doubt whatsoever about it.

“When the angels came down and Satan saw them, God revealed to them the verse, “I am with you. And so make firm those who believe” (ṣūrat al-ʿAnfāl; VIII, v.12). “Making them firm” referred to the fact that the angels would come to someone in the form of a person they would know and would say, “Be glad! For they are as nothing, and God is with you. Attack them!”’

Al-Wāqidī stated that Ibn Abū Ḥabība related to him, from Dāwūd b. al-Ḥuṣayn, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, “The angel would appear in the form of someone they knew and would say, ‘I went close to them and heard them say, ‘If they attack us, we’ll not hold firm. They are as nothing.’ And so on.’” This relates to the words, “When your Lord reveals to the angels that I am with you. And so make firm those who believe.”

When Satan saw the angels he turned on his heels and said, “I’m quit of you. I see what you do not see.” He was then in the guise of Sūrāqā.

Abū Jahl came forward haranguing his men and saying, “Don’t be scared by the nonsense Sūrāqā is telling you. He has a rendezvous with Muhammad and his men.” He then said, “By al-Lint and al-Wazzī, we’ll not return until we scatter Muhammad and his men into the mountains. Don’t kill them; take them prisoner.”

Al-Bayhaqi related, through Salāma, from ʿUqayl, from Ibn Shihāb, from Abū Ḥāẓim, from Sahl b. Saʿd, who said, “Abū Usayd stated, he being by then blind, ‘Cousin, I swear by God, that if you and I were at Badr and God were to restore my sight, I’d show you the defile through which the angels came out to us; I’d do so without any doubt or difficulty at all.’”

Al-Bukhāri related, from ʿAbd al-Wahhāb, from Khalid, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said on the day of the battle at Badr, “This is Gabriel over here, holding the head of his horse and fully accoutred for battle.”

Al-Wāqidī stated, “Ibn Abū Ḥabība related to us, from Dāwūd b. al-Ḥuṣayn, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, and Mūsā b. Muhammad b. Ibrāhīm al-Taymī informed us, from his father, and ʿAbīd b. Yahyā related to me, from Abū al-Ḥuwayrith, from ʿUmāra b. Ukayma al-Laythī, from ʿIkrima, from Ḥakim b. Ḥizām, who all said, ‘When the time for battle arrived, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stood with his arms raised imploring God’s aid and fulfilment of His promise, saying, “O God, if they prevail over this force, then polytheism too will prevail and You will have no religion left.” Meanwhile Abū Bakr was saying, “I swear that God will give you aid and will make you content.” And then God sent down 1,000 angels descending en masse and surrounding the enemy.”

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said, ‘Rejoice, Abū Bakr! I saw Gabriel wearing a yellow turban, holding the reins of his horse, up there between heaven and earth! When he came down to earth, I lost sight of him for a while, but then he appeared again; he was dusty all over and he was saying, "God's aid did come to you when you prayed to Him!"

Al-Bayhaqi related from Abū Umāma b. Sahl who quoted his father as saying,
"My son, I saw for myself at Badr that all any of us had to do was to point to the head of a polytheist and it would fall from his body before a sword even touched it!"

Ibn Išhāq stated, "My father related to me, quoting some men of the Bani Māzīn, quoting Abū Wāqīd al-Laythī, as saying, 'I was pursuing one of the polytheists, wishing to strike him, when his head came off — before my sword reached him! I realized that someone other than myself had killed him.'" Anas, who said, "Our men could differentiate the ones the angels had killed from those they had struck by the blow having occurred above their necks, and by their finger-tips looking as if they had been burned by a branding iron."

Ibn Išhāq stated, "A reliable source related to me, from Muqsim, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, "The distinguishing dress of the angels at Badr was the white turbans they wore that hung down over their backs. Except for Gabriel, that is;
he had on a yellow turban.'"

Ibn ʿAbbās stated, "The only battle in which the angels participated was at Badr. At the other battles they constituted auxiliaries and reinforcements that did not actually fight."

Al-Waqīdī stated, "Abd Allāh b. Mūsā b. Abū Umayya related to me, from Muṣʿab b. Aḥmad b. Abd Allāh, from a freed-man of Suhayl b. ʿAmr, who quoted Suhayl
b. ʿAmr as saying, 'At the battle of Badr, I saw white men on piebald horses riding between heaven and earth, bearing banners, killing and taking prisoners.'

"And Abū Ubayd used to say, he being by then blind, 'If I were there at Badr with you now and had my sight back, I could show you the defile from which the angels came without any doubt or confusion.'"

Al-Waqīdī went on, "Khaṭṭīja b. Ibrāhīm related to me, quoting his father as saying, 'The Messenger of God (ṣallā Allāhu ‘alayhī wa sallam) said to Gabriel, 'Which one of the angels was it who said at Badr, 'Giddy up, Ḥayzūm?'' Gabriel answered him,
'O Muḥammad, I am not familiar with every denizen of the heavens!'"

I comment that this is a hadith mursal, it refutes those, like al-Suhayli and others, who maintain that Ḥayzūm is the name of Gabriel's horse. But God knows best.

Al-Waqīdī stated, "Išhāq b. Yaḥyā related to me, from Ḥamza b. Ṣuḥayb, from his father, who said, 'I can't tell you how many were the severed arms and deep wounds I saw at the battle of Badr that did not bleed!'" Muḥammad b. Yaḥyā related to me, from Abū ʿUqayl, from Abū Burda b.

Niyār, who said, "I gathered up three heads at Badr and placed them before the

63. One in which the Prophet is quoted without mention of the Companion who narrated the statement.
Messenger of God (SAAS) telling him, ‘Two of these I myself killed. Regarding the third, I saw a tall man kill him and I then took his head.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, ‘O, that was so-and-so, one of the angels.’”

Mūsā b. Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm related to me, quoting his father, as saying, “Al-Sā‘īb b. Abū Ḥubaysh used to relate, during the period of Umar’s rule, ‘I swear, it was no man who took me prisoner.’ ‘Who was it then?’ he would be asked, and he would respond, ‘When Quraysh were defeated, so was I with them. A tall, long-haired man on a white horse took me and tied me up. Then along came ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. ‘Awf and found me there bound. He called out to the men, “Who was it captured this man?” Eventually he took me to the Messenger of God (SAAS) who asked, “Who was it you prisoner?” I told him I did not know, but I was reluctant to tell him what I had seen. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, “It was an angel who took you prisoner. Take your captive away, Ibn ‘Awf.”’”

Al-Wāqīḍī stated, “‘Abīd b. Yaḥyā related to me, as did Abū al-Ḥuwayrīth, from ʿImāra b. Uqayma, from Ḥākim b. Ḥizām, who said, ‘At the battle of Badr, I witnessed striped cloth come down from the sky and it blocked off the horizon. And then the valley streamed with water. It occurred to me that this was something from heaven with which Muḥammad was to be helped. And it was not long before there was the defeat and the advance of the angels to the forefront.’”

Ishāq b. Rāhawayh stated, “Wahb b. Jarir b. Ḥāzīm related to us, saying, ‘My father told me, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq, who said, “My father quoted to me Jubayr b. Muṭʿām as saying, ‘Before the enemy force was defeated, and while the men were still fighting, I saw something like a black striped cloth descend from the sky, like black ants; I had no doubt it was the angels, and soon the enemy force was defeated.”’”

The angels descended to give their help and the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw them when he took a nap and, upon waking up, he told Abū Bakr the good news, saying, “Rejoice at this, Abū Bakr; for Gabriel was there, leading his horse and with dust all over him.” By this he meant from the battle.

The Messenger of God (SAAS) then left the shelter, dressed in chain-mail, and began urging on the men to battle. He told them of heaven and gave them encouragement in news of the coming of the angels. The men were meanwhile still in their battle ranks, not yet having advanced against their enemy. The result was that they felt tranquility and confidence.

They felt that calmness that is the sign of confidence, security and faith, just as God stated, “When He caused calm to overcome you, as a security from Him” (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.11). This similarly happened to them thereafter, at the battle of Uhud, as in the reference in the Qurʾān.

This is why Ibn Maṣʿūd remarked, “Calm in the battle ranks is a sign of faith; calm during the prayer is a sign of hypocrisy.”
God Almighty stated, “If you sought judgement, it has come to you. If you desist, it will be better for you. If you go back, so will we. Your forces will serve you nothing, no matter how numerous they are. God is with the believers” (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.19).

Imam Ahmad stated, quoting Yazid b. Ḥārūn and Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq al-Zuhri from ‘Abd Allāh b. Ṭhaflaba that Abū Jahl said, when the two sides met in battle, ‘O God, he (Muḥammaed) was willing to destroy the ties of kinship, and the one to introduce us to that which was foreign to us, so destroy him this morning.’ It was Abū Jahl who ‘sought judgement’.”

Ibn Ishaq related it thus in his biography. Al-Nasā’ī related it through Ṣāliḥ b. Kaysān, from al-Zuhri. And al-Ḥakim related it also from a hadīth of al-Zuhri. He then said, “It is authentic and in accordance with the criteria of both scholars (al-Bukhārī and Muslim); though neither one of them mentioned it.”

Al-Umawi stated, “Asbāt b. Muḥammad al-Qurashi related to us, from ‘Aṭīyya, from Mufrīf, concerning God’s words, L‘If you sought judgement, it has come to you’ that Abū Jahl said, ‘O God, assist the better of the parties, the more noble of the tribes, and the more numerous of the forces.’” And the words came down, “If you sought judgement, it has come to you.”

‘Aṭīr b. Abū Ṭalḥa quoted Ibn ṬAbbās as saying, regarding the words, “And when God promises you that one of the two parties is yours” (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.7). “The caravan belonging to the people of Mecca approached on its way to Syria. Those in Medina got news of this and they went forth, accompanied by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) to attack the caravan.

“News of this reached the Meccans and they hurried out to the caravan to prevent the Prophet (ṢAAS) and his force from seizing it. The caravan outstripped the Messenger of God (ṢAAS); God had promised them one of the two parties, and they had wanted to meet up with the caravan.

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did set forth with the Muslims heading for the enemy force, but they were reluctant to leave, being aware of the strength of their opponents. The Prophet (ṢAAS) made a halt with his Muslims at a place where there was a large sandhill between them and the wells. The Muslims were extremely tired, and Satan made them discontented by whispering to them, ‘You claim to be partisans of God and to have His Messenger among you, yet it was the polytheists who reached the wells before you did, leaving you like this.’

“Then God sent down upon them a heavy rain. The Muslims drank and cleaned themselves and God withdrew Satan’s evil from them. The sand became packed down and so both men and their animals could walk easily upon it. They then went out to fight the enemy force, and God aided his Messenger and the believers with 1,000 angels. Gabriel was there with 500 angels on one flank, and Michael was on the other with another 500 angels.

“Satan also brought a force of devils, including some of his own progeny, these being in the guise of men of the Banū Mudlij. Satan himself was in the form of Surāqa b. Malik b. Ja'śham; he addressed the polytheists, saying, ‘No one will defeat you today. I shall protect you!’

“When the battle lines were drawn, Abu Jahl spoke the words, ‘The one more worthy of the truth, provide him with assistance.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) raised up his hands and prayed, ‘O God, if this force is destroyed, You will never be worshipped on earth.’

“Gabriel told him to pick up a handful of soil. He did so and threw it into the faces of the polytheists. Every one of those whose eyes, nostrils or mouth any of this soil touched turned and retreated.

“Gabriel went towards Satan and at the time when the former saw him his hand was holding that of a polytheist. Satan withdrew his hand and retreated, along with his party of devils. The polytheist asked him, ‘I thought you claimed to be our protector?’ He replied, ‘I see what you do not. I fear God, for God is mighty in His punishment.’ He said this when he saw the angels.”

Al-Bayhaqi related this in Dalā'il (The Signs).

Al-Ṭabrānī stated, “Mas'āda b. Sa'd al-ʿAṭṭār related to us, quoting Ibrāhīm b. al-Mundhir al-Ḥizāmī, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. ʿImrān and Hishām b. Sa'd, from ʿAbd Rabbih b. Sa'd b. Qays al-Anṣārī, from Rifā'a b. Raṣīk, who said, ‘When Satan saw how the angels dealt with the polytheists at Badr, he was afraid that the same would happen to him. Al-Ḥāarith b. Hishām was staying very close to him, believing him to be Surāqa b. Malik; Satan struck al-Ḥāarith hard in the chest, then hurried away and threw himself into the sea, raising his hands into the air and pleading, “O God, I ask you to look kindly down upon me!” He was afraid that he was going to be killed. Abu Jahl came up and called out, “O people, do not be disturbed by the rambling of Surāqa b. Malik; he was about to attend a meeting with Muḥammad! And don’t be scared by the killing of Shayba, ʿUthba and al-ʿWālīd; their time had come. I swear by al-ʿLāt and al-ʿUzzā, we’ll not go back home before we have scattered them into the mountains. I don’t expect any of you to kill any of them. Just capture them roughly and make them aware of their bad behaviour in parting company with you and in abandoning al-ʿLāt and al-ʿUzzā.”’”

“Abū Jahl then quoted the line:

‘Fierce warfare will not take revenge on me, spry like a two-year old camel; I am young in years.

It was for such as this that my mother bore me.’”

Al-Waqīdī related, from Mūsā b. Yaḥyā b. ʿAbd Allāh b. ʿAbd Sulaymānī, from Abū Bakr b. Abū ʿAdām, (who said), “I heard Marwān b. al-Ḥakam ask Ḥakīm b. Ḥiẓam about the battle of Badr. The sheikh was reluctant, but when Marwān insisted Ḥakīm said, ‘We met and engaged in battle, and I heard a sound of something falling from the sky to the ground, making a noise like pebbles dropping into a brass basin. Then the Prophet (SAAS) picked up a handful of dirt and threw it. And we were defeated.’”
Al-Waqidi stated, “Ishāq b. Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. Muḥammad b. ʿAbd Allāh related to us, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Thaʿlabā b. Ṣuqayr (who said), “I heard Nawfal b. Muʿāwiya al-Dīlt say, ‘We were defeated at Badr as we heard a noise like that of pebbles dropping into a bowl, right inside us and behind us! That had a terrifying impact on us.’”

Al-Umawi stated, “My father related to us, quoting Ibn Abī Ishāq, quoting al-Zuhri from ʿAbd Allāh b. Thaʿlabā b. Ṣuqayr, that Abū Jahl said, when the forces met, ‘O God, in the morning destroy the one who introduced us to that which was foreign to us and who ruined the family ties.’ This was the ‘judgement sought’.

“While they were in this state, God had encouraged the Muslims in meeting their enemy and had so diminished their enemy in their eyes that they were eager to fight them. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) took a nap in the shelter, then woke up and said, ‘Rejoice, Abī Bahr, Gabriel is here, wearing a turban and holding the reins of his horse he is leading, with dust upon him. God and His forces have come to you.’

“The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) issued orders picked up a handful of pebbles, went outside and faced the enemy and said, ‘You are disgraced!’ He then cast the pebbles out over them and said to his men, ‘Attack!’”

The defeat soon came. God killed some of their leaders and took some prisoner. Ziyād stated, quoting Ibn Ishāq, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) then picked up a handful of pebbles, approached Quraysh carrying them and said, ‘You are disgraced!’ He cast the pebbles out over them and ordered his men, ‘Attack them!’ The defeat then occurred and God killed some of their chieftains and captured others.”

Al-Suddi al-Kabir stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said to ‘Ali at the battle of Badr, ‘Give me some pebbles from the ground!’ He handed him some pebbles with dirt on them which he threw into the faces of the enemy. None of the polytheists escaped having a little of that dirt enter their eyes. The Muslims forced them back, killing and capturing them. God revealed on that subject, ‘You did not kill them; it is God who killed them. It was not you who threw when you threw, but God who threw’” (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.17).

Urwa, ʿIkrima, Mujāhid, Muḥammad b. Kaʿb, Muḥammad b. Qays, Qatāda, Ibn Zayd, and others all spoke similarly, agreeing that this verse came down about the battle of Badr.

The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did the same during the expedition of Ḥunayn, as we will explain in the proper place, if God wills it, and in Him we trust.

Ibn Ishāq reported that when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) urged his men on to battle, cast the dirt at the polytheists and God Almighty defeated them, he went back up into the shelter accompanied by Abū Bakr. Saʿd b. Muʿādh, along with some of the Helpers stood guard at its door, bearing swords, concerned that some of the polytheists might attack the Prophet (ṢAAS).
Ibn Isḥaq stated, “When his men busied themselves in taking prisoners, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) noticed, so I have been told, some discontent in the face of Sa’d b. Mu‘ādh at what they were doing. He therefore asked him, ‘Do I see you dislike what our men are doing, Sa’d?’ He replied, ‘Yes, by God, O Messenger of God; this is the first battle God has waged against the polytheists and I would have preferred the men to be massacred rather than kept alive!’”

Ibn Isḥaq went on, “Al-‘Abbās b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Ma‘ābīd related to me, from some of his family, from ‘Abd Allāh b. ‘Abbās, that the Prophet (ṢAAS) said to his Companions that day, ‘I have learned that some men of the Banū Ḥashim, and others, have been forced to come out and did not want to do battle against us. If any of you should meet up with any men of the Banū Ḥashim, do not kill them. If one of you should meet Abū al-Bakhtari b. Ḥishām b. al-Ḥārith b. Asad, he should not kill him. Anyone meeting al-‘Abbās b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib (the uncle of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS)) should also not kill him; he only came forth reluctantly.’

“Abū Ḥudhayfa b. ‘Utba b. Rabī‘a then asked, ‘Should we then kill our own sons and brothers yet leave al-‘Abbās alone? I swear by God, if I meet up with him, I’ll attack him with my sword!’

“This comment reached the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and he said to Ṭumar, ‘O father of Ḥafṣ’ – ‘Umar swore this was the first time he had ever used this name when addressing him – ‘shall the face of the uncle of the Messenger of God be struck with a sword?’

‘O Messenger of God,’ Ṭumar replied, ‘let me strike Abū Ḥudhayfa’s neck with my sword; he’s turned hypocrite!’

“Abū Ḥudhayfa stated, ‘I never felt safe, having made that comment that day. I always feared that the only thing that would mitigate it would be my martyrdom.’

“And he was killed as a martyr at the battle of al-Yamāma. God be pleased with him.”

Ibn Isḥaq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) only forbade the killing of Abū al-Bakhtari because in Mecca he had been the most protective of the Messenger of God. He never harmed him, nor allowed anyone to mistreat him. He had also been one of those who had annulled the document boycotting the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). Al-Mujadhdhir b. Dhiyād al-Balawi, an ally of the Helpers met up with him and told him, ‘The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) has forbidden us from killing you.’ Abū al-Bakhtari had with him a friend who had come forth from Mecca in his company, a man named Junādā b. Maliḥa, of the Banū Layth. Abū al-Bakhtari asked, ‘And what about my friend?’

“Al-Mujadhdhir replied, ‘No, by God, we’ll not excuse your friend; it was about you alone the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave orders.’ Abū al-Bakhtari said, 'Well then, I and he will die together. I'll not have the womenfolk of Mecca say of me that I abandoned my friend because of my own will to live!'

"Abū al-Bakhtari spoke the following verse as he began to battle al-Mujaddhir,

'No free man abandons his comrade until he dies or sees his way.'

"They fought, and al-Mujaddhir b. Dhiyād killed him. On this subject he spoke the verses,

'Should you have not known or forgotten my lineage, be sure that I descend from Bālī, Men who fight using Yazānī spears, striking down the high and mighty,
Either tell Abū al-Bakhtari's son that he's an orphan now, or tell my son the same of me.
I am he whose lineage is known to be from Bālī; I thrust home my spear so hard it almost folds over,
I slaughter my foe with a sharp Mashrāfī blade, racing to death like a milch-camel to milking,
You will never see Mujaddhir inventing a lie.'

"Al-Mujaddhir then went to the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ) and told him, 'I swear by Him who sent you with the truth, I did try to take him prisoner to bring him to you, but he insisted on fighting me. So I fought back and killed him.'"

Ibn Isḥāq stated, "Yahyā b. ʿAbbād b. ʿAbd Allāh b. al-Zubayr related to me, from his father, and ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr and others related to me, from ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAwf, who said, ʿUmayya b. Khalaf had been a friend of mine at Mecca. My name at that time was ʿAbd ʿAmr, and when I became a Muslim I renamed myself ʿAbd al-Raḥmān. When we met in Mecca, he addressed me by saying, "Hey, ʿAbd ʿAmr, don't you like the name your father gave you?" "That's right," I replied. He then said, "Well, I don't know this 'al-Raḥmān' name; let's give you some name just for you and me that I can call you. You don't respond to your first name and I can't call you by what I don't recognize." When he addressed me by ʿAbd ʿAmr, I did not respond. So I told him, "Abū ʿAlī, name me whatever you want." "Then you can be 'Abd al-Ilāh", he said, and I agreed to this.

"Thereafter, when I passed him, he would address me as 'Abd al-Ilāh, and I would respond and talk with him.

"At the battle of Badr, I passed by him as he was standing with his son 'Alī, holding his hand. I was carrying some coats of chain-mail I had got as spoils and when he saw me he called out, "'Abd ʿAmr!" I made no reply, so he then called out, "'Abd al-Ilah!" "Yes?" I then responded. He asked, "Don't you think I'm worth more to you than those coats of chain-mail you're carrying?" "Yes, you are," I replied.

"So I put down the chain-mail and took him and his son by the hands. As I did so he commented that he had never seen the like of that day and asked, "Don't you have need of milk?" I then walked off with them both."

Ibn Ishāq went on, "'Abd al-Wāhid b. Abū 'Awn related to me, from Sa'd b. Ibrāhīm, from his father, from 'Abd al-Rahmān b. 'Awf, who said, 'Umayya b. Khalaf said to me as I walked between him and his son, holding hands with them both, "'Abd al-Ilah, who is that man distinguished by an ostrich feather across his chest?" I replied, "That is Ḥamza." He commented, "He's the one who ruined us."

"As I was leading them on, Bilāl saw him with me, Umayya having been the one who had so persecuted him for his adoption of Islam. Bilāl shouted out, "Hey, there's that polytheist-in-chief Umayya b. Khalaf! I'll not live on if he does!" I responded, "Now Bilāl, he's my prisoner." "I'll not live on if he does," he insisted. He then began shouting at the top of his voice, "O partisans of God, here's Umayya b. Khalaf, the worst polytheist of all! I'll not live on if he does!" Men soon surrounded us till they had us in a sort of enclosure, with me protecting him all the while. Then one man took his sword and struck the leg of Umayya's son, making him fall down. Umayya then let out a cry such as I never heard before. I told him to try to escape, though there was no chance of this, and I could do nothing for him. After that our men fell on them with their swords and killed them."

The account concludes, "'Ahd al-Rahmān used to say, 'May God have mercy on Bilāl; he deprives me of both my chain-mail and my two prisoners!'

Al-Bukhārī related this in similar terms in his sahih collection. In the chapter dealing with the power of attorney, he stated, "'Abd al-'Azīz related to me, he being the son of 'Abd Allāh, quoting Yūsuf, he being the son of al-Mājishūn, from Ṣālih b. Ibrāhīm b. 'Abd al-Rahmān b. 'Awf, who quoted his father as saying that his father, 'Abd al-Rahmān b. 'Awf said, 'I corresponded with Umayya b. Khalaf asking him to take care of my personal affairs in Mecca while I looked after his in Medina. When I used the word "al-Rahmān" in my name, he responded, "I don't know any 'al-Rahmān'; write to me in the name you had before." So I wrote to him as "'Abd 'Amr." At Badr I went out to the mountain to protect him when the men were asleep, but Bilāl caught sight of him and came out and stood where there was a group of the Helpers and yelled, "Umayya b. Khalaf! I'll not live on if Umayya b. Khalaf does!"

"So he and a group of the Helpers took off after us. Fearing they would catch up with us, I left behind for them his son to deter them. But they killed him and pursued us; he was a heavy man. When they caught up to us, I told him to kneel down and when he did so I shielded him with myself. But they reached him with their swords while he was beneath me, and one of them cut my leg with his sword.’ And ʿAbd al-ʿRahmān b. ʿAwf used to show us the mark on the back of his leg.”

Yūsuf heard Ṣāliḥ relate this, his father being ʿĪrāḥīm.

Al-Buḥṭārī, alone of all the authorities, gave this account. In the collection of ḥadīth attributed to Rifiṣa b. Rāḥī, it was he who killed Umayya b. Khalaf.

THE DEATH OF ABŪ JAHL, GOD DAMN HIM!

Ibn Hishām stated, “As Abū Jahl advanced that day he spoke the following verse as he fought, ‘Violent warfare will not take revenge on me, spry like a two-year old camel; I am young in years.

It was for such as this that my mother bore me.’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had finished with his enemy, he ordered that the body of Abū Jahl be sought among those killed.

“Regarding who was the first to find Abū Jahl, I was told by Thawr b. Zayd, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, and also by ʿAbd Allāh b. Abū Bakr, as follows, ʿMuʿādh b. ʿAmr b. al-Jamīḥ, a brother of the Banū Ṣalāma, said, “I heard our men say that Abū Jahl was amid some bushes, and that he could not be reached.”

“When I heard this, I made him my business and went off for him. When I could do so, I attacked him and gave him such a blow as to sever his foot and half his leg. I swear, the only thing I can compare it with as it flew off was like the kernel of a nut emerging after having been struck by a nutcracker. His son ʿIkrima struck me on my shoulder and off came my arm, which remained attached only by the skim of my side. The battle drew me away from him, and I spent the whole day fighting while dragging my arm behind me. When it began hurting, I kept my foot on it as I walked ahead until I had removed it.’”

Ibn Ishāq went on, “Muʿādh lived on after that into the reign of ʿUthmān.

“Then Muʿāwīyih b. ʿAfrāʾ passed by Abū Jahl, who was already badly wounded, and struck him till he disabled him completely. Muʿāwīyih left him on the point of death and fought on until he was killed.

“ʿAbd Allāh b. Masʿūd next passed by Abū Jahl, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) having issued the order that he be sought from among those killed. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) had told them, so I have been informed, ‘If when you search he is hidden among the dead, look for someone with a scar on his knee. He and I, when we were youths, were once sitting crowded together at a feast given by ʿAbd Allāh b. Judān. I was a little slimmer than him, and I gave him a push making him fall down on his knees, one of which received a wound that left a permanent scar.’”

“ʿIbn Masʿūd stated, ‘When I found him he was on the point of death. When I recognized him I put my foot on his neck; he had once held me captive in Mecca and hurt me and kicked me. I asked him, “So God has put you to shame then, you enemy of God!” He replied, “And how has He shamed me?” he asked. “Aren’t I the most noble man you have killed? Tell me which side won the day?” “It went to God and to His Messenger,” I told him.’”

Ibn Ishâq went on, “Men of the Banû Makhzûm claim that Ibn Masûd used to say, ‘Abū Jahl said to me, ‘You’ve climbed very high, for having been just a herdsman!’ I then severed his head and took it to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, ‘This, O Messenger of God, is the head of God’s enemy.’ ‘Is it really, by God other than Whom there is none?’ (This was the oath the Messenger of God used to speak.) I responded, ‘Yes, by God other than whom there is none.’ I then threw Abû Jahl’s head down in front of him and he praised God.”

This is an account given by Ibn Ishâq, God be pleased with him.

It is established in both sahih collections, through Yuṣuf b. Ya’qûb b. al-Majishûn, from Šâhî b. Ibrâhîm b. ʿAbd al-Râhîm b. Ṭawâf, from his father who quoted ʿAbd al-Râhîm b. Ṭawâf, as saying, “At Badr I was standing in the battle line and when I looked to my right and my left I found myself to be between two Helpers, both of whom were young men. I had hoped to be positioned between two men who would be weaker than these. One of them asked me, winking, ‘Uncle, would you know Abû Jahl?’ ‘Yes,’ I replied, ‘what need have you of him?’ He replied, ‘I’ve heard that he curses the Messenger of God (SAAS). I swear by Him who holds my soul in His hand, if I were to see him, I’d not leave him before the death of whichever of us had his time come first.’”

“I was amazed to hear this. Then the young man on my other side winked at me and asked me the same. I looked right over at Abû Jahl, moving around his men and commented, ‘Can’t you see? That’s the man over there you’re asking about.’ Thereupon the two men charged at him with their swords drawn and struck him until they had killed him. They then went off to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and informed him and he asked which of them had killed him. Each one said he had. The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, ‘Have you both wiped your swords clean?’ They replied, ‘No.’ He then examined the swords and concluded that they had indeed both killed him. He decided that Abû Jahl’s spoils should go to Muṣâdh b. ʿAmr b. al-Jâmûh, the other man being Muṣâdh b. ʿAfd.”

Al-Bukhârî stated, “Yaʿqûb b. Ibrâhîm related to us, quoting Ibrâhîm b. Saʿd, from his father, from his grandfather, who quoted ʿAbd al-Râhîm as having said, ‘I was there in the line at Badr and happened to look to my left and right and found those next to me to be young men. I wasn’t feeling very comfortable at their position, when one of them asked me, keeping his question secret from his companion, “Uncle, point out Abû Jahl to me.” “What will you do to him?” I asked. He replied, “I swore to God that if I saw him I would kill him or die in front of him.” The other man asked me in confidence the same question. Nothing pleased me more than to be in that position between them both. I pointed Abû Jahl out to them and they flew at him like falcons and struck him down. These men were two sons of ʿAfrâ’.”
In both sahih collections, moreover, there is an account from Abū Sulaymān al-Taymi quoting Anas b. Mālik as saying, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, ‘Who will find out what became of Abū Jahl?’ Ibn Masʿūd offered to do so and went off and located him; he had been struck down by ‘Afrā’s two sons and was on the point of death. Ibn Masʿūd then took him by the beard and asked, ‘Are you Abū Jahl?’ He replied, ‘Is any man superior whom you have killed?’ Or he said, ‘It is his people who killed him!’”

According to al-Bukhārī, from Abū Usāma, Ismāʿīl b. Qays quoted Ibn Masʿūd as having said that he went to Abū Jahl and asked him, “Has God disgraced you then?” He replied, “Aren’t I the most noble man you have killed?”

Al-Aʿmash stated, from Abū Ishaq, from Abū ʿUbayda, from ʿAbd Allāh, who said, “When I reached Abū Jahl he was stretched out, wearing a helmet and holding a fine sword. My own sword was a poor one. I was about to sever his head with my sword, remembering how my own head had been struck with swords in Mecca till the hands of my attackers tired. Then I picked up his sword, whereupon he raised his head and asked, ‘Which side won the day? Us or them? And aren’t you our young herdsman from Mecca?’

‘ʿAbd Allāh went on, ‘So I killed him. Then I went to the Prophet (SAAS) and told him I had killed Abū Jahl. He exclaimed, ‘Did you really, by God other than Whom there is none!’ He made me swear it three times. He then arose and went outside, with me accompanying him, and cursed them (those polytheists killed in battle).’”

Imām Ahmad stated, “Wakī related to us, quoting Isrāʿīl, from Abū Ishaq, from Abū ʿUbayda, who said, ‘Abd Allāh stated, ‘When I reached Abū Jahl at the battle of Badr, I found that his leg had been severed, but he was still using his sword to defend himself. I said, ‘Praise be to God for disgracing you, you enemy of God!’ He responded, ‘Is he any but a man killed by his own people?’

‘I set about fighting him with a blunt sword I had and struck him on the hand. His sword fell, and I picked it up and hit him with it till I had killed him.’”

“ʿAbd Allāh went on, ‘I then went to the Prophet (SAAS) as though walking on air, and told him. He responded, ‘Is it really so, by God other than Whom there is none!’ He repeated this three times. I then replied, ‘It really is, by God other than whom there is none!’”

“ʿAbd Allāh continued, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) then went out, accompanied by myself, stood over him and said, ‘Praise be to God! God has disgraced you, you enemy of God! This man was the Pharaoh of his people!’”

In another account, Ibn Masʿūd stated, “And he gave me his sword as booty.”

Abū Ishaq al-Fazārī stated, from al-Thawrī, from Abū Ishaq, from Abū ʿUbayda, from Ibn Masʿūd, who said, “I went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) at the battle of Badr and told him I had killed Abū Jahl. He replied, ‘Is it really so, by God other than whom there is none?’ I replied, ‘It really is, by God other than whom there is none!’ I said this twice or thrice.”
"The Prophet (SAAS) responded, 'God is Great! Praise be to God who fulfilled His promise, and aided His servant and defeated the parties by Himself.' He then added, 'Go and show him to me.' I went and did so and he said, 'This is the Pharaoh of this nation.'"

Abū Dāūd and al-Nasāʾī related it from a hadīth told by Abū Ishāq al-Sabītī.

Al-Waqidi stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) stood where the two sons of ‘Afrā'ī had died and said, 'God bless the two sons of ‘Afrā'; they were partners in the killing of the Pharaoh of this nation, the leader-in-chief of the polytheists.' Someone asked, 'O Messenger of God, who was it who killed him along with them?' He replied, 'The angels; and also Ibn Masʿūd participated in killing him.'"

Al-Bayhaqī related this.

Al-Bayhaqī stated, "Al-Ḥakīm related to us, quoting al-Asāmm, quoting Ahmad b. Abī al-Jabbār, quoting Yūnus b. Bukayr, from 'Anbasa b. al-Azhar from Abū Ishāq, who said, 'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) received at Badr the good news of the death of Abū Jahl, he asked (the informant) to swear thrice that he had indeed seen him dead. He did so whereupon the Messenger of God (SAAS) prostrated in prayer.'"

Al-Bayhaqī then related through Abū Nuʿaym, from Salama b. Rājī, from al-Shaṭḥā, a woman of the Banū Asad, from Abū Abd Allāh b. Abū ʿAwfā, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) prayed two rakʿāt (four prostrations) when he was given the good news of the victory, and when he was brought Abū Jahl's head.

Ibn Māja stated, "Abū Bishr Bakr b. Khalaf related to us, quoting Salama b. Rājī, who said, 'Shaṭḥā related to me, from Abū Abd Allāh b. Abū ʿAwfā, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) made two prostrations in prayer on the day he was brought the head of Abū Jahl.'"

Ibn Abī Dunyā stated, "My father related to me, quoting Hishām, quoting Mujaḍīd from al-Sha'bi, that a man said to the Messenger of God (SAAS), 'As I passed by Badr, I saw a man coming out of the battle-field being struck by a man with an iron staff he had until he disappeared into the ground. When he next appeared, the man would hit him again, and this happened several times.'"

The Messenger of God (SAAS) then said, "That was Abū Jahl b. Hishām being tortured until Judgement Day."

Al-Umawī stated in his work on the military expeditions, "I heard my father say that al-Mujaḍīd b. Saʿīd related to him, from 'Āmir, who said, 'A man came to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and said, 'I saw at Badr a man seated while another man struck him on the head with an iron rod until he disappeared into the ground.' The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, 'That was Abū Jahl; an angel had been appointed to do that to him whenever he came up. He is going to go on sinking down into the ground until Judgement Day.'"

Al-Bukhārī stated, "Ubayd b. Ismāʿīl related to us, quoting Abū Usāma, from Hishām, from his father, who said, 'Al-Zubayr stated, 'At Badr I met up with Usāma b. Saʿīd b. al-ʿĀṣ who was fully accoutred, so that nothing of him could be seen except his eyes. He was known by the nickname 'Abū al-Kirsh', i.e. ‘pot-belly’. He told me he was Abī al-Kirsh and I charged at him with a javelin, struck him in the eye and he died.”

“Hishām stated, ‘I was informed that al-Zubayr said, “I put my foot on him and trod down, only managing to extract it with difficulty for its two blades had bent over.”’”

Urwa stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) asked for it and he gave it over. When the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) died, it being still in his possession, Abū Bakr requested and received it. When Abū Bakr died, ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb requested and received it. When ʿUmar died, he (al-Zubayr, tr.) took it, but ʿUthmān requested it and he gave it to him. When ʿUthmān was killed, it went to ʿAli’s family. Then ʿAbd Allāh, al-Zubayr’s son, asked for it and had possession of it until he was killed.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “Abū Ubayda related to me, quoting other scholars learned in the early military engagements, that ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb said to Saʿīd b. al-ʿĀṣ as he passed by, ‘You seem to me annoyed about something; do you think I killed your father? If I had, I would not apologize to you for doing so. However, it was my uncle al-ʿĀṣ b. Hishām b. al-Mughīra whom I killed. I did pass by your father, but he was acting like a bull scraping the earth with his horn. So I avoided him and it was his nephew ʿAli who sought him out and killed him.’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Ukkāsha b. Miḥṣan b. Ḥirthān al-Asadī, an ally of the Banū ʿAbd Shams, used his sword to fight with at Badr until it broke off in his hand. He went to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who then gave him a wooden club and told him, ‘fight with this, Ukkāsha!’

“When Ukkāsha took it from the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) and brandished it, it turned into a fine, long, white steel sword. He fought using it until God gave victory to the Muslims. That sword was named al-ʿawn, ‘the helper’; he had it at all the battles he witnessed with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), until ultimately he was killed by Ṭūlayḥa al-Asadī, during the wars of apostasy. Ṭūlayḥa spoke an ode about this, part of which was,

“The evening I left Ibn ʿAqram lying prostrate, and Ṭūkāsha al-Ghanamī on a battle-field.”

Ṭūlayḥa later accepted Islam, as will be related hereafter.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Ukkāsha was he who said, when the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), gave his nation the good news that 70,000 of them would enter heaven without either testing or punishment, ‘Pray to God to make me one of them.’ The Prophet (ṢAAS) then spoke the words, ‘O God, make him one of them!’”

This hadith is given in all the saḥīḥ, “authentic”, and hisān, “good”, collections of traditions, as well as elsewhere.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said – so I have been told – ‘We have the finest horseman of all the Arabs.’ And who is he then?’ he was asked, and he replied, 'Ukkāsha b. Miḥṣan.' Dirār b. al-Azwar commented, 'He's one of our men, Messenger of God.' He replied, 'He's not one of yours. He's one of ours by alliance.'"

Al-Bayhaqi related, from al-Ḥākim, through Muḥammad b. Umar al-Waqīdī, "Umar b. ʿUthmān al-Khashni related to me, from his father, from his maternal aunt, who said, 'Ukkāsha b. Miḥṣan stated, "My sword broke at Badr, so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave me a stick and suddenly it became a long, white sword. I fought with it until God defeated the polytheists." He kept it with him until he died.'"

Al-Waqīdī stated, "Usāma b. Zayd related to me, from Dāʾūd b. al-Ḥusayn, from some men of the Banū al-Ashṭal, several of whom said, 'The sword of Salama b. Ḥuraysh broke during the battle of Badr. Without a sword, he was unable to fight, so the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gave him a staff he carried made of a green palm tree frond. He told him, "fight with this!" And it turned into a fine sword. He kept it with him until he was killed at the battle of Jisr Abū ʿUbaydā.'"

HOW THE PROPHET (ṢAAS) REPLACED QATĀDĀ'S EYE.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, in the Dalāʾīl (The Signs), "Abū ʿAmīr b. al-Malinti informed us, quoting Abū ʿHāmid b. ʿAdi, quoting Abū Yaʿqūb, quoting Yaḥyā al-Ḥimmānī, quoting ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. Sulaymān b. al-Ghāsib, from ʿĀṣim b. Umar b. Qatāda, from his father, from his grandfather Qatāda b. al-Nūmān, that his eye was wounded at Badr and that its pupil came down on to his cheekbone. They were about to slice it off, but asked the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) who said that they should not do this. He then said a prayer for him, covering his cheek with his palm. And later you could not tell which of his eyes had been struck!"

According to one account, this became his better eye.

An account came down to us from the Commander of the Believers, Umar b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz that when he was told this account by ʿĀṣim b. Umar b. Qatāda, he also recited,

"I am the son of him on whose cheek his eye descended, which was replaced so well by the hand of the Chosen-One."

Upon hearing this, Umar b. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz, God bless him, quoted very appropriately the verse of Umayyā b. Abū al-Ṣalt about the sword of Ibn Dhu Yazīn,

"These fine qualities are not like two bowls with milk merely whitening the water that soon becomes urine."

ANOTHER SIMILAR ACCOUNT.

Al-Bayhaqi stated, "The ḥāfiẓ Abū ʿAbd Allāh informed us, quoting Muḥammad b. Ṣalīḥ, quoting al-Faḍl b. Muḥammad al-Shaʿrānī, quoting Ibrahim b. al-Mundhir, quoting 'Abd al-'Aziz b. 'Imran, quoting Rifaa' b. Yahya, quoting Mu'adh b. Rifaa' b. Rabi', from his father Rabi' b. Malik, who said, 'At the battle of Badr, the enemy was gathered around Ubayy b. Khalaf and when I drew near him, I saw that his chain-mail had been damaged beneath his arm pit. So I stabbed him there with my sword. At Badr I was also hit by an arrow and my eye was gouged out. The Messenger of God (SAAS) spat on it and said a prayer for me. And no harm had been done to me.'"

This account is unique from this line; its chain of transmission is excellent, but the (major) scholars did not quote it. Al-Tibrani, however, related it from a hadith of Ibrahim b. al-Mundhir.

Ibn Hisham stated, "And Abu Bakr called for his son 'Abd al-Rahman who was at that time on the side of the polytheists, not yet having accepted Islam. Abu Bakr asked him, 'Well, where's my property now, evil one?' 'Abd al-Rahman replied, in verse,

"All that remains are weapons and the horse Ya'bub, and a sword with which to kill silly old men."

By this he meant that all that was left was equipment for warfare and a horse, named Ya'bub, on which misguided old men could be fought. This is what he said in his state of disbelief.

We have been informed in al-Umawi's work on the military campaigns that the Messenger of God (SAAS) and Abu Bakr went out and walked among the dead, the former commenting, "We're splitting the chieftains apart," the latter reciting the verse,

"Of powerful men who were against us; they were very haughty and evil!"

An Account of how the heads of the unbelievers were thrown into the well at the battle of Badr.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Yazid b. Ruman related to me, from Urwa, from 'Aisha, who said, 'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered that those killed should be thrown into the burial pit, it was done. Umayya b. Khalaf, however, was not thrown in because he had swollen up in his armour and quite filled it. When they went to take him out of it, his body fell apart so they left him in it and threw on him the earth and the stones they had removed.

'Having thrown them into the pit, he stood over them and said, 'O denizens of the pit, have you found what your Lord promised you to be true, for I have found what my Lord promised me?'

'She went on, 'His Companions asked him, 'O Messenger of God, are you talking to people who are dead?"
“He replied, “They have learned that what their Lord promised them was true” (surat al-Rûm; XXX, v.52).

“Aisha stated, ‘People say that he spoke the words, “They heard what I said to them.” However, what he said was, “they have learned”’”

Ibn Ishâq stated that Humayd al-Tawil related to him, from Anas b. Malik who said, “The Companions of the Prophet (SAAS) heard him saying in the middle of the night, ‘0 denizens of the pit, 0 Wthâ h. Rabi‘a, 0 Shayba b. Rabî‘a, O Umayya b. Khalaf, O Abû Jahl b. Hishâm,’ and he went on to enumerate those in the pit. ‘Have you found what your Lord promised you to be true, for I have found what my Lord promised me to be true.’

“The Muslims said, ‘0 Messenger of God, are you calling out to decaying bodies?’

“He replied, ‘You do not hear any better than they what it is I say; but they cannot answer me.’”

Imâm Ahmad related this from Ibn Abû ‘Adî, from Hamâd, from Anas. His account was similar. This tradition conforms to the criteria of both the sheikhs (al-Bukhârî and Muslim).

Ibn Ishâq stated, “A scholar related to me that the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, ‘0 denizens of the pit, you were very bad relatives of the prophet who was your Prophet. You called me a liar, while the people believed in me. You expelled me, while they gave me shelter. You fought me, while they aided me. Have you found what your Lord promised you to be true? I have found what my Lord promised me to be true.’”

I would comment that this is one of those ahâdîth that ‘A’isha, God bless her, used to interpret (differently), believing them to contradict the verses in the Qur‘ân. These have been documented in a single volume.

In this case the passage contradicted, in her view, is the verse, “And you do not make those in the graves listen” (surat al-Fâîr; XXXV, v.22). This verse however does not contradict the previous statement. The view of the majority of the Companions is correct in the light of the ahâdîth that contradict her views, God bless her and be pleased with her.

Al-Bukhârî stated that ‘Ubayd b. Ismâ‘îl related to him, from Abû Usâma, from Hishâm b. ‘Urwa, from his father, who said, “Someone mentioned in ‘A’isha’s presence that Ibn ‘Umar quoted the Prophet (SAAS) as having said, that the dead would be persecuted in their graves because of the weeping of their families. She commented, ‘God have mercy on him, no! What the Messenger of God (SAAS) said was, “They will be tortured for their faults and their sins, and their families are weeping for them now.”’

“She went on, ‘That is like the account saying, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) stood at the trench in which were the polytheists who had been killed at Badr and he spoke to them, and commented, ‘They do listen to what I say.’” However, what he said was, “They now know that what I was telling them was true.’” She then recited, “you do not make the dead to hear” (surat al-Rûm; XXX, v.52) and “you do not make those inside the graves hear” (sūrat al-Fāṭir; XXXV, v.22). She commented, “When they had taken their places in hell-fire, that is.” Muslim related it from Abū Kurayb, from Abū Usāma.

The assertion concerning hearing the dead after their burial comes in more than one hadith, as we will establish, if God wills it, in our book on funerals in al-Ahkām al-Kabīr (The Major Statutes).

Al-Bukhārī then stated, “Uthmān related to me, quoting ‘Abda, from Hishām, from his father, from Ibn Ṭūr, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) stood at the burial pit at Badr and said, “Have you found what your Lord promised you to be true?” He then said, “They now listen to what I tell them!”

“This was related to ‘A‘īsha and she commented, ‘The Prophet (SAAS) really said, “Now they know that what I used to tell them was the truth.”’ She then recited, ‘you do not make the dead to hear’ to the end of that verse.”

Muslim related this from Abū Kurayb, from Abū Usāma, and from Abī Bakr b. Abū Shayba, from Wāqī, both of them quoting Hishām b. ‘Urwa.

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Abd Allāh b. Muḥammad related to us, (that) he heard Rawḥ b. ‘Ubāda (say), ‘Sa‘īd b. Abū Ḥurāma related to us, from Qatāda, who said, “Anas b. Mālik reported to us, from Abū Ṭalḥa, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered on the day of the battle at Badr that 24 of the chiefs of Quraysh be thrown into a dirty, refuse-laden old well. Whenever he went forth against an enemy he would stay for three nights out in an open area. On the third day at Badr he ordered his mount to be readied and it was saddled. He then set off, followed by his Companions who told one another that he had to have some important reason to be leaving. He came to a stop at the lip of the well and began calling out their names, referring also to their fathers’ names by saying, ‘You so-and-so, son of so-and-so’ etc. ‘Would you now be pleased to have obeyed God and His Messenger? We have found that what our Lord promised us was true. Have you found what your Lord promised you to be true?’”

“Umar then said, ‘Messenger of God, why do you talk to bodics that have no spirits in them?’

“The Prophet (SAAS) replied, ‘By Him who holds the soul of Muḥammad in His hand, you do not hear what I say any better than do they!’”

Qatāda stated, “God gave them life until He had made them hear his words, to reprimand, denigrate, and punish them, to make them feel sorry and regretful.”

The rest of the scholars gave this tradition, except for Ibn Māja, from various lines, back to Sa‘īd b. Abū ‘Urūba.

Imām Ahmad related it from Yūnus b. Muḥammad al-Mu‘ādib, from Shaybān b. ‘Abd al-Raḥmān, from Qatāda, who said that Anas b. Mālik gave this hadith, in similar form, but without making reference to Abū Ṭalḥa. This chain of authorities is good, but the prior one is more reliable and more clear. But God knows best.
Imām Āḥmad stated, “‘Affān related to us, quoting Ḥammād, from Thābit, from Anas, that the Messenger of God (Ṣaḥḥā) left the dead at Badr unburied for three days, till they became putrid. He then went out, stood near them and said, ‘O Umayya b. Khalaf, O Abū Jahl b. Hishām, O ʿUtba b. Rabīʿa, O Shayba b. Rabīʿa, have you found what your Lord promised you to be true? I have found what my Lord promised me to be true.’"

He continued, “ʿUmar heard his voice and asked, ‘O Messenger of God, do you call out to them after three days, and do they hear? God Almighty said, “You do not make the dead to hear.”’ He replied, ‘By Him in whose hand is my soul, you do not hear any better what I say than they do. But they cannot reply.’”

Muṣlim related this from Hudba b. Khālid, from Ḥammād b. Salama.

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Ḥassān b. Thābit spoke the following verses,

‘I recognized Zaynāb’s home on the dunes, traced like a line of revelation on a clean sheet,
The winds blow over them and all the dark clouds pouring down heavy rain,
Its traces are worn and have become defaced that once were the abode she enjoyed.
Give up remembering her every day and cast off the agony of your sad heart,
And relate shamelessly, honestly and without inventing lies.
Tell what the All-Powerful did in the morning at Badr, giving us success over the polytheists,
That morning when their force seemed as great as Mt. Ḥirā, its dimensions plain at sunset.
When we engaged them our force was like forest lions, young and mature alike, Ahead of Muḥammad whom they defended against his enemies in the fires of warfare,
Sharp, thin swords in their hands, all well-tried and bone cutting,
The Banū al-Aws in the vanguard, helped by the Banū al-Najjar, men in the firm faith.
We left Abū Jahl prostrate, and ʿUtba on the ground,
And Shayba we left there, along with other men of noble lines.
When we threw them upside down into the pit, the Messenger of God called to them,
“Do you not now find my words were true? And God’s command does take by the heart.”
They did not speak but if they had they would have said, “You spoke true; your views were correct.”’”
Ibn Ishāq stated, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered they be thrown into the pit. Utba b. Rabi’a was dragged there. The Messenger of God (SAAS) looked, so I have been told, into the face of Abū Ḥudhayfa, son of Utba, and he looked sad and distressed. He asked some such question as, ‘Abū Ḥudhayfa, are you very upset at your father’s fate?’

“He replied, ‘No, I swear, O Messenger of God. I’ve no problems with my father’s fate; but I once knew him as a man of reason, judgement and goodness, and hoped those qualities would lead him to Islam. When I saw what his fate was and how he had died in disbelief despite my hopes for him, I was saddened.’ Hearing this, the Messenger of God (SAAS) treated him with kindness and said a prayer for him.”

Al-Bukhārī stated, “Al-Humaydi related to us, quoting Sufyān, quoting ‘Amr, from ‘Aṭā‘, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, quoting the verse of the Qur’ān, ‘those who exchanged disbelief for God’s favour’ (sūrat Ṣāliĥ; XIV, v.28), ‘These, I swear, were the disbelievers of Quraysh.’ ‘Amr commented, ‘They were Quraysh; and Muḥammad was God’s favour.’ And regarding the verse, ‘And their people came to dwell in a waste-land abode’ he commented, ‘This referred to the hell-fire, after the battle of Badr.’”

Ibn Ishāq stated, “Hassān b. Thābit spoke the following verses,

‘My people are those who gave refuge to their Prophet and who believed him, while the earth’s inhabitants were unbelievers,

Except for certain special peoples who preceded the virtuous Helpers, aiding them, Rejoicing in their words at God’s decree, for there having come to them one noble in line, chosen.

‘Welcome indeed! Welcome in ease and security!’ How fine the Prophet, fine the decree, and the protection!

They had him stay in a place where nothing was to fear from those neighbours who lived close by;

The Helpers shared their wealth with them when they arrived as Emigrants, while the fate of the deniers was the fire.

We went and they did too, to their fate; had they but known for sure they would not have gone.

He set them in conceit, then delivered them up; the vile are careless of those who empower them.

He told them, “I am your neighbour.” Then he brought evil upon them, including punishment and disgrace.

We then met up against them and they turned away from their leaders who were aiding them, and one faction of them fell far down.’”

Imām Ahmad stated, “Yahyā b. Abn Bakr and ‘Abd al-Razzaq related to us, as follows, ‘Isrā’il related to us, from ‘Ikrima, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, “When the Messenger of God (SAAS) had finished with the slain, he was told, ‘Pursue the caravan; there’s nothing protecting it now.’ Al-‘Abbās, in shackles, called out to him, ‘It behoves you not!’ ‘Why not?’ he asked. He replied, ‘Because God promised you one of the two parties and He has fulfilled His promise to you.‘”

The total number of polytheist leaders killed at Badr were 70, this taking place in the presence of 1,000 angels.

It was no doubt God’s decree that a majority of those who survived would accept Islam. If He had wished He could have sent down just one angel against them and destroyed them to the last man. But the (angels) killed only those totally devoid of good.

For among those angels was Gabriel, whom God Almighty had once ordered to destroy the cities of the people of Lot. There were seven of these cities and they consisted of a variety of nations, animals, lands and farms, and God only knows what. He lifted these cities up until he had raised them to the very heavens on the edge of his wing. He then turned them upside down and lowered them, pursuing them with stones that struck them. This was as we described it in our account of the people of Lot.

God had planned for the warfare of the believers against the unbelievers. The Almighty had laid out his judgements about that in saying, “And when you meet in battle those who disbelieve, then strike their necks until you have defeated them. Then take them prisoner. Later set them free either as a favour or for ransom until the war is concluded. That will be how it is; if God had wished he would have inflicted full retribution upon them. But He acted to try some of you through others” (sūrat Muhammad; XLVII, v.4).

The Almighty also stated, “Fight them! God will punish them through your hands and will disgrace them. He will give you victory over them and He will assist you against them, relieving the hearts of a people who are believers. He will remove the anger from their hearts and He will grant forgiveness to those He wishes” (sūrat al-Tawba; IX, v.14, 15).

The death of Abū Jahl came about at the hands of a youth from the Helpers. Thereafter ‘Abd Allāh b. Mas‘ūd was placed over him; he grasped Abū Jahl by the beard and stood upon his chest, until he said, “You have reached remarkable heights, for a herdsman!” ‘Abd Allāh then cut off his head and took it and placed it before the Messenger of God (SAAS).

By this God comforted the believers. And this was more effective than if He had made a bolt of lightning strike Abū Jahl down, or made the roof of his house fall upon him, or if he had died a natural death. But God knows best!

Among those polytheists killed at Badr, Ibn Ishāq mentions some Muslims who had come to battle along with them only out of fear. These Muslims had been persecuted and enticed away from Islam. Among these were al-Ḥārith b. Zamʿa Ibn Ishāq stated, “It was regarding them that the Almighty revealed, ‘Those whom the angels made to die were unjust to themselves. They say, “What were your circumstances?” They will reply, “We were powerless on earth.” They shall ask them, “Was God’s earth not spacious enough for you to move away elsewhere?” Those persons shall have hell as their abode, and bad will be their fate’” (ṣūrat al-Nisā'; IV, v.97).

The prisoners taken at Badr that day totalled 70 and discussion relating to them will follow, if God wills it. These included some members of the family of the Messenger of God (SAA), that is, his uncle al-‘Abbās b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib, his cousin ‘Aqil b. Abū Ṭālib, and Nawfal b. al-Ḥārith b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib.

Al-Shāfi‘i, al-Bukhārī and others have used this as evidence in support of the view that not everyone who possesses a relative is obliged to set him free. They use this to refute the hadith of al-Ḥasan, from Ibn Samra regarding this. But God knows best.

Abū al-‘Āṣ b. al-Rabī‘ b. ‘Abd Shams b. Umayya, the husband of Zaynab, daughter of the Prophet (SAA) was one of those prisoners.

DIVISION

The Companions differed over what to do with the prisoners taken at Badr. There were two views – that they should be killed, or that they should be freed in return for ransom.

As Imām Ahmad stated, “Āli b. ʿĀṣim related to us, from Ḥumayd, from Anas, and from another man mentioned, from al-Ḥasan, who said, ‘The Messenger of God (SAA) sought the advice of his men concerning what to do with the prisoners taken at Badr. He told them, ‘God has placed them in your power.’’

He went on, “Umar arose and said, ‘O Messenger of God, strike their necks!’ The Messenger of God (SAA) turned away from him.

‘He then again asked them the same question. Abū Bakr arose and said, ‘O Messenger of God, we consider you should pardon them and accept ransom for them.’

‘At this the unhappiness on the face of the Messenger of God (SAA) disappeared; he did pardon them and accepted ransom for them.

‘And God Almighty revealed the words, ‘Were it not decreed by God beforehand you would have suffered mightily?’” (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.68). Ahmad alone quoted this tradition.

He also related – and the following wording is his – as did Muslim, Abū Dā‘ūd and al-Tirmidhi, stating it to be authentic, as did Āli b. al-Madini, who also affirmed its authenticity, from a hadith of ʿIkrima b. ʿAmrār, as follows, “Simāk al-Hanafi Abū Zumayl related to us, quoting Ibn ʿAbbas, quoting Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, who said, ‘At the battle of Badr, the Messenger of God (SAA) looked out and saw his force to be some 300 strong, while that of the polytheists was more than 1,000.”

He then related the hadith as above as far as the words, “and 70 of them were killed, while 70 were taken prisoner.”

And the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked the advice of Abū Bakr, Ālī and ʿUmar about them. Abū Bakr responded, “O Messenger of God, these are your close relatives, your tribal brothers; I think you should accept ransom from them. What we receive from them will give us power against the unbelievers; and God might well give them guidance so that they become allied to us.”

The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked, “Well, what do you think, O ʿUmar b. al-Khaṭṭāb?” ʿUmar went on, “I replied, ‘By God, I don’t agree with Abū Bakr. I think you should hand over to me so-and-so,’ referring to someone closely related to ʿUmar, ‘and I’ll strike his neck. And if you hand ʿAqīl over to Ālī, he can strike his neck. And if you hand over to Ḥamza so-and-so, his brother, he can strike his neck. That way God will know that we feel no leniency towards the polytheists. These men are their chieftains, their very leaders.’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) liked what Abū Bakr had said and did not like my view. And so he did accept ransom from them.”

The following day, ʿUmar said, “I went to the Prophet (SAAS) early in the morning; he was with Abū Bakr and they were weeping. I asked, ‘O Messenger of God, tell me why you and your Companion are weeping. If I find reason to weep, I’ll do so. If not I would pretend to weep at your weeping!’

“The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, ‘I’m weeping at how you Companions proposed to me that I accept ransom. Your punishment for doing so was proposed to me and it was closer than this tree,’ referring to a tree nearby.

“And God Almighty sent down, ‘It is not proper for a prophet to take captives before he has caused slaughter in the land. You desire the things of this world, while God wishes for the after-life. And God is All-Powerful, All-Wise! Were it not decreed by God beforehand you would have suffered mightily for what you took’” (ṣūrat al-ʿAṣrāf; VIII, v.67, 68).

This refers to the ransom. God then did make permissible the acceptance of spoils. He then went on to complete the ḥadith.

Imām Ahmad stated that Abū Muṣṭawiya related to him, quoting al-ʿAʾmash, from ʿAmr b. Murra, from ʿUbayda, from ʿAbd Allāh, who said, “At the battle of Badr, the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked, ‘What do you say concerning these prisoners?’ Abū Bakr replied, ‘O Messenger of God, they are your people, your relatives. Let them live; be lenient to them. Perhaps God will forgive them.’”

ʿAbd Allāh went on, “ʿUmar said, ‘O Messenger of God, they exiled you and called you a liar. Bring them close and strike their necks!’

“ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥa suggested, ‘O Messenger of God, find a valley with many trees, make them enter it, then set it on fire around them!’”
'Abd Allāh went on, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) went back inside without giving him any response. Some people said he was going to do as Abū Bakr had suggested, others that he would take 'Umar’s advice, still others that he would take that given by 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa. Then he came out to them and said, ‘God softens the hearts of men concerning Him, so that they become softer than soft. And God hardens the hearts of men so that they become harder than stone. You, Abū Bakr, are like Abraham who said, “Whoever follows me is of me, and whoever disobeys me, then You are Forgiving, Merciful” (sūrat Ibrāhīm; XIV, v.36). You, Abū Bakr, are like Jesus, who said, “If You punish them, they are Your servants; if You forgive them, then You are the All-Powerful, the Wise” (sūrat al-Mu‘āṣara; V, v.118). You, 'Umar, are like Noah, who said, “O Lord, do not leave on the earth any place for the unbelievers” (sūrat Nūh; LXXI, v.26). And 'Umar, you are like Moses, who said, “O God, destroy their wealth and make their hearts hard, for they will not believe until they see the painful punishment” (sūrat Yūnūs; X, v.88). You are a support. Let none be exempt from either ransom or having their head smitten.’”

‘Abd Allāh then said, “And I was never more afraid that there should fall upon me some stone from heaven than I was that day, until he said the words ‘Except for Suhayl b. Bayḍā’.”

He went on, “And so God revealed, ‘It is not proper for a prophet to take captives before he has caused slaughter in the land. You desire the things of this world, while God wishes for the after-life; and God is All-Powerful, All-Wise. And were it not for a decree’” (sūrat al-Anfūl; VIII, v.67-8).

Al-Tirmidhi related it thus, as did al-Hākim, from a hadīth of Abū Mu‘āwiya. Al-Ḥākim stated, “The chain of authorities is authentic, though they (al-Bukārī and Muslim) did not narrate it.” Also, Ibn Mardawayh related it through ‘Abd Allāh b. 'Umar and Abī Hurayra in similar words. And it is similarly related from Abū Ayyūb al-Anṣārī.

Ibn Mardawayh related, and so did al-Ḥākim in the al-Mustadrak, (The Compendium), from a hadīth of Ubayd Allāh b. Mūsā, (as follows), “Isrā‘il related to us, from Ibrāhīm b. Muhājir, from Mujāhid, from Ibn ‘Umar, who said, ‘When the prisoners were taken at the battle of Badr, al-‘Abbās was among them; he was captured by a Helper.’ He went on, ‘The Helpers had warned him they would kill him. That information reached the Messenger of God (SAAS) who said, ‘I did not sleep tonight because of my uncle al-‘Abbās. The Helpers are saying they are going to kill him.’” ‘Umar asked, ‘Should I go to them?’ ‘Yes,’ he replied.

“‘Umar went to the Helpers and asked them to release al-‘Abbās to him. They replied, ‘No; by God we’ll not release him!’ ‘Umar then asked them, ‘What if that is the pleasure of the Messenger of God?’ They replied, ‘If that is his pleasure, then take him.’ So ‘Umar did take him and when he had control over him, ‘Umar asked him, ‘Abbās, accept Islam! I swear, for you to accept Islam would please me more than if al-Khaṭṭāb, my father, were to do so. And that would be only for the pleasure I would see your acceptance of Islam giving to the Messenger of God.'

"He went on, 'The Messenger of God (SAAS) asked the advice of Abū Bakr, who replied, "They are of your family, release them." He asked the advice of ʿUmar, who said, "Kill them!" The Messenger of God (SAAS) then asked ransom for them and so God revealed, "It is not proper for a prophet to take captives before he has caused slaughter in the land"'" (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.67).

Al-Ḥakīm then stated in his saḥīḥ collection, "This hadith has an authentic chain of transmission, but the two authorities (al-Bukhārī and Muslim) did not narrate it."

Al-Tirmidhī related, as did al-Nāṣirī and Ibn Mājā, from a ḥadīth of Sufyān al-Thawrī, from Hishām b. Ḥassān, from Muḥammad b. ʿIrāqī, from Ubayda, from ʿAṭāʾ, who said, "Gabriel came to the Prophet (SAAS) and said, 'Ask your Companions to make a choice about the prisoners; if they want there to be ransom, so be it. If they want to kill them, so be it, provided that in a future year a similar number be killed of them.'"

"They commented, 'So it's to be ransom or some of us will be killed!'

This is a very strange hadith. Some authorities relate it with an incomplete line of authorities, from Ubayda. But God knows best.

Ibn ʿIshaq stated, from Ibn Abī Nājīh, from ʿAṭāʾ, from Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, concerning the verse "were it not for a decree from God that came before, you would have suffered mightily for what you took" (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.68). "He is saying, 'Were it not for the fact that I do not punish those who disobey me until I have approached them, I would have made you suffer mightily for what you took.'"

It is similarly related from Ibn Abī Nājīh, also from Mūjāhid. Ibn ʿIshaq and others chose it.

Al-Acmāsh stated, "He had previously made plain that he would not punish anyone who had taken part in the battle of Badr." It is similarly related from Saʿd b. Abū Waqqāṣ, Saʿd b. Jubayr and ʿAṭāʾ b. Abū Rabūh.

Mūjāhid and al-Thawrī stated, "'were it not for a decree from God that had come previously.' That is, in forgiving them."

Al-Walīḥī stated, from Ibn ʿAbbās, "It had previously been stated in the Qurʾān that the 'spoils and ransom for prisoners are permitted to you'. And this is why God later stated, 'and so enjoy whatever you have taken as booty, well and legally'" (ṣūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.69).

It was related similarly from Abū Hurayra, Ibn Maṣʿūd, Saʿd b. Jubayr, ʿAṭāʾ, al-Ḥasan, Qatāda and al-Acmāsh, and Ibn Jarir selected it.

This last statement is considered preferable because of what is substantiated in the saḥīḥ collections, from Jābir b. ʿAbd Allah, who stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS), stated, 'I was given five things not given to any prophet before myself: I was given victory through fear (within Quraysh) for a month; the earth was made for me into a mosque, and a pure place; booty was made permissible for me while it had not been made so for anyone before myself; I was given intercession; and prophets were previously sent to their people, while I was sent to all mankind.'"

Al-'Amash related, from Abū Šāliḥ, from Abū Hurayra, who quoted the Prophet (SAAS) as saying, "Booty was not made permissible to leaders other than ourselves."

The Almighty therefore stated, "so enjoy whatever you have taken as booty, well and legally".

And so God Almighty made it permissible to take booty and ransom for prisoners.

Abū Dā’ūd stated, "Abd al-Rahmān b. al-Mubārak al-Qāsī related to us, quoting Sufyān b. Ḥabīb, quoting Shu‘ba, from Abū al-Qānis, from Abū al-Sha‘thā, from Ibn ‘Abbās, that the Messenger of God (SAAS) placed a price of 400 dirhams as ransom for the non-Muslims at Badr. This sum was in fact the least taken for any one of them as ransom, while the largest amount taken for any one of them was 4,000 dirhams."

God promised those who believe that there will be returned to them what was taken from them, in this world and the next. The Almighty stated, "O Prophet, tell the prisoners now in your hands, 'If God knows there is good in your hearts, He will give you better than what has been taken from you, and He will forgive you'" (sūrat al-Anjil; VIII, v.70).

Al-Walibi stated, from Ibn ‘Abbās: "Revelation came down about al-‘Abbās, and he ransomed himself for 40 awqīyya of gold. And he commented, ‘And so God did give me 40 slaves,’ referring to those who worked for him in his business. He went on, ‘And I hope for that forgiveness that God – most highly is He to be praised – has promised.’"

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Al-‘Abbās b. Abd Allāh b. Ma‘bad related to me, from some of his family, from Ibn ‘Abbās, who said, ‘The night following the Battle of Badr, after the prisoners had been bound, the Messenger of God (SAAS) at first could not get to sleep. His Companions asked him why he could not sleep and he replied, “I have been hearing my uncle al-‘Abbās groaning in his fetters.” So they untied him, he became silent and the Messenger of God (SAAS) went to sleep.’"

Ibn Ishaq concluded, "And he was a wealthy man, who ransomed himself with 100 awqīyya of gold."

My own comment is that this money was on behalf of himself, and for his nephews ‘Aqil and Nawfāl, as well as for his ally, ‘Utbā b. ‘Amr, one of the Bantū al-Ḥarīrī b. Fihr, as the Messenger of God (SAAS) had told him to do when he claimed to have accepted Islam. The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, "What was evident was that you were against us. God knows best about your accepting Islam, and He will reward you."

Al-‘Abbās claimed that he had no money and so he was asked, "Where is the money that you and Umm al-Faḍl buried when you told her, ‘If I should be killed on my expedition, then this is for my sons al-Fadl, 'Abd Allâh and Qathm?

"Al-‘Abbâs responded, ‘By God, I certainly know you’re the Messenger of God; no one except myself and Umm al-Fadl knew that.’"

Ibn Ishâq related this from Ibn Abî Najîh, from ‘Aṭrâ’, from Ibn ‘Abbâs.

It is established in the saḥîh of al-Bukhârî, through Mūsâ b. ‘Uqba that Al-Zuhrî stated, “Anas b. Malik related to me as follows, ‘Some Helpers requested to see the Messenger of God (ṢAAS). They asked him, “Give us permission and we will leave the ransom money for our sister’s son al-‘Abbâs.” He replied, “No, by God, you won’t leave a single dirham for him!’”"

Al-Bukhârî stated, “Ibrâhîm b. Ṭâhmân said, from ‘Abd al-‘Azîz b. Suhayb, from Anas, that the Prophet (ṢAAS) was brought money from al-Bahrayn and ordered that it be distributed in the mosque. It was the largest sum of money that was ever brought to him. Al-‘Abbâs came to him and said, ‘O Messenger of God, give me some; I paid ransom for myself and for ‘Uqayl.’ ‘Take some,’ he told him. Al-‘Abbâs stuffed money into his gown, then moved away, dragging it, but was unable to do so. He asked, ‘Tell someone to lift it up for me!’ ‘No, I won’t,’ he replied. ‘Then you lift it upon me,’ he asked. ‘No, I won’t,’ he repeated. Al-‘Abbâs then scattered some of the money and made to go, again dragging it, but he could not. Again he asked, ‘Tell someone to lift it up on me!’ ‘No, I won’t,’ he said. Al-‘Abbâs scattered some more of the money then lifted it up on his shoulders and left. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS) gazed after him until he was lost to our sight, amazed at his cupidity. And the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) did not rise to collect a single dirham of the money.”

Al-Bayhaqî stated, “Al-Ḥâkim told us, quoting al-‘Aṣâmîn, from ‘Abî mad b. ‘Abd al-Jabbâr, from Yûnus, from Asbâṭ b. Našr, from Ismâ’îl b. ‘Abd al-Rahmân al-Suddî, who said, ‘The ransom for al-‘Abbâs and his two cousins ‘Aqîl b. Abû Ṭalîb and Nawfâl b. al-Ḥârîth b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib amounted to 400 dinars for each man. Then the Almighty threatened the rest, saying, “If they want to betray you, they have previously betrayed God. And so He took control of them. And God is knowledgeable, wise”’” (sûrat al-‘Anfâl; VIII, v.71).

DIVISION

It is well known that the prisoners at Badr numbered 70, while the number of polytheists killed was also 70, as was related in more than one ahâdîth that have been given above and will be given hereafter, if God wills it. This is also stated in a hadîth of al-Bârî b. ‘Azîb, in the saḥîh collection of al-Bukhârî, namely that at Badr they killed 70 and captured 70.

Mûsâ b. ‘Uqba stated, “At the battle of Badr 6 Muslims of Quraysh were killed and 8 of the Helpers, while 49 of the polytheists were killed and 39 were taken prisoner.”

Al-Bayhaqî related it thus from him and went on to state that Ibn Lahi‘a reported it similarly, from Abū al-Aswad, from ʿUrwa, concerning the number of the Muslims who died as martyrs, and the number of polytheists who were killed.

Al-Bayhaqi continued, “ʿAl-Ḥākim related to us, quoting al-ʿAsamī, quoting Aḥmad b. ʿAbd al-Jabbar, from Yūnus b. Bukayr, from Muḥammad b. Ishāq, who said, ‘At Badr 11 of the Muslims died as martyrs, 4 from Quraysh and 7 from among the Helpers, while more than a score of the polytheists were killed.’”

In another passage, al-Bayhaqi stated, “With the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ) there were 40 prisoners, while their dead were of a similar number.”

Al-Bayhaqi then related, through Abū Śalih, al-Layth’s secretary, from al-Layth, from ʿUqayl, from al-Zuhri, who said, “The first of the Muslims killed was Mihja’, the freed-man of ʿUmar, and a Helper. More than 70 of the polytheists were killed that day, a similar number of them being taken prisoner.”

Al-Bayhaqi went on, “Ibn Wahb related it from Yūnus b. Yazid, from al-Zuhri, from ʿUrwa b. al-Zubayr. He commented, “It is this that we have related that is the most authentic account of the number of polytheists killed and taken prisoner.”

He then gave evidence of this, referring to what both he and al-Bukhārī had derived through Abū Ishāq, from al-Barāʾ b. ʿAzib, stating, “At the battle of Uhud, the Messenger of God (ṣaṣ) placed ʿAbd Allāh b. Jubayr in command of the archers, and they hit 70 of us. The Prophet (ṣaṣ) and his men had struck down 140 of the polytheists at Badr, 70 being killed and 70 being taken captive.”

I would comment that the fact is that the total number of polytheists at Badr was between 900 and 1,000.

Qatāda asserted that they were 950 men, as if he were deriving his information from what we have stated. But God knows best.

In the hadith of ʿUmar given above, it is stated that they were more than 1,000; however, the first account is what is authentic, since the Prophet (ṣaṣ) stated, “The enemy force was between 900 and 1,000.”

The Muslim forces that day totalled some tens above 300 men, as evidence shows that will be given hereafter, if God wills it, along with their names.

It has been previously stated in the hadith of al-Ḥakam, from Miqsam, from Ibn ʿAbbās, that the battle of Badr took place on Friday, the 17th of Ramadān; ʿUrwa b. al-Zubayr also stated this, as did Qatāda, Ismāʿīl, al-Suddi al-Kabīr and Abū Jaʿfar al-Bāqir.

Al-Bayhaqi related, through Qutayba, from Jarir, from al-ʿAʾmash, from Ibrahim, from al-Aswad, from ʿAbd Allāh b. Masʿūd, who said with reference to the laylat al-qadr.65 “Search for it with 11 nights remaining of the month, for Badr took place on the morning of that date.”

65. The term refers to that night in the month of Ramadān when revelation of the Qurʾān first occurred.
Al-Bayhaqi stated, “It is related of Zayd b. Arqam that he was questioned about the laylat al-qadr and he replied, ‘The night of the 19th, without doubt.’ He went on, ‘And the day known as al-furgan when the two forces met in battle.’”

Al-Bayhaqi stated, “It is well known from the works of the scholars of the early military campaigns that that occurred on the 17th of Ramadan.”

Al-Bayhaqi then stated, “Abū al-Ḥusayn b. Bishrān informed us, quoting Abū ʿAmr b. al-Sammāk, quoting Ḥanbal b. Ishāq, quoting Abū Nuʿaym, quoting ʿAmr b. ʿUthmān, who quoted Mūsā b. Ṭalḥa, as saying, ‘Abū Ayyūb al-Anṣārī was asked about the battle of Badr, and he replied, ‘It was either on the 17th or the 13th, or when either 11 or 17 days remained of the month.’”

This is very strange.

The ḥāfiz Ibn ʿAsākir recounted in the biography of Qubāth b. Ashyam al-Laythi, through al-Wāqidi and others, with lines of authority going back to him, that Qubāth was present at Badr on the side of the polytheists and that he recounted their defeat despite the small size of the force of the Messenger of God (SAAS). He stated, “I kept saying to myself, ‘I only ever saw women take flight from such as this.’ I swear, if the Quraysh women had gone forth to battle bearing only easily-drawn bows, they would have turned back Muhammad and his men! And following the battle of al-Khandaq, ‘the trench’, I wished I had gone to Medina and had looked into what Muhammad was saying. Islam had now entered my spirit.” He went on, “I then went there and asked after him and was told he was over in the shade of the mosque with a group of his Companions. So I went there, but I was unable to distinguish him from the others. I made my greetings and he asked me, ‘So, Qubāth b. Ashyam, you’re the man who said of Badr, ‘I only ever saw women take flight from such as this?’ I replied, ‘I bear witness that you are the Messenger of God! This is something I never uttered, not even muttering it. It’s only what I said to myself. And were you not a prophet, you’d not know of it! Let me now pledge to you my allegiance to Islam!’ And I accepted Islam.”

Division

The Companions, God be pleased with them, disagreed among themselves over who should receive the spoils gained from the polytheists at Badr.

When the polytheists retreated, the Muslims performed three functions. One group remained on watch guarding the Messenger of God (SAAS) aware that any one of the polytheists might come back and attack him.

Another group pursued the polytheists, killing and capturing them.

A third group gathered the spoils of the battle from various places.

Each of these groups maintained that their activities were important and entitled them to a greater share than the rest.

66. The term refers to that “clear differentiation” that occurred between the forces of good and evil at the battle of Badr.
Ibn Ishaq stated, "'Abd al-Rahman b. al-Harith and others related to me from Sulayman b. Musa, from Makhtul, from Abu Umama al-Bahili, who said, 'I asked 'Ubada b. al-Samit about the sūrat al-Anfāl, (The Spoils). He replied, 'It was revealed about those of us who took part in the battle at Badr after we had begun quarreling about the spoils and were behaving badly. God therefore took them away from us and gave them over to the Messenger of God (SAAS) who divided them 'an bawār, equally, that is, among the Muslims.'"

Ahmad related this similarly from Muhammad b. Salama, from Muhammad b. Ishaq.

By the word given above for “equally” it is meant that the spoils were split between those who had gathered them, those who had chased the enemy, and those who had remained near the banners. No one group was given the preferential treatment they claimed.

This does not contradict the concept of spoils being divided into five parts, each fifth being allotted to a specific recipient, as some scholars might maintain, including Abu Ubayda and others. But God knows best. In fact, the Messenger of God (SAAS) received his sword Dhū al-Fiqār from the booty taken at Badr.

Ibn Jarir stated, "He similarly chose a camel that had belonged to Abu Jahl that had a silver ring through its nose. This was also before the issuance of the edict about the fifth."

Imam Ahmad stated, "Mu'awiya b. 'Amr related to us, quoting Ibn Ishaq, from 'Abd al-Rahman b. al-Harith b. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Abbas b. Abu Rab'a, from Sulayman b. Musa, from Abu Sallam, from Abu Umama, from Ubada b. al-Samit, who said, 'We went forth with the Prophet (SAAS) and I witnessed Badr with him. When the forces met and God defeated the enemy, one group went off after them, putting them to flight and killing them, another group sought and gathered up the booty, while a third group kept watch over the Messenger of God (SAAS), so that the enemy would not do him harm. When night came and the forces gathered back together, those who had assembled the booty said, 'We gathered it and no one else has any right to it.' Those who had pursued the enemy said, 'You have no greater right to it than us; we drove the enemy away from the booty and we defeated them.' Those who had guarded the Prophet (SAAS) said, 'We feared some harm might come to him from the enemy, and so we devoted ourselves to him.' And so it was that God sent down, 'They ask you about the spoils. Say, 'The spoils belong to God and to His Messenger. So fear God, reconcile and obey God and His Messenger, if you are indeed believers'" (sūrat al-Anfāl; VIII, v.1).

"And so the Messenger of God (SAAS) divided the booty among the Muslims. Whenever he raided enemy territory he would divide the spoils into fourths. But if he pursued a retreating (army) he would divide it into thirds. He had a dislike for booty."
Al-Tirmidhi and Ibn Māja related the latter part of this, from a ḥadīth of al-Thawrī, from ‘Abd al-Rāhmān b. al-Hārith. Al-Tirmidhi stated, “This is a ḥadīth ḥasan,67 a ‘good ḥadīth’.” Ibn Ḥibban related it in his ṣaḥīḥ collection, as did al-Ḥākim in his al-Mustadrak (The Compendium) from a ḥadīth of ‘Abd al-Rāhmān. Al-Ḥākim stated, “This is authentic according to the criteria of Muslim, but he did not narrate this tradition.”

Abū Dā’ūd, al-Nasā’ī, Ibn Ḥibban and al-Ḥākim related, on various lines from Dā’ūd b. Abū Hind, from ʿIkrima, from Ibn ʿAbbās, the following: “At the battle of Badr, the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) stated, ‘Those who have done so-and-so shall receive such-and-such.’ The younger men made haste to carry this out, while the older men stayed near the banners. When the booty had been collected the men gathered to claim their share. The older men asked that they not be given less credit than the rest, saying they had acted as a safeguard against the sudden attack by any enemy force. There was much dispute and so God Almighty revealed, ‘They ask you about the spoils. Say, “The spoils belong to God and to His Messenger. So fear God, reconcile and obey God and His Messenger, if you are indeed believers”’” (ṣūrat al-ʿAnfāl; VIII, v.1).

We have made extensive comments elsewhere, too lengthy to explore here, on the reason for the revelation of this verse.

The meaning of the words is that decisions over the spoils devolve upon God and His Messenger to judge in accord with the best interests of the worshippers regarding this life and the after-life. The Almighty therefore stated, “The spoils belong to God and to His Messenger. So fear God, reconcile and obey God and His Messenger, if you are indeed believers.”

He then went on to recount the events and outcome of the battle of Badr, concluding, “And know that whatever thing you have taken as spoils of war, then one-fifth of it is for God and for His Messenger and for the kinfolk, orphans, the poor and wayfarers” (ṣūrat al-ʿAnfāl; VIII, v.41). It is evident that this verse explains God’s commands regarding the spoils of war which He has made subject to Himself and to His Prophet (ṢAAS). The Almighty has clarified and determined this in accord with His wish. This is the view of Abū Zayd.

Abū Ubayd al-Qāsim b. Salām, God bless him, claimed that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) divided up the booty taken at Badr equally between the men and that he did not divide it into fifths. The edict relating to the division into fifths was revealed after this, cancelling the previous practice.

Al-Walībī related this similarly, from Ibn ʿAbbās, and Mujāhid, ʿIkrima and al-Suddī attested to it. However, there is controversy over this. And God knows best. The controversy relates to whether the above verses came prior to or following the verse referring to the division into fifths, since all relate to the battle of Badr. It seems necessary to consider them to have been revealed all together at one time and not separately, with some having come later, as would be necessary if some had cancelled others.

67. Al-Tirmidhi used this term to define a ḥadīth whose narrators were known to have defective memories.

Then there is the hadith in both sahih collections relating to 'Ali, God be pleased with him. This tells how, regarding Hamza's having cut off the two humps of his two old mare camels, and of his stating that one of these was part of the fifth part set aside at Badr. His statement directly contradicts Abū Ubayd's contention that the spoils at Badr were not divided into five parts. God knows best; but they were divided into five according to the accounts of al-Bukhārī, Ibn Jarīr and others; this is the correct and preferable view. But God knows best.

DIVISION

The return of the Messenger of God (SAAS) from Badr to Medina and the events on that journey by which his Lord gave him help and assistance.

It has previously been stated that the engagement took place on Friday, the 17th of Ramadān, 2AH.

It is established in both sahih collections that following an engagement against an enemy, the Messenger of God (SAAS) would thereafter spend three days in an open area. His normal period of three days so spent at Badr, however, ended, as related above, after two days when he mounted his camel and stood above the pit at Badr, berating those dead polytheists who had been dragged there.

Thereafter he departed, taking with him the prisoners and the great quantity of booty. He had sent on ahead two heralds to Medina to announce the victory over those who had associated others with God and denied and disbelieved in Him. One of these heralds was 'Abd Allāh b. Rawāḥa, whom he sent to the upper parts of Medina. The other, Zayd b. Ḥāritah, he sent to the city's lower parts.

Usāmah b. Zayd stated, "The news reached us when we had finished levelling the earth over Ruqayya, daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS). Her husband, 'Uthmān b. 'Affān, God bless him, had remained behind to nurse her at the orders of the Messenger of God (SAAS) who had assigned to him a share in the spoils of Badr."

Usāmah stated further, "When my father, Zayd b. Ḥāritah, arrived, I went to him and found him standing at the prayer shrine, swamped by people. He was saying, 'Utba b. Rabi'a has been killed, as also had been Abū Jahl b. Hishām, Zam'a b. al-Aswad, Abū al-Bakhtārī al-'Āṣ b. Hishām, Umayyā b. Khalaf and Nubayh and Munabbih, the two sons of al-Ḥajjāj.' I asked him 'Father, is this true?' He replied, 'Son, I swear it is so.'"

Al-Bayhaqī stated, citing a line of authorities through Ḥammād b. Salama, from Hishām b. Urwa, from his father, from Usāmah b. Zayd, that the Prophet (SAAS) had left 'Uthmān and Usāmah b. Zayd to look after his daughter. Then Zayd b. Ḥāritah arrived, mounted on al-'Adbnā', the camel of the Messenger of God (SAAS), with the good news. Usāmah said, "I heard the tumult and so went outside. There I found Zayd who had brought the good news. But, I swear, I didn’t really believe it until I saw the prisoners. The Messenger of God (SAAS) had assigned to Uthmān a share in the spoils.”

Al-Waqidi stated, “The Messenger of God (SAAS) following his return from Badr, performed the evening prayer at al-Athīl. When he had finished one rak‘a he smiled. Someone later asked why he was smiling and he replied that he could see Michael with dust on his wing, who had smiled at him and said, ‘I was looking for the rest.’ And Gabriel had come to him when he had finished fighting the enemy at Badr, riding a mare, its forelock knotted and the furrows of its head covered with dust. He had said, ‘O Muḥammad, my Lord has sent me to you and told me not to leave you until you are content. Are you content? ‘I am,’ he had replied.”

Al-Waqidi stated, “They related that the Messenger of God (SAAS) sent Zayd b. Ḥarīthah and ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥah ahead from al-Athīl and they arrived on Sunday in the heat of late morning. ʿAbd Allāh b. Rawāḥah parted from Zayd b. Ḥarīthah at al-Aqīq and began calling out, still on his mount, ‘O Helpers, rejoice at the safety of the Messenger of God (SAAS), and at the killing and capture of the polytheists! The two sons of Rabi‘a have been killed, along with the two sons of al-Ḥajjāj, Abū Jahl, Zum‘a b. al-Aswad and Umayya b. Khalaf, while Suhayl b. ʿAmr has been taken prisoner!’

“ʿĀṣim b. Ḍaḍ stated, ‘I went up to him and accompanied him, saying, “Is that the truth, Ibn Rawāḥah?” He replied, “It certainly is! And tomorrow the Messenger of God (SAAS) will arrive with the prisoners in chains.” He then went to the homes of the Helpers, one after the other, in the upper part of the town, telling them the good news. The children chanted along with him, “The evil Abū Jahl is dead!” He continued on until he reached the home of the Banū Umayya, when Zayd b. Ḥarīthah arrived on the camel called al-Qaswār belonging to the Messenger of God (SAAS) announcing the good news. When he reached the prayer shrine he shouted, still mounted, “Uṭba and Shayba, the two sons of Rabi‘a have been killed! And the two sons of al-Ḥajjāj! Umayya b. Khalaf is dead, as are Abū Jahl, Abū al-Bakhtari, and Zam‘a b. al-Aswad. Suhayl b. ʿAmr Dhū al-Anyāb has been taken captive, along with many others!’

“Some people refused to believe Zayd and began saying, ‘Zayd b. Ḥarīthah has only come because he’s been defeated!’ This confused and scared the Muslims. “Zayd arrived when we had finished levelling the earth over Ruqayya, the daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS), at al-Baqī‘, and one of the hypocrites commented to Usāma, ‘Your master has been killed, and all those with him!’ Another said to Abū Lubāba, ‘Your friends have scattered, and they’ll never unite around him again. His Companions have died for him, and Muḥammad has been killed. This we know to be his own camel. And Zayd is so confused he doesn’t know what he is saying. He’s come in defeat.’ Abū Lubāba said, ‘God will refute what you are saying.’ The Jews commented, ‘Zayd has only come in defeat.’

68. A place near Medina, between Badr and Wādī al-Ṣafā‘.
"Usāma said, 'So I went off alone with my father and asked, "Is it really true, what you are saying?" He replied, "Yes indeed, son; I swear by God what I say is true."

"This encouraged me and I returned to that hypocrite telling him, "You are spreading lies about the Messenger of God (SAAS) and about the Muslims! We're going to have you up before the Messenger of God, and he'll execute you!" He replied. "It's only what I hear people saying."

"He went on, 'The prisoners were brought in, in the custody of Shaqra, the freed-man of the Messenger of God (SAAS). He had participated at Badr with the rest. They were 49 men in number."

Al-Wāqidi stated, "According to the sources, they totalled 70; and there is no doubt about this."

He went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) met with the city leaders who congratulated him on the victory God had given him. Usayd b. al-Ḥudayr told him, 'O Messenger of God, praise be to God who has given you victory and made you content. By God, O Messenger of God, nothing would have kept me from joining you at Badr if I had thought you would be meeting an enemy in battle; but I thought you were going after a caravan. If I had known it was an enemy, I'd not have stayed behind.'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, 'You speak the truth!'"

"One of the Muslims who composed doggerel verse, who according to Ibn Hīšām was said to be ʿAdī b. Abū al-Zāghbā, spoke the lines,

'Water your camels, Basbas, for there's no place for them to halt at Dhū al-Ṭālī. Nor in the deserts of Ṣumayr is there any corral; though the people's mounts can't be kept penned in. It's smarter to get them on the road; God has given victory, and al-Akhnas has fled.'"

Ibn Iṣḥāq continued, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) then went forward and, having come through the pass at al-Ṣafār, he halted at a hill between the pass and al-Nāziyya called Sayar, near a willow tree. There he divided up equally the spoils that God had bestowed upon the Muslims from the polytheists. Then he moved on to al-Rawḥā, where he was met by Muslims congratulating him on the victory that God had given him and his Muslim force. Salama b. Salama b. Waqšh - as I have been told by ʿĀṣim b. ʿUmar and Yazid b. Rūmān - asked them, 'What are you congratulating us about? All we faced were bald old women, like camels bound for sacrifice, and we slaughtered them!'"
"The Messenger of God (SAAS) smiled at this and said, 'Hey, cousin, those were the al-mala', chiefs!'"

Ibn Hishām observed, "He was referring to the nobles and the leaders."

THE DEATHS OF AL-NADR B. AL-HĀRITH AND 'UQBA B. ABŪ MU'AYT, GOD DAMN THEM!

Ibn Ishaq stated, "While the Messenger of God (SAAS) was at al-Ṣafra', al-Nadr b. al-Ḥārith was killed by 'Ali b. Abū Ṭalib, or so I was told by a scholar from Mecca. After they had moved on to Irf al-Zabīyya, 'Uqba b. Abū Mu'ayṭ was executed.

"When the Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered his death, 'Uqba asked him, 'Who will look after my children, Muhammad?' 'The fire!' he responded. The man who killed him was 'Aṣim b. Thabit b. Abū al-Ąqlah, a brother of the Banū Āmṛ b. Āwfi, as I was told by Abū Ubayda b. Muḥammad b. ʿAmmār b. Yāsir."

Mūsa b. 'Uqba also stated this in his work on the military expeditions. He claimed that the Messenger of God (SAAS) killed no other person taken captive. He stated, "And when 'Aṣim b. Thabit came up (to kill him) 'Uqba asked, 'O tribe of Quraysh, why am I to be killed out of all those here?"

"He replied, 'For your enmity towards God and His Messenger.'"

"Hammād b. Salama stated, from ʿAtā b. al-Ṣāib, from al-Shaftī, who said, 'When the Prophet (SAAS) ordered the execution of 'Uqba, he asked, 'Will you kill only me from among Quraysh?'

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) replied, "Yes. Do you know how this man treated me? He came up while I was prostrate in prayer behind the maqām, placed his foot on my neck and pressed down on it. I thought my eyes were going to come out, before he lifted up his foot. On another occasion he brought a sheep's entrails which he threw over my head while I was prostrate in prayer. Fāṭima came and washed it off my head."

Ibn Hishām stated, "It is also said that it was 'Ali b. Abū Ṭalib who killed 'Uqba, according to al-Zuhri and other scholars."

I would comment that these two men were among the most evil of God's servants, the most stubborn, wicked, envious and disbelieving of men and they had been very active in satirizing Islam and its supporters. God damn them! And He did, indeed!

Ibn Hishām stated, "Qutayla, daughter of al-Ḥārith, sister of al-Nadr b. al-Ḥārith, spoke the following verses about the death of her brother,

'O rider, al-Ąthil is a landmark since the morning of the fifth night, and you are fortunate.
Inform there a dead man of a greeting that the finest of all are still waving,
From me to you, and of tears that are shed in

69. The "shrine of Abraham", near the ka'ba.
profusion, flooding out, while others are repressed.
Will al-Nadr hear if I call to him; or can a dead man hear who cannot speak?
Muḥammad, you, the finest son of a woman noble among her people, and her husband a fine stallion,
It would not have harmed you to forgive him, for a valorous man often forgives, despite his anger or rage.
Or you could have accepted ransom, and the largest sum ever paid would have been provided,
And al-Nadr was the closest in ties to you of all your captives, and the worthiest, if any were to be freed.
The swords of his father’s sons would then have charged for God, with wombs being split asunder on His behalf, Stoically he was led to death, worn out and bound, but servile.”

Ibn Hishām stated, “And it is said, though God alone knows best, that the Messenger of God (ṢAAṢ) said, when those verses were recited to him, ‘If only this had reached me before his death, I would have spared him!’”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “At that place the Messenger of God (ṢAAṢ) was met by Abū Hind, the freed-man of Farwa b. ‘Amr al-Bayāḍī, his cupper. He had with him a wine-skin filled with hays, that being dates in a butter sauce, a gift for the Messenger of God (ṢAAṢ). He accepted it and recommended Abū Hind to the Helpers.
“The Messenger of God (ṢAAṢ) then went on into Medina, arriving there one day before the prisoners.”

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Nabih b. Wahb, brother of the Banū ‘Abd al-Dār, related to me that the Messenger of God (ṢAAṢ) divided up the prisoners among his Companions following their arrival and said, ‘Behave well towards them.’
“Abū ‘Azīz b. ‘Umayr b. Hāshim, a brother of Muṣ‘āb b. ‘Umayr by the same father and mother, was among the captives. Abū ‘Azīz stated, ‘My brother Muṣ‘āb b. ‘Umayr passed me by while one of the Helpers was tying me up. Muṣ‘āb said, “Bind his hands fast. His mother is wealthy, and she’ll ransom him from you.”’
“Abū ‘Azīz went on, ‘I was with a group of Helpers bringing me from Badr. When they had their midday and evening meals, they gave me the bread and ate the dates themselves, in accordance with the instruction given them by the Messenger of God (ṢAAṢ) regarding us. Every piece of bread that came into their hands they passed on to me. I was embarrassed and would return the bread, but they would pass it back untouched.’”

Ibn Hishām stated, “This Abū ‘Azīz was the standard-bearer of the polytheists at Badr, following al-Nadr b. Hārith.
“And after his brother had made his comment to Abū al-Yusr, the man who had me captive, Abū ‘Azīz commented, ‘Brother, is this how you treat them?’ Muṣ‘āb replied, ‘He’s more my brother than you are!’"
"His mother asked what was the highest price paid to ransom a Quraysh man. She was told, 'Four thousand dirhams.' She therefore ransomed him with four thousand dirhams she sent."

I comment that the given name of this Abū 'Azīz was Zurārā, according to what Ibn al-Athīr stated in his work Ghabat al-Ṣaḥāba (Compendium of Companions). Khalīfa b. Khayyāt included him in his list of names of the Companions. He was Musṭāb b. Umayr's brother on his father's side. They had another paternal brother who was Abū al-Rūm b. Umayr. Those who would have him as killed at Badr as an unbeliever are in error. That person was really Abū 'Azza, as will be told hereafter. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Abd Allāh b. Abī Bakr related to me, that Yaḥyā b. 'Abd Allāh b. 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Sa'd b. Zurārā said, 'When the prisoners were brought in, Sawda, daughter of Zam'ā, wife of the Prophet (ṢAAS) was with the family of 'Afrā, who were engaged in mourning for 'Afrā's two sons, 'Awf and Mu'awwidh. This was before the veil was made required for the wives of (the Prophet). Sawda said, "I swear by God, there I was when someone came in and said, 'They've brought in the prisoners!' So I went off to my house, where the Messenger of God was, and there I found Aba Yazīd Suhayl b. 'Amr in a corner of the room with his hands tied with a rope behind his neck. I couldn't restrain myself from saying, at the sight of Aba Yazīd, 'O Abū Yazīd! You gave yourself up then! Couldn't you have died a noble death!'"

"I swear, I was then quite startled to hear the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) call out from inside the house, 'Sawda, are you stirring up trouble for God and for His messenger!' I replied, 'O Messenger of God, by Him who sent you with the truth, I couldn't restrain myself from saying as I did when I saw Abū Yazīd with his hands tied up at his neck!'

Information will follow hereafter in detail recounting the arrival of the prisoners in Medina, and how and at what cost they were ransomed. If God wills it so, that is.

An Account of the joy of the Negus, God bless him, at the outcome of the battle of Badr.

The hāfiz al-Bayhaqī stated, "Abū al-Qāsim 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Ubayd Allāh al-Ḥurfī of Baghdad informed us, quoting Ḥamīd b. Salmān al-Najjād, quoting 'Abd Allāh b. Abī al-Dunya, quoting Ḥamza b. al-Abbās quoting, 'Abdān b. Uthmān, quoting 'Abd Allāh b. al-Mubārak, quoting 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Yazīd, quoting Jābir, from 'Abd al-Rahmān, a man from Ṣa'nā, who said, 'One day the Negus sent for Ja'far b. Abī Ṭalib and his Companions and when they went in to him they found him in his house sitting on the ground dressed in rags. Ja'far said, 'We felt very sorry for him when we saw him, in this state, and when he observed this in our faces, he explained, 'I have good news for you..."
that will make you rejoice. A spy has come to me from your land and has told me that God has given victory to his Prophet, defeated his enemy, taken captive so-and-so and so-and-so, and killed so-and-so and so-and-so. The forces met in a valley called Badr where many thorny trees grow. It's as if I can see it now, for I used to look after camels there for my master, a man of the Banu Damra.'"

"Ja'far then asked the Negus, "Why are you sitting on the ground, without even a carpet, dressed in those old clothes?" He replied, "We agree with what God sent down to Jesus – that it is the duty of God's worshippers to behave in humility when God performs some favour for them. Since God has favoured me with the victory of his Prophet (SAAS), I am acting in humility in this way for him.""

Chapter: On the arrival of the news of those stricken at Badr to their families in Mecca.

Ibn Ishāq stated, "The first to arrive in Mecca with news of the Quraysh casualties at Badr was al-Ḥayṣumān b. ʿAbd Allāh al-Khuzāī. When he was asked for news, he reported the deaths of ʿUṭba b. Rabīʿa, Shayba b. Rabīʿa, Abū al-Ḥakam b. Hīshām, Umayya b. Khalaf, Zam'a b. al-Aswad, Zubayr b. Nufayh and Munabbah, and Abū al-Bakhtārī b. Hīshām.

"As he enumerated the Quraysh nobles, Ṣafwān b. Umayya commented, 'That makes no sense; ask him about me!' So they asked him what had happened to Ṣafwān b. Umayya, and he responded, 'He's over there, sitting in the hijr; I saw the deaths of his father and his brother when they were killed.'"

Mūsā b. ʿUqba stated, "When the news reached Mecca and was verified, the women cut off their hair; and many horses and riding camels were slaughtered."

Al-Suḥaylī recounted, from the book Dala'il (The Signs) of ʿAlī b. Thābit, whose author said that at the time of the battle of Badr the people of Mecca heard a spirit calling out,

"The hanifs brought a battle to bear at Badr because of which the power of Chosroe and Caesar will collapse,

It sent men of Lu'ayy to their death, and brought forth unmarried women to strike the ground in despair.

Woe to him who becomes Muhammad's enemy, deliberately straying from the right path and getting lost!"

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Ḥusayn b. ʿAbd Allāh b. Ubayd Allāh b. ʿAbbās related to me, from ʿIkrīma, the freed-man of Ibn ʿAbbās, who said, 'Abū Raḥif, the freed-man of the Messenger of God (SAAS) said, 'I was a slave of al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib at the time when Islam had entered us, the people of the house. Al-ʿAbbās accepted Islam, as did Umm al-Faḍl and myself as well. Al-ʿAbbās was concerned about his people and disliked opposing them and so he concealed his acceptance of Islam. He was a man of great wealth that was scattered amongst his people. Abū Lahab had stayed behind from Badr and had sent al-ʿĀṣ b. Hīshām
b. al-Mughira in his place. This was the practice; any man who could not go to battle sent another in his place.

""When he received news of those of Quraysh who were struck down at Badr, God humiliated and disgraced Abī Lahab, while we experienced a sense of power and pride. I was a weak man and I used to make arrows, sharpening them in the pavilion near zamzam, the sacred well. I was seated there active in this, with Umm al-Faṭṭal sitting there with me, happy at the news we had received, when in came Abū Lahab, dragging his feet in annoyance. He sat down at one side of the pavilion, his back facing mine. As he sat there people announced, 'Here's Abū Sufyān, al-Mughira b. al-Ḥarīth b. ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib, who has arrived.' Abū Lahab called out, 'Come on in to me; you must have some news.'

""Abū Sufyān came and sat down, people standing all around. Abū Lahab then spoke, 'Cousin, tell me what happened to everyone.'

""'Well,' he reported, 'I swear that no sooner had we joined battle with them, than we turned our back to them and they killed and captured us just as they liked. But, I swear, I don't blame them; we faced men dressed in white mounted on piebald horses between heaven and earth. I swear, they spared nothing, and nothing could withstand them.'"

""Abū Rāfī went on, 'I then raised the tent rope with my hand and commented, 'By God, those were the angels!'

""At that Abū Lahab raised his fist and hit me a very hard blow in the face. I charged at him, but he fought back and knocked me to the ground. He then knelt down on me, beating me. I was a weak man. Then Umm al-Faṭṭal took hold of one of the tent supports and began hitting him with it, making a nasty wound in his head and shouting, 'So you think he's powerless now that his master is away!'

""He got up and left, humiliated. And by God, he only lived seven more days before God afflicted him with the pustules that killed him.'"

Yūnus, quoting Ibn Ishāq, added, "His two sons left him unburied for three days after his death and he began to decompose. Quraysh greatly feared those pustules, just as they did the plague. Eventually one of the Quraysh said to his sons, 'Aren't you ashamed that your father is decomposing in his house, without you burying him?' They replied, 'We're scared of those terrible pustules.' The man insisted, 'If you do it, I'll help you.' And they did not wash him and merely threw water over him from a distance, not going close to him at all. They then carried him to the heights of Mecca, placed him against a wall and covered him over with stones.'

Yūnus said, quoting Ibn Ishāq, "Yahyā b. ‘Abbād b. ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr related to me, from his father, from ‘A’isha, mother of the believers, who said she always veiled herself with her gown until she had passed beyond the place where Abū Lahab was buried.'"

Ibn Ishāq stated, "Yahyā b. ‘Abbād related to me as follows, 'Quraysh mourned their dead. Then they told one another not to do this because when Muḥammad and his supporters heard of it they would revile them. They also agreed not to seek reassurance by making enquiry about the captives to discourage the Messenger of God (SAAS) from making heavy demands for their ransom."

I observe that God’s forcing them to forego mourning for their dead was part of the totality of His punishment of those of them that remained alive at that time. For weeping for the dead contributes to the recovery of the grieving heart.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Al-Aswad b. al-Muṭṭalib was afflicted with the loss of three of his sons, Zam'a, 'Aqil and al-Ḥārith, and he wished to mourn properly for them. He heard a woman in the night bewailing her loss and, because he was himself blind, he asked his son, ‘Go and see if mourning has become permissible. Are Quraysh now bewailing their dead? Perhaps I will now be able to lament the loss of Abū Ḥakīma’ – he was referring to his son Zam'a – ‘for I am in great pain.’

“When the boy returned, he reported that it was merely a woman lamenting the loss of a camel that had gone astray. It was then that al-Aswad spoke the verses,

‘Is she weeping because a donkey of hers has gone astray and so insomnia keeps her from sleeping?

Do not weep over a young camel, but over Badr that ruined all hopes,

Over Badr and the elite of the Bānū Ḥuṣayn and Makhzūm and the tribe of Abū al-Walid.

And weep, if you weep at all, for Abū 'Aqil and for Ḥārith, the lion of lions.

Weep for them all, and do not hold back, for there is none the like of Abū Ḥakīma.

After them it is other men who rule, and had it not been for Badr, they would not have come to lead.’”

DIVISION

The payment of ransom money by Quraysh to the Messenger of God (SAAS) for their men who were captive.

Ibn Ishaq stated, “Abū Wādā'a b. Ḏubayra al-Sahmī was among the prisoners. The Messenger of God (SAAS) commented, ‘He has a son in Mecca who is a wealthy, shrewd merchant; no doubt he will come and seek to ransom his father.’ When Quraysh advised that there would be no hurry in ransoming the prisoners so that Muḥammad and his Companions would not seek larger sums, al-Muṭṭalib b. Abū Wādā'a, the man to whom the Messenger of God (SAAS) had referred, agreed and also advised against haste. But he left secretly at night and went to Medina, where he ransomed and removed his father, having paid 4,000 dirhams.”

I comment that this was the first prisoner ransomed. Then Quraysh sent to ransom their prisoners and Mikraz b. Ḥafṣ b. al-Akhyaṭ went to ransom Suhayl b. Amr, who had been taken captive by Mālik b. al-Dukhshum, brother of the Bānū Sālim b. Āwīf. Mālik spoke the following verses on this,
"I captured Suhayl and I would not want for him any prisoner from any other nation. Khindif knows that, if injustice be done, Suhayl is the man to charge.

I struck with a sharp sword until it bent, forcing myself on against that hare-lipped man."

Ibn Ishâq stated, "Suhayl was a man who had a split lower lip."

He went on, "Muḥammad b. 'Amr b. 'Āṭā', a brother of the Banū 'Amr b. Luḥayy related to me, that 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb said to the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), 'Let me extract the two front teeth of Suhayl b. 'Amr; his tongue will protrude and he will never speak ill of you again. The Messenger of God (ṢAAS), said, 'I will not mutilate him, for if I did, God would mutilate me, even though I am a prophet.'"

I observe that this hadīth is incomplete in its line of authorities; indeed, it may be defined as mu'dāl, "problematic".

Ibn Ishâq stated, "I have been informed that the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) said to 'Umar about this, 'Maybe he will take a stand for which you will not criticize him.'"

I observe that this refers to the stand adopted in Mecca by Suhayl when, following the death of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) some of the Arabs rebelled. Hypocrisy arose in Medina and elsewhere, and Suhayl stood up and gave a public address in Mecca in which he urged the people to remain firm in the true ḥanif religion. This will be related in its proper place.

Ibn Ishâq stated, "When Mikraz negotiated with them about Suhayl and ultimately satisfied them, they said, 'Give us what is ours.' He replied, 'Take me hostage in his place and let him go until he sends you his ransom money.' They released Suhayl and kept Mikraz with them."

Ibn Ishâq quoted some poetry of Mikraz that Ibn Hishâm suggested might not be authentic. But God knows best.

Ibn Ishâq stated, "'Abd Allah b. Abū Bakr related to me, saying, 'Amr b. Abū Sufyān Šakhir b. Ḥarb was among the prisoners.'"

Ibn Ishâq stated, "His mother was the daughter of 'Uqba b. Abū Muṣṭ."

Ibn Hishâm, however, said that his mother was 'Uqba's sister; and he added that it was 'Ali b. Abū Ṭalīb who had captured him.

Ibn Ishâq stated, "'Abd Allâh b. Abū Bakr related to me, as follows, 'Abū Sufyān was advised to ransom his son, 'Amr. He replied, 'Shall blood and money combine against me? They killed Ḥanzala, and shall I now ransom 'Amr? Let him remain with them; they can keep him as long as they want!'

"While he was thus imprisoned in Medina, Sa'd b. al-‘Uṯmân b. Akkāl, a brother of the Banū 'Amr b. 'Awf and also related to the Banū Mu‘āwiya, went forth on pilgrimage, accompanied by his young wife. He was elderly and a Muslim and had sheep at al-Baqî'. He left for there on pilgrimage with no idea he would be imprisoned at Mecca, since he was a pilgrim; Quraysh only ever treated well those who came as pilgrims. But Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb attacked him in Mecca, imprisoning him in retaliation for this son 'Amr. Abū Sufyān spoke the following verses on this,

'O tribe of Ibn Akkāl, answer his request; you had a pact together, so do not surrender the chief in his maturity.

The Banū 'Amr is lowly, contemptible, if they do not release their prisoner's fetters.'

Hassan b. Thābit spoke the following verses in response,

"If Sa'd had been free to act that day in Mecca, he would have killed many of you before he was captured.

Using a sharp sword or a bow of nab'a wood, its string twanging when its arrows shoot."

He went on, "The Banū 'Amr b. 'Awf went to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him what had happened and asked him to give them 'Amr b. Abū Sufyān so they could release him and receive their own man in exchange. The Prophet (SAAS) agreed and they sent 'Amr to Abū Sufyān, who released Sa'd."

Ibn Ishaq went on, "Abū al-Āṣ b. al-Rabi' b. 'Abd al-Uzza b. 'Abd Shams b. Umayya was among the captives, the son-in-law of the Messenger of God (SAAS), husband of his daughter Zaynab."

Ibn Hisham added, "It was Khirāsh b. al-Šimma, of the Banū Ḥarám, who had captured him."

Ibn Ishaq continued, "Abū al-Āṣ was a respected Meccan credited with much wealth and goods. His mother was Hala, daughter of Khuwaylid, sister of Khadija, daughter of Khuwaylid. It was Khadija who had asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) to marry her daughter Zaynab to him, and he never disagreed with her; this occurred before the beginnings of revelation.

"The Messenger of God (SAAS) had married his daughter Ruqayya, or Umm Kulthūm, to Uthba b. Abū Lahab. And when revelation began, Abū Lahab said, 'Let Muḥammad look after his own!' He ordered his son Uthba to divorce Ruqayya with the promise to give him any woman he wanted. He did so before having consummated the marriage. She was then married by Uthmān b. Affān, God bless him. They approached Abū al-Āṣ and said, 'Leave your wife and we will marry you to any Quraysh woman you desire.' He replied, 'No, by God! I will not leave her, and I do not want any other woman from Quraysh for my wife.' The Messenger of God (SAAS), so I have been told, used to commend his son-in-law for this."

I comment that the evidence of his praise for his son-in-law is well established in the Sahih collection, as will be shown.

Ibn Ishaq stated, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) had no authority in Mecca to allow or to forbid, since he was powerless. Islam had divided Zaynab, daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS), from Abū al-‘Āṣ, but he was not able to bring about their separation."

I comment that it was only in the year of the truce of al-Ḥudaybiyya, in the year 6 AH that God made it unlawful for Muslim women to marry polytheists, as will be shown hereafter, if God wills it.

Ibn Ishaq stated that Yahyā b. ‘Abbād b. ‘Abd Allāh b. al-Zubayr related to him, from his father who quoted ʿAʾisha as having said, "When the Meccans sent ransom money for their men who were prisoners, Zaynab, daughter of the Messenger of God (SAAS), sent money on behalf of Abī al-‘Āṣ. She sent the necklace for him that Khadija had given her upon her marriage to Abī al-‘Āṣ. She said, 'When the Messenger of God (SAAS) saw it, he was greatly touched for her and said, 'If you should think fit to deliver her prisoner to her and to return to her what is hers, then do so.' They replied, "Yes, Messenger of God." And they did release him and returned her property to her."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Those named to us as having been freed by the Messenger of God (SAAS) without ransom having been paid for them include: of the Banū Umayya, Abū al-‘Āṣ b. al-Rabi', and of the Banū Makhzūm, al-Muṭṭalib b. Ḥanṭab b. al-Ḥarīth b. Ḥubayd b. Umar b. Makhzūm. He was taken prisoner by one of the Banū al-Ḥarīth b. al-Khazraj. He had been left in their custody until he was released, whereupon he rejoined his own people."

Ibn Ishaq went on, "The Messenger of God (SAAS) had required of him (Abī al-‘Āṣ) that he allow free movement to Zaynab, which meant that she could emigrate to Medina. And Abī al-‘Āṣ did keep to his agreement, as will be told."

It is at this point that Ibn Ishaq related this; however, we have deferred telling of it, since that is more appropriate. But God knows best.

We have previously related how al-ʿAbbās b. ʿAbd al-Muṭṭalib, uncle of the Prophet (SAAS), ransomed himself and ‘Uqayl and Nawfal, sons of his two brothers, for 100 awqiyu of gold.

Ibn Hisham stated, "It was Abū Ayyūb Khālid b. Zayd who captured Abī al-‘Āṣ."

Ibn Ishaq stated, "Sayfī b. Abū Riḍā b. ‘Abd Allāh b. Umar b. Makhzūm was left in the custody of his captives. They agreed with him that he would send them his ransom and so let him free; but he did not keep his word. On that subject Ḥassān b. Thābit spoke the lines,

'Sayfī's word was not one to be trusted, like the trail of some fox that rested at a watering hole.'"

Ibn Ishaq continued, "Abū ʿAzza ʿAmr b. Abū Allāh b. Uthmān b. Ḥubayb b. Ḥudhayfah b. Jumah was a poor man with daughters to support. He said, 'O Messenger of God, you know my state of finances. I am poor and have a family, so be gracious to me.' The Messenger of God agreed to be gracious to him on condition that he did not support anyone else against him. Abū ʿAzza spoke the following lines in praise of the Messenger of God (SAAS) for this action, 'Who is it will tell the Messenger, Muhammad, from me, "You are truth; and the All-Powerful is to be praised. You are a man who calls to the truth and to right guidance, with witness for you from God the Almighty. You are a man given a position of power among us, there being steps both easy and high up to where you are. You are someone whose opponents are unhappy being fought, while those with whom you make peace are content. But when I think of Badr and those who fought it, I am overcome again by sorrow and depression."

I comment that thereafter this Abn 'Azza broke the pact he had made with the Messenger of God (SAAS), and he fell under the influence of the polytheists and rejoined them. At the battle of Uḥud he was again taken captive, and he again asked the Messenger of God (SAAS) to set him free. But the latter replied, "I'll not let you stroke your beard and say that you deceived Muhammad twice!" And so his head was cut off at Uḥud, as will be related in the account of that engagement.

It is said that it was of him that the Messenger of God (SAAS) spoke as follows, "A believer will not be bitten twice from the same lair." This is one of those proverbs uttered only by the Messenger of God (SAAS).

Ibn Iṣḥaq stated, "Muḥammad b. Ja'far b. al-Zubayr related to me, from 'Urwa b. al-Zubayr, as follows, "Umayr b. Wahb al-Jumaḥ was sitting with Ṣafwān b. Umayya in the hijr shortly after the losses that were suffered at Badr. He, Umayr, was one of the devilish Quraysh provocateurs, a man who had grievously harmed the Messenger of God (SAAS) and his Companions at Mecca. His son Wahb b. Umayr was one of those taken captive at Badr."

Ibn Hishām stated, "The person who captured him was Rifā'a b. Rāfī', one of the Banū Zurayq."

Ibn Iṣḥaq went on, "Muḥammad b. Ja'far related to me, from 'Urwa, that Umayr made mention of the fate of those caste into the pit at Badr, at which Ṣafwān said, 'I swear, there's nothing good in life now they are gone.' Umayr agreed, 'You are right. Were it not for a debt I can't pay and children whose survival after me concerns me, I would ride off to Muhammad to kill him; I have cause against them, since my son is a prisoner in their hands.'

"Ṣafwān b. Umayya seized the opportunity to say, 'Consider your debt my responsibility; I will redeem it and consider your children as my own, caring for them as long as they live. Everything I have will be theirs.'

"Umayr suggested, 'Keep this matter a secret between us both.' Ṣafwān agreed.

"Umayr then called for his sword, sharpened it, put poison on it and left for Medina. While Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb was there talking with a group of Muslims about Badr and recalling how God had honoured them and how He had treated their enemy, ɿɿmar saw ɿɿmayr b. ɿɿWahb having just dismounted at the door to the mosque, wearing his sword. ɿɿmar commented, ‘There’s that dog ɿɿmayr b. ɿɿWahb, that enemy of God; he’s come here only to do some mischief. It is he who sowed discord among us and estimated our numbers for the enemy at Badr!’

‘ɿɿmar then went in to the Messenger of God (SAAS) and told him, ‘O Prophet of God, that enemy of God ɿɿmayr b. ɿɿWahb is here wearing his sword.’ He told him to let him enter, so ɿɿmar went and seized the sheath of ɿɿmayr’s sword and wrapped it tightly around his neck, telling the Muslim Companions there to go and sit with the Messenger of God (SAAS), and to guard him against that evil fellow who could not be trusted.

‘He then took him in to the Messenger of God (SAAS), and when the latter saw him with ɿɿmar holding his sword sheath around his neck, he said, ‘Release him, ɿɿmar; come near, ɿɿmayr.’ ɿɿmayr went over to him and said, ‘May your morning be good!’ This was the mode by which people greeted one another before Islam. The Messenger of God (SAAS) responded, ‘God has honoured us with a greeting better than that, ɿɿmayr. That is salam, peace, the greeting used by the people of paradise.’

‘Well,’ ɿɿmayr replied, ‘it’s a greeting you’ve not been using for long.’

‘So what brings you, ɿɿmar?’ the Messenger of God (SAAS) asked.

‘I have come about that captive you have; treat him well,’ ɿɿmayr replied.

‘Why are you wearing a sword around your neck?’

‘God curse the swords! Have they done us any good?’

‘Seriously, why did you come?’

‘That’s the only reason,’ ɿɿmayr insisted.

‘On the contrary, you sat in the hijr with Şafwân b. Umayya; you discussed the fate of the dead in the pit, then you said, “Were it not for a debt I can’t pay and children whose survival after me concerns me, I would ride off to Muhammad to kill him.” And so Şafwân b. Umayya took responsibility for your debt and your family if you would kill me. But God prevented you from doing that.’

‘ɿɿmayr declared, ‘I testify that you are the Messenger of God! We used to call you a liar when you brought us news from heaven and the revelations that came to you, but only Şafwân and I were present on that occasion, and I well know that only God could have told you of it. Praise be to God who led me to Islam and to where I am now!’ He then gave testimony to the truth of Islam.

‘The Messenger of God (SAAS) ordered, ‘Give your brother instruction in the religion! Teach him the Qur’an and release his prisoner to him!’ They did so.

‘ɿɿmayr then said, ‘O Messenger of God, I vigorously tried to extinguish the light of Islam and was very harsh towards those who followed God’s religion. I would like you to give me permission to go to Mecca where I will call others to God, to His Messenger and to Islam. Perhaps God will guide them. Otherwise I will persecute them in their religion just as I used to maltreat your Companions in theirs.’
The Messenger of God (SAAS) gave permission to him and he did go to Mecca.

Ṣafwân had been saying, following ʿUmayr b. Wahb’s departure, ‘Rejoice at an event soon to happen that will make you forget Badr!’

He would ask riders about ʿUmayr, and eventually one came who told him of ʿUmayr’s acceptance of Islam. He swore that he would never say another word to him and never do him any favour.”

Ibn ʿIshaq continued, “When ʿUmayr arrived back in Mecca he set about preaching for Islam and persecuting those who opposed it. Many people accepted Islam due to him.

“And it was ʿUmayr b. Wahb, or al-Ḥārith b. Hishām, who saw the enemy of God, Satan, when he turned on his heels and fled, saying, ‘I’ll have nothing to do with you, I see what you do not.’ Satan was then in the form of Surāqā b. Mālik b. Juṣhūm, the leader of Mudlij.”

Hereafter ʿImām Ibn ʿIshaq, God bless him, wrote on the revelations in the Qurʾān that relate to the battle of Badr. This is the passage from the first to the last of sūrat al-ʾAnfāl (The Spoils; VIII). He wrote well and at length. We have examined this in detail in our work of exegesis and those wishing to read this should look at it there. And all praise and credit are due to God.

He then begins giving the names of those Muslims who participated at Badr. He listed these names in the order of the Emigrants and then the Helpers, beginning with those of Aws and going on to those of Khazraj. He concludes with the statement, “The total number of Muslims, whether Emigrants or Helpers, who either witnessed Badr or who were credited with a share of the spoils from it, totalled 314 men.

“The Emigrants totalled 83 men.

“From Aws there were 61 men.

“From Khazraj there were 170 men.”

Al-Bukhari listed them in his sahih compendium in alphabetical order following the names of the Messenger of God (SAAS), ʿAbū Bakr, ʿUthmān and ʿAlī, may God be pleased with them all.

What follows is a list of the names of the Muslims who were present at Badr arranged alphabetically. This is derived from the book al-ʾAḥkām al-Kabīr (The Major Statutes) by the ḥafiẓ Diyaʾ al-Dīn Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Whād al-Maqdisī and others. This alphabetical listing is preceded by the name of their chief and their pride, the leader of all the progeny of Adam, Muḥammad, Messenger of God (SAAS).
THE NAMES OF THOSE AT BADR ARRANGED ALPHABETICALLY.

THE LETTER ALIF.

Usayr b. ṬAmr al-Anṣārī Abū Sallīt, also known as Usayr b. ṬAmr b. Umayya b. Lawdān b. ʿAlīm b. Thābit al-Khazrajī; Mūsā b. ʿUqba did not mention him.

Anas b. Qatāda b. Ṭabīʿa b. Khālid b. al-Ḥārith al-Awṣī, also so named by Mūsā b. ʿUqba, though al-Umawi named him ṬAnṣī in his biography (of the Prophet (ṢAAS)).

I comment that Anas b. Mālik was the servant of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) according to the account of ʿUmar b. Shabella al-Numayrī. Muḥammad b. ṬAbd Allāh al-Anṣārī related to us, from his father, from Thumāma b. Anas, who said, “Anas b. Mālik was asked whether he had been present at Badr, and that he replied, ‘Where would I have been, to be absent from Badr, may you be motherless!’”

Muḥammad b. Saʿd stated, “Muḥammad b. ṬAbd Allāh al-Anṣārī informed us, my father related to us, from a freed-man of Anas b. Mālik, that the latter asked Anas whether he had been present at Badr. He replied, ‘May you be motherless, where would I have been, to be absent from Badr?’”

Muḥammad b. ṬAbd Allāh al-Anṣārī stated, “Anas b. Mālik went forth to Badr with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) as a servant in service to him.”

Our teacher, the sheikh and ḥāfiz Abū al-Ḥajjāj al-Mizzi stated in his tahdhib, his educational text, “Thus al-Anṣārī stated, but none of the authors of the works on the military expeditions said this.”

THE LETTER BA’.

Bujayr b. Abū Bujayr, ally of the Banū al-Najjār, Bāḥḥāṭh b. Tha’laba b. Khazama b. Aṣrām b. ʿAmr b. ʿImāra al-Balawi, an ally of the Helpers; Basbas b. ʿAmr b. Tha’laba b. Kharsha b. Zayd b. ʿAmr b. Saʿd b. Dhubyān b. Rashādān b. Qays b. Juhayna al-Juhāni, an ally of the Banū Saʿida, he being one of the scouts, along with ʿAdī b. Abū al-Zaghba, referred to above; Bishr b. al-Bara b. Maʿrūr al-Khazraji, who died at Khaybar from the poisoned mutton; Bashir b. Saʿd b. Tha’laba al-Khazraji, father of al-Nuʿmān b. Bashir, said to have been the first man to pledge his allegiance to Abū Bakr; Bashir b. ʿAbd al-Mundhir Abū Lubāba al-Awsī, who was sent back by the Messenger of God (SAAS) from al-Rawḥā to take charge of Medina; he was assigned a full share in the spoils of Badr.

THE LETTER TA’.

THE LETTER THA’.

THE LETTER JIM.

I comment that Jabir b. 'Abd Allah b. 'Amr b. Hārām, al-Sulami also, is mentioned by al-Bukhārī among those at Badr. He gives a line of authorities from Sa'd b. Manṣūr, from Abū Mu'āwiyah, from al-A'mash, from Abū Sufyān quoting Jabir as saying, “I drew water from the well for my companions at the battle of Badr.”

This line of authorities is according to Muslim. However, Muhammad b. Sa'd stated, “I mentioned this hadith to Muḥammad b. 'Umar – meaning d-Waqidi – and he commented, ‘This is ficticious and comes from the Iraqi scholars.’ He refused Jabir’s having been present at the battle of Badr.”

Imām Āḥmad b. Ḥanbal stated, “Rawḥ b. 'Abāda related to us, quoting Zakariyyā b. Ishaq, quoting Abū al-Zubayr, that he heard Jabir b. 'Abd Allāh say, ‘I went on 19 military expeditions with the Messenger of God (ṢAAS), but I was not present at either Badr or Uhud. My father prevented me. After my father was killed at Uhud, I never missed any one of the military engagements of the Messenger of God (ṢAAS).’”

Muslim related this from Abū Khaythama, from Rawḥ.

THE LETTER Ḥ. A.

Al-Ḥārith b. Anas b. Ṣafī al-Khazrajī; al-Ḥārith b. Aws b. Muʿādh b. Akhū Sa'd b. Muʿādh al-Awsī; al-Ḥārith b. Ḥaṭīb b. 'Amr b. Ḥubayr b. Umayya b. Zayd b. Mālik b. al-Aws, who was sent back by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) on the road to Badr, and he awarded him a share of the spoils; al-Ḥārith b. Khazmā b. 'Adī b. 'Abd al-Ghānim b. 'Alī b. 'Awf b. 'Amr b. al-Khazrajī, an ally of the Banū Zafūrā b. 'Abd al-Asḥāl; al-Ḥārith b. al-Ṣimma al-Khazrajī, who was sent back by the Messenger of God (ṢAAS) because his leg was broken en route; he gave him a full share in the spoils.

Al-Ḥārith b. Ṣafī al-Awsī; al-Ḥārith b. Qays b. Khalda b. Abū Khalid al-Khazrajī; al-Ḥārith b. al-Nu'mān b. Umayya al-Anṣārī; Ḥaṭīth b. Sūraqā al-Najjārī, who was struck by a stray arrow while he was with the observers and was elevated to paradise; Ḥaṭīth b. al-Nu'mān b. Rāfi' al-Anṣārī; Ḥaṭīb b. Abū Balṭa'ā al-Lakhmī, an ally of the Banū Asad b. 'Abd al-Uẓzā b. Qūṣayy.

Ḥaṭīb b. 'Amr b. Ḥubayr b. Umayya al-Asḥaṭ, of the Banū Dahmān. This name is given thus by Ibn Hishām from a source other than Ibn Ishaq. Al-Waqrī gave it as Ḥaṭīb b. 'Amr b. Abū Shams b. 'Abd Wudd; Ibn 'A'idh gave it thus in his work on the military expeditions. Ibn Abū Ḥātim stated, “Ḥaṭīb b. 'Amr b. Abū Shams was a name I heard from my father who said that this man's identity was unknown.”

Al-Ḥubāb b. al-Mundhir al-Khazrajī; it is said that the banner of Khazraj was in his care on that day.

Ḥabīb b. Aswād, freed-man of the Banū Ḥarām, of the Banū Salama. Mūsā b. Uqba stated, “The name was Ḥabīb b. Sa'd, instead of Aswād.” Ibn Abū Ḥātim stated, “Habib b. Aslam was the freed-man of the tribe of Jusham b. al-Khazraj, and a Helper and a man who participated in the battle of Badr.”

Hurayth b. Zayd b. Thalaba b. ‘Abd Rabbihāl-Anṣārī, a brother of ‘Abd Allāh b. Zayd, who was shown al-nidā, the call to prayer.

THE LETTER KHAṬ.
Khālid b. al-Bukayr, brother of Iyās referred to above; Khālid b. Zayd Abū Ayyūb al-Najjārī; Khalid b. Qays b. Malik b. al-Ajlān al-Anṣārī; Khārija b. al-Ḥumayr, an ally of the Banū Khansā‘, of the Khazraj, a man also named as Hāritha b. al-Ḥumayr whom Ibn ʿAidh called “Khārija”; but God knows best. Khārija b. Zayd al-Khazrajī, son-in-law of Abū Bakr; Khabbāb b. al-Āratt, an ally of the Banū Zahra, one of the original Emigrants, a man whose origins were in the Banū Tamim, though some say in Khuzā‘a; Khabbāb, freed-man of Utba b. Ghazzān, one of the original Emigrants; Khirāsh b. al-Ṣimma al-Sulami; Khubayb b. Iyās al-Khazrajī; Khuraym b. Ṭāʾī who was included among these by al-Bukhārī; Khaliṭa b. ʿAdī al-Khazrajī; Khulayd b. Qays b. al-ʿUrfān b. Sinān b. Ubayd al-Anṣārī al-Sulami; Khunays b. Ḥudhayfa b. Qays b. ʿAdī b. Saḥīb b. Sahm b. ʿAmr b. Ḥuṣayn b. Kaḥf b. Luʿayy al-Sahmi, who was killed at Badr, thus making Ḥafṣā, daughter of Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb, a widow; Khawwāt b. Jubayr al-Anṣārī, who was accorded a share of the spoils, though he was not himself present at Badr; Khawālī b. ‘Abd al-Khaṭṭāb, an ally of the Banū ‘Adī, one of the original Emigrants; Khallād b. Rāfī; Khallād b. Suwayd and Khallād b. ʿAmr b. al-Jumāḥ, men of Khazraj.

THE LETTER DHAṬ.
Dhakwān b. ‘Abd Qays al-Khazrajī; Dhū al-Ṣimālāyyn b. ʿAbd b. ʿAmr b. Nadla of Ghabshān b. Salīm b. Mālkān b. Afsā b. Ḥāritha b. Ṭāʾī b. ʿAmr b. Banū Khuzā‘a, an ally of the Banū Zuhra who was martyred that day. Ibn Hishām stated that his name was Umayr and that he was only called Dhū al-Ṣimālāyyn, i.e. “he with the two left hands” because he was left-handed.

THE LETTER RAṬ.
Rāfī b. al-Ḥārith al-Awস; Rāfī b. ‘Unjada; Ibn Hishām stated that ‘Unjada was his mother; Rāfī b. al-ʿUrfān b. Lūḥān al-Khazrajī who was killed that day; Rabī b. Rāfī b. al-Ḥārith b. Zayd b. Ḥāritha b. al-Jīd b. Ḥājān b. Ḥuṣayn.

70. This was a vision that he was shown while asleep of how the call to prayer was to be made to the Muslim community. See p. 222 above.

THE LETTER ZAY.

THE LETTER SIN.

Saʿd b. Muʿādh al-Awsī, and it was he who was entrusted with the Aws banner. Saʿd b. Ubāda b. Dulaym al-Khazrajī: several authorities, including Urwa, al-Bukhārī, Ibn Abū Ḥātim and al-Ṭibrānī include him among those who were present at Badr. In the saḥīḥ of Muslim, there is material substantiating that when the Prophet (ṢAAS) was preparing to meet the Quraysh force, Saʿd b. Ubāda said, “O Messenger of God, perhaps you would like us to make …” But the truth is that it was Saʿd b. Muʿādh who said this.

It is well known that Asʿad b. Ubāda was sent back from the road; it is said this was so that he should take charge of Medina. It is also said to have been because he was bitten by a snake and was not able to proceed to Badr. Al-Suhayli related this from Ibn Qutayba. But God knows best.

Sa'd b. Abū Waqqāṣ, who was Mālik b. Uhayb al-Zuhri, one of the so-called "ten",71 Sa'd b. Mālik Abū Sahl: al-Wāqidi stated that he had made preparations to go forth but fell sick and died before he had left.

Sa'd b. Zayd b. 'Amr b. Nufayl al-Adawi, nephew of 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb. It is said that he arrived from Syria after they returned from Badr; the Messenger of God (SAAS) gave him a share of the spoils.
